www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Sixth Edition

INTERNATIONAL LAW

urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot

MALCOLM N. SHAW

CAMBRIDGE

CAMBRIDGE www.cambridge.org/9780521899291

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

This page intentionally left blank

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

INTERNATIONAL LAW

Sixth edition

Malcolm Shaw's engaging and authoritative International Law has become the definitive textbook for instructors and students alike, in this increasingly popular field of academic study. The hallmark writing style provides a stimulating account, motivating students to explore the subject more fully, while maintaining detail and academic rigour. The analysis integrated in the textbook challenges students to develop critical thinking skills. The sixth edition is comprehensively updated throughout and is carefully constructed to reflect current teaching trends and course coverage. The International Court of Justice is now examined in a separate dedicated chapter and there is a new chapter on international criminal law. The detailed references and reliable, consistent commentary which distinguished previous editions remain, making this essential reading for all students of international law whether they be at undergraduate level, postgraduate level or professional lawyers.

MALCOLM N. SHAW, QC is the Sir Robert Jennings Professor of International Law at the University of Leicester. One of the world's leading international lawyers, he has been awarded the decoration of 'Officier de l'Ordre de la Valeur' by the Republic of Cameroon. He is a member of the Advisory Council of the British Institute of International and Comparative Law and a founding member of the Curatorium, Xiamen Academy of International Law. He is also a practising barrister at Essex Court Chambers.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS
Cambridge, New York, Melbourne, Madrid, Cape Town, Singapore, São Paulo

Cambridge University Press
The Edinburgh Building, Cambridge CB2 8RU, UK Published in the United States of America by Cambridge University Press, New York

www.cambridge.org
Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9780521899291

© M. N. Shaw 2008

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provision of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published in print format 2008

ISBN-13 978-0-511-45559-9 eBook (EBL)

ISBN-13 978-0-521-89929-1 hardback

ISBN-13 978-0-521-72814-0 paperback

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of urls for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication, and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

For my wife Judith

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

CONTENTS

Preface page xxi

Table of cases xxiii

Table of treaties and selected other international instruments lxxxi

List of abbreviations clxii

1 The nature and development of international law 1
Law and politics in the world community 2
The role of force 4
The international system 5
The function of politics 11
Historical development 13
Early origins 14
The Middle Ages and the Renaissance 19
The founders of modern international law 22
Positivism and naturalism 24
The nineteenth century 27
The twentieth century 30
Communist approaches to international law 31
The Third World 38

2 International law today 43
The expanding legal scope of international concern 43
Modern theories and interpretations 49
Positive Law and Natural Law 49
New approaches 54
The fragmentation of international law? 65
Conclusion 67

3 Sources 69
Custom 72

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Introduction 72
The material fact 76
What is state practice? 81
Opinio juris 84
Protest, acquiescence and change in customary law 89
Regional and local custom 92
Treaties 93
General principles of law 98
Equity and international law 105
Judicial decisions 109
Writers 112
Other possible sources of international law 113
The International Law Commission 119
Other bodies 121
Unilateral acts 121
Hierarchy of sources and jus cogens 123

4 International law and municipal law 129
The theories 131
The role of municipal rules in international law 133
International law before municipal courts 138
The United Kingdom 139
Customary international law 141
Treaties 148
The United States 157
Other countries 166
Justiciability, act of state and related doctrines 179
Executive certificates 192

5 The subjects of international law 195
Legal personality – introduction 195
States 197
Creation of statehood 197
Self-determination and the criteria of statehood 205
Recognition 207
Extinction of statehood 208
The fundamental rights of states 211
Independence 211
Equality 214
Peaceful co-existence 215
Protectorates and protected states 216
Federal states 217
Sui generis territorial entities 224

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Mandated and trust territories 224
Germany 1945 227
Condominium 228
International administration of territories 230
Taiwan 234
The 'Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus' (TRNC) 235
The Saharan Arab Democratic Republic 236
Various secessionist claimants 237
Associations of states 238
Conclusions 242
Special cases 243
The Sovereign Order of Malta 243
The Holy See and the Vatican City 243
Insurgents and belligerents 245
National liberation movements (NLMs) 245
International public companies 248
Transnational corporations 249
The right of all peoples to self-determination 251
The establishment of the legal right 251
The definition of self-determination 256
Individuals 257
International organisations 259
The acquisition, nature and consequences of legal personality – some conclusions 260

6 The international protection of human rights 265
The nature of human rights 265
Ideological approaches to human rights in international law 268
The development of international human rights law 270
Some basic principles 272
Domestic jurisdiction 272
The exhaustion of domestic or local remedies rule 273
Priorities of rights 274
Customary international law and human rights 275
Evolving principles 276
The United Nations system – general 276
The protection of the collective rights of groups and individuals 281
Prohibition of genocide 282
Prohibition of discrimination 286
The principle of self-determination as a human right 289
The protection of minorities 293
Other suggested collective rights 301
The United Nations system – implementation 302

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Political bodies – general 303
The Commission on Human Rights (1946–2006) 304
The Human Rights Council 306
Expert bodies established by UN organs 307
The Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights 307
The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights 308
Expert bodies established under particular treaties 311
The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination 311
The Human Rights Committee 314
The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women 322
The Committee Against Torture 326
The Committee on the Rights of the Child 331
The Committee on the Protection of Migrant Workers 333
The Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities 334
The Committee on Enforced Disappearances 334
Conclusions 335
The specialised agencies 338
The International Labour Organisation 338
The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation 341

7 The regional protection of human rights 345
Europe 345
The Council of Europe 345
The European Convention on Human Rights 347
The convention system 351
The European Social Charter 360
The European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment 362
The Council of Europe Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities 365
The European Union 369
The OSCE (Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe) 372
The CIS Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms 378
The Human Rights Chamber of Bosnia and Herzegovina 379
The Inter-American Convention on Human Rights 381
The Banjul Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights 391
The Arab Charter on Human Rights 395

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

8 Individual criminal responsibility in international law 397
International criminal courts and tribunals 399
The International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) 402
The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) 407
The International Criminal Court (ICC) 410
Hybrid courts and other internationalised domestic courts and tribunals 417
The Special Court for Sierra Leone 418
The Extraordinary Chambers of Cambodia 421
Kosovo Regulation 64 panels 423
East Timor Special Panels for Serious Crimes 424
The Bosnia War Crimes Chamber 426
The Special Tribunal for Lebanon 427
The Iraqi High Tribunal 428
The Serbian War Crimes Chamber 429
International crimes 430
Genocide 430
War crimes 433
Crimes against humanity 436
Aggression 439
Conclusion – fair trial provisions 440

9 Recognition 444
Recognition of states 445
Recognition of governments 454
De facto and de jure recognition 459
Premature recognition 460
Implied recognition 462
Conditional recognition 465
Collective recognition 465
Withdrawal of recognition 466
Non-recognition 468
The legal effects of recognition 470
Internationally 470
Internally 471
The UK 472
The USA 482

10 Territory 487
The concept of territory in international law 487
Territorial sovereignty 489
New states and title to territory 492

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The acquisition of additional territory 495
Boundary treaties and boundary awards 495
Accretion 498
Cession 499
Conquest and the use of force 500
The exercise of effective control 502
Intertemporal law 508
Critical date 509
Sovereign activities (effectivités) 511
The role of subsequent conduct: recognition, acquiescence and estoppel 515
Conclusions 520
Territorial integrity, self-determination and sundry claims 522
The doctrine of uti possidetis 525
Beyond uti possidetis 528
International boundary rivers 531
The Falkland Islands 532
'The common heritage of mankind' 533
The polar regions 534
Leases and servitudes 538
The law of outer space 541
The definition and delimitation of outer space 543
The regime of outer space 544
Telecommunications 549

11 The law of the sea 553
The territorial sea 556
Internal waters 556
Baselines 558
Bays 562
Islands 564
Archipelagic states 565
The width of the territorial sea 568
The juridical nature of the territorial sea 569
The right of innocent passage 570
Jurisdiction over foreign ships 574
International straits 575
The contiguous zone 578
The exclusive economic zone 580
The continental shelf 584
Definition 586
The rights and duties of the coastal state 588

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Maritime delimitation 590
Conclusion 605
Landlocked states 607
The high seas 609
Jurisdiction on the high seas 611
Exceptions to the exclusivity of flag-state jurisdiction 614
Right of visit 614
Piracy 615
The slave trade 616
Unauthorised broadcasting 617
Hot pursuit 617
Collisions 618
Treaty rights and agreements 619 Pollution 620
Straddling stocks 623
The international seabed 628
Introduction 628
The 1982 Law of the Sea Convention (Part XI) 629
The Reciprocating States Regime 631
The 1994 Agreement on Implementation of the Seabed Provisions of the Convention on the Law of the Sea 632
The International Seabed Authority 633
Settlement of disputes 635
The International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea 638

12 Jurisdiction 645
The principle of domestic jurisdiction 647
Legislative, executive and judicial jurisdiction 649
Civil jurisdiction 651
Criminal jurisdiction 652
The territorial principle 652
The nationality principle 659
The passive personality principle 664
The protective principle 666
The universality principle 668
War crimes, crimes against peace and crimes against humanity 668
Treaties providing for jurisdiction 673
Illegal apprehension of suspects and the exercise of jurisdiction 680
The US Alien Tort Claims Act 683
Extradition 686
Extraterritorial jurisdiction 688

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

13 Immunities from jurisdiction 697
Sovereign immunity 697
The absolute immunity approach 701
The restrictive approach 704
Sovereign and non-sovereign acts 708
State immunity and violations of human rights 715
Commercial acts 718
Contracts of employment 725
Other non-immunity areas 727
The personality issue – instrumentalities and parts of the state 728
The personality issue – immunity for government figures 735
Waiver of immunity 740
Pre-judgment attachment 742
Immunity from execution 744
The burden and standard of proof 748
Conclusion 749
Diplomatic law 750
The Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, 1961 752
The inviolability of the premises of the mission 754
The diplomatic bag 759
Diplomatic immunities – property 762
Diplomatic immunities – personal 764
Waiver of immunity 771
Consular privileges and immunities: the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963 772
The Convention on Special Missions, 1969 774
The Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in their Relations with International Organisations of a Universal Character, 1975 775
The immunities of international organisations 776

14 State responsibility 778
The nature of state responsibility 781
The question of fault 783
Imputability 785
Ultra vires acts 788
State control and responsibility 789
Mob violence, insurrections and civil wars 791
Circumstances precluding wrongfulness 793
Invocation of state responsibility 799
The consequences of internationally wrongful acts 800 Cessation 800
Reparation 801

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Serious breaches of peremptory norms (jus cogens) 807
Diplomatic protection and nationality of claims 808
The exhaustion of local remedies 819
The treatment of aliens 823
The relevant standard of treatment 824
The expropriation of foreign property 827
The property question 830
The nature of expropriation 830
Public purposes 833
Compensation 834
Bilateral investment treaties 837
Lump-sum agreements 840
Non-discrimination 842
The Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency 842

15 International environmental law 844
State responsibility and the environment 851
The basic duty of states 851
The appropriate standard 853
Damage caused 856
Liability for damage caused by private persons 858
Prevention of transboundary harm from hazardous activities 859
The problems of the state responsibility approach 862
International co-operation 862
Atmospheric pollution 871
Ozone depletion and global warming 875
Outer space 881
International watercourses 883
Ultra-hazardous activities 887
Nuclear activities 888
The provision of information 890
The provision of assistance 891
Nuclear safety 892
Civil liability 893
Hazardous wastes 895
Marine pollution 898
Pollution from ships 898

16 The law of treaties 902
The making of treaties 907
Formalities 907 Consent 909

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Consent by signature 910
Consent by exchange of instruments 911
Consent by ratification 911
Consent by accession 913
Reservations to treaties 913
Entry into force of treaties 925
The application of treaties 926
Third states 928
The amendment and modification of treaties 930
Treaty interpretation 932
Invalidity, termination and suspension of the operation of treaties 939
General provisions 939
Invalidity of treaties 940
Municipal law 940
Error 941
Fraud and corruption 942
Coercion 942
Jus cogens 944
Consequences of invalidity 944
The termination of treaties 945
Termination by treaty provision or consent 945 Material breach 947
Supervening impossibility of performance 949
Fundamental change of circumstances 950
Dispute settlement 952
Treaties between states and international organisations 953

17 State succession 956
Continuity and succession 960
Succession to treaties 966 Categories of treaties: territorial, political and other treaties 967 Succession to treaties generally 970
Absorption and merger 971
Cession of territory from one state to another 973
Secession from an existing state to form a new state or states 974
'Newly independent states' 977
Dissolution of states 979
International human rights treaties 981
Succession with respect to matters other than treaties 985
Membership of international organisations 985 Succession to assets and debts 986

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

State property 987
State archives 993
Public debt 996
Private rights 1001
State succession and nationality 1004
Hong Kong 1008

18 The settlement of disputes by peaceful means 1010
Diplomatic methods of dispute settlement 1014
Negotiation 1014
Good offices and mediation 1018
Inquiry 1019
Conciliation 1022
International institutions and dispute settlement 1024
Regional organisations 1024
The African Union (Organisation of African Unity) 1026
The Organisation of American States 1030
The Arab League 1031
Europe 1032
International organisations and facilities of limited competence 1034 Binding methods of dispute settlement 1047
Arbitration 1048

19 The International Court of Justice 1057
The organisation of the Court 1058
The jurisdiction of the Court 1064
General 1064
The nature of a legal dispute 1067
Contentious jurisdiction 1070
Article 36(1) 1075
Article 36(2) 1081
Sources of law, propriety and legal interest 1086 Evidence 1088
Provisional measures 1093
Counter-claims 1096
Third-party intervention 1097
Remedies 1101
Enforcement 1104
Application for interpretation of a judgment 1105
Application for revision of a judgment 1105 Examination of a situation after the judgment 1107
The advisory jurisdiction of the Court 1108

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The role of the Court 1113 Proliferation of courts and tribunals 1115

20 International law and the use of force by states 1118
Law and force from the 'just war' to the United Nations 1119
The UN Charter 1123
'Force' 1124
'Against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state' 1126
Categories of force 1128
Retorsion 1128
Reprisals 1129
The right of self-defence 1131
The protection of nationals abroad 1143
Conclusions 1145
Collective self-defence 1146
Intervention 1147
Civil wars 1148
Aid to the authorities of a state 1151
Aid to rebels 1152
The situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo 1154
Humanitarian intervention 1155
Terrorism and international law 1159

21 International humanitarian law 1167
Development 1168
The scope of protection under international humanitarian law 1170
The wounded and sick 1171
Prisoners of war 1172
Protection of civilians and occupation 1176
The conduct of hostilities 1184
Armed conflicts: international and internal 1190
Non-international armed conflict 1194 Enforcement of humanitarian law 1199
Conclusion 1201

22 The United Nations 1204
The UN System 1204
The Security Council 1206
The General Assembly 1210
Other principal organs 1213
The peaceful settlement of disputes 1216
The League of Nations 1216

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The United Nations system 1217
The Security Council 1218
The General Assembly 1221
The Secretary-General 1222
Peacekeeping and observer missions 1224
Conclusion 1233
The collective security system 1235
The Security Council 1236 Determination of the situation 1236
Chapter VII measures 1241
The use of force in non-enforcement situations 1257
The range of UN actions from humanitarian assistance to enforcement – conclusions 1266
The Security Council, international law and the International Court of Justice 1268
The role of the General Assembly 1271
The UN and regional arrangements and agencies 1273

23 International institutions 1282
Introduction 1282
A brief survey of international institutions 1284
Institutions of a universal character 1284
Regional institutions 1287
Europe 1288
The American continent 1291
The Arab League 1292
Africa 1293
Asia 1294
Some legal aspects of international organisations 1295
Personality 1296
The constituent instruments 1303
The powers of international institutions 1306
The applicable law 1309
The responsibility of international institutions 1310
Liability of member states 1314
The accountability of international institutions 1317 Privileges and immunities 1318
Dissolution 1329
Succession 1330

Some useful international law websites 1332

Index 1342

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

PREFACE

The fifth edition of this book that appeared in 2003 has been extensively revised. To mark the growing importance of the international prosecution of alleged war criminals and others accused of egregious crimes, a new chapter on Individual Criminal Responsibility in International Law has been introduced. The chapter on Air and Space Law has had to be removed, with the section on Outer Space being moved to the chapter on Territory. The increasing significance of the International Court of Justice is recognised by devoting a separate chapter to it. The section on the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea has been moved to the chapter on the Law of the Sea. The other chapters in the book have been re-examined, updated and, where necessary, rewritten. I have also been able to correct some errors. I am particularly delighted that the book has been translated into, among other languages, Chinese, Polish, Hungarian and Portuguese and I am very grateful for the work of all those involved.

I would especially like to thank Sinead Moloney of Cambridge University Press for her encouragement, assistance and above all patience. Particular gratitude is owed to Merel Alstein for her meticulous research assistance and for updating the web reference section. I am, once again, very grateful to Diane Ilott for her careful and thorough copy-editing and to Maureen MacGlashan for so carefully preparing the index and tables respectively. A debt remains to Sir Elihu Lauterpacht QC for his encouragement in the early development of this work. I also remain grateful to my many colleagues from many countries for their advice and encouragement, while reassuring them that all responsibility for the end product rests squarely with me.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

As ever, the real and deepest thanks are due to my wife Judith and my children, Talia, Ilan and Daniella. They have borne the brunt of my travails over the years and endured the inevitable pressures and have done so in a caring and loving manner. Their support remains the indispensable foundation of this work.

Malcolm N. Shaw QC
Faculty of Law University of Leicester
Spring 2008

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

TABLE OF CASES

Note: Figures in square brackets refer to volume and page of the Annual Digest/International Law Reports where cited cases are reproduced. 'Et al.' reflects the fact that the Annual Digest practice was to reproduce reports in sections according to subject matter so that reports are liable to be distributed throughout a volume.

I° Congreso Del Partido [64 ILR 154] 145 n72, 699 n699, 707, 710–13, 714, 719, 735 n205

A v. B 1323 n184

A. Ahlström Oy v. Commission: see Woodpulp Cases (Ahlström Osakeyhtiö and Others v. Commission (In re Wood Pulp Cartel) (Joined Cases 89/85, 104/85, 114/85, 116–17/85 and 125–9/85)) [96 ILR 148]

A and B v. State of Israel 166 n190, 1174 n33

A Company Ltd v. Republic of X [87 ILR 412] 740 n237, 743, 748 n280, 771–2

A (FC) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department 150, 153 n119

A Limited v. B Bank and Bank of X [111 ILR 590] 182

A and Others v. Secretary of State for the Home Department 140 n50

AA v. Azerbaijan 329 n351

Aaland Islands case 200–1, 251–2, 489 n12, 539–40, 969

Abbasi and Juma case [123 ILR 599; 126 ILR 685] 130, 181 n269, 182 n276, 187, 188, 811 n212, 812

Abbott v. Republic of South Africa (Decision No. 107/92) [113 ILR 411] 707, 746 n263, 747–8

Abu Dhabi Arbitration (Petroleum Development Limited/Sheikh of Abu Dhabi) [18 ILR 144] 105 n146, 585 n144

Re Accession of the European Community to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Opinion 2/94) [108 ILR 225] 369

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Acquisition of Polish Nationality (Series B, No. 7) [2 AD 292] 1004 n249
Adams v. Adams [52 ILR 45] 478, 479 n135
Ex parte Adan 185
ADM Milling Company v. Republic of Bolivia [63 ILR 56] 721
Administration des Chemins de Fer du Gouvernement Iranien v. Sociétà Levant Express Transport [52 ILR 315] 707 n52 Administration des Douanes v. Société Cafés Jacques Vabre and Weigel et Compagnie [93 ILR 240] 174
Administrative Tribunal case: see United Nations Administrative Tribunal, Effect of Awards of Compensation [21 ILR 310]; United Nations Administrative Tribunal, Review of Judgment
Advocaten voor de Wereld v. Leden van de Ministerraad (judgment of 3 May 2007) (Case C-303/05) 371
AE v. Switzerland 274 n48
Aegean Sea Continental Shelf case (Greece v. Turkey) [60 ILR 511] 905 n10, 907 n25
Aegean Sea Continental Shelf case (Greece v. Turkey) (Interim Measures) [60 ILR 524] 1054
Aegean Sea Continental Shelf case (Greece v. Turkey) (Jurisdiction) [60 ILR 562] 508–9, 1066, 1220, 1221
Aerial Incident of 27 July 1955 case (Preliminary Objections) (Israel v. Bulgaria) [27 ILR 557] 785, 821 n257, 1081 n162, 1083
Aerial Incident (USA v. USSR) case 1076 n132
Aerotrade Inc. and Aerotrade International Inc. v. Republic of Haiti [63 ILR 41] 723
Affo and Another v. Commander Israel Defence Force in the West Bank (HC 785/87); Rafia and Another v. Commander Israel Defence Force in the Gaza Strip and Another (HC 845/87); Hindi v. Commander Israel Defence Force in the Judea and Samaria Region (HC 27/88) [83 ILR 121] 166 n190
Afouneh v. Attorney-General (Palestine) [10 AD 327] 681
AFRC case 420
Agassi v. Robinson (Inspector of Taxes) 653 n37
Agbor v. Metropolitan Police Commissioner [52 ILR 382] 765 n374
AGIP Spa v. People's Republic of the Congo [67 ILR 318] 831 n311, 833 n323, 836 n342, 1042 n194
Ex parte Ahmed and Patel 151
Ahmend Ali Al-Kateb v. Goodwin 168 n204, 170
AIC Ltd v. Nigeria [129 ILR 571] 720, 745
AIG v. Iran [84 ILR 645] 192 n348, 831, 837 n350

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

AIG Capital Partners Inc. v. Kazakhstan 745
Air India v. Wiggins [77 ILR 276] 688 n217
Air Services Agreement of 27 March 1946 case (United States/France) [54 ILR 303] 794 n93, 795, 949 n214
The Akademik Fyodorov [131 ILR 460] 742, 746
Akayesu case (ICTR-96-4-T) 409, 431, 432, 438
Akdeniz v. Turkey 358 n87, 359 n88
Akdivar v. Turkey 274 n49, 355
Aksoy v. Turkey 358 n57
Al-Adsani v. Government of Kuwait and Others [100 ILR 465, 103 ILR 420, 107 ILR 536] 647, 716
Al-Adsani v. United Kingdom (Application No 35763/97) (Merits) [123 ILR 24] 126, 147 n244, 326, 349, 716–17
Re Al-Fin Corporation's Patent [52 ILR 68] 455, 479
Al-Jedda case 127 n245, 139, 1183
Al-Rawi case: see R (Al-Rawi) v. Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs
Al Sabah v. Grupo Torras SA 653 n37
Al-Skeini v. Secretary of State for Defence [133 ILR 693] 138 n41, 153 n119, 653 nn33 and 37, 663 n72, 1183 n79
Alabama Claims 111, 135, 941, 1048
Alamieyeseigha v. CPS 734
Alcom Ltd v. Republic of Colombia [74 ILR 170] 707, 718 n111, 719, 746–7, 762
Alconbury case: see R (on the Application of Alconbury Ltd) v. Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions Alejandre v. Republic of Cuba and the Cuban Air Force [121 ILR 603] 126 n238, 715 n95
Alemán Lacayo v. Nicaragua 387
Alfred Dunhill of London Inc. v. Republic of Cuba et al. [66 ILR 212] 192, 705, 722–3
Re Alien Children Education Litigation 160 n161
Aloeboetoe v. Suriname 801 n150
Alvarez et al. v. Colombia 387 n247
Alvarez-Machain case [95 ILR 355] 147 n88, 160–1, 681–2, 685, 686
Amalgamated Metal Trading v. Department of Trade and Industry 180
Ambatielos Claim (Greece v. United Kingdom) [23 ILR 306, 24 ILR 291] 273, 820, 936, 946, 1051 n253, 1056
Ambatielos Claim (Greece v. United Kingdom) (Preliminary Objections) [19 ILR 416] 1081

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

AMCO v. Republic of Indonesia [89 ILR 366] 100 n116, 101 n124, 103, 107 n157, 825, 828, 836, 1042
Amerada Hess Shipping Corporation v. Argentine Republic [79 ILR 1] 160 n160, 685
American Insurance Association v. Garamendi 189
Aminoil case (Government of Kuwait and American Independent Oil Company) [66 ILR 518] 802 n155, 804 n166, 829 n298, 834, 835
Amoco International Finance Corporation v. Islamic Republic of Iran (Case No. 56) [83 ILR 500] 837
Amoco Overseas Oil Company and Amoco Transport Company v. Compagnie Nationale Algérienne de Navigation and T/S Amenas [63 ILR 252] 721 n131
AN International Bank Plc v. Republic of Zambia and Others [118 ILR 602] 749 n285
Anderson v. NV Transandine Handelmaatschappij et al. [10 AD 10] 194 n359
Anderson case: see R v. Home Secretary, ex parte Anderson
Anglo-French Continental Shelf case (First Decision) [54 ILR 6] 107 n161, 111 n182, 556 n9, 593, 594 n198, 595, 600, 601 n241, 603 nn257 and 259, 606, 638 n425, 916, 920–1, 938, 1054–5
Anglo-Iranian Oil Company case (Interim Measures) [19 ILR 501] 901, 1094
Anglo-Iranian Oil Company case (Preliminary Objection) [19 ILR 507] 136, 905
Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case [18 ILR 86] 77, 78 n29, 83 n44, 90, 110, 134 n19, 507, 513, 517, 518–19, 520, 559–61, 562, 570 n84, 590–1, 609, 610, 638, 648, 656
The Anna 498
The Annette [1 AD 43] 472
Antarctic cases (1958) 1076 n132
Antarctica Legal Status case [108 ILR 654] 536 n274
The Antelope 650
Applicability of Article VI, Section 22, of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations [85 ILR 300] 1325
Applicability of the Obligation to Arbitrate under Section 21 of the United Nations Headquarters Agreement of 26 June 1947 [82 ILR 225] 135, 165, 941 n182, 1068, 1113 n357, 1311, 1320
Application for Arrest Warrant Against General Shaul Mofaz 740 n235 Aquarone case 174 n236

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Arab Monetary Fund v. Hashim and Others (No. 3) [83 ILR 243, 85 ILR 1] 479 n139, 1301–2
The Arantzazu Mendi [9 AD 60] 474, 481
Arbitral Award of 31 July 1989, Case concerning (Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal) (Request for Indication of Provisional Measures and Judgment) [92 ILR 1] 1093 n238, 1094 nn243 and 244
Arbitral Award Made by the King of Spain on 23 December 1906 case (Honduras v. Nicaragua) [30.457] 518 n177, 939 n175, 1053 n268, 1054
Argentina (Republic of) and Others v. Weltover Inc. and Others [100 ILR 509] 722, 724
Argentina/Chile Frontier case (Palena) [38 ILR 10] 496, 509, 515 n156, 531, 934 n149, 939 n175, 1051 n252, 1055
Argentine Airlines v. Ross [63 ILR 195] 721
Re Argoud [45 ILR 90] 681
Arkansas v. Tennessee [9 AD 112] 498
Armament Dieppe SA v. United States 557 n16
Armando Dos Santos case 425
Armed Actions case: see Nicaragua v. Honduras (Border and Transborder Armed Actions) [84 ILR 218] Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (Congo v. Uganda) (Request for Provisional Measures): see Congo v. Uganda Arrest Warrant case: see Congo v. Belgium (Arrest Warrant case)
Artico case [60 ILR 182] 349, 938
Artukovic v. Rison (In the Matter of the Extradition of Artukovic) [79 ILR 383] 960 n15
AS & DD (Libya) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department 906 n23
Ashby case 320
Asociacion de Reclamantes v. United Mexican States [84 ILR 87] 700
Assanidze v. Georgia 350 n24
Associated Provincial Picture Houses Ltd v. Wednesbury Corp. 692 n245
Association of Lawyers for Peace and Four Other Organizations v. Netherlands 164 n178 Association SOS Attentats v. France 736 Asylum case (Colombia v. Peru) (Haya de la Torre case) (Judgment) [17 ILR 280] 76–7, 78, 83, 86 n54, 90 n74, 92, 488, 758–9
Asylum case (Colombia v. Peru) (Haya de la Torre case) (Request for Interpretation) [17 ILR 339] 1067 n66, 1105 Asylum case (Colombia v. Peru) (Haya de la Torre case) (Implementation of Judgment) [18 ILR 349] 1065, 1098

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Athens Maritime Enterprises Corporation v. Hellenic Mutual War Risks Association (Bermuda) Limited [78 ILR 563] 615 n323
Attorney-General (Canada) v. Attorney-General for Ontario [8 AD 41] 151 n106, 166–7, 220
Attorney-General (England) v. Associated Newspapers Ltd 154 n124
Attorney-General (England), Reference (No. 1 of 1982) 695 n261
Attorney-General (Fiji) v. Robt Jones House Ltd [80 ILR 1] 459
Attorney-General (New Zealand) v. Ortiz and Others [78 ILR 591] 650
Attorney-General (New Zealand) v. Zaoui 167 n197
Auditing of Accounts between the Netherlands and France 852, 883 n214, 933 n142 Australia and New Zealand Banking Group v. Commonwealth of Australia 701 n18, 719–20, 721
Austria v. Altmann 707 n54
Austria v. Italy 354, 937, 982 n138
Austro-German Customs Union Regime [6 AD 26, 6 AD 427] 202, 211–12
Autocephalous Greek-Orthodox Church of Cyprus and the Republic of Cyprus v. Goldberg and Feldman Fine Arts Inc. [108 ILR 488] 236 n203, 484
Avena (Mexico v. USA) (Provisional Measures) [134 ILR 120] 130, 135–6, 159, 164 n178, 221, 773 n432, 774, 800 n142, 1091 n227, 1093 n238, 1094, 1095 n249, 1101 n292, 1103 nn302 and 305
In the matter of AY Bank Ltd 185, 988 n168
Azazh Kebbeda Tesema and Others v. Italian Government [9 AD 93] 467
Azinian v. United Mexican States [121 ILR 1] 789 n62
Aziz v. Republic of Yemen 740

Baboeram-Adhin and Others v. Suriname (Communication Nos. 146/1983 and 148–154/1983) [94 ILR 377] 274 n48
Baccus SRL v. Servicio Nacional del Trigo [23 ILR 160] 703, 729–30, 731
Bagilishima case (ICTR-95-1A-T) 432
Baker v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) 169 n211
Baker v. Carr 189, 190–1
Ballantyne case 295 n168
Banamar-Capizzi v. Embassy of the Popular Democratic Republic of Algeria (Case No. 2085) [87 ILR 56] 747
Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Chase Manhattan Bank [66 ILR 421] 834 n329
Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino et al. [35 ILR 2] 482

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Bancoult v. McNamara 190
Bancoult case 188
Bandes v. Harlow and Jones Inc.; Harlow and Jones Inc. v. Bandes and Alvarez [92 ILR 468] 192
Bank of Hawaii v. Balos 225 n140
Banković v. Belgium and Others (Application No. 52207/99) (Admissibility) [123 ILR 94] 349, 350, 653, 1185 n88
Barbados v. Trinidad 592, 601 n245, 605, 606, 636 n410, 1016 n24, 1055
Barbie [78 ILR 124, 100 ILR 330] 174 n236, 670, 671
Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company Ltd, Case concerning (New Application, 1962) (Belgium v. Spain) (Second Phase) [46 ILR 178] 105, 107, 124, 137, 250, 800, 811, 816–17, 818, 841 n369, 982, 1081, 1147 n149
Barrandon v. United States [113 ILR 464, 116 ILR 622] 726–7
Bašić et al. v. Republika Srpska 380 n212
BCCI (In Liquidation) v. Price Waterhouse (A Firm) and Others [111 ILR 604] 734 Beagle Channel Arbitration (Argentina/Chile) [52 ILR 93] 111 n182, 124 n228, 496 n49, 499 n65, 510, 522, 526, 570, 903 n4, 934 n148, 968 n65, 1018 n38, 1051 n252, 1054–5
BECTU case 371
Beer and Regan v. Germany 1322
Behrami v. France 350–1, 787–8, 1312 n143, 1313 n144, 1317 n161
Behring International Inc. v. Imperial Iranian Air Force et al. [63 ILR 261] 742 n248
Behring Sea Arbitration 1048, 1092 n232
Beit Sourik v. Government of Israel [129 ILR 189] 1182
Belgian Linguistics case [45 ILR 114] 288, 348 n14, 355
Belgium v. Nicod and Another [82 ILR 124] 755 n316
Belgium (Government) v. Postlethwaite 687 n211
Belgium/Netherlands Frontier case [27 ILR 62] 1075 n127
Belilos v. Switzerland [88 ILR 635] 916–17, 922
Benaïm c. Procureur de la République de Bordeaux 216 n97
Benin/Niger 137 n35, 510, 515 n153, 531, 542, 1063
Benvenuti and Bonfant Srl v. Government of the People's Republic of the Congo [65 ILR 88, 67 ILR 345] 831 n311, 836 n340, 1042 n194
Bergman v. de Sieyès [14 AD 150] 769 n403
Berizzi Brothers Company v. SS Pesaro [3 AD 186] 703
Berry case 321
Beth El Mission v. Minister of Social Welfare (Israel) [47 ILR 205] 280

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Bhajan Singh case: see R v. Home Secretary, ex parte Bhajan Singh [61 ILR 260]
Biloune and Marine Drive Complex Ltd v. Ghana Investments Centre and the Government of Ghana [95 ILR 183] 831–2, 836 n343
Birch Shipping Corporation v. Embassy of the United Republic of Tanzania [63 ILR 524] 747
Blagojević case (IT-02-60-A) 433 n199, 443 n229
Blaškić case (IT-95-14-T) [122 ILR 1] 437
Blathwayte v. Baron Cawley 154, 186 n306
B.M. 173
Re Bo Xilai 775 n444
Board of Trade v. Owen 655
Boffolo case 826
Bolivian Railway Company case 792 n76
Boos, Waller and Brooker v. Barry and Others [121 ILR 499] 7, 157, 754–5, 764
Border and Transborder Armed Actions case: see Nicaragua v. Honduras (Border and Transborder Armed Actions) [84 ILR 218]
Bosphorus Airways v. Ireland 351 n27, 788 n56, 1317 n161
Botswana/Namibia case 496 n49, 497, 499 n61, 504–5, 513, 531, 933 n142, 934
Re Bottali [78 ILR 105] 978 n121
Boucherf v. Algeria 320 n299
Boudellaa et al. v. Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina 380 n213, 1163 n228
Boumediene v. Bush 1174 n32
Bouzari and Others v. Islamic Republic of Iran [124 ILR 427] 716
Boyle and Rice v. UK 356
BP Exploration Company (Libya) Ltd v. Libyan Arab Republic [53 ILR 297] 803, 833, 1052 n260
Braka v. Nacional Financiera 722
Brannigan and McBride v. UK 356, 358 n79
Branno v. Ministry of War [22 ILR 756] 1300 n74, 1319 n165
Brazilian Embassy Employee case (Case No. 706) [116 ILR 625] 173, 727
Brazilian Federal Loans case [5 AD 466] 136 n32, 796 n107
Brcko Inter-Entity Boundary case 105, 470
Brdjanin case (IT-99-36-T) 433
Breard v. Greene; Republic of Paraguay et al. v. Gilmore et al.; Re Breard; Republic of Paraguay et al. v. Gilmore III et al. [118 ILR 22] 130, 164 n179, 165–6

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Ex parte Brind [84 ILR 754, 85 ILR 29] 150 n98, 153 n119, 154 n124, 168
British Airways Board v. Laker Airways Ltd and Another [74 ILR 36] 184, 692
Ex parte British Council of Turkish Cypriot Associations and Another [112 ILR 735] 186
British Guiana/Venezuela Boundary Arbitration 506 n97, 1048, 1052, 1053
Brogan case 357–8
Broniowski v. Poland 360 n93
Brown v. United States 158
Brown v. Whimster 153
Brown cases: see also R v. Brown; Robert E. Brown Case [2 AD 66]
Buchanan v. Babco 155
Buck v. Attorney-General (England) [42 ILR 11] 186, 699
Buraimi arbitration 1053 n267
Burkina Faso/Mali Frontier Dispute (Judgment) [80 ILR 459] 89 n69, 107 n155, 108–9, 122 n218, 290–1, 490, 509–10, 514, 519, 522, 523 n205, 526–7, 528 n231, 529–30, 905 n18, 968, 995 n212, 1063
Burkina Faso/Mali Frontier Dispute (Provisional Measures) [80 ILR 450] 1095 n251
Buron v. Denman 180–1
Buttes Gas and Oil Company and Another v. Hammer and Another (Nos. 2 and 3) [64 ILR 331] 186 n301
Buttes Gas and Oil Company and Another v. Hammer and Another (No. 3) [64 ILR 273] 181–2, 186, 189, 699
Buvot v. Barbuit 141

Café Jaques Vabre case [93 ILR 240] 174
Caglar v. Billingham (Inspector of Taxes) and Related Appeals [108 ILR 510] 236 n203, 478–9
Caire case [5 AD 146 et al.] 783, 788, 789 n64
Callejo v. Bancomer SA [84 ILR 106] 722
Calley v. Calloway 669
Camacho v. Rogers 163 n178
Cameroon v. Nigeria (Case concerning the Land and Maritime Boundary Between Cameroon and Nigeria) (Countermeasures: Order of 30 June 1999) 1097, 1100
Cameroon v. Nigeria (Case concerning the Land and Maritime Boundary Between Cameroon and Nigeria) (Judgment) (2002) 89 n63, 108 n165, 122 n217, 134, 216–17, 224, 496 n45, 497 nn50 and

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

52, 508, 515 n154, 519 n183, 520, 524 n207, 601 n245, 604–5, 606, 607, 907 n27, 908, 909 n35, 910 n43, 934, 940–1, 1016 n29, 1075 n128, 1078, 1103, 1114
Cameroon v. Nigeria (Case concerning the Land and Maritime Boundary Between Cameroon and Nigeria) (Preliminary Objections) (1998) 103, 104, 110–11, 516, 519 n180, 1016, 1066, 1070, 1075 n122, 1082, 1087 n200
Cameroon v. Nigeria (Case concerning the Land and Maritime Boundary Between Cameroon and Nigeria) (Provisional Measures) (1996) [106 ILR 144] 1066, 1070 n91, 1093–4, 1095
Cameroon v. Nigeria (Case concerning the Land and Maritime Boundary Between Cameroon and Nigeria) (Request for Interpretation) (1999) 1105
The Camouco (Panama v. France) [125 ILR 164] 642
Campbell and Cosans case (Merits) [67 ILR 480] 355
Can and Others v. United States [107 ILR 255] 190, 191
Canada v. Cargnello (Decision No. 4017/1998) [114 ILR 559] 173 n228, 726 n157
Canada v. Edelson [131 ILR 279] 755 n314
Canepa v. Canada 320
Canevaro case 815 nn233 and 235
Carbonar v. Magurno (Decision No. 9675/1993) [114 ILR 534] 727
Carey and New England Petroleum Corporation v. National Oil Corporation and the Libyan Arab Republic [63 ILR 164, 63 ILR 232] 732
Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. Rayner and Keeler Limited (No. 2) [43 ILR 23] 445, 477–8, 480–1, 482
The Caroline 1131, 1139–40, 1145
Cassell v. Broome 154
Castillo Páez v. Peru [116 ILR 451] 390 n266
Castro and Others v. Saudi Arabia [63 ILR 419] 723
Čelebići case (IT-96-21) 443 n229
Centre for Industrial Development v. Naidu [115 ILR 424] 746
Cerrutti arbitrations 1053 n265
Certain Expenses of the United Nations (Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter) [34 ILR 281] 8, 937, 1065 n55, 1066 n57, 1113 n357, 1114, 1272–3, 1295, 1304, 1307 Certain German Interests in Polish Upper Silesia case [3 AD 5 et al.] 101 n120, 103 n136, 137, 806, 824, 833, 911, 1002

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Certain Phosphate Lands in Nauru (Nauru v. Australia) (Preliminary Objections) [97 ILR 1] 224 nn135 and 136
Certain Shrimp and Shrimp Products case 1038
CGM Industrial (Pty) Ltd and Others v. KPMG and Others [121 ILR 472] 707 n52
Chahal v. United Kingdom [108 ILR 385] 358
Chamizal Arbitration 499 n61, 505–6, 531, 1053 n265
Champagnie case 321
Chandler v. Director of Public Prosecutions (England) 181 n269
Channel Tunnel case: see Eurotunnel case (Partial Award); R on the Application of Channel Tunnel Group Ltd and France-Manch SA v. Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions [119 ILR 398]
The Charkieh 702 n19
Chase Manhattan Bank v. Traffic Stream (BVI) Infrastructure Ltd 818 n245
Re Chateau-Gai Wines Ltd and Attorney-General for Canada [55 ILR 38] 459
Chattin case [4 AD 248] 824 nn273 and 275
Cheney v. Conn [41 ILR 421] 151 n106
Chierici and Rosa v. Ministry of the Merchant Navy and Harbour Office of Rimini [71 ILR 258] 199 n16
Children and Adolescents Deprived of Liberty in the 'Complexo do Tatuapé' of FEBEM v. Brazil 388
China (Republic of) v. Merchants' Fire Assurance Corporation of New York [5 AD 42] 463
Chisholm and Company and Chisholm v. Bank of Jamaica and Barber [121 ILR 487] 722 n132
Chorzów Factory case (Germany v. Poland) (Merits) [4 AD 258] 100, 781, 782, 801, 834, 836 n340, 987, 1002 n241, 1102
Chow Hung Ching and Si Pao Kung v. R [15 AD 147] 167
Christian v. The Queen [130 ILR 696] 181 n270, 499
Chrysostomos v. Turkey 355 n52 Chuan Pu Andrew Wang and Others v. Office of the Federal Prosecutor (Switzerland) 448 n16
Chumbipuma Aguirre v. Peru (Barrios Altos case) 272 n35, 390
Chung Chi Cheung v. R [9 AD 264] 143–4, 145
Chung Kheng Lin v. Minister for Immigration (Australia) 168 n203
City of Berne v. The Bank of England 472

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Civil Aeronautics Administration v. Singapore Airlines Ltd [133 ILR 371] 464
Civil Air Transport Inc. v. Central Air Transport Corporation [19 ILR 85] 463, 476–7, 485
Clark (Inspector of Taxes) v. Oceanic Contractors Inc. 553 n37
Clerget v. Banque Commerciale pour l'Europe du Nord and Others [65 ILR 54] 463
Clipperton Island Award (France and Mexico) [6 AD 105] 511 n130, 512
CME Czech Republic BV v. Czech Republic 802 n150, 805 n172, 832 n312
CND v. Prime Minister of the UK and Others 180, 181 n269, 184, 185
Coard v. USA [123 ILR 156] 1197
Coe (On Behalf of the Wiradjuri Tribe) v. Commonwealth of Australia and Another [118 ILR 322] 168 n201
Colombia–Venezuela Boundary Arbitration [1 AD 84, 1 AD 371] 526, 968
Comercial F SA v. Council of Ministers (Case No. 516) [88 ILR 691] 810
Commercial and Estates Company of Egypt v. Board of Trade [2 AD 11, 2 AD 423] 143 n61 Commission of the European Communities v. Council of the European Communities (Case 22/70) (ERTA case) [47 ILR 278] 241
Committee of United States Citizens Living in Nicaragua v. Reagan [85 ILR 248] 158
Commonwealth of Australia and Another v. State of Tasmania and Others [68 ILR 266] 170 n212, 222
Compañía de Aguas del Aconquija v. Argentina 136 n29
Re Competence of Conciliation Commission [22 ILR 867] 1052 n261
Competence of the European Community to Conclude International Agreements Concerning Services and the Protection of Intellectual Property (Opinion 1/94) [105 ILR 75] 242 Competence of the General Assembly for the Admission of a State to the United Nations [17 ILR 326] 933, 937 n165, 1210 n27, 1306
Compulsory Membership in an Association Prescribed by Law for the Practice of Journalism (Articles 13 and 29 American Convention on Human Rights) (Advisory Opinion OC-5/85) [75 ILR 30]: see Licensing of Journalists case Conditions for Admission of a State to Membership of the United Nations [15 AD 333] 464, 1113 n357, 1210 n27, 1268, 1295
Condor and Filvem v. Minister of Justice (Italy) (Case No. 329) [101 ILR 394] 743, 747

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Congo v. Belgium (Arrest Warrant case) [128 ILR 60] 82, 112, 397 n4, 653, 654 n38, 666, 669 n102, 674, 739, 1067 n66, 1069 n84, 1070, 1088, 1102
Congo v. France 1095 n249
Congo v. Rwanda 285, 921, 925 n109, 1067 n73, 1070 n89, 1071 n29, 1075, 1085, 1093 n238
Congo v. Uganda 178 n147, 752, 755–6, 765, 801 n149, 1066, 1067 n65, 1071 n100, 1090, 1091, 1096, 1097 n261, 1101 n293, 1103–4, 1116 n374, 1127 n43, 1135–6, 1138 n98, 1142, 1143 n122, 1152 n174, 1153, 1177, 1180, 1181, 1270
Consortium X v. Swiss Federal Government 1322 n180
Constitutional Court case 387 n247
Construction of a Wall case [129 ILR 37] 83, 88, 107, 110, 255, 276, 322, 798 n127, 801 n149, 804 n167, 935 n156, 1060 n17, 1108 n335, 1109, 1111, 1135, 1176 n43, 1177, 1178 n55, 1179, 1180 n62, 1181, 1200 n179 Controller and Auditor General (New Zealand) v. Sir Ronald Davidson 715
Cook v. United States (The Mazel Tov) [6 AD 3] 158, 164
Coreck Maritime GmbH v. Sevrybokholodflot [107 ILR 658] 961 n22
Corfu Channel case (United Kingdom v. Albania) (Merits) [16 AD 155] 101, 107 n156, 109 n170, 213–14, 280 n81, 575–6, 610, 781 n20, 784–6, 806, 852, 854, 863, 936 n162, 1073, 1077–8, 1089 nn208 and 215, 1092, 1104, 1127, 1148, 1187 n105, 1221
Corfu Channel case (United Kingdom v. Albania) (Preliminary Objection) [15 AD 349] 1076–7
Cornejo v. County of San Diego 159 n155
Corporacion Venezolana de Fomento v. Vintero Sales Corporation et al. [63 ILR 299, 63 ILR 477] 721 n131
Corrie v. Caterpillar 191
Costa v. ENEL (Ente Nazionale Energia Elettrica) (Case 6/64) [93 ILR 23] 178, 241, 1297 n64
Council of Civil Service Unions v. Minister for the Civil Service 149, 181 n269, 187
The Cristina (Compañía Naviera Vascongado v. SS Cristina) [9 AD 250] 144, 653, 702–3, 705
Croatia et al. v. Girocredit Bank AG der Sparkassen 991 n190
Crotty v. An Taoiseach and Others [93 ILR 480] 170 n217
Currie case 321
Cutting case 664–5

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Cyprus v. Turkey (Application No. 25781/94) [120 ILR 10] 236, 350, 354, 355 n56, 356, 357, 358, 469–70, 478 n133, 782, 790 n70
Cyprus v. Turkey, Decisions on the Admissibility of the Applications (Nos. 6780/74, 6950/75, 8007/77) [62 ILR 4] 274 n49, 354
Cyprus v. Turkey (First and Second Applications) 1197
Cyprus v. Turkey (Third Application) 354
Cyprus cases (Greece v. UK) 354
Cyprus cases (Greece v. UK) (Second Case) 273, 274 n49
The Cysne (Portugal v. Germany) [5 AD 150 et al.] 794 n92
Czarnikow Ltd v. Rolimpex [64 ILR 195, 64 ILR 204] 731

Dadar v. Canada 329
Dallal v. Iran, Bank Mellat (formerly International Bank of Iran) (Case No. 149) [75 ILR 126] 815 n234
Dalmia Cement Company Ltd v. National Bank of Pakistan [67 ILR 611] 1043
Dames & Moore v. Regan [72 ILR 270] 162 n171, 708 n56
Danzig Railway Officials case (Jurisdiction of the Courts of Danzig) [4 AD 281, 4 AD 287] 259
Daventree Ltd v. Azerbaijan 192 n351
Davy case 787 n53
De Andrade v. De Andrade [118 ILR 299] 766 n382, 767 n383
De Becker v. Belgium (No. 214/56) (Admissibility) [25 ILR 172] 355
De Haber v. Queen of Portugal 702 n19
De Queiroz v. State of Portugal [115 ILR 430] 727
De Sanchez v. Banco Central de Nicaragua and Others [88 ILR 75] 160 n163, 711, 828
Definition of Other Treaties Subject to the Interpretation of the Inter-American Court 388
Delagoa Bay case 505 n92
Delalić case (IT-96-21) 326
Delgamuukw and Others v. The Queen in Right of British Columbia and Others; First Nations Summit and Others, Interveners [115 ILR 446] 298 n180
Dellums v. Bush [87 ILR 684] 190 n331
Demjanjuk v. Petrovsky [79 ILR 534] 671 n120
Deputy Registrar case [94 ILR 308] 766
Derbyshire County Council v. Times Newspapers Ltd 154 n124 Deutsche Continental Gas-Gesellschaft v. Polish State [5 AD 11] 200 n19, 448

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Diallo (Guinea v. Democratic Republic of the Congo) 809, 817–18, 819 n250, 820 n253, 1071 n100
Dickinson v. Del Solar; Mobile and General Insurance Company Ltd (Third Party) [5 AD 299] 766
Diergaardt et al. v. New Zealand 292 n155
Dietrich v. The Queen 168 n201
Diggs v. Dent 164
Diggs v. Schultz [60 ILR 393] 164
Director of Public Prosecutions v. Doot and Others [57 ILR 117] 654
Director of Public Prosecutions v. Stonehouse [73 ILR 252] 655
Distomo Massacre case (Prefecture of Voiotia v. Germany) [129 ILR 556] 728, 1178 n56
Re Ditfort, ex parte Deputy Commissioner of Taxation [87 ILR 170] 189
Diversion of Water from the River Meuse (Netherlands v. Belgium) [8 AD 444] 106, 1089
Djibouti v. France 737, 739 n226, 1061 n20, 1075, 1076 n132
Re Doe (Mr and Mrs); Mr and Mrs Doe v. United States [121 ILR 567] 736
Dole Food Co. v. Patrickson 722 n132
Donegal v. Zambia 741 n243, 748 n277
Donnelly case 274 n49
Dow Chemical Ibérica v. Commission 369–70
Dr Breger's case 826 n288
Draft Convention of the International Atomic Energy Agency on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Materials, Facilities and Transports (Ruling 1/78) [99 ILR 292] 241
Dralle v. Republic of Czechoslovakia [17 ILR 155] 704–5
Drozd and Janousek v. France and Spain 274 n49, 349
Dubai Bank v. Galadari 187
Dubai/Sharjah Border Arbitration [91 ILR 543] 491, 498, 510 n128, 514 n147, 522, 558, 591, 1049 n233, 1052 n257
Duc de Guise Claim [18 ILR 423] 787 n53
Re Duchy of Sealand [80 ILR 683] 199 n16
Dudgeon case (Merits) [67 ILR 395] 355 n55, 357 n74
Duff v. R [73 ILR 678] 765 n370
Duff Development Company v. Kelantan and Another [2 AD 124, 2 AD 140] 193, 704
Duggan (State of Ireland) (Duggan v. Tapley) [18 ILR 336] 280
Dujail case 429

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Duke of Brunswick v. King of Hanover 182 n274, 702
Dumont v. State of Amazonas [15 AD 140] 733 Durmic v. Serbia and Montenegro 313 n257

Eain v. Wilkes [79 ILR 439] 687 n211
East Timor case (Portugal v. Australia) [105 ILR 226] 88, 114 n193, 124 n232, 255, 257, 1067 nn69 and 70, 1068, 1088 n202, 1114 n362, 1219 n76
East Timor (Democratic Republic of), Fretilin and Others v. State (Netherlands) [87 ILR 73] 449
Eastern Carelia case [2 AD 394] 1051 n253, 1109–11
Eastern Greenland (Legal Status of) (Denmark v. Norway) [6 AD 95, 6 AD 428, 6 AD 430] 103 n133, 491, 505 n18, 509 n115, 511, 512–13, 516 n160, 517, 518, 521 n194, 524 n209, 535, 905 n18, 938, 940 n178
Eastern Treaties Constitutionality case [73 ILR 691, 78 ILR 176] 172 n224
Eckhardt v. Eurocontrol (No. 2) [94 ILR 331] 1321 n176
Eckle case (Merits) [68 ILR 48] 355
Ecuador (Republic of) v. Occidental Exploration and Production Co. 185
Edye v. Robertson 163
EEOR: see Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOR) v. Arabian American Oil Company and Aramco Services; Ali Boursan v. Arabian American Oil Company and Aramco Services [90 ILR 617]
Effect of Awards case: see United Nations Administrative Tribunal, Effect of Awards of Compensation [21 ILR 310]
Effect of Reservations on the Entry into Force of the American Convention (Articles 74 and 75) (OC-2/82) [67 ILR 559] 925 n106, 937 n167, 982 n138
Egypt (Arab Republic of) v. Gamal-Eldin [104 ILR 673] 725
Egyptian Workers' Claims (Report, Final Report and Recommendations made by the Panel of Commissioners) [117 ILR 195] 1046 nn214 and 217, 1047 n221
Eichmann case [36 ILR 5] 166, 214, 433, 651, 664 n77, 669 n102, 671–2, 680
El Salvador v. Nicaragua 563
El Salvador/Honduras (Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute) [97 ILR 112, 97 ILR 266] 89 n66, 92 n82, 109 n169, 154, 229–30,

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

490 n20, 497, 498 n59, 510, 515, 516, 517, 524, 526, 527 n227, 528 n233, 959, 1002 n242, 1063, 1069 n80, 1078 n142, 1089 n218, 1099, 1100–1
El Salvador/Honduras (Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute: Nicaragua Intervening) [97 ILR 154] 529–30, 554, 563, 1063, 1091, 1098, 1106–7
Electricity Company of Sofia and Bulgaria (Provisional Measures) (Belgium v. Bulgaria) 1096 n255
Elettronica Sicula SpA (ELSI) (United States v. Italy): see ELSI case (United States v. Italy) [84 ILR 311]
Ellerman Lines Ltd v. Murray (The Croxteth Hall) [5 AD 342] 153
ELSI case (United States v. Italy) [84 ILR 311] 102–3, 136, 519, 817, 821–2, 1063
Emin v. Yeldag 479
Empire of Iran case [45 ILR 57] 705 n34, 707 n52, 709 n64, 711 n69
Empresa Exportadora de Azucar (Cubazucar) v. Industria Azucarera Nacional SA (IANSA) [64 ILR 368] 182, 700, 735 n205
Empson v. Smith [41 ILR 407] 769
Enforceability of the Right to Reply or Correction (Articles 14(1), 1(1) and 2 of the American Convention on Human Rights) (Advisory Opinion OC-7/85) [79 ILR 336] 934 n147
Entico Corporation v. UNESCO 1322 nn180 and 181
EP and Others v. Colombia (Communication No. 318/1988) [96 ILR 705] 292
Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOR) v. Arabian American Oil Company and Aramco Services; Ali Boursan v. Arabian American Oil Company and Aramco Services [90 ILR 617] 688 n217
Erdemović (Case IT-96-22-A) (Sentencing Appeal) (Appeals Chamber) [111 ILR 298] 137 n34
Eritrea–Ethiopia Boundary Commission Decision on Delimitation [130 ILR 1] 103 n133, 122 n217, 496, 510, 515, 516, 519–20, 658 n54, 934–5, 1050, 1055
Eritrea–Ethiopia Claims Commission, Eritrea's Claims (Western Front, aerial bombardment and related claims) [135 ILR 565], 1, 3, 5, 9–13, 14, 21, 25 and 26 1184 n87, 1185 n89
Eritrea–Ethiopia Claims Commission, Eritrea's Claim 17 (prisoners of war), Partial Award [135 ILR 199] 780, 795, 1168
Eritrea–Ethiopia Claims Commission, Eritrea's Claim 20, Partial Award [135 ILR 519] 752 n302, 753 n304, 756 n319

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Eritrea–Ethiopia Claims Commission, Ethiopia's Claims 1–8 (jus ad bellum) [135 ILR 479] 1128
Eritrea–Ethiopia Claims Commission, Ethiopia's Claim 2 (Central Front), Partial Award [135 ILR 334] 1179
Eritrea–Ethiopia Claims Commission, Ethiopia's Claim 4 (prisoners of war), Partial Award [135 ILR 251] 1172 n27, 1175, 1200 n179
Eritrea–Ethiopia Claims Commission, Ethiopia's Claim 5 (civilians), Partial Award [135 ILR 427] 780
Eritrea–Ethiopia Claims Commission, Ethiopia's Claim 8 (diplomatic claim), Partial Award [135 ILR 544] 765 n372
Eritrea–Ethiopia Claims Commission, Ethiopia's Claims 15, 16, 23 and 27–32 (civilians), Partial Award [135 ILR 374] 1168
Eritrea–Ethiopia Claims Commission, partial award 752 n302, 753 n304, 756 n319, 765 n372
Eritrea/Yemen Arbitration (Phase One: Territorial Sovereignty and Scope of the Dispute) [114 ILR 1] 41 n141, 99 n112, 491, 495–6, 497, 503, 508, 510 n128, 511, 513 n139, 514, 516 nn163 and 167, 519 n102, 524, 525 n216, 540, 559 n25, 969, 1050, 1055
Eritrea/Yemen Arbitration (Phase Two: Maritime Delimitation) [119 ILR 417] 92, 558, 565, 601 n243, 603, 605 n270
ERT 370 n158
ERTA case: see Commission of the European Communities v. Council of the European Communities (Case 22/70) (ERTA case) [47 ILR 278]
Esphahanian v. Bank Tejarat (Case No. 157) [72 ILR 478] 815
Espionage Prosecution case (Case No. 2 BGs 38/91) [94 ILR 68] 958–9
Estamirov and Others v. Russia 359
État de Céra c. D'Archer de Montgascon [6 AD 178] 733 État de Céra c. Dorr et autres [4 AD 140] 733 État de Hesse c. Jean Neger 733 n194
Ette case 915 n61
Eurodif Corporation v. Islamic Republic of Iran 747 n271
European Commission of the Danube between Galatz and Braila, Jurisdiction of (Series B, No. 14) [4 AD 126 et al.] 76, 1306
European Molecular Biology Laboratory Arbitration [105 ILR 1] 1321 n178
European Parliament v. Council (2006) 371
Eurotunnel case (Partial Award) [132 ILR 1] 657 n52, 799
Ex parte Everett [84 ILR 713] 187
Exceptions to the Exhaustion of Domestic Remedies in Cases of Indigency 274 n50

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Exchange of Greek and Turkish Populations (Series B, No. 10) [3 AD 362 et al.] 137, 138
Extradition of Greek National (Germany) case [22 ILR 520] 280

Ex parte Factortame [93 ILR 669, 93 ILR 731] 179
Factortame Ltd v. Secretary of State for Transport (No. 1) [93 ILR 652] 179
Factortame Ltd v. Secretary of State for Transport (No. 2) [93 ILR 731] 179
The Fagernes [3 AD 126] 181
The Fama 500 n66
FAO v. INPDAI (Case No. 5399) [87 ILR 1, 101 ILR 361] 1321
Faurisson v. France (Communication No. 550/1993) [115 ILR 355] 274 n48
Fayed v. Al-Tajir [86 ILR 131] 763 n362, 771
Fédéchar case (Case 8/55) 1307 n115
Federal Prosecutor (Switzerland) v. Kruszyk and Others [102 ILR 176] 758 n332
Re Feivel Pikelny's Estate 466
Feldman c. État de Bahia 733 n194
Ex parte Ferhut Butt [116 ILR 607] 187, 772, 819 n250
Fernandez v. Wilkinson [87 ILR 446] 160
Fernandez cases: see also R v. Home Secretary, ex parte Fernandes Ferrini v. FRG 718 n108
Filartiga v. Pena-Irala [77 ILR 169] 159–60, 275 n60, 280 n81, 683, 684
III Finance Ltd v. Aegis Consumer Finance Inc. 818 n245
Finnish Vessels in Great Britain during the War (Finland v. Great Britain) [7 AD 231] 138, 273, 820–1
First American Corporation and Others v. Al-Nahyan and Others [121 ILR 577] 192 n351, 736–7
First Fidelity Bank NA v. Government of Antigua and Barbuda Permanent Mission [99 ILR 125] 751 n293, 942 n186
First National City Bank v. Banco Para el Comercio Exterior de Cuba [80 ILR 566] 732, 745 n262
First National City Bank of New York v. Banco Nacional de Cuba [66 ILR 102] 192
Fisheries Jurisdiction case (Spain v. Canada) (Jurisdiction) [123 ILR 189] 915, 936, 1069 n82, 1070, 1085 Fisheries Jurisdiction case (United Kingdom v. Iceland) (Jurisdiction) [55 ILR 149] 903, 905, 943, 950–1, 1015, 1016 n27, 1091, 1094

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Fisheries Jurisdiction case (United Kingdom v. Iceland) (Merits) [55 ILR 238] 83 n46, 104 n142, 107, 556, 581, 610, 624 n353, 903, 1017, 1064, 1104 Flatow v. Islamic Republic of Iran and Others [121 ILR 618] 678, 715, 736 n215, 746 n263
Flegenheimer Claim [25 ILR 91] 813 n225, 814 n231
Re Flesche [16 AD 266] 280
Foremost-McKesson Inc. and Another v. Islamic Republic of Iran and Others [101 ILR 536] 732 n189
Former Syrian Ambassador to the German Democratic Republic (Case No. 2 BvR 1516/96) [115 ILR 595] 752 n296, 770
Foster v. Neilson 161, 162
Fothergill v. Monarch Airlines Ltd [74 ILR 627] 154 n121, 155
Foxworth v. Permanent Mission of the Republic of Uganda to the United Nations [99 ILR 138] 745 n262
France v. Commission of the European Communities (Case C-327/91) [101 ILR 30] 694
François v. State of Canada [115 ILR 418] 727
Frankel v. Banco Nacional de Mexico 722
Free Zones of Upper Savoy and the District of Gex case (France/Switzerland) (Order of 19 August 1929) [5 AD 461] 1015 n21
Free Zones of Upper Savoy and the District of Gex case (France/Switzerland) (Judgment) [6 AD 362 et al.] 101 n120, 135, 929, 950, 969 n75
French Consulate Disabled Employee case (Case No. AZ 1K 4/88) [114 ILR 507] 726 n157
Frisbie v. Collins 681
Frontier Dispute (Burkina Faso/Mali): see Burkina Faso/Mali Frontier Dispute (Judgment) [80 ILR 459]; Burkina Faso/Mali Frontier Dispute (Provisional Measures) [80 ILR 450]
Frontier Land case: see Sovereignty over Certain Frontier Land, Case concerning (Belgium/Netherlands) [27 ILR 62]
Fruehauf case 691 n238
Furundžija (IT-95-17/1) [121 ILR 213] 124–5, 126 n238, 138 n38, 326 n336, 1192 n133, 1196

Gabčíkovo–Nagymaros Project case (Hungary/Slovakia) (Judgment) [116 ILR 1] 89, 104–5, 111 n103, 120, 124 n228, 531 n251, 779, 782, 794, 798, 801, 804, 853 n37, 869, 883 n214, 885 n227, 886–7, 904 n8, 948, 949, 950 n218, 951–2, 970, 981, 1089, 1102

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Galić case (IT-98-29-T) 436 n212
Gallardo, In the Matter of Viviana et al. (Government of Costa Rica (In the Matter of Viviana Gallardo et al.) (G 101/81)) [67 ILR 577] 390
Gandara v. Bennett 159 n155
García and Garza case [3 AD 215] 824
Garland v. British Rail Engineering Ltd [93 ILR 622] 153
Gdynia Ameryka Linie Zeglugowe Spólka Akcyjna v. Boguslawski and Another [19 ILR 72] 475–6
Gemini Shipping Inc. v. Foreign Trade Organization for Chemicals and Foodstuffs (Tafco) and Another [63 ILR 494, 63 ILR 569] 721
General Comments (UNCESCR), 1 (technical assistance measures) 310
General Comments (UNCESCR), 2 (international technical assistance) 310
General Comments (UNCESCR), 3 (international co-operation) 302 n199, 310
General Comments (UNCESCR), 4 (adequate housing) 310
General Comments (UNCESCR), 5 (disabilities) 310
General Comments (UNCESCR), 6 (older persons) 310
General Comments (UNCESCR), 10 (national human rights institutions) 276
General Comments (UNCESCR), 16 (equal treatment of men and women) 310
General Comments (UNCESCR), 18 (right to work) 310
General Comments (UNCESCR), 19 (right to social security) 310
General Comments (UNHRC), 6 (right to life) 317
General Comments (UNHRC), 12 (self-determination) 291–2
General Comments (UNHRC), 17 (rights of the child) 317–18
General Comments (UNHRC), 22 (non-discrimination) 287, 288, 318
General Comments (UNHRC), 23 (minorities) 296–7, 318
General Comments (UNHRC), 24 (Issues relating to Reservations made upon Ratification or Accession to the Covenant or the Optional Protocols thereto, or in relation to Declarations under Article 41 of the Covenant) [107 ILR 64] 318
General Comments (UNHRC), 28 (rights of women and General Comment 23) 318–19
General Comments (UNHRC), 29 (non-derogable provisions) 319 n291
General Comments (UNHRC), 32 (fair trial/equality of parties) 319 n291 Generation Ukraine v. Ukraine 832 n313

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia) (Judgment) (2007) 78, 101, 112, 276, 433, 449 n20, 780 n10, 782, 791, 801, 804 n167, 806 n183, 908–9, 933, 937 n166, 963, 1071, 1090 n222, 1091–2, 1096, 1116 n374, 1193 n137
Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia) (Order on Withdrawal of Counterclaims) (1997) [115 ILR 206] 1096, 1097
Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia) (Preliminary Objections) (1996) [115 ILR 10] 101–2, 125, 963, 978, 981, 984, 1060, 1068–9, 1070, 1076, 1079
Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia) (Request for Revision of the Judgment of 11 July 1996: Preliminary Objections) (2003) 210, 963, 1106 Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)) (Request and Further Requests for the Indication of Provisional Measures) [95 ILR 1] 13 n47, 127, 283–4, 1061–2, 1092, 1093 n238, 1094 nn246 and 247, 1236 n158, 1269 n325
Genocide Convention (reservations) case: see Reservations to the Genocide Convention case [18 ILR 364] Gentle case: see R (Gentle) v. Prime Minister Georges Pinson case [4 AD 9 et al.] 135 n21
Georgia v. South Carolina [91 ILR 439] 498
Gerbaud v. Meden [18 ILR 288] 961 n23
German Consular Notification case (Individual Constitutional Complaint Procedure) 171
German External Debts Agreement case [22 ILR 611] 933 n143, 1017
German Settlers in Poland case (Series B, No. 6) [2 AD 71 et al.] 100, 987, 1002
Germany (Federal Republic) v. Elicofon 484 n163
Germany–Poland Border Treaty Constitutionality case (Case No. 2 BvR 1613/91) [108 ILR 656] 1002 n242
Ghaddafi case 737
Re Gill [6 AD 203] 789 n68, 796
Gittler v. German Information Center [63 ILR 170] 732
Godínez Cruz case [95 ILR 320] 390
Golder case [57 ILR 200] 357, 903 n4
Goldman v. Thai Airways International Ltd [101 ILR 316] 155 n130
Goldwater v. Carter 467, 700, 908
Gonzalez Corporation v. Consejo Nacional de Produccion de Costa Rica and Another [63 ILR 370] 724
Gonzalez-Vera v. Kissinger 190

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Görgülü case (Individual Constitutional Complaint Procedure) 171, 172
Gosalia v. Agarwal and Others [118 ILR 429] 1002 n242
Grand-Duchy of Luxembourg v. Compagnie Luxembourgeoise de Télédiffusion and Compagnie Luxembourgeoise Assurance 'Le Foyer' [91 ILR 281] 89
Re Grand Jury Proceedings, Doe No. 700 [81 ILR 599] 736
Grand Prince case [125 ILR 272] 613 n313, 644, 819 n248, 1114 n165
Grant case 321
Great Belt case (Passage through the Great Belt (Finland v. Denmark)) (Provisional Measures) [94 ILR 446] 578 n115, 1017 n33, 1062 n26, 1093 n238, 1094 n244, 1095 n249, 1102
Greco-Bulgarian Communities (Series B, No. 17) [5 AD 4] 135 n20, 256 n292, 941 n182
The Greek case 274 n49
Greenham Women against Cruise Missiles and Others v. Reagan and Others [99 ILR 43] 189–90
Grisbadarna case 499, 504, 570
Gruyez and Rolland v. Municipality of Sint-Genesius-Rode 173 n231 Guatemalan Genocide case 673
Guevera v. Peru 723
Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal (Arbitral Award of 31 July 1989 (Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal)) [77 ILR 635] 959 n10, 1084 n180, 1093 n238
Guinea/Guinea-Bissau Maritime Delimitation case [77 ILR 635] 596, 602
Gulf of Maine Maritime Boundary case [71 ILR 74] 89, 96 n99, 98 n109, 107, 516, 519, 587, 595–6, 599, 600 n240, 601–2, 606, 1062–3
Gur Corporation v. Trust Bank of Africa [75 ILR 675] 150 n100, 445, 459, 478 n132, 480–1
Gut Dam arbitration 854
Re Gutierrez [24 ILR 265] 663
Guyana v. Suriname 592, 601 n245, 605 n275, 607, 636, 1055 nn283 and 285, 1125 n35, 1128 n50

Re H (Minors) 155 n130
Habeas Corpus in Emergency Situations (Articles 27(2), 25(1) and 7(6) of the American Convention on Human Rights) (Advisory Opinion OC-8/87) [96 ILR 392] 389
Haile Selassie v. Cable and Wireless Ltd (No. 2) [9 AD 94] 460, 473–4, 989 n174 Hamdan v. Rumsfeld 658 n57

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Hamilton case 321
Handel and Others v. Artukovic [79 ILR 397] 684
Handelskwekerij GJ Bier BV v. Mines de Potasse d'Alsace SA 172 n226
Handyside case [58 ILR 150] 356, 357
Harb v. King Fahd 700 n10, 764 n369
Hartford Fire Insurance Company and Others v. California and Others [100 ILR 566] 690–1
Harza Engineering Company v. Islamic Republic of Iran (Case No. 98) [70 ILR 117] 831 n309
Hauer v. Land Rheinland-Pfaltz 369
Havana Club Holding Inc. v. Galleon SA 164
Hawaiian Claims [3 AD 80] 1003 n245
Hazletine Research Inc. v. Zenith Radio Corporation 689 n222
Heathrow Airport User Charges Arbitration [102 ILR 215, 102 ILR 216, 102 ILR 224, 102 ILR 564] 154 n124, 821 n258, 906 n21, 1049
Re Herbert Wragg & Co. Ltd 139
Herd case 791
Hesperides Hotels Limited and Another v. Aegean Turkish Holidays Limited and Muftizade [73 ILR 9] 193, 478
Hicks v. US [120 ILR 606] 713 n84
High Commissioner for India et al. v. Ghosh [28 ILR 150] 771
Hilaire and Others v. Trinidad and Tobago 387 n247
Hildebrand v. Champagne [82 ILR 121] 766
Hilton v. Guyot 157
Hirota v. MacArthur [15 ILR 485] 400 n15
Hirsch v. State (Israel) and State of Germany [113 ILR 543] 742 n246
Hispano Americana Mercantil SA v. Central Bank of Nigeria [64 ILR 221] 707
HMHK v. Netherlands [94 ILR 342] 810
Holiday Inns v. Morocco 1042 n194
Holland v. Ireland (Communication No. 593/1994) [115 ILR 277] 274 n48
Holland v. Lampen-Wolfe [119 ILR 367] 699, 713–14, 716, 731 n183
Holmes v. Bangladesh Biman Corporation [87 ILR 365] 653
Holy See v. Starbright Sales Enterprises Inc. [102 ILR 163] 178 n252, 244 n243, 708 n57
Home Missionary Society case [1 AD 173, 1 AD 376 (note)] 783–4, 791
Re Honecker [80 ILR 365] 736 n210
Horgan v. An Taoiseach [132 ILR 407] 167, 170 n217, 184 n294 Hoshinmaru (Japan v. Russia) 643

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Hosking & Hosking v. Runting and Pacific Magazines NZ Ltd 169
Hostages case: see United States Diplomatic and Consular Staff in Tehran case (USA v. Iran) (Iranian Hostages case) [61 ILR 502]
HSA et al. v. SA et al. 672, 737
Huber case 806 n184
Huntington v. Atrill 650

ICI v. Commission of the European Communities (Case 48/69) [48 ILR 106] 695
Ilaşcu v. Moldova 238, 350, 789
Ilhan v. Turkey 359
Iloilo Claims case [3 AD 336] 500
The I'm Alone (Canada/United States) [7 AD 203] 617, 618, 805, 806 n180, 1101
IMCO case (Constitution of the Maritime Safety Committee) [30 ILR 426] 612, 1295, 1306
Immunity from Legal Process of a Special Rapporteur (Advisory Opinion) [121 ILR 405] 222–3, 700, 786–7, 1111 n347, 1113, 1325–6
Imports of Agricultural, Textile and Industrial Products case 1038
INA Corporation v. Islamic Republic of Iran (Case No. 161) [75 ILR 595] 836–7
India (Ministry of Finance (Revenue Division)) v. Taylor and Another [22 ILR 286] 650
Indigenous Community Yakye Axa v. Paraguay 300
Indonesia/Malaysia case 509, 511 n131, 513 nn139 and 140, 517 n171, 933 n142, 1061 n24, 1114 n165
Indonesia/Malaysia case (Philippines Intervening) 1091 n229, 1100, 1101 n290
Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbour 662
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Collco Dealings Ltd [33 ILR 1] 153
Interhandel case (Switzerland) v. United States (Preliminary Objections) [27 ILR 475] 82, 273, 811, 819, 821, 1083 n168, 1084 n175
International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers v. Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) et al. [63 ILR 284, 66 ILR 413] 700, 701 International Responsibility for the Promulgation and Enforcement of Laws in Violation of the Convention (American Convention on Human Rights) (Advisory Opinion OC-14/94) [116 ILR 320] 135 n26, 383

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

International Shoe Co. v. Washington 723
International Status of South-West Africa [17 ILR 47] 224–5, 493 n33, 1307 n116
International Status of South-West Africa [17 ILR 47]: see also South-West Africa cases (Second Phase) (1966) [37 ILR 243]
International Tin Council v. Amalgamet Inc. [80 ILR 30] 1300 n74
Re International Tin Council [77 ILR 18, 80 ILR 81] 1310 n127, 1316 n153
Internationale Handelsgesellschaft mbH v. Einfuhr und Vorratsstelle für Getreide und Futtermittel (Solange I) (Case 11/70) (Case No. 2 BvL 52/71) [93 ILR 362] 178–9, 369
Interpretation of the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man within the Framework of Article 64 of the American Convention on Human Rights (Advisory Opinion OC-10/87) [96 ILR 416] 389
Interpretation of Peace Treaties with Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania, Second Phase (Advisory Opinion of 18 July 1950) [17 ILR 318] 936, 1051 n252, 1068, 1075, 1109
Interpretation of the Treaty of Lausanne, Article 3, paragraph 2 (Series B, No. 12) [3 AD 105 et al.] 1049
Intpro Properties (UK) Ltd v. Sauvel and Others [64 ILR 363, 64 ILR 384] 763, 766
Iowa v. Illinois 112 n187
Iran–United States (Case No. A/18) [75 ILR 175] 815 n236, 935 n157
Iran–United States Claims Tribunal v. AS [94 ILR 321] 1320–1
Iranian Hostages case: see United States Diplomatic and Consular Staff in Tehran case (USA v. Iran) (Iranian Hostages case) [61 ILR 502]
Ireland v. United Kingdom (Irish case) [58 ILR 188] 349, 354, 357
Iron Rhine (Belgium/Netherlands) case 906 n21, 933 n142
Island of Palmas Arbitration [4 AD 3 et al.] 110, 211 n74, 217 n98, 488, 489–90, 499, 504, 508, 509 n114, 511, 512, 513, 514, 520, 650, 782 n25, 852, 907 n27
Issa v. Turkey 349 n22, 350 n24
Italian South Tyrol Terrorism case (No. 2) [71 ILR 242] 667
Italy (Republic of) v. Hambros Bank Ltd and Gregory (Custodian of Enemy Property) [17 ILR 1] 151 n106

Jabari v. Turkey 358
Jackson and Others v. People's Republic of China [84 ILR 132] 721 n131
Jacobs and White 360 n93

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

James case [75 ILR 397] 934 n147
Jan Mayen (Maritime Delimitation in the Area between Greenland and Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway)) [99 ILR 395] 106 nn147 and 148, 122 n219, 565 n59, 592 n181, 599–600, 601 n243, 603, 638 n424
Janes case [3 AD 218, 3 AD 256] 787 n53, 825
Japan Whaling Association v. American Cetacean Society 190 n331
Jégo-Quéré v. Commission 371
Jelisić (IT-95-10) 431
The Jessie [1 AD 175] 783 n35
JH Rayner (Mincing Lane) Ltd v. Department of Trade and Industry and Others [77 ILR 55] 185, 748 n277 1300, 1316
Jimenez v. Aristeguieta et al. [33 ILR 353] 737
Johnson v. Eisenträger 658
Johnston v. Chief Constable of the RUC 369
Johnston and Others v. Ireland [89 ILR 154] 273, 349 n16, 355
Jones v. Saudi Arabia [129 ILR 713] 139, 700 n12, 707 n51, 717–18, 720, 733
Joyce v. Director of Public Prosecutions [15 AD 91] 667
Juan Ysmael and Company Inc. v. Government of Indonesia [21 ILR 95] 703
The Juno Trader 643 n459
The Jupiter [3 AD 136] 702
Juridical Condition and Rights of Undocumented Migrants 126 n238 Jurisdiction of the European Commission of the Danube between Galatz and Braila (Series B, No. 14) [4 AD 126 et al.] 76, 1306 n109

Kadahfi case 174 n236
Kadić v. Karadžić; Doe I and Doe II v. Karadžić [104 ILR 135] 158 n146, 160 n160, 190–1, 684–5
Kahan v. Pakistan Federation [18 ILR 210] 740 n238, 771 n423
Kalamazoo Spice Extraction Company v. Provisional Military Government of Socialist Ethiopia [86 ILR 45, 90 ILR 596] 192, 831
Kalogeropoulou v. Greece and Germany 717
Kambanda case (ICTR-97-23-S) 409, 433
Kanyabashi case (ICTR-96-15-T) (Jurisdiction) 436
Karadžić and Mladić case (IT-95-5-R61 and IT-95-18-R61) (Rule 61) (Review of Indictments) [108 ILR 85] 433
Kartinyeri v. The Commonwealth 168 n204

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Katangese Peoples' Congress v. Zaire 392
Kaunda v. President of the Republic of South Africa 176 n243, 188–9, 653, 809 n206, 810 n207
Kavanagh v. Governor of Mountjoy Prison [132 ILR 394] 170 n217
Kay v. Lambeth Borough Council 140 n48
Kaya v. Turkey 359
Kayishema and Ruzindana case 431 n186, 432 n196
Kenneth Good v. Attorney-General (Botswana) 168 n201
Ker v. Illinois 681
Khan v. Canada (Communication No. 15/1994) [108 ILR 268] 329
Kirk case 369–70
Kirkpatrick and Company Inc. and Others v. Environmental Tectonics Corporation International [88 ILR 93] 192
Kitok case 292, 295–6
KJ International v. MV Oscar Jupiter [131 ILR 529] 720
Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen and Pedersen case [58 ILR 117] 274 n49
Klass case [58 ILR 423] 355
Klinghoffer and Others v. SNC Achille Lauro and Others [96 ILR 68] 158, 191, 665
Knuller (Publishing, Printing and Promotions) Ltd v. Director of Public Prosecutions 147
Koeppel and Koeppel and Another v. Federal Republic of Nigeria and Others [99 ILR 121] 774
Koohi and Others v. United States and Another [99 ILR 80] 190
Koowarta v. Bjelke-Petersen and Others; State of Queensland v. Commonwealth of Australia [68 ILR 181] 170 n212, 221–2
Krajina v. The Tass Agency and Another [16 AD 129] 703, 729
Kramer and Others (Joined Cases 3, 4 and 6/76) [99 ILR 217] 241 n129
Kremzow v. Austria (Case C-299/95) [113 ILR 263] 369
Krnojela case (IT-97-24-A) 443 n229
Krstić case (IT-98-33) 431–2
Kruger and Others v. Commonwealth of Australia; Bray and Others v. Commonwealth of Australia [118 ILR 371] 168 nn201 and 203
Kudla v. Poland 359
Kunarac case (IT-96-23&23/1) 437–8, 1194
Kunstsammlungen zu Weimar v. Elicofon [61 ILR 143] 484
Kunstsammlungen zu Weimar v. Elicofon [94 ILR 133] 227 n157, 989 n174
Kurt v. Turkey 359
Kuwait Airways Corporation v. Iraqi Airways Company and the Republic of Iraq [103 ILR 340, 116 ILR 534] 185, 186–7, 714, 731, 749

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

La Bretagne [82 ILR 590] 903 n4, 933 n145
Lac Lanoux Arbitration (France/Spain) [24 ILR 101] 852 n35, 864, 883, 1017
Lafontant v. Aristide [103 ILR 581] 737
LaGrand Case (Germany v. United States) (Request for the Indication of Provisional Measures) [118 ILR 37] 130, 135–6, 159, 220–1, 223, 773–4, 787 n53, 800–1, 802 n152, 823 n264, 933 n143, 938, 1071, 1094 n246, 1095–6, 1101 n292, 1102 n295, 1103
Laguna del Desierto (Argentina/Chile) case [113 ILR 1] 101 n124, 497 n50, 531 n248, 934, 936, 1048
Laker Airways v. Sabena 690, 692
Ex parte Lam 169 n209
Lam Mow v. Nagle [4 AD 295] 662
Lamy case 806 n114
Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute: see El Salvador/Honduras (Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute) [97 ILR 112]
Land Reclamation case [126 ILR 487] 1016 n24
Landano v. United States [116 ILR 534] 727
Länsman (Jlarkins) et al. v. Finland (Communication No. 671/1995) [115 ILR 300] 296
Largueche v. Tancredi Fenu (Case No. 9321) [101 ILR 377] 766 n382
Larsen v. Hawaiian Kingdom [119 ILR 566] 1050, 1068 n75, 1079 n151
Latvian Constitutional Court's Judgment on the Request for Constitutional Review 173 n228
Lawless case: see Re O Laighléis (Lawless) [24 ILR 420]
Lawson v. Serco Ltd 653 n37
Lawyers for Human Rights v. Switzerland 394 LCB v. UK 358
'Le Ski' case [93 ILR 203] 173
Leasing West GmbH v. Algeria (Case No. 3 Ob 38/86) [116 ILR 526] 748
Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Request for an Advisory Opinion by the United Nations General Assembly [110 ILR 163] 48 n16, 74 n14, 88, 99 n112, 104 n142, 109, 116–17, 124 n228, 212, 284 n108, 317 n284, 793, 852–3, 904 n7, 1017, 1066 n56, 1087, 1108–9, 1110, 1112, 1125, 1130, 1141, 1142, 1169 n7, 1170, 1181, 1184, 1187–8, 1307–8
Legality of the Use by a State of Nuclear Weapons in Armed Conflict (Request by the World Health Organization for an Advisory Opinion) [110 ILR 1] 1303–4, 1305 n102, 1306 n108
Legality of the Use of Force (Yugoslavia v. Belgium) 1093 n238, 1157 n199

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Legality of the Use of Force (Yugoslavia v. Spain) 921, 1074 Legality of the Use of Force (Yugoslavia v. USA) 915, 921, 1074
Lehigh Valley Railroad Company v. State of Russia [4 AD 58] 485
LETCO (Liberian Eastern Timber Corporation) v. Liberia [89 ILR 313] 1042 n114
Letelier and Moffitt case [88 ILR 727] 100, 1021
Letelier and Others v. Republic of Chile and Linea Aerea Nacional-Chile [63 ILR 378] 700–1, 727–8, 745 n262, 749–50
Levacher 174
Re von Lewinski (called von Manstein) [16 AD 509] 443 n229
Liamco case (Libyan American Oil Company v. Libyan Arab Republic), [62 ILR 140] 804 n166, 830, 833, 842
Libman v. The Queen [84 ILR 672] 655
Libra Bank Ltd v. Banco Nacional de Costa Rica [72 ILR 119] 742
Libya v. Rossbeton SRL (Case No. 2502) [87 ILR 63] 747 Libya/Chad, Territorial Dispute [100 ILR 1] 104, 123 n219, 200 n19, 496, 510 n123, 516, 522 n196, 526 n219, 528–9, 933 n342, 935–6, 969, 1011, 1075 n127, 1104
Libya/Malta, Continental Shelf case [81 ILR 238, 81 ILR 726] 74, 96 n99, 107, 583, 586 n147, 587, 596–7, 601 n241, 1089
Libya/Malta, Continental Shelf case (Application by Italy for Permission to Intervene) [70 ILR 527] 1067, 1078, 1097–8, 1099 n277
Libyan American Oil Company (LIAMCO) v. Libya [62 ILR 140] 723
Libyan Arab Foreign Investment Company (LAFICO)/Republic of Burundi (Dispute concerning the Libyan Arab–Burundi Holding Company) [96 ILR 279] 796 n119
Licensing of Journalists case 388–9
Lichtensztejn case 321
Liechtenstein v. Germany 110, 1061 n21, 1067 n73, 1069 n78
Lighthouses Arbitration between France and Greece [6 AD 659] 1003–4
Lighthouses Arbitration between France and Greece, Claims No. 19 and 21 (Part) [23 ILR 352] 785 n42
Lighthouses Arbitration between France and Greece, Claim No. 27 [23 ILR 299] 836 n340
Ligue Internationale Contre le Racisme et l'Antisémitisme 174 n235
Lilian Celiberti de Casariego v. Uruguay [68 ILR 41] 322
Linder and Others v. Portocarrero and Others [99 ILR 54] 160 n163, 162, 190
Lithgow case [75 ILR 438] 830 n299, 903 n4, 933–4, 935 n158
Litster v. Forth Dry Dock Engineering 157

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Littlejohn, L, and Company Inc. v. United States [3 AD 483] 159 n157
Littrell v. United States (No. 2) [100 ILR 438] 149–50, 184, 713
Helen Liu v. Republic of China [101 ILR 519] 700 n14, 701
Loayza Tamayo v. Peru [116 ILR 338] 390, 801 n150
Lockerbie case (Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie) (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom) (Request for the Indication of Provisional Measures) [94 ILR 478] 114, 135, 654–5, 686, 927, 1065, 1067 n65, 1092 n234, 1094–5, 1114, 1236, 1268–70
Lockerbie case (Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie) (Libyan Arab Jamarihiya v. United Kingdom) (Preliminary Objections) [117 ILR 1] 1088
Loewen Group v. USA 1039 n174
Loizidou v. Turkey (Merits) [108 ILR 443] 236, 360, 523 n203, 782 n27, 829 n299
Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary Objections) [103 ILR 621] 236, 349–50, 354 n52, 448 n16, 658 n55, 790, 922–3, 935 n157, 937 n166, 938
Lonrho Exports Ltd v. Export Credits Guarantee Department [108 ILR 596] 149 n95, 150, 810
López Burgos v. Uruguay [68 ILR 29] 322
Lord Advocate's Reference No. 1 of 2000 [122 ILR 619] 144, 146
The Lotus case (France/Turkey) [4 AD 5 et al.] 9 n32, 46, 77 n26, 78 n29, 81, 84–5, 90, 110, 112 n185, 212, 614, 618, 650, 654, 655–7, 665
Louisiana v. Mississippi 498
Lovelace v. Canada (No. R6/24/1977) [68 ILR 17] 295, 321
Ltd Partnership Z v. High Court (Obergericht) of the Canton of Thurgau 973
Lubicon Lake Band case [96 ILR 667] 292, 296
Lutcher SA Celulose e Papel Candoi v. Inter-American Development Bank [42 ILR 138] 1327 n199
Lutgarda Jimenez v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue 768 n396, 769
Luther v. Sagor [1 AD 47] 472–3, 483

M v. Egypt [116 ILR 656] 727
M v. Federal Department of Justice and Police (Switzerland) [75 ILR 107] 978 n122
M v. Organisation des Nations Unies et l'État Belge [45 ILR 446] 313 n143

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Mabo and Another v. State of Queensland and Another (No. 1) [112 ILR 412] 298
McCann v. UK 357, 358
McGee v. International Life Insurance Co. 723
McGimpsey and McGimpsey v. Ireland, An Taoiseach and Other Members of the Government of Ireland and the Attorney-General [87 ILR 334] 170 n217
McKeel v. Islamic Republic of Iran [81 ILR 543] 752
Re McKerr 184 n289
Maclaine Watson and Company Ltd v. Department of Trade and Industry; JH Rayner (Mincing Lane) Ltd v. Department of Trade and Industry and Others, and Related Appeals [80 ILR 47] 145–6, 183, 721, 734–5, 743, 748, 1316–17
Maclaine Watson and Company Ltd v. Department of Trade and Industry (JH Rayner (Mincing Lane) Ltd v. Department of Trade and Industry) [81 ILR 670] 149–50, 153 n120, 183–4
Maclaine Watson and Company Ltd v. International Tin Council (JH Rayner (Mincing Lane) Ltd v. Department of Trade and Industry) [81 ILR 670] 1301 n80
Maclaine Watson and Company Ltd v. International Tin Council (No. 1) [77 ILR 41, 80 ILR 191] 183, 1316 n153
MacLeod v. United States 159 n157
McMullen v. Immigration and Naturalization Service [79 ILR 602] 687 n211
Maharanee of Baroda v. Wildenstein 651–2
Mahuika et al. v. New Zealand 292 n155
Malachtou v. Armefti and Armefti [88 ILR 199] 171
Malaysia/Singapore case 122 n218, 488 n9, 491 n22, 509 n116, 511 n131, 516 nn164 and 166, 519 n181, 521 n194
Malek v. Iran 815 n236
Malone v. Metropolitan Police Commissioner (No. 2) [74 ILR 304] 154
Mamatkulov and Abdurasulovic v. Turkey 352 n37, 358
Manauta v. Embassy of the Russian Federation [113 ILR 429] 707 n52
Mannington Mills Inc. v. Congoleum Corporation [66 ILR 487] 689–90
Mapiripán Massacre case 387
Mara'abe v. Prime Minister of Israel 1178 n56, 1179 nn57 and 59, 1182
Marchiori v. Environment Agency [127 ILR 574] 181 n269
Re Marcinkus, de Strobel and Mennini (Case No. 3932) [Italy] [87 ILR 48] 244
Marckx case [58 ILR 561] 349, 355, 357

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Re Marcos Human Rights Litigation [103 ILR 521, 104 ILR 119] 158 n146
The Maret [12 AD 29] 483, 485
Mareva Compania Naviera v. International Bulkcarriers 743
Margellos v. FRG [129 ILR 526] 728 n165
Mariam Aziz v. Aziz and Sultan of Brunei 764 n369
Marine Steel Ltd v. Government of the Marshall Islands [64 ILR 539, 64 ILR 562] 167
Martić case (IT-95-11-T) 438
Martini case (Italy v. Venezuela) [5 AD 153] 802 n154
Masri v. Consolidated Contractors 653 n37
Massey case [4 AD 250] 786 n51
Matthew v. Trinidad and Tobago [134 ILR 151] 151 n104
Matthews v. United Kingdom (Application No. 24833/94) (Merits) [123 ILR 1] 223 n131, 1317
Mauritian Women case 321
Mavrommatis Palestine Concessions (Greece v. Great Britain) (Jurisdiction) [2 AD 27 et al.] 258, 810, 926 n113, 1012, 1015 n21, 1067–8, 1070 n91
Mavrommatis Palestine Concessions (Greece v. Great Britain) (Merits) [3 AD 204] 1002
The Mayagna (Sumo) Awas Tingni Community v. Nicaragua 300, 781 n20 Meaning of the Word 'Laws' in Article 30 of the American Convention on Human Rights (Advisory Opinion OC-6/86) [79 ILR 325] 934
Medellin v. Dretke 221
Medillin v. Texas 130 n5, 164 n178, 221 n119
Mellacher case 830 n300
Mellenger and Another v. New Brunswick Development Corporation [52 ILR 322] 733, 734
Mendaro v. World Bank [99 ILR 92] 1320, 1327 n199
Mergé Claim [22 ILR 443] 815
Metalclad Corporation v. United Mexican States [119 ILR 615, 119 ILR 645] 789 n62, 832 n312, 836, 1041 n188, 1042 n134
Methanex v. USA 834 n324, 1039
Mexico (Republic of) v. Hoffman [12 AD 143] 194 n359, 703–4
Middle East Cement Shipping v. Egypt 832 n313
Midland Bank Plc and Another v. Laker Airways Limited and Others [118 ILR 540] 692 n242
Miha v. Equatorial Guinea 273

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Military Affairs Office of the Embassy of the State of Kuwait v. Caramba-Coker 726, 748 n278
Mills v. USA [120 ILR 612] 740 n238
Milutinović case 404
Mininni v. Bari Institute of the International Centre for Advanced Mediterranean Agronomic Studies [78 ILR 112, 87 ILR 28] 1321 n177
Minister for Arts Heritage and Environment (Australia) and Others v. Peko-Wallsend Ltd and Others [90 ILR 32] 184 n292
Minister for Economic Affairs (Belgium) v. SA Fromagerie Franco-Suisse 'Le Ski' [93 ILR 203] 173
Minister for Foreign Affairs (Australia) and Trade and Others v. Magno and Another [101 ILR 202] 170 n212, 755 Minister for Immigration and Ethnic Affairs (Australia) v. Teoh [104 ILR 460] 151 n104, 167–9
Ministry of Defence (Iran) v. Gould Inc. and Others [96 ILR 1] 484 Minority Schools in Albania case (Series A/B, No. 64) [8 AD 386] 271, 288
Minors Opposa v. Secretary of the Department of the Environment and Natural Resources 850 n23
Minquiers and Ecrehos case (France/United Kingdom) [20 ILR 94] 491, 505 n94, 506–7, 511 n130, 513, 1075
Missouri v. Holland, United States Game Warden [1 AD 4] 161 n170, 220
Mobutu and Republic of Zaire v. Société Logrine [113 ILR 481] 737
Moiwana Community v. Suriname 300 n191
Ex parte Molyneaux [87 ILR 329] 184
Mondev International v. USA 1039 n174
Monetary Gold case (Preliminary Objection) [21 ILR 399] 1067, 1073, 1076 n112, 1078–9 Morocco (Kingdom of) v. DR [115 ILR 421] 727
Mortensen v. Peters 143
Mossé Claim [20 ILR 217] 788
Mosul case (Interpretation of the Treaty of Lausanne, Article 3, paragraph 2 (Series B, No. 12)) [3 AD 105 et al.] 200 n19
MOX Plant case (Ireland v. United Kingdom) (ECJ) 638 n422, 1116 n376
MOX Plant case (Ireland v. United Kingdom) (Orders Nos. 3 and 4) (Arbitral Tribunal) [126 ILR 310] 638 n422
MOX Plant case (Ireland v. United Kingdom) (Request for Provisional Measures) (ITLOS) [126 ILR 259] 643, 1015 n24

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Mugesera v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) [132 ILR 271] 169
Muhonen v. Finland (Communication No. 89/1981) [94 ILR 388] 274 n48
Mukuro v. European Bank for Reconstruction and Development 1321
Muller v. USA [114 ILR 502] 726 n157
Murray v. Schooner Charming Betsy 164
Musema case 431
Myers v. Canada: see SD Myers Inc. v. Canada (Partial Award) [121 ILR 72]

NAC v. Federal Republic of Nigeria [63 ILR 228] 721
Naim Molvan v. Attorney-General for Palestine [13 AD 51] 613–14
Nallaratnam Singarasa v. Attorney-General (Sri Lanka) 168 n201
Namibia (Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in, etc.) [49 ILR 2] 95 n96, 114, 224 n135, 226–7, 248, 254, 262, 277–8, 468, 470, 478 n133, 493 n33, 495, 790, 903, 935 n155, 948, 949 n214, 957 n165, 1059, 1060 n17, 1062 n27, 1114 n362, 1207 n10, 1219, 1269 n318, 1306, 1307 n116, 1331 n221
Namibia (Minister of Defence) v. Mwandinghi [91 ILR 341] 1003 n246, 1004 n247
Nanni and Others v. Pace and the Sovereign Order of Malta [8 AD 2] 243
National City Bank of New York v. Republic of China et al. [22 ILR 210 et al.] 705 n36
National Oil Corporation v. Libyan Sun Oil Company [94 ILR 209] 482
National Petrochemical Company of Iran v. The M/T Stolt Sheaf [87 ILR 583] 484
National Smokeless Fuels Ltd v. IRC 153 n120
Nationality of Claims (Administrative Decision No. V) [2 AD 185, 2 AD 191] 811
Nationality Decrees in Tunis and Morocco case (Series B, No. 4) [2 AD 349] 216, 272 n40, 648 n8, 660, 812–13, 1004 n249
Naturalization Provisions of the Political Constitution of Costa Rica (Advisory Opinion OC-4/84), Proposed Amendments [79 ILR 282] 288 n137
Naulilaa case (Portugal v. Germany) [4 AD 274 et al.] 794 n92, 1129–30 Nauru v. Australia (Certain Phosphate Lands in Nauru (Nauru v. Australia)) (Preliminary Objections) [97 ILR 1] 224 n135, 799, 1078, 1084 n180, 1297

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Navemar (Compañía Española de Navegación SA v. The Navemar et al.) [9 AD 176] 194 n359, 703–4
Neer Case [3 AD 213] 783, 824
Neger v. Hesse [52 ILR 329] 733 n154
Netherlands v. Parliament and Council (2001) 371
Neumeister case (Merits) [41 ILR 316] 806 n114
New England Merchants National Bank and Others v. Iran Power Generation and Transmission Company and Others [63 ILR 408, 63 ILR 497] 742
New Jersey v. Delaware [7 AD 128] 531 n268
Re Newfoundland: see Reference re the Seabed and Subsoil of the Continental Shelf Offshore Newfoundland [86 ILR 593]
Ng v. Canada (Communication No. 469/1991) [98 ILR 479] 321
Nguyen Tuong Van v. Public Prosecutor (Singapore) [134 ILR 660] 167 n197
Nicaragua v. Colombia 1069 n82, 1075, 1080 Nicaragua v. Honduras (Border and Transborder Armed Actions) [84 ILR 218] 104, 1017, 1031 n122, 1065, 1070 n88, 1080, 1088
Nicaragua v. Honduras (Territorial and Maritime Dispute in the Caribbean Sea) 116 n374, 509 n116, 510, 514, 524 n210, 530, 537 n227, 553, 559 n25, 569, 591, 592 n179, 680, 785, 1069 n83, 1090, 1116 n374
Nicaragua v. United States (Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua) (El Salvador Intervention) [76 ILR 1, 76 ILR 74] 1098, 1099 n274
Nicaragua v. United States (Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua) (Judgment) [76 ILR 349] 77–8, 85, 86, 87, 88, 96–7, 99 n111, 115, 116, 117, 118, 122 n218, 124 nn228 and 232, 212, 542, 571 n87, 610 n298, 680, 785, 790, 903 n7, 1078, 1085, 1087, 1089, 1090, 1091, 1092, 1124 n29, 1128, 1132–3, 1134–5, 1138–41, 1147–8, 1152, 1153, 1157 n200, 1188, 1193–4, 1195 n142, 1240 Nicaragua v. United States (Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua) (Jurisdiction and Admissibility) [76 ILR 104] 903 n7, 945, 1013, 1025, 1026 n81, 1066, 1068, 1078, 1079, 1083, 1085 n183, 1091, 1098
Nicaragua v. United States (Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua) (Provisional Measures) [76 ILR 1, 76 ILR 35] 794, 1094
Re Nicolo and Another [93 ILR 286] 174 n215

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Nicoud v. USA [116 ILR 650] 727
Re Nielsen v. Denmark (No. 343/57) [28 ILR 210] 273, 274 n49
Re Nielsen (Government of Denmark v. Nielsen) [74 ILR 458] 686 Nissan v. Attorney-General (England) [44 ILR 359] 180–1
Nixon v. United States 191
NNB and Other Members of the Crew of MS Saudi Independence and International Transport Workers' Federation v. Ocean Trade Company, Saudi Europe Line Limited and Saudi International Shipping (Greece) Limited [87 ILR 96] 557
Noble Ventures v. Romania 782 n24
Nold (J), Kohlen- und Baustoffgrosshandlung v. Commission of the European Communities (Case 4/73) [55 ILR 459] 156, 369
Non-resident Petitioner v. Central Bank of Nigeria 709 n64
Nordstern Allgemeine Versicherungs Aktiengesellschaft v. Vereinigte Stinnes Rheinreedereien [74 ILR 2] 172 n225
Norris v. Secretary of State for the Home Department 687
Norris case [89 ILR 243] 355 n55
North American Dredging Company of Texas case [3 AD 4 et al.] 821 n257
North Atlantic Fisheries case 212 n76, 541, 562
North Cyprus Tourism Centre Ltd v. Transport for London 194 n358, 479
North Sea Continental Shelf cases (Federal Republic of Germany/Denmark; Federal Republic of Germany/The Netherlands) [41 ILR 29] 2, 76, 77, 79, 83, 85–6, 87–9, 90, 91, 95–6, 99 n111, 104, 107, 119 n210, 122 n218, 127, 199, 200 n19, 519, 553, 556, 586–7, 592, 593, 594–5, 600, 601, 603, 606, 638, 864 n109, 928, 1016, 1017, 1073
North-Eastern Boundary Arbitration (Canada/United States) 1053
Northern Cameroons case (Preliminary Objections) (Cameroon v. United Kingdom) [35 ILR 353] 1065, 1069 n84, 1070 n91, 1071 n92, 1088
Re Norway's Application (Nos. 1 and 2) [84 ILR 730] 650
Norwegian Embassy v. Quattri (Decision No. 12771/1991) [114 ILR 525] 726
Norwegian Loans case [24 ILR 782] 939, 1082, 1084 n175
Norwegian Shipowners' Claims 832 n315, 834 n318, 836 n340, 1052 n257 Nottebohm case (Liechtenstein v. Guatemala) (Preliminary Objection) [20 ILR 567] 1051, 1052–3, 1081, 1084–5

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Nottebohm case (Liechtenstein v. Guatemala) (Second Phase) [22 ILR 349] 83, 110, 135, 217, 258, 648, 656, 660–1, 813–14, 816, 1004
Nova Scotia/Newfoundland case (First Phase) [128 ILR 425] 122, 905
Nuclear Tests case (Australia v. France) (Interim Measures) [57 ILR 360] 1038 n120, 1071, 1094
Nuclear Tests case (New Zealand v. France), Request for an Examination of the Situation in Accordance with Paragraph 63 of the Court's Judgment of 20 December 1974 in the Nuclear Tests (New Zealand v. France) Case (Order) [106 ILR 1] 122 n217, 610, 850 n23, 852, 867, 868, 889, 1064, 1067, 1085, 1107–8
Nuclear Tests case (New Zealand v. France) [106 ILR 1] 122
Nuclear Tests cases (Judgments) [57 ILR 398, 57 ILR 605] 104, 122, 610, 806, 854, 889, 903, 905, 1069, 1070–1, 1088, 1092, 1098, 1104
Nuclear Weapons case: see Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Request for an Advisory Opinion by the United Nations General Assembly [110 ILR 163]; Legality of the Use by a State of Nuclear Weapons in Armed Conflict (Request by the World Health Organization for an Advisory Opinion) [110 ILR 1]
Nulyarimma and Others v. Thompson; Buzzacott v. Minister for the Environment and Others [120 ILR 353] 147 n88, 167 n198

Re O Laighléis (Lawless) [24 ILR 420] 170 n217
Öcalan v. Turkey 349 n22
O'Connell Machinery Company v. MV Americana and Italia Di Navigazione SpA [81 ILR 539] 742
Oder Commission case (Territorial Jurisdiction of the International Commission of the River Oder) [5 AD 83 et al.] 851, 883 n214, 935
Office of Fair Trading v. Lloyds TSB Bank plc 654 n37
Oil Platforms (Counterclaims) case [130 ILR 174; 130 ILR 280] 1097
Oil Platforms (Islamic Republic of Iran v. United States of America) (Merits) [130 ILR 174; 130 ILR 323] 935, 1067, 1072, 1086, 1091, 1092 n231, 1133, 1141, 1142, 1147 n146
Oil Platforms (Preliminary Objections) case [130 ILR 174; 130 ILR 186] 907
Opel Austria GmbH v. Council of the European Union (Case T-115/94) [113 ILR 295] 104 n139
Open Door and Dublin Well Woman v. Ireland 273
Oppenheimer v. Cattermole (Inspector of Taxes); Nothman v. Cooper (Inspector of Taxes) [72 ILR 446] 139, 186 n308

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

OR, MM and MS v. Argentina 329
Orinoco Steamship Company case 798 n123, 1053 n263
OSPAR (Ireland v. UK) [126 ILR 364] 124 n229, 623 n351, 786 n51, 1052 n260
Othman (Jordan) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department 906 n23 Ottoman Public Debt Arbitration [3 AD 42 et al.] 997 n225, 998
Ovcara case 430

Re P (No. 2) [114 ILR 485] 770 n408
Palmagero Gold Fields 802 n154
Pan American Union v. American Security and Trust Company [18 ILR 441] 1331 n223
Pan American World Airways Inc. v. Aetna Casualty and Surety Co. 463
Pan American World Airways Inc. et al. v. R et al. [90 ILR 213] 542 Panama v. Citizens and Southern International Bank and Others [86 ILR 10] 484–5
Panama v. Republic National Bank of New York and Others [86 ILR 1] 484–5
Panama–Costa Rica Boundary case 1053 n265
Panevezys–Saldutiskis Railway case (Estonia v. Lithuania) [9 AD 308] 258, 810 n209, 819 n249
Papamichalopoulos v. Greece 832 n315
The Paquete Habana 77 n26, 83 n43, 112, 157
Paraguay v. United States (Case concerning the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations (Request for Provisional Measures)) [118 ILR 1] 165 n187
Parent and Others v. Singapore Airlines Ltd and Civil Aeronautics Administration [133 ILR 264] 479 n136
Parking Privileges for Diplomats case [70 ILR 396] 171 n222
The Parlement Belge 148–9, 702, 705
Parot v. Spain 330
PAU: see Pan American Union
Pauline Fraisse case 174
Pauling et al. v. McElroy et al. [26 ILR 1] 157
Pauwels case 806 n184
Pellat case [5 AD 145 et al.] 223, 787 n53
Pelletier v. UNESCO [38 ILR 379] 1053 n265
Perez et al. v. The Bahamas [63 ILR 350, 63 ILR 601] 723

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Permanent Mission of India to the US v. City of New York 723
Persinger v. Islamic Republic of Iran (No. 2) [90 ILR 586] 758
Peruvian Genocide case 673 n126
Peter Pázmány University case (Czechoslovakia v. Hungary), Appeal from a Judgment of the Hungaro-Czechoslovak Mixed Arbitral Tribunal [7 AD 490] 264 n320, 987 n164, 989 n174
Petrotimor Companhia de Petroleos SARL v. Commonwealth of Australia 189
Pfizer Inc. v. Canada 167 n195
Phansopkar case: see R v. Home Secretary, ex parte Phansopkar [61 ILR 390]
Phelps Dodge Corporation v. Iran 836 n343
The Philippine Admiral (Owners) v. Wallem Shipping (Hong Kong) Limited and Another [64 ILR 90] 705
Philippine Embassy Bank Account case [65 ILR 146] 746, 762
The Philippines v. Marcos and Others (No. 1) [81 ILR 581] 736
The Philippines v. Pimentel 699 n6, 700 n12
Physical Protection of Nuclear Materials case: see Draft Convention of the International Atomic Energy Agency on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Materials, Facilities and Transports (Ruling 1/78) [99 ILR 292]
Piandiong et al. v. The Philippines 320
Pickstone v. Freemans 156–7
Re Pikelny, Estate of [22 ILR 97, 22 ILR 102] 466 n92
Pine Valley v. Ireland 355
Pinochet cases: see R v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate, ex parte Pinochet Ugarte (No. 1) [119 ILR 50]; R v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate, ex parte Pinochet Ugarte (No. 3) [119 ILR 135]
Pinson, George case [4 AD 9 et al.] 135 n21
Re Piperno 687 n211
Re Piracy Jure Gentium [7 AD 213] 144, 397, 398
Ex parte Pirbhai [107 ILR 461] 182, 187
The Pisaro 194 n359
Pitcairn and Associated Islands (Governor of) v. Sutton [104 ILR 508] 167
Planmount Ltd v. Republic of Zaire [64 ILR 268] 707, 709 n64, 719 n112
Polish Nationals in Danzig case [6 AD 47 et al.] 135 Polites v. Commonwealth of Australia and Another; Kandiliotes v. Commonwealth and Another [12 AD 208] 167, 168 n205

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Polyukhovich v. Commonwealth of Australia 170 n212
Re Poncet [15 AD 346] 1300 n73
Poropat v. Bosnia 380
Porter v. Freudenberg 151 n106
The Porto Alexandre [1 AD 146] 702, 703, 705
Portugal v. Goncalves [82 ILR 115] 767
Post Office v. Estuary Radio Limited [43 ILR 114] 153, 193
Ex parte Postlethwaite 155 n129
Potter v. BHP Co. Ltd 167
Prefecture of Voiotia v. Germany (Distomo Massacre) 728, 1178 n56
Princess Zizianoff v. Kahn and Bigelow [4 AD 384] 774
Princz v. Federal Republic of Germany [103 ILR 594] 127 n244, 715 n94
The Prins Frederik 702 n19
Propend Finance Pty Ltd and Others v. Sing and Others [111 ILR 611] 769–70
Public Committee against Torture in Israel et al. v. Government of Israel 166 n166 Public Prosecutor (Malaysia) v. Orhan Olmez [87 ILR 212] 771
Public Prosecutor (Netherlands) v. JBC [94 ILR 339] 769
Public Prosecutor (Netherlands) v. JO [74 ILR 130] 172 n225
Public Prosecutor (Sweden) v. Antoni [32 ILR 140] 663
Pulp Mills on the River Uruguay case (Argentina v. Uruguay) 1017 n33, 1093, 1095 nn249 and 251

Qatar v. Bahrain (Maritime Delimitation and Territorial Questions) [102 ILR 1] 197 n179, 491 n23, 498, 511 n131, 553 n2, 558, 559, 561–2, 566, 582 n130, 588 n159, 591–2, 601 n245, 603–4, 606, 905 n12, 906–7, 911, 933 n142, 935 n158, 940 n178, 1049, 1067 n66, 1072, 1077, 1091 n230, 1092 n232
Quebec Secession case: see Reference by the Governor in Council concerning Certain Questions relating to the Secession of Quebec [115 ILR 536]
Quintanilla case [3 AD 224] 825 n281

R v. Abu Hamza 655 n42
R v. Anderson 557
R v. Asfaw 150 n99
R v. Berry 654
R v. Bow Street Magistrates, ex parte Mackerson 682 n177

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

R v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate, ex parte Pinochet Ugarte (No. 1) [119 ILR 50] 126 n239, 145 n72, 146, 186 n301
R v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate, ex parte Pinochet Ugarte (No. 3) [119 ILR 135] 126 n238, 146, 326 n336, 653 n35, 673 n129, 675, 698 n3, 699, 718, 737, 738
R v. Brown 154 n154
R v. Burgess, ex parte Henry [8 AD 54] 221
R v. Chief Immigration Officer, Heathrow Airport, ex parte Salamat Bibi [61 ILR 267] 154
R v. Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, ex parte Home Secretary 687 n211
R v. Civil Aviation Authority [132 ILR 713] 1178 n54
R v. Cooke 653
R v. Council of Canadians 167 n195
R v. Director of the Serious Fraud Office and BAE Systems 182 n.274, 183 n286, 185 n300, 188 n322, 798
R v. Farnquist [94 ILR 238] 556 n13
R v. Governor of Pentonville Prison, ex parte Teja [52 ILR 368] 768, 769 n403
R v. HM Treasury and the Bank of England, ex parte Centro-Com 152 n113, 154–5
R v. Home Secretary, ex parte Anderson 154
R v. Home Secretary, ex parte Bagga [88 ILR 404] 768–9
R v. Home Secretary, ex parte Bhajan Singh [61 ILR 260] 154
R v. Home Secretary, ex parte Fernandes 154 n125
R v. Home Secretary, ex parte Launder [114 ILR 402] 154 n124
R v. Home Secretary, ex parte Phansopkar [61 ILR 390] 154 n124
R v. Home Secretary, ex parte Wynne 154 n124
R v. Horseferry Road Magistrates' Court, ex parte Bennett [95 ILR 380] 682
R v. Jones [132 ILR 668] 130, 146–7, 181–2, 184–5, 398 n4, 400 n14, 670
R v. Kelly [77 ILR 284] 663
R v. Keyn 141–2, 143, 570 n85
R v. Lambeth Justices, ex parte Yusufu [88 ILR 323] 769
R v. Latif 682
R v. Lyons [131 ILR 538] 150 n98, 180, 184 n293
R v. Madan 740 n236
R v. Ministry of Defence (UK), ex parte Smith 181 n269
R v. Mullen 682 n180
R v. Officer Commanding Depot Battalion RASC Colchester, ex parte Elliott 682 n177

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

R v. P (No. 2) 732–3
R v. Plymouth Justices and Another, ex parte Driver [77 ILR 351] 682
R v. Republic of Iraq [116 ILR 664] 727
R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Rees-Mogg [98 ILR 166] 149
R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Samuel 757–8
R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Trawnik 103, 193
R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Thakrar [59 ILR 450] 144, 827 n291
R v. Secretary of State for Transport, ex parte Factortame Limited (No. 2) (Case C 213/89) [93 ILR 642, 93 ILR 665] 179 n258
R v. Secretary of State for Transport, ex parte Factortame Limited (No. 3) (Case C 221/89) [93 ILR 642, 93 ILR 731] 179 n258
R v. West Yorkshire Coroner, ex parte Smith [78 ILR 550] 653 n33
R (Al Fawwaz) v. Governor of Brixton Prison 155
R (Al-Rawi) v. Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs 181 n270, 188, 811
R (on the Application of Alconbury Ltd) v. Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions 156
R on the Application of Channel Tunnel Group Limited and France-Manch SA v. Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions [119 ILR 398] 150–3
R (B) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [131 ILR 616] 773 n428
R (European Roma Rights Centre) v. Immigration Officer at Prague Airport and Another [131 ILR 652] 146, 152
R (Gentle) v. Prime Minister 130, 181 n272, 185 n295
R (Islamic Human Rights Commission) v. CAA [132 ILR 707] 185 n295
R (Suresh and Manickavasagam) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [123 ILR 593] 187
Racke (A) GmbH and Company v. Hauptzollamt Mainz (Case C-162/96) [117 ILR 399] 952 n225
Radovan Stanković case (Case No. IT-96-23/2-AR11 bis.1) (Decision on Rule 11 bis Referral) 426
Radwan v. Radwan [55 ILR 579] 752
Re Rafidain [101 ILR 332] 728 n166
Rahimtoola v. Nizam of Hyderabad [24 ILR 175] 705 Railway Traffic between Lithuania and Poland (Series A/B, No. 42) [6 AD 403] 1016

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Rainbow Warrior (New Zealand/France) [82 ILR 499] 782 n23, 789, 797–8, 800, 803, 805–6, 946, 948, 1101
Rainbow Warrior (New Zealand/France) (UN Secretary-General's Ruling) [74 ILR 241] 779, 785, 1101
Rajan v. Minister of Immigration (New Zealand) [117 ILR 641] 167 n197
Ramirez v. Weinberger 700
Ramos and Others v. United States [116 ILR 634] 727
Rankin v. Islamic Republic of Iran (Case No. 10913) [82 ILR 204] 792, 827
Rann of Kutch (Indo-Pakistan Western Boundary) case (India/Pakistan) [50 ILR 2] 106, 491, 513–14, 526 n220, 1052 n261, 1054–5
Rantzen v. Mirror Group Newspapers 154 n124
Rasul v. Bush 658, 686
Rayner v. Department of Trade and Industry: see JH Rayner (Mincing Lane) Ltd v. Department of Trade and Industry and Others [77 ILR 55]
Re-Introduction of the Death Penalty in the Peruvian Constitution case 104 n142, 398
Reading and Bates Corporation and Reading and Bates Exploration Company v. National Iranian Oil Company [63 ILR 305] 742
The Red Crusader [35 ILR 485] 618, 638, 1021
Reel v. Holder and Another [74 ILR 105] 479
Rees v. Secretary of State for the Home Department 665
Rees-Mogg case: see R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Rees-Mogg [98 ILR 166]
Reference by the Governor in Council concerning Certain Questions relating to the Secession of Quebec [115 ILR 536] 166, 255, 256–7, 291, 293, 523
Reference re Exemption of US Forces from Canadian Criminal Law [12 AD 124] 167
Reference re Ownership and Jurisdiction Over Offshore Mineral Rights of British Columbia [43 ILR 93] 166 n193
Reference re Powers to Levy Rates on Foreign Legations and High Commissioners' Residences 166 n193, 167
Reference re the Seabed and Subsoil of the Continental Shelf Offshore Newfoundland [86 ILR 593] 171 n219
Reid v. Republic of Nauru [101 ILR 193] 711 Reinier van Arkel Foundation and Others v. Minister for Transport, Public Works and Water Management (Netherlands) 172–3

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Renchard et al. v. Humphreys & Harding Inc. et al. [63 ILR 21, 63 ILR 33] 763 Reparation for Injuries Suffered in the Service of the United Nations [16 AD 318] 47, 83, 93 n96, 95 n96, 110, 260, 264, 811, 937, 1113–14, 1297–8, 1302–3, 1306 n104, 1307 n112, 1311–12
Request for an Examination of the Situation in Accordance with Paragraph 63 of the Court's Judgment of 20 December 1974 in the Nuclear Tests (New Zealand v. France) Case (Order) [106 ILR 1]: see Nuclear Tests Case (New Zealand v. France), Request for an Examination of the Situation in Accordance with Paragraph 63 of the Court's Judgment of 20 December 1974 in the Nuclear Tests (New Zealand v. France) Case (Order) [106 ILR 1]
Reservations to the Genocide Convention case [18 ILR 364] 83, 110, 283–4, 918–19, 963, 981–2, 1060 n17, 1110
Resolution of the Supreme Court of Poland of 19 February 2003 173
Respublica v. De Longchamps 157
Revere Copper and Brass Inc. and Overseas Private Investment Corporation [56 ILR 258] 832 n315
Rich et al. v. Naviera Vacuba SA et al. [32 ILR 127] 705
Richtersveld Community case 298 n180
Right of Passage over Indian Territory case (Portugal v. India) (Merits) [31 ILR 23] 86 n54, 92–3, 102, 124 n228, 508, 539
Right of Passage over Indian Territory case (Portugal v. India) (Preliminary Objections) [24 ILR 840] 936, 1015 n21, 1082 n168
Right to Information on Consular Assistance case 130, 389–90
Rights of US Nationals in Morocco: see US Nationals in Morocco case (USA v. France) [19 ILR 255]
Rio Tinto Zinc Corporation and Others v. Westinghouse Electric Corporation [73 ILR 296] 689 n223
RL v. Canada (Communication No. 358/1989) [96 ILR 706] 292 n155
RMD v. Switzerland 223 n131
Robert E. Brown case [2 AD 66] 273, 1003
Roberts case [3 AD 227] 824–5
Robinson v. Secretary-General of the UN [19 ILR 494] 280
Robinson case 321
Rocha et al. v. United States [32 ILR 112] 667
Rodriguez-Fernandez v. Wilkinson [87 ILR 446] 158 n150
Roma Rights case: see R (European Roma Rights Centre) v. Immigration Officer at Prague Airport and Another [131 ILR 652]

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Rothmans International France SA and Philip Morris France SA; Arizona Tobacco Products and Philip Morris France SA [93 ILR 308] 174 n234
RT v. Switzerland 330
Ruggiu case 431
Russian Indemnity case 802 n154
Rustomjee v. R 149 n93
Rutaganda case 432
Rutili v. Minister of the Interior of the French Republic (Case 36/75) [62 ILR 390] 156, 369–70
Ruzmetove v. Uzbekistan 320 n299

S v. India [82 ILR 13] 768 n395
S & S Machinery Company v. Masinexport-import and Romanian Bank for Foreign Trade [72 ILR 183] 742
Saadi v. Italy 687 n215
Sabah Shipyard v. Pakistan 740 n237
Sabbatino case: see Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino et al. [35 ILR 2]
Saghi v. Iran (Case No. 298) [84 ILR 609] 815 n236
M/V Saiga (No. 2) (Saint Vincent and the Grenadines v. Guinea) (Admissibility and Merits) [120 ILR 143] 103 n133, 111 n183, 137 n35, 583, 612 n307, 613, 618, 643–4, 798–9, 801, 819, 823 n264
St Pierre and Miquelon (Delimitation of Maritime Areas between Canada and the French Republic (St Pierre and Miquelon)) [95 ILR 645] 598–9, 602
Saipan, People of, ex rel Guerrero v. US Department of the Interior [61 ILR 113] 164
Salamat case: see R v. Chief Immigration Officer, Heathrow Airport, ex parte Salamat Bibi [61 ILR 267]
Salem case (United States and Egypt) [6 AD 188] 273, 815
Salimoff and Company v. Standard Oil Company of New York; The Same v. Vacuum Oil Company [7 AD 22] 483, 485
Salomon v. Commissioners of Customs and Excise [41 ILR 1] 153
Saltzgitter Mannesmann v. Commission 371
Saluka Investments v. Czech Republic 834 n324, 1050
Salvador Commercial Company case 786
Sambaggio case 791 n74
Sanchez-Espinoza and Others v. Reagan and Others [80 ILR 586] 160 n163, 684

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Sanchez-Llamas v. Oregon 130, 159, 221
Sandline International Inc./Papua New Guinea Arbitration (Interim Award) [117 ILR 552] 146, 789
Re Sandrock and Others 400 n14
Sankoh case [119 ILR 385] 187
Santa Elena v. Costa Rica 832, 833–4
Sapphire International Petroleums Ltd v. National Iranian Oil Company [35 ILR 136] 836 n340
Sara et al. v. Finland (Communication No. 431/1990) [114 ILR 331] 274 n48
Saudi Arabia (Government of) v. Ahmed [104 ILR 629] 725
Saudi Arabia and Others v. Nelson [100 ILR 544] 708, 709 n64, 715, 723 n136, 724 n145
Sawhoyamaxa Indigenous Community v. Paraguay 300–1, 391
Scarfò v. Sovereign Order of Malta [24 ILR 1] 243 n235
Schavernoch v. Foreign Claims Commission [90 ILR 220] 815 n236
Schmidt v. Polish People's Republic 721
Re Schmidt [111 ILR 548] 682
Schneider v. Kissinger 190 n336, 191
The Schooner Exchange v. McFaddon 558, 653 n33, 699
Schreck case 1054
Schroeder v. Bissell 158, 159
The Scotia case 83, 112
SD Myers Inc. v. Canada (Partial Award) [121 ILR 72] 49, 801 n150, 830 n305
Šećerbegović v. Bosnia 380
Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Relations v. Tomlin 757 Security Pacific National Bank v. Iran 742
SEDCO v. National Iranian Oil Company and the Islamic Republic of Iran (Case No. 129) [84 ILR 483] 831 n309, 841
Sei Fujii v. California 163
Sellers v. Maritime Safety Inspector (New Zealand) [120 ILR 585] 614 n319
Selmouni v. France 326
Semco Salvage v. Lancer Navigation 155–6
Sengupta v. Republic of India [64 ILR 352] 714, 725–6, 770
Serbia and Montenegro v. Belgium 1060 n19
Serbia and Montenegro v. UK 963, 1065, 1071, 1073–4, 1075 n88, 1085–6, 1157 n199

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Serbian Loans case (Payment of Various Serbian Loans Issued in France) [5 AD 466] 2, 102, 136–7, 796
Serre et Régnier case 663
SGS Société Générale de Surveillance SA v. Pakistan (ICSID Case No. ARB/01/13) (Procedural Order No. 2) [129 ILR 360] 1043
Shanghai Power Co. v. United States 831 n307
Shaw v. Shaw [78 ILR 483] 769 n405
Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. and Another v. Maclaine Watson and Company Limited and Another and International Tin Council (Intervener) (No. 2) [77 ILR 107] 763, 1327 n202
Shimoda case [32 ILR 626] 1188
Short v. Islamic Republic of Iran (Case No. 11135) [82 ILR 148] 792
Shrimp/Turtle case 869 n134
Shufeldt Claim (USA v. Guatemala) [5 AD 179] 103, 830
Siderman de Blake and Others v. Republic of Argentina and Others [103 ILR 454] 126 n238, 160, 684, 700, 742
Sidhu v. British Airways 155
Siemens v. Argentina 832 n313
Sierra Leone Telecommunications Company Ltd v. Barclays Bank plc [114 ILR 466] 150 n100, 194 n358, 481 n150
Simpson v. Libya 715–16
Simsek v. Macphee 168 n202
Sinclair v. HM Advocate 682 n177
Skeen v. Federative Republic of Brazil [121 ILR 481] 766
Skiriotes v. Florida [10 AD 258] 663
Smith v. Libya [113 ILR 534] 685 n202, 742
Société Eram Shipping Co. Ltd v. Cie Internationale de Navigation 654 n37
Société Internationale pour Participations Industrielles et Commerciales SA v. Rogers, Attorney-General et al. [26 ILR 123] 689 n223
Soering v. United Kingdom [98 ILR 270] 349, 358, 687, 938
Sokoloff v. National City Bank of New York [2 AD 44] 483
Sola Tiles Inc. v. Iran (Case No. 317) [83 ILR 460] 816 n237, 836 n341
Solórzano v. Venezuela (Communication No. 156/1983) [94 ILR 400] 274 n48
Somalia (Republic of) v. Woodhouse Drake and Carey (Suisse) SA and Others [94 ILR 608] 194, 481
Somchai Liangsiriprasert v. United States (Government of) [84 ILR 55, 85 ILR 109] 655
Some Powers of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights 383

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

South-West Africa cases (Second Phase) (1966) [37 ILR 243] 12, 99 n113, 100 n119, 107, 137 n34, 225, 230, 252 n276, 277 n71, 279 n79, 286 n125, 288 n136, 493 n33, 905, 1059, 1067 n73, 1068, 1088, 1307 n116, 1331
South-West Africa cases (Second Phase) (1966) [37 ILR 243]: see also International Status of South-West Africa [17 ILR 47]
South-West Africa (Hearings of Petitioners), Admissibility [23 ILR 38] 225
Southern Bluefin Tuna cases (Australia v. Japan; New Zealand v. Japan) (Award on Jurisdiction and Admissibility) [119 ILR 508] 636, 637–8
Southern Bluefin Tuna cases (Australia v. Japan; New Zealand v. Japan) (Request for Provisional Measures) [117 ILR 148] 643–4, 1015 n24
Sovereign Order of Malta v. Soc. An. commerciale [22 ILR 1] 243
Sovereignty over Certain Frontier Land, Case concerning (Belgium/Netherlands) [27 ILR 62] 505
Spanish Zone of Morocco Claims, General Decisions (Principles of State Responsibility) [2 AD 157] 113, 781, 791, 802 n154
Sporrong and Lönnroth case (Merits) [68 ILR 86] 829 n299, 832 n315
SPUC v. Grogan 369
Stakić case (IT-97-24-T) 433
Standard Chartered Bank v. International Tin Council and Others [77 ILR 8] 1316 Standards for Reformulated and Conventional Gasoline case 1038
Starrett Housing Corporation, Starrett Systems Inc. and Starrett Housing International Inc. v. Iran, Bank Omran, Bank Mellat and Bank Markazi (Case No. 24) [85 ILR 349] 103, 831
State (Céara) v. D'Archer de Montgascon [6 AD 162] 733 n194
State (Céara) v. Dorr [4 AD 39] 733 n194
State Party Responsibility for Awards Rendered Against Its Nationals (Case A/21) 1044
State (South Africa) v. Ebrahim [95 ILR 417] 682 n179
Stauder v. City of Ulm 369
Steiner and Gross v. Polish State [4 AD 291 et al.] 259
Strassheim v. Dailey 654
Suárez-Rosero v. Ecuador [118 ILR 56] 802 nn150–2
Sullivan v. State of São Paulo [10 AD 178] 733
Sunday Times Case (Merits) [58 ILR 491] 356, 357, 389 n254, 786 n51
Ex parte Susannah Scott 682 n177

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Svenska Petroleum v. Lithuania 720–1, 741–2
Swedish Engine Drivers' Union case [58 ILR 19] 348
Swiss–Israel Trade Bank v. Government of Salta and Banco Provincial de Salta [55 ILR 411] 733 Swissborough Diamond Mines v. South Africa [132 ILR 454] 189
Syria (Arab Republic of) v. Arab Republic of Egypt (Case No. 298-DF) [91 ILR 288] 184 n292

T v. Belgium [115 ILR 442] 186 n302
Taba Award (Arbitral Award in the Dispute Concerning Certain Boundary Pillars between the Arab Republic of Egypt and the State of Israel) [80 ILR 224, 80 ILR 691] 516, 935 n155, 1054–5
Tabag v. Minister for Immigration and Ethnic Affairs (Australia) 170 n212
Tabatabai case [80 ILR 388] 769, 775
Tabion v. Mufti [107 ILR 452] 767 n383
Tachiona v. USA 737–8
Tacna-Arica Arbitration (Chile/Peru) [3 AD 357] 947–8, 1017 n32
Tadić case (IT-94-1-A) (Appeal against Conviction) (Appeals Chamber) [124 ILR 61] 121 n184, 438, 791, 1065 n55, 1081 n163, 1173 n29
Tadić case (IT-94-1-AR72) (Jurisdiction) (Appeals Chamber) [105 ILR 419, 105 ILR 453] 404–5, 406, 435, 1191–2, 1195 n142, 1196, 1269 n320, 1271 n332, 1308 n120
Tadić case (IT-94-1-T) (Judgment) (Trial Chamber II) [112 ILR 1, 112 ILR 214] 437
Tag v. Rogers 158 n149
A/S Tallinna Laevauhisus v. Tallinna Shipping Co. (The Vapper) [13 AD 12] 961 n24
Tanli case 357, 358
Tatchell v. Mugabe 737
Tavignano case 1020 n52
Tel-Oren v. Libyan Arab Republic [77 ILR 192] 160, 683, 684, 750
Temeltasch v. Switzerland [88 ILR 619] 915 nn61 and 62
Temple of Preah Vihear case (Cambodia v. Thailand) (Merits) [33 ILR 48] 102, 496, 516, 518–19, 522, 802 n154, 935 n155, 939, 941–2, 1061
Teoh (Minister for Immigration and Ethnic Affairs (Australia) v. Teoh) [104 ILR 460] 151 n104, 167–9
Texaco Overseas Petroleum Company (TOPCO) and California Asiatic Oil Company v. Libya [53 ILR 389] 105 n146, 262, 803–4, 829, 834–5, 905 n16

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Texas v. White 482–3
Texas Trading and Milling Corporation v. Federal Republic of Nigeria and Central Bank of Nigeria, Consolidated Appeal [63 ILR 552] 724
Thai-Europe Tapioca Service Ltd v. Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Food and Agriculture, Directorate of Agricultural Supplies (Imports and Shipping Wing) (The Harmattan) [64 ILR 81] 145, 706
Thakrar case: see R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Thakrar [59 ILR 450]
In re Thenault 662
767 Third Avenue Associates and Another v. Permanent Mission of the Republic of Zaire to the United Nations [99 ILR 194] 752, 754
Thirty Hogsheads of Sugar, Bentzon v. Boyle 112 n185
Thomas v. Mowbray 189
Thomas Lubanga Dyilo case 1116 n374
Thompson v. St Vincent and the Grenadines 321
Thorpe v. Commonwealth of Australia (No. 3) [118 ILR 353] 189
Tiger case 1020 n52
Timberlane Lumber Company et al. v. Bank of America, NY and SA et al. [66 ILR 270] 689–90
Tinoco Arbitration (Great Britain/Costa Rica) [2 AD 34 et al.] 455–6
Too v. Greater Modesto Insurance Associates 834 n324
Toonen v. Australia (Communication No. 488/1992) [112 ILR 328] 223 n131
Torres v. State of Oklahoma 159
Torres Ramírez v. Uruguay 274 n48
Touvier case [100 ILR 337] 670
Tradex Hellas SA v. Albania 1042 n194
Trail Smelter Arbitration (USA/Canada) [9 AD 315] 852, 854, 855–7, 872, 1052, 1053 n263, 1054 n271
Transamerican Steamship Corporation v. Somali Democratic Republic and Somali Shipping Agency [86 ILR 55, 86 ILR 68] 723, 724
Transportes Aereos de Angola v. Ronair Inc. and Another [94 ILR 202] 482
Trawnik v. Gordon Lennox 704 n32
Trawnik v. Minister of Defence 154
Trawnik cases: see also R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Trawnik Treatment in Hungary of US Aircraft case 1076 n132

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Re Treaty on the Basis of Relations between the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic, 1972 [78 ILR 149] 463, 965 n52
Re Treaty on European Union, 1992 (Maastricht I) (Decision No. 92-308 DC) [93 ILR 337] 174 n235
Trendtex Trading Corporation v. Central Bank of Nigeria [64 ILR 111] 141 n53, 144–5, 706–7, 709 n64, 728–9, 731, 745
Triquet v. Bath 141, 143
Tubantia case 1020 n52
Tunis and Morocco Nationality Decrees (Series B, No. 4) [2 AD 349] 216
Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case (Application by Malta for Permission to Intervene) [62 ILR 608] 1098 n267, 1099 n277
Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case (Application for Revision and Interpretation of the Judgment of 24 February 1982 in the Case concerning the Continental Shelf (Tunisia/Libya)) [81 ILR 419] 587 n152, 1062 n26, 1075 n128, 1085 n183, 1105 n316, 1106
Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case (Merits) [67 ILR 4] 106 n151, 124, 563–4, 583, 587 n152, 594, 595, 597–8, 600 n240, 601 n241, 1075 n127, 1086 n193, 1089 n216
TWA v. Franklin Mint Corporation 950 n219
Tyrer case [58 ILR 339] 223 n131, 349

UN v. B [19 ILR 490] 1300 n75
Underhill v. Hernandez 180, 189
Unification Treaty Constitutionality case (Merits) (Cases 1 BvR 1170, 1174, 1175/90) [94 ILR 42] 172
Union Bridge Company case [2 AD 170] 788–9
United Arab Emirates v. Abdelghafar [104 ILR 647] 748
United Euram Company v. Union of Soviet Socialist Republics et al. [63 ILR 228] 721
United Nations Administrative Tribunal, Effect of Awards of Compensation [21 ILR 310] 101, 1081 n163, 1113 n357, 1307
United Nations Administrative Tribunal, Review of Judgment, No. 158 (Fasla) [54 ILR 381] 1113
United Nations Administrative Tribunal, Review of Judgment, No. 273 (Mortished) [69 ILR 330] 1112 n354, 1113 n357
United Parcel Service of America v. Canada 1039 n174
United States v. Alaska 563–4
United States v. Aluminum Co. of America 688–9
United States v. Belmont [8 AD 34] 158, 485

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

United States v. Benitez 666
United States v. Biermann [84 ILR 206] 619
United States v. California [42 ILR 86] 564
United States v. Claus [13 AD 181] 158
United States v. Columba-Colella 654 n40
United States v. Cortes 615
United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corporation et al. [8 AD 48] 161 n170, 219 n111
United States v. Dominguez 614
United States v. Dulles 811 n213
United States v. First National City Bank et al. [38 ILR 112] 689 n223
United States v. Friedland; Friedland v. United States and Others [120 ILR 417] 707, 742 n245
United States v. General Electric Co. 689 n222
United States v. Guinand [99 ILR 117] 769
United States v. Guinto, Valencia and Others 708 n57
United States v. Kessler 568 n76
United States v. Kostadinov [99 ILR 103] 752
United States v. Layton [94 ILR 83] 667 n97
United States v. Lira 681
United States v. Louisiana et al. (Alabama and Mississippi Boundary case) [91 ILR 411] 564
United States v. Louisiana et al. (Louisiana Boundary case) (1969) [53 ILR 206] 564
United States v. McCaffery 686 n208
United States v. Mackin [79 ILR 459] 687
United States v. Maine and Others [91 ILR 427] 564
United States v. Marino-Garcia 614
United States v. Matta-Ballesteros [107 ILR 429] 125 n236
United States v. Melekh et al. [32 ILR 308] 157
United States v. Monroy 614
United States v. Noriega [99 ILR 143, 121 ILR 591] 191 n343, 258, 688 n219, 736, 764 n363, 1176
United States v. Palestine Liberation Organization and Others [82 ILR 282] 158 n150, 165
United States v. Percheman 162, 1002
United States v. Perez-Herrera 654
United States v. Pink, Superintendent of Insurance of the State of New York et al. [10 AD 48] 162, 465, 485 United States v. Pizzarusso 667

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

United States v. Postal 162
United States v. Public Service Alliance of Canada and Others (Re Canada Labour Code) [94 ILR 264] 711, 714, 726
United States v. Ray [51 ILR 225] 199 n16
United States v. Rodriguez 159 n155
United States v. Ruiz and de Guzman and Co. (Case No. L-35645) [102 ILR 122] 708 n57
United States v. Sissoko [121 ILR 599] 775
United States v. Smith 160 n160
United States v. Timken Roller Bearing Co. 689 n222
United States v. Toscanino [61 ILR 190] 681
United States v. Watchmakers of Switzerland Information Center Inc. et al. [22 ILR 168] 689 n222
United States v. Wong Kim Ark 661
United States v. Yunis (No. 2) [82 ILR 343] 666
United States v. Yunis (No. 3) [88 ILR 176] 158, 666 n88
United States Diplomatic and Consular Staff in Tehran case (USA v. Iran) (Iranian Hostages case) [61 ILR 502] 7, 751–2, 755–6, 763 n358, 766, 772 n424, 793, 801 n147, 1013, 1066 n56, 1079, 1089, 1094, 1102, 1104, 1144 n131
United States ex rel. Lujan v. Gengler [61 ILR 206] 681
United States and Republic of France v. Dollfus Mieg et Cie SA, and Bank of England [16 AD 103, 16 AD 128, 19 ILR 163] 703 n29
UNRAA v. Daan [16 AD 337] 1300
Upright v. Mercury Business Machines Company [32 ILR 65] 483–4
In re Uranium Antitrust Litigation 689 n223
Re Urios [1 AD 107] 667
US Nationals in Morocco case (USA v. France) [19 ILR 255] 83, 216, 934 n148

Vafadar [82 ILR 97] 769
Vagrancy cases (De Wilde, Ooms and Versyp) (Merits) [56 ILR 351] 356 n61
Valdez v. Oklahoma 158–9
Valsabbia v. Commission 369–70
Van Duyn v. Home Office (Case 41/74) [60 ILR 247] 827 n291
Van Gend en Loos (Algemene Transport en Expeditie Onderneming van Gend en Loos NV v. Nederlandse Administratie der Belastingen (Case 26/62)) [93 ILR 1] 241
Van Zyl v. Government of RSA 809 n206, 810

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Velásquez Rodríguez case [95 ILR 232] 390, 789, 804–5
Verlinden BV v. Central Bank of Nigeria [63 ILR 7, 63 ILR 390, 63 ILR 548, 63 ILR 573] 750
Vermont v. New Hampshire [7 AD 127, 7 AD 135] 112 n187
Vgt Verein gegen Tierfabriken case 357
Victoria Leasing Ltd v. United States 189 Victory Transport Inc. v. Comisaría General de Abastecimientos y Transportes [35 ILR 110] 705 n34, 708, 735
Vietnam Association for Victims of Agent Orange v. Dow Chemical Company 161 n168 Vietnam (Republic of) v. Pfizer Inc. and Others [94 ILR 199] 482
Vijayanathan and Pusparajah v. France 355
Vitkovice Horni v. Korner 748 n282
Vladimir Kovačevič case 430
The Volga (Russian Federation v. Australia) (Application for Prompt Release) [126 ILR 433] 642–3
Vuolanne case [96 ILR 649] 322, 326

Waddington v. Miah [57 ILR 175] 154
Wahda Bank v. Arab Bank plc 155 n130
Waite and Kennedy v. Germany (Application No. 26083/94) [118 ILR 121] 1321–2
Waksman case 321
Walker v. Baird 151 n106
Walker v. UK 356 n58
Ware v. Hylton 161
Wei Ye v. Jiang Zemin 738
Weinberger case 274 n48
Weinberger, Secretary of Defense (United States) and Others v. Rossi and Others [101 ILR 562] 164
Wellington District Legal Services Committee v. Tangiora [115 ILR 655] 167 n197
Wemhoff case [41 ILR 281] 689 n221, 938 n168
West Rand Gold Mining Co. v. R 142–3, 1001 n237, 1002–3
Western Sahara case (Advisory Opinion) [59 ILR 30] 88, 197 n7, 198 n10, 199 n13, 200, 206 n46, 253, 254–5, 257, 264, 491, 493, 503, 508, 514, 516, 524, 525, 1062, 1109 n340, 1110–11
Ex parte Westfallen 682
Westland Helicopters Ltd v. Arab Organization for Industrialization [108 ILR 564] 184 nn291 and 292, 1302, 1310 n127, 1317 n158

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Westland Helicopters Ltd v. Arab Organization for Industrialization, United Arab Emirates, Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, State of Qatar, Arab Republic of Egypt and Arab British Helicopter Company (Interim Award, 1984) [80 ILR 600] 135 n23, 1043, 1316
Westminster City Council v. Government of Iran [108 ILR 557] 749, 758
Whitney v. Robertson 158, 165 n182
WHO Regional Office case (Interpretation of the Agreement of 25 March 1951 between the WHO and Egypt) [62 ILR 450] 260 n310, 1113 n357, 1303 n89, 1311, 1312 n138
Wildenhus case 557
Williams & Humbert Ltd v. W & H Trade Marks (Jersey) Ltd; Rumasa SA and Others v. Multinvest (UK) and Others [75 ILR 268] 191 n345, 650
Wilson v. Minister for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Affairs 189
SS Wimbledon [2 AD 99 et al.] 212 n76, 540, 930, 1098
Woodpulp cases (Ahlström Osakeyhtiö and Others v. Commission (In re Wood Pulp Cartel) (Joined Cases 89/85, 104/85, 114/85, 116–17/85 and 125–9/85)) [96 ILR 148] 652, 695
Re Woods [53 ILR 552] 170 n217
Wright v. Cantrell [12 ILR 133] 167
Wulfsohn v. Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic [2 AD 39 et al.] 446 n6, 482 n153
Wynne case: see R v. Home Secretary, ex parte Wynne

X v. Argentina [114 ILR 502] 726 n157
X v. Austria 355
X v. Commission 369–70
X v. FRG 355
X v. UK 355
Xuncax and Others v. Gramajo; Ortiz v. Gramajo [104 ILR 165] 160 n165

Y v. Belgium 355
Yeager v. Islamic Republic of Iran (Case No. 10199) [82 ILR 178] 791 n72, 792
Yessenin-Volpin v. Novosti Press Agency, Tass et al. [63 ILR 127] 723, 732
Yossi Beilin v. Prime Minister of Israel 1122 n19
Youmans case [3 AD 223] 788, 791 n73
Young, James and Webster case (Closed Shop case) (Merits) [62 ILR 359] 357, 787

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Young Loan Arbitration (Kingdom of Belgium, the French Republic, Swiss Confederation, United Kingdom and United States/Federal Republic of Germany) [59 ILR 494] 934 n148, 935 n158, 938 n172
Yugoslavia v. Belgium (Legality of the Use of Force) 1093 n238, 1157 n199
Yugoslavia v. Spain (Legality of the Use of Force) 921, 1074
Yugoslavia v. USA (Legality of the Use of Force) 915, 921, 1074
Yugoslavia Peace Conference, Arbitration Commission, Interlocutory Decision (Opinion Nos. 8, 9 and 10) [92 ILR 194] 1053 n262
Yugoslavia Peace Conference, Arbitration Commission, Opinions, 1 (Succession to SFRY) [92 ILR 162] 198, 210, 217–18, 448, 959, 962 n30
Yugoslavia Peace Conference, Arbitration Commission, Opinions, 2 (Right to self determination of Serbs in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina) [92 ILR 167] 291, 527–8, 1005
Yugoslavia Peace Conference, Arbitration Commission, Opinions, 3 (Internal boundaries) [92 ILR 170] 528, 968 n68
Yugoslavia Peace Conference, Arbitration Commission, Opinions, 4 (Independence of Bosnia and Heregovina pending referendum) [92 ILR 173] 201
Yugoslavia Peace Conference, Arbitration Commission, Opinions, 5 (Recognition of Croatia) [92 ILR 178] 201 n24, 461
Yugoslavia Peace Conference, Arbitration Commission, Opinions, 8 (Dissolution of SFRY) [92 ILR 199] 208, 210, 218, 449, 962
Yugoslavia Peace Conference, Arbitration Commission, Opinions, 9 (Succession to SFRY) [92 ILR 203] 962
Yugoslavia Peace Conference, Arbitration Commission, Opinions, 10 (Recognition of FRY) [92 ILR 206] 450, 962
Yugoslavia Peace Conference, Arbitration Commission, Opinions, 11 (Succession to SFRY: date of) [96 ILR 718] 454 n.34, 960
Yugoslavia Peace Conference, Arbitration Commission, Opinions, 13 (Succession to SFRY: principles applying to) [96 ILR 726] 958, 991–2
Yugoslavia Peace Conference, Arbitration Commission, Opinions, 14 (Succession to SFRY: assets and liabilities) [96 ILR 729] 991

Z v. Geneva Supervisory Authority for the Enforcement of Debts and Bankruptcy [102 ILR 205] 747 n268
Z v. UK 356–7
Zachevning v. Miller 219

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Zafiro [3 AD 221] 789
Zambian Embassy v. Sendanayake (Decision No. 5941/1992) [114 ILR 532] 727
Zedan v. Kingdom of Saudi Arabia [92 ILR 462] 724
Zimbabwe Human Rights NGO Forum v. Zimbabwe 394 n288
ZM v. Permanent Delegation of the League of Arab States to the United Nations [116 ILR 643] 1321

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

TABLE OF TREATIES AND SELECTED OTHER INTERNATIONAL INSTRUMENTS

1648
Treaty of Westphalia 26, 1120, 1282

1794
Great Britain–USA, Jay Treaty 823, 1048

1814
Great Britain–USA, Treaty of Ghent 1048 n227

1815
Final Act of the Congress of Vienna 28

1842
China–Great Britain, Treaty of Nanking ceding the Island of Hong Kong 1008

1860
China–Great Britain, Convention of Peking leasing the New Territories 1008

1864
Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick of Armed Forces in the Field 28, 1168

1868
St Petersburg Declaration Renouncing the Use in Time of War of Explosive Projectiles under 400 Grammes Weight 1168, 1186, 1189

1869
El Salvador–Honduras, Delimitation Agreement (unratified) 530

1878 Treaty of Berlin
art. 6 465
art. 27 465
art. 35 465
art. 43 465

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

1884
International Convention for the Protection of Submarine Telegraphic Cables 399 n11

1885
General Act of the Congress of Berlin
art. 35 520

1888
Convention Respecting the Free Navigation of the Suez Canal (Constantinople) 540

1890
Germany–Great Britain, Treaty Delimiting Respective Spheres of Influence in Africa 496

1895
China–Japan, Treaty of Shimonoseki (Cession of Taiwan) 234

1898
Spain–USA, Treaty of Paris 499, 512

1899
Hague Convention I for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes 1052–3
art. 2 1020
art. 3 1019
art. 9 1020
art. 15 1048–9
art. 18 1049
art. 44 1049
art. 48 . . . . . 1049, 1051 n256
Hague Convention IV concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land 1165 Declaration No. 2 Concerning Asphyxiating Gases 1189

1903
France–Great Britain, Agreement for the Settlement by Arbitration of Certain Classes of Questions which may arise between the two Governments 1049
Panama–USA, Convention for the Construction of the Isthmian Ship Canal 658

1904
France–Siam, Convention modifying the Treaty of 3 October 1893 regarding Territorial Boundaries and Other Arrangements 518

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

1906
Convention for the Prohibition of the Use of White Phosphorus in the Manufacture of Matches (Berne) 270 Convention respecting the Prohibition of Night Work for Women in Industrial Employment (Berne) 270 France–UK, Treaty establishing the Condominium of the New Hebrides 228–9

1907
Convention for the Establishment of a Central American Court of Justice 259 Hague Convention No. I for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes
art. 2 1020
art. 3 1019
art. 37 1048
art. 73 . . . . . 1051 n256
art. 81 1053
art. 84 1053
Hague Convention No. II respecting the Limitation on the Employment of Force for the Recovery of Contract Debts 1121 n14
Hague Convention No. IV on the Laws and Customs of Warfare on Land 1165 preamble (Martens Clause) 1169 n9
Hague Convention No. IV on the Laws and Customs of Warfare on Land, Regulations
Section I, Chapter I 1173
Section I, Chapter II 1172 n28
Section II
art. 22 1186–7
art. 23(a) 1188
art. 23(e) 1187
Section III 1177
art. 42 1177
art. 43 . . . . . 1135, 1178, 1180
art. 47 1181

1910 Agreement for the Suppression of the Circulation of Obscene Publications 399 n11

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

1912
France–Morocco, Treaty of Fez for the Establishment of a New Regime (Protectorate Treaty) 216

1914
France–UK, Protocol respecting the New Hebrides 229

1919
Allied and Association Powers–Poland, Minorities Treaty 1002 Constitution of the International Labour Organisation (Part XIII of the Treaty of Versailles) 271
art. 26 1021
art. 37 . . . . . 1034 n148, 1305 n99
Covenant of the League of Nations 251, 942, 1121–2, 1285
arts. 10–16 1122
art. 12 1216
art. 15 1216–17
art. 16 1217
art. 22 . . . . . 224, 270–1
art. 23 270–1
Paris Convention for the Regulation of Aerial Navigation
art. 1 542
arts. 5–10 542
Treaty of St Germain (Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers and Austria) 211, 957–8, 996
art. 203 999
Treaty of Versailles (Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers and Germany) 448
art. 227 . . . . . 399 n11, 735
art. 228 . . . . . 399 n11, 669
art. 304(b) 258–9
art. 380 540

1920 Treaty of Trianon (Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers and Hungary)
art. 186 999

1921
Great Britain–Ireland, Articles of Agreement concerning Irish Free State Treaty 999

1922
Germany–Poland, Geneva Convention concerning Upper Silesia 259

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Saudi Arabia–Kuwait-administered Neutral Zone, Treaty establishing 229 n168

1923

Mexico–USA, General Claims Convention
art. V 821
Treaty of Lausanne (Treaty Concerning the Demise of the Ottoman Empire) 1000 n235

1924

International Convention for the Suppression of the Circulation of and Traffic in Obscene Publications 399 n11

1925

Geneva Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare 1188 n111

1926

Brussels Convention on the Immunity of State-owned Ships 704 International Convention for the Abolition of Slavery and the Slave Trade 303
art. 3 335
Protocol (1953) 303

1928

American Convention on Commercial Arbitration 542 General Act for the Settlement of Disputes (revised 1949) 1016 n25, 1023, 1050 n250
art. 15(1) 1023 n67
art. 28 . . . . . 1052, 1052 n261
General Treaty for the Renunciation of War (Kellogg–Briand Pact) 439 n226, 468, 501, 506, 509, 942

1929

General Treaty of Inter-American Arbitration 1050 n250
Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field 1169
Geneva Convention on the Treatment of Prisoners of War 1169
International Convention for the Suppression of Counterfeiting Currency 399 n11, 674
Italy–Holy See, Lateran Treaty 244

1930

France/Germany/Italy/Japan, Switzerland, International Convention Respecting the Bank for International Settlement 249

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Hague Convention concerning Certain Questions relating to the Conflict of Nationality Laws
art. 1 . . . . . 660, 812–13, 1004 n249
art. 3 815
art. 12 662

1933

Montevideo Convention on the Rights and Duties of States
art. 1 198
art. 3 448
art. 7 462
art. 11 . . . . . 469 n104
USSR–USA, Exchange of Notes following Recognition (Litvinov Assignment) 162, 465

1936

Convention for the Suppression of the Illicit Traffic in Dangerous Drugs 399 n11 International Convention Regarding the Regime of the Straits between the Mediterranean and the Black Sea (Montreux) 578

1944

Agreement on Control Machinery in Germany (as amended) 964 Chicago Convention on International Civil Aviation
art. 17 664
Declaration of Philadelphia (ILO) 338

1945

Articles of Agreement of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development
art. VI(5) 1329
art. VII 1299, 1319 n168, 1327 n199 Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund art. IX 1299, 1319 n168 Charter of the International Military Tribunal of the Far East (Tokyo Charter) 436 n215, 439
art. 5 400
Charter of the United Nations 163–4, 187, 252–5, 276–8
Chapter I
art. 1 . . . . . 277, 1204–5, 1218
art. 1(1) 1268–9, 1271 n333
art. 1(2) 252
art. 2 . . . . . 929, 1205–6, 1211

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 2(2) 103–4
art. 2(3) 635, 1013
art. 2(4) 469, 488, 501, 522, 942, 1123–8, 1132, 1148–58
art. 2(6) 97, 928–9, 1124
art. 2(7) 212, 272–3, 278, 488, 506, 522, 648–9, 680, 1205, 1237, 1267
Chapter II
art. 4 . . . . . 201, 464, 1209, 1210–11
art. 5 . . . . . 1209, 1211
art. 6 . . . . . 1209, 1211
Chapter IV
arts. 10–14 1271–2
art. 10 . . . . . 1222, 1225, 1331 n221
art. 11 . . . . . 1222, 1272–3
art. 11(2) 1225, 1272–3
art. 12 1222
art. 13 303
art. 13(1) 277
art. 14 . . . . . 1222, 1225
art. 17 . . . . . 115 n195, 1212
art. 17(1) 3
art. 18 . . . . . 909, 1211, 1330 n215
art. 20 . . . . . 1212, 1272
art. 22 1225
art. 25 1253–4
art. 27 1206
Chapter V
art. 23 1206
art. 24 . . . . . 114–15, 1025, 1206, 1219, 1236, 1272
art. 24(2) 1268
art. 25 . . . . . 114–15, 1075, 1206, 1208, 1219, 1236, 1253–4, 1257 n260, 1270
art. 27 . . . . . 1207, 1237
art. 28 1206
art. 29 1224
Chapter VI 1218
art. 33 . . . . . 635, 952–3, 1017, 1218, 1220
art. 33(1) 1013–14
art. 34 . . . . . 1030–1, 1219–20, 1224
art. 35 1030–1

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 35(1) 1220
art. 35(2) 1220
art. 36 . . . . . 1025, 1208, 1224
art. 36(1) 1220
art. 37 . . . . . 1025, 1224
art. 37(1) 1014
art. 37(2) 1025, 1220
art. 38 1224
Chapter VII 4, 231–4, 350–1, 403, 406, 412, 413–14, 427–8, 439–50, 1124, 1217, 1234–71, 1276, 1278–80
art. 39 . . . . . 1224, 1236–41
art. 40 1241–2
art. 41 . . . . . 1208, 1242–3, 1248, 1274 n344
art. 42 . . . . . 1208, 1224–5, 1242, 1251, 1252, 1253 n242
art. 43 . . . . . 1224, 1251–2, 1266–7, 1309
art. 44 1208
art. 46 1251
art. 47 1251
art. 50 1243–4
art. 51 . . . . . 96–7, 501, 502, 610–11, 793, 795, 1124–5, 1131–43, 1146–7, 1149 n157, 1154, 1269, 1273 n341, 1275
Chapter VIII 1273–80
art. 52 . . . . . 1147 n144, 1273
art. 52(1) 1024–5
art. 52(2) 371, 1275
art. 52(3) 1025, 1275
art. 52(4) 1025, 1275 n347
art. 53 1273–4
art. 53(1) 1025
art. 54 1274
Chapter IX
art. 55 . . . . . 252, 277–8, 286
art. 56 . . . . . 277, 286
art. 57 . . . . . 277, 1285
Chapter X
art. 61 1213
art. 62 . . . . . 303, 1213
arts. 62–6 . . . . . 1285 n12
art. 63 338
art. 69 1213

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Chapter XI 252
Chapter XII 224, 252
art. 73 277
art. 75 1309
art. 76 277
art. 77 . . . . . 1214, 1309
art. 79 . . . . . 1223, 1309
art. 80 . . . . . 1331 n221
art. 82 1209
art. 83 . . . . . 1209, 1214, 1309
art. 85 . . . . . 1214, 1309
Chapter XIII 224
Chapter XIV
art. 92 . . . . . 1058, 1065, 1269
art. 93 . . . . . 71, 1072
art. 94 1104
art. 96 . . . . . 954–5, 1108, 1305
art. 96(1) 1304
art. 96(2) 1112, 1304, 1308, 1325 n190
Chapter XV
art. 97 1215
art. 98 . . . . . 1215, 1216, 1223, 1225
art. 99 . . . . . 1215, 1223
art. 100 1214–15
art. 101 1214
Chapter XVI
art. 102 . . . . . 905, 926
art. 103 . . . . . 127, 1025, 1236, 1270, 1274
art. 104 . . . . . 1298, 1299
art. 105 . . . . . 1298, 1319
Chapter XVIII
art. 108 . . . . . 931, 1207, 1209
art. 109 . . . . . 1207, 1209
Nuremberg Charter 400–1
art. 5 400
art. 6 . . . . . 399, 439, 669, 1200
art. 6(b) 434–5
art. 6(c) 436
art. 7 735
art. 8 . . . . . 443 n229

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Pact of the League of Arab States 1031–2 Statute of the International Court of Justice
art. 2 1058
art. 3 1059
art. 4 . . . . . 1059, 1209
art. 5 1059
art. 9 . . . . . 39, 1059
art. 10 1059
art. 13 1059
art. 16 1060
art. 17 1060
art. 18 1060
art. 19 1060
art. 21 1060
art. 22 1060
art. 26 1062
art. 29 1062
art. 31 1060
art. 31(5) 1060 n19
art. 34 . . . . . 1072, 1305 n101
art. 34(2) 1073
art. 35(1) 1073–4
art. 35(2) 1073–4
art. 36 . . . . . 3, 1089
art. 36(1) 1075–81
art. 36(2) 905, 1032, 1067–8, 1081–6
art. 36(5) 1083
art. 36(6) 1081, 1084, 1086
art. 37 . . . . . 1079 n153, 1080–1
art. 38(1) 70–1, 113–14, 122, 601, 640, 1052 n257, 1086–8
art. 38(1)(a) 93
art. 38(1)(b) 74
art. 38(1)(c) 98, 123
art. 38(1)(d) 112–13, 123
art. 38(2) 105–6, 107 n158
art. 40 . . . . . 1075 n124, 1079 n152
art. 40(1) 1069
art. 41 1093–6
art. 43(5) 1089
art. 44(2) 1089

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 48 1089
art. 49 1089
art. 50 1089
art. 53 . . . . . 1104 n311
art. 59 . . . . . 109–12, 1101, 1104
art. 60 . . . . . 1104, 1105, 1107
art. 61 . . . . . 1071, 1105–8
art. 62 . . . . . 277 n70, 1098–9
art. 63 1098
art. 65 . . . . . 1108–13, 1305
UNESCO Constitution 1034
art. 1 341
art. 4(4) 342
art. 12 1299
art. 14 . . . . . 1305 n99
art. 14(2) 1034
1962 Protocol 342

1946

Constitution of the World Health Organisation (as amended 1960, 1975, 1977, 1984, 1994)
art. 2 . . . . . 1112, 1308
art. 75 1034
Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations ('The General Convention') 776, 1231 n134, 1319
art. II
section 2 1326
section 5 1328
section 7 1328
art. IV 776
section 11 1322
section 14 1323
section 16 . . . . . 1323 n182
art. VIII 1113
section 30 1305
ILO Constitution 338–41
art. 19 339
art. 23(2) 339
art. 24 340
art. 25 340

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

arts. 26–9 340
arts. 31–3 340
Paris Agreement on Reparations, the Establishment of an Inter-Allied Reparation Agency and Tripartite Commission for Restitution of Monetary Gold
Part III 1078
UN–ILO, Agreement establishing ILO as Specialised Agency (UNGA resolution 50 (I)) 338

1947

Burma–UK, Recognition of Burmese Independence and Related Matters 493–4, 958 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialised Agencies 1319 art. II, section 5 . . . . . 1327 n202
art. III
section 4 . . . . . 1326 n198
section 7 1328
section 9 1328
art. IV 1327
art. V 776
section 18 1324
section 19 1324
section 20 1324
art. VI
section 22 1324–6
section 23 . . . . . 1325 n189
art. XIX, section 32 1305
General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) 40, 97, 235, 1286–7
art. IV(3) 1287
art. IV(4) 1287
art. XXII 1035
art. XXIII 1035
Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (Rio) modified by the 1975 Protocol of San José 1291–2
art. 3(1) 1137
Peace Treaties 1188 n111
Switzerland–UN, Headquarters Agreement 1319–20 Treaty of Peace with Bulgaria 1109–10

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Treaty of Peace with Hungary 1109–10
Treaty of Peace with Italy 987, 995
Annex IV 294 n163
Treaty of Peace with Romania 1109–10
USA–UN, Headquarters Agreement 1319–20
art. V
section 15 1324
section 18 1324
art. VIII
section 20 1324
section 21 . . . . . 1305 n100, 1320

1948

American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man 381, 389
American Treaty of Pacific Settlement (Pact of Bogotá) 1031
art. 31 1080
art. 32 1080
Charter of the Organisation of American States (Bogotá Charter) (as amended by Protocols of Buenos Aires (1967), Cartagena de Indias (1985), Washington (1992) and Managua (1993)) 1292
art. 9 [12] 448, 1014
art. 17 . . . . . 469 n104
art. 20 . . . . . 1031 n121
art. 22 . . . . . 1276 n355
art. 23 1030–1
arts. 82–90 1031
art. 98 . . . . . 694 n253
China–UK, Joint Declaration on the Question of Hong Kong 539
Convention for the Establishment of the Intergovernmental Maritime [Consultative] Organisation 1015, 1035 Genocide Convention 46, 95, 269, 276 n67, 280, 282–5, 422, 431, 918–19, 984, 1079
art. 3 1092
art. 4 . . . . . 430 n183
art. 6 410
art. 9 . . . . . 283–5, 1079
Italy–USA, Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation 822
Universal Declaration of Human Rights 46, 278–81, 659 n59
Preamble 265–6

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 2 . . . . . 286, 288
art. 3 279
art. 5 . . . . . 279, 326
art. 7 . . . . . 279, 286
art. 8 279
art. 9 279
art. 10 . . . . . 279, 550
art. 12 279
art. 13 279
art. 14 279
art. 18 279
art. 19 279
art. 20 279
art. 23 279
art. 25 279
art. 26 279

1949

Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the Organisation of American States 1319 n169
General Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the Council of Europe 1319 n169 Geneva Conventions (including common articles) 262, 326, 401, 422, 669, 674 n134, 1168, 1169–1203
art. 1 1199
art. 2 . . . . . 1170–1, 1172 n28
art. 3 . . . . . 434–5, 1176, 1194–5, 1197–8
Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field (Geneva Convention I)
art. 7 1171
art. 8 1199
art. 12 1171
art. 13 1171
art. 14 1171
art. 15 1171
art. 16 1171
art. 19 1171–2
art. 22 1172
art. 49 . . . . . 401, 669

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 50 . . . . . 401, 1199
art. 52 1200
Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked Members of the Armed Forces at Sea (Geneva Convention II) 1172
art. 7 1171
art. 8 1199
art. 12 1172
art. 13 1172
art. 50 . . . . . 401, 669
art. 51 . . . . . 401, 1199
art. 53 1200
Geneva Convention Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War (Geneva Convention III) 1172–6
art. 4 . . . . . 1172–3, 1176, 1193
art. 5 1174
art. 7 1171
art. 8 1199
art. 13 . . . . . 1175, 1186
art. 14 1175
art. 17 1175
art. 19 1175
art. 23 1175
art. 82 1175–6
art. 85 1176
art. 118 1176
art. 122 1171
art. 126 1200
art. 127 1199
art. 129 . . . . . 401, 669
art. 130 . . . . . 401, 1199
art. 132 1199
Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Geneva Convention IV) 402, 1176–84
art. 4 . . . . . 1176, 1193
art. 8 1171
art. 9 1199
art. 16 1177
arts. 27–34 1177
art. 33 1181

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

arts. 35–46 1177
art. 47 1180
art. 51 1180
art. 53 1180
art. 54 1180
art. 55 1180
art. 60 1180
art. 64 1180
arts. 71–6 1177
art. 142 1200
art. 144 1199
art. 146 . . . . . 401, 669
art. 147 . . . . . 401, 1199
art. 149 1200
North Atlantic Treaty 1289–90
art. 4 1290
art. 5 . . . . . 1137, 1146, 1290
art. 9 1290
Revised General Act: see 1928 General Act for the Settlement of Disputes (revised 1949) Statute of the Council of Europe 1288–9
art. 1 345
art. 3 345
art. 13 359
art. 14 359
art. 15 . . . . . 359, 1288
art. 16 . . . . . 359, 1288

1950

Egypt–World Health Organisation (WHO), Agreement and Exchange of Notes on Status of WHO in Egypt 1320 n171

1950/1998

European Convention on Human Rights 46, 154, 156, 259, 273 n47, 276, 346, 347–60, 369–70, 937–8, 1289
art. 1 . . . . . 335, 349, 826 n285
art. 2 . . . . . 274, 357, 358, 359
art. 3 . . . . . 274, 326, 348, 352, 357, 358, 359
art. 4 348
art. 4(1) 274
art. 5 . . . . . 127 n245, 347, 348, 359, 1183

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 6 . . . . . 348, 359, 716–17, 922
art. 6(1) 357, 916–17, 1208, 1321–2
art. 7 . . . . . 274, 348
art. 8 . . . . . 275, 348
arts. 8–11 275
art. 10 . . . . . 275, 348, 550
art. 11 . . . . . 275, 348
art. 12 . . . . . 275, 348
art. 13 . . . . . 275, 348, 358–9
art. 14 . . . . . 275, 288, 348, 365
art. 15 . . . . . 274, 356, 357–8, 1197
art. 19 351
art. 20 351
art. 22 351
art. 23 351
art. 25 (former) 353, 354, 922
art. 26 . . . . . 273, 351
art. 27 351
art. 27(2) 1061 n21
art. 28 351
art. 30 . . . . . 352, 354
art. 32 (former) 354
art. 33 354
art. 34 . . . . . 352 n37, 353, 354
art. 35 . . . . . 356, 360, 819
art. 35(2)(b) 379
art. 36 353
art. 38 353
art. 39 353
art. 41 . . . . . 353, 359–60
art. 43 . . . . . 353, 354
art. 44 353
art. 46 (former) 354, 922–3
art. 46(1) (former) 353
art. 46(2) 359
art. 46(2) (former) 353
art. 47 352
art. 63 926
art. 64 . . . . . 917, 925
Protocol I 348, 829, 933–4

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Protocol IV 348, 827
Protocol VI 348
Protocol VII 348, 827
Protocol XI 351, 353–6, 360, 392
Protocol XII 348
Protocol XIII 348
Protocol XIV 347 n12, 360

1951

Allied Powers, Japan, Treaty of Peace 234 Convention on the Status of Refugees and Protocol (1967) 185, 303, 827
art. 35 335
art. 36 335
Protocol (1967) 827
NATO Status of Forces Agreement 658, 776 n448 Treaty Establishing the European Coal and Steel Community 1288
art. 6 . . . . . 241, 1297 n64

1952

Convention on Damage Caused by Foreign Aircraft to Third Parties on the Surface (Rome)
art. 37 925
Convention on Relations between the Three Powers (France, UK and USA) and the FRG (as amended by Schedule I to the Protocol on the Termination of the Occupation Regime in the FRG, signed at Paris on 23 October 1954) 227, 964
art. 2 964

1954

Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Seas by Oil 621 Convention on the Status of Stateless Persons 303
art. 33 335
Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict
art. 4 . . . . . 1186 n96
Protocol I (1954)
art. 48 1186
Protocol II (1999) 1186
art. 3 . . . . . 1186 n96
art. 6 . . . . . 1186 n96

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 7 . . . . . 1186 n96
art. 22 . . . . . 1186 n96
ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind
art. 1 . . . . . 401, 439 n226

1955

Austrian State Treaty 294 n166, 1188 n111
Convention on the Establishment of 'Eurofima' (European Company for the Financing of Railway Equipment) 249 France–Libya, Treaty of Friendship and Neighbourly Relations 516 n164, 1011
GDR–USSR, Treaty of Friendship 964 n48 Iran–US, Treaty of Amity, Economic Relations and Consular Rights 935
art. XXI(1) 1086
art. XXI(2) 1086
Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance (Warsaw Pact) 47, 57, 1146, 1210, 1290

1956

European Convention on Establishment
art. 3 827
Nicaragua–USA, Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation
art. XXIV(2) 1079
Statute of the International Atomic Energy Agency as amended 1034
Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery 303

1957

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention (ILO Convention No. 105) 340 Convention on the Nationality of Married Women 662
Egypt–UN, Status of Forces Agreement 1320 n170
European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes 1014, 1023, 1032
art. 26 . . . . . 1052 n261
art. 28 . . . . . 1052 n261
ILO Convention No. 107 (Indigenous and Tribal Populations) 298 Treaty Establishing the European Atomic Energy Community (Euratom)
art. 192 . . . . . 623 n351
art. 193 . . . . . 623 n351

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Treaty Establishing the European Economic Community (Rome) 156–7, 369–70, 735, 1288
art. 85 695–6
art. 173 695
art. 210 1297

1958

Convention concerning Discrimination in respect of Employment and Occupation (ILO Convention No. 111)
Special Protocol providing for Conciliation and Good Offices Commission 1035 Geneva Convention on the Continental Shelf 95–6, 555, 585, 596–7
art. 1 586–7
art. 2 588
art. 2(4) 588–9
art. 3 589
art. 4 589
art. 5 589
art. 6 . . . . . 85–6, 592–5, 599–600, 602, 603, 916, 920–1
art. 12(1) 925
Geneva Convention on Fishing and Conservation of Living Resources 555
art. 1 . . . . . 620, 623
art. 6 623
Geneva Convention on the High Seas 925
preamble 555, 610
art. 1 609
art. 2 . . . . . 609, 610, 623
art. 2(1) 608
art. 3 607
art. 4 608
art. 5 . . . . . 611, 664
art. 6 . . . . . 613, 614
art. 8 614
art. 9 614
art. 11 618
art. 11(1) 558–9, 656–7
art. 13 616
art. 15 . . . . . 398, 615

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 19 . . . . . 398, 615–16
art. 22 616
art. 23 617
art. 24 620
art. 25 889
art. 34 925–6
Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea and Contiguous Zone 110, 555
art. 1 570
art. 2 570
art. 3 558
art. 4 . . . . . 561, 566 n66
art. 5(1) 556
art. 5(2) 557, 562
art. 7 562
art. 10(1) 564
art. 10(2) 565 n59
art. 11(1) 558
art. 12 591
art. 14 570
art. 14(1) 608
art. 14(3) 796
art. 14(4) 571
art. 16(4) 575–6
art. 19(1) 574
art. 20 . . . . . 575 n98
arts. 21–3 . . . . . 575 n99
art. 22 615
art. 24 . . . . . 579, 580–1
art. 26 . . . . . 913 n55
art. 28 . . . . . 913 n55

1959

Antarctic Treaty 95, 536–7, 846
Protocol on Environmental Protection (1991) 846, 867
Annex VI 858 n67
art. 7 538
art. 8 . . . . . 865 n115
Declaration on the Rights of the Child (UNGA resolution 1386 (XIV)) 331 n363

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

1960
Convention on the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development 1289 Convention on Third Party Liability in the Field of Nuclear Energy (as amended by the Additional Protocol of 28 January 1964 and by the Protocol of 16 November 1982) (Paris Convention) 893
art. 4 894
art. 10 894
art. 13 895
Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (UNGA resolution 1514(XV)) 40, 115–16, 252–3, 255, 256, 522 Statute of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (as amended by the Protocols of Cartagena de Indias (1985), Washington (1992) and Managua (1993)) 381–2
art. 19(c) 385 n237
Treaties relating to the establishment of Cyprus 987 n162 UNESCO Convention against Discrimination in Education
art. 7 342
Special Protocol providing for Conciliation and Good Offices Commission (1962) 342, 1035

1961
Congo–UN, Status of Forces Agreement 1320 n170
Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness 1005 European Social Charter 347 n12, 360–2, 1289
arts. 1–6 361
art. 7–8 361
arts. 9–10 361
arts. 11–14 361
art. 15 361
arts. 16–17 361
arts. 18–19 361
art. 20 361
1988 Additional Protocol 361
1991 Protocol
art. 1 362
art. 2 362
1995 Additional Protocol
art. 1 362

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 2 362
art. 5 . . . . . 363 n111
Harvard Draft Convention on the International Responsibility of States for Injuries to Aliens
art. 10(3) 830
art. 10(7) 830
Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations 95, 740 n236, 752–72
preamble 752
art. 1(e) 764
art. 2 752
art. 3 753
art. 4 753
art. 9 753
art. 10 768
art. 13 753
art. 14 753
art. 22 . . . . . 754–9, 762, 771–2
art. 23 762
art. 24 763
art. 25 . . . . . 755 n317, 762
art. 26 . . . . . 755 n317, 764
art. 27 . . . . . 755 n317, 759, 761
art. 27(3) 759, 760
art. 27(4) 759
art. 29 764
arts. 29–36 767–8
art. 30(1) 762, 765
art. 30(2) 765
art. 31 776
art. 31(1) 766–7, 768
art. 31(1)a 767
art. 31(1)b 767
art. 31(2) 765, 767
art. 31(3) 765, 767
art. 31(4) 766
art. 32 771–2
art. 33 767
art. 34 . . . . . 767, 770
art. 35 767
art. 36 776

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 36(1) 767
art. 36(2) 767
art. 37 767–8
art. 39 768–9
art. 39(2) 738, 769–70
art. 40 769
art. 41(1) 753
art. 41(3) 755
art. 45 757–8
art. 45(a) 756
Optional Protocol Concerning Acquisition of Nationality art. 2 662
Optional Protocol Concerning the Compulsory Settlement of Disputes 1079

1962

Brussels Convention on the Liability of Operators of Nuclear Ships 894 n282
art. III 894
art. V 894
art. X 895
Permanent Sovereignty over Natural Resources (UNGA resolution 1803 (XVII)) 833, 835

1963

Charter of the Organisation of African Unity 1293–4
art. III 215–16
art. III(3) 256
art. XIX 1026–7
Protocol on the Commission of Mediation, Conciliation and Arbitration (1964) 1023, 1026–7 Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft (Tokyo Convention) 668, 676–7, 1160 n212
art. 1(4) 678
Declaration of Legal Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space (UNGA resolution 1962 (XVII)) 116, 544
Nordic Mutual Emergency Assistance Agreement in Connection with Radiation Accidents 891 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapons Tests in the Atmosphere, Outer Space and Under Water 471, 610, 872, 888, 1188

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Vienna Convention on Civil Liability for Nuclear Damage 893–5
art. V 894
art. VI 894
art. VII 894
art. XI 895
Protocol to Amend (1997) 894
Supplementary Convention (1997) 894
Vienna Convention on Consular Relations 130, 135–6, 165, 755, 761, 772–4
art. 1(k) 763
art. 10 772
art. 11 772
art. 12 772
art. 31 772–3
art. 32 773
art. 33 773
art. 35 773
art. 35(3) 761
art. 36 . . . . . 136, 159, 220–1, 389–90, 800–1
art. 36(1) 773–4
art. 36(1)(a) 773
art. 36(1)(b) 389–90, 773, 774 n436
art. 41 774
art. 43 774
Optional Protocol Concerning the Compulsory Settlement of Disputes 1079

1964

Cyprus–UN, Status of Forces Agreement 1320 n170
European Fisheries Convention 581
OAU Cairo Declaration on Border Disputes among African States Legitimising National Borders Inherited from Colonial Times 968

1965

Constitution of the Food and Agriculture Organisation (as amended)
art. 16 1034
art. 17 1299
Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination 221–2, 259, 269, 280, 286, 288, 462, 983 n144, 1079

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Part I
art. 1(4) 286, 289
Part II 311–14
art. 8 312
art. 9 312–13
art. 11 313
art. 11(3) 273 n47
art. 12 313
art. 13 313
art. 14 313
art. 15 313–14
Part III
art. 20 . . . . . 922 n93
Convention on Settlement of Investment Disputes between States and Nationals of Other States (ICSID) 259, 1079
art. 25 818
art. 25(1) 1042
art. 25(2) 1042
art. 25(4) 1042
art. 53 1042
art. 54 1042
art. 55 1042
Convention on Transit Trade of Land-Locked States 607
Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention in the Domestic Affairs of States (UNGA resolution 2131 (XX)) 1127, 1148, 1153 n177
Protocol Concerning the Privileges and Immunities of the European Communities 1319 n169 Treaty establishing a Single Council and a Single Commission of the European Communities (Merger Treaty) 735

1966

Belgium–France, Agreement on the Siting of Nuclear Power Installations 866 n116
Chad–Libya, Treaty of Good Neighbourliness and Friendship 516 n164 Helsinki Rules on the Uses of Waters of International Rivers 883–4 International Convention for the Conservation of Atlantic Tuna 628 n367

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 46, 253, 256, 276, 522, 716 n98, 909, 946
art. 1 . . . . . 291–2, 314, 659 n59, 1005
art. 2 . . . . . 266, 314, 335, 826
art. 2(1) 287–9
art. 4 . . . . . 275, 1197
art. 6 . . . . . 275, 314, 317, 390
art. 6(5) 275, 318
art. 7 . . . . . 275, 315, 322, 326
art. 8 315
art. 8(1) 275
art. 8(2) 275
art. 9 315
art. 9(4) 322
art. 11 275
art. 12 275
art. 13 826
art. 14 . . . . . 315, 422
art. 15 . . . . . 275, 422
art. 16 275
art. 18 . . . . . 275, 315
art. 19 . . . . . 275, 292, 550
art. 21 . . . . . 275, 292
art. 22 . . . . . 275, 292, 315
art. 24(3) 662
art. 25 292–3
art. 26 288
art. 27 . . . . . 292–6, 315, 318–19, 321
arts. 28–32 315
art. 40 315
art. 40(4) 316
art. 41 319
art. 41(c) 273 n47
art. 42 319
Optional Protocol I 259, 273–4, 292, 319–20, 946
art. 2 273
art. 5 . . . . . 319, 819
Optional Protocol II 322 n315
International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights 46, 253, 256, 287, 308–11, 522, 909, 1005

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 1 . . . . . 289, 308
art. 2 . . . . . 266, 308
art. 2(2) 288
art. 3 288
art. 6 308
art. 7 308
art. 9 308
art. 11 308
art. 13 308–9
art. 15 309
arts. 16–25 309

1967

ASEAN Declaration 1294 Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space including the Moon and other Celestial Bodies 488, 545–6, 549, 551, 859, 1188
art. 1 . . . . . 545, 881
art. 3 . . . . . 546 n320, 882
art. 4 . . . . . 545, 885
art. 6 . . . . . 545–6, 1312 n138
art. 7 546
art. 8 546
art. 9 881
art. 11 882
art. 13 . . . . . 1312 n138
art. 14 . . . . . 859 n77
art. 15 1015
Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Tlatelolco) 610, 888 n246, 1188 n111

1968

Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space 547
Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity 400 n19, 669
Proclamation of Tehran (UN Conference on Human Rights) 279 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons 889, 1188 n111, 1189, 1247
art. VI 1017

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

1969 Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage 621
art. II 900
art. III 900
art. V 900–1
Protocol on Liability (1992) 901
art. 2(3) 901
Convention for Co-operation in Dealing with Pollution of the North Sea by Oil (Bonn) 900 Convention on Special Missions 761, 774–5
art. 8 775
art. 17 775
art. 27 775
art. 31 775
Inter-American Convention on Human Rights 259, 273 n47, 381–91
art. 1 335
art. 2 335
art. 3 . . . . . 274–5, 300–1
art. 4 . . . . . 274–5, 381, 390
art. 5 . . . . . 274–5, 326, 381
art. 6 274–5
art. 9 274–5
art. 12 274–5
arts. 12–14 . . . . . 275 n57
art. 13 388–9
arts. 15–16 . . . . . 275 n57
art. 17 274–5
art. 18 . . . . . 274–5, 381
art. 19 . . . . . 274–5, 381
art. 20 274–5
art. 21 390–1
arts. 21–2 . . . . . 275 n57
art. 23 . . . . . 274–5, 381
art. 26 381
art. 27 . . . . . 274, 300, 389, 1197
art. 44 382
art. 46 . . . . . 382, 819
art. 46(1)(a) 274
art. 47 382

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 48 382
arts. 49–51 382
art. 50 387
art. 51 387
arts. 52–4 387
art. 62 387
art. 63(2) 385, 387
art. 64 388
art. 74 . . . . . 388 n251
Additional Protocol on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (1988)
art. 8(a) 384
art. 11 847
art. 13 384
art. 19 384
Protocol on the Abolition of the Death Penalty (1990) 384–5
International Convention Relating to Intervention on the High Seas in Cases of Oil Pollution Casualties 620–1, 798, 900
Protocol Extending Convention to Substances other than Oil (1973) 900 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 155–6, 219, 421, 903, 1023
art. 2 . . . . . 904, 913–14
art. 2(1)(a) 94 n93
art. 2(1)(b) 911
art. 3 904
art. 4 496
art. 5 . . . . . 907, 937
art. 6 . . . . . 1305 n102, 1309
art. 7 . . . . . 908–9, 940
art. 7(2) 134
art. 8 909
art. 9 909
art. 9(1) 910
art. 11 . . . . . 910, 913, 966 n57
art. 12 910–11
art. 13 911
art. 14 912
art. 14(2) 913
art. 15 913

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 18 911
art. 19 919
art. 20(2) 920
art. 20(4) 920
art. 20(5) 925
art. 21 920
art. 21(3) 920–1
art. 22(3)(a) 925
art. 24 925
art. 26 904
art. 27 . . . . . 134, 941
art. 28 926
art. 29 926
art. 30 . . . . . 927–8, 931–2
art. 30(4)(b) 931
art. 31 . . . . . 496, 903, 933, 1305
art. 31(1) 933–5
art. 31(2) 934
art. 31(3)(a) 934
art. 31(3)(b) 515, 934, 1306
art. 31(3)(c) 935
art. 31(4) 938
arts. 31–3 933–8
art. 32 . . . . . 496, 935–6, 1305
art. 33 . . . . . 938, 952
art. 33(4) 1095
art. 34 . . . . . 928, 1315
art. 35 . . . . . 929, 1315
art. 36 930
art. 38 929
art. 39 930–1
art. 40 931
art. 41 . . . . . 927, 931, 946
art. 42 939
art. 44 939
art. 45 939
art. 46 903
art. 46(1) 134, 940
art. 46(2) 134, 940
art. 47 940

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 48 941–2
art. 49 942
art. 50 942
art. 51 942
art. 52 . . . . . 469 n104, 500, 502, 943, 944
art. 53 . . . . . 125–7, 944, 945, 953
art. 54 945
art. 56 945
art. 57 945
art. 58 946
art. 59 . . . . . 927, 946
art. 60 . . . . . 794, 948
art. 60(1) 948
art. 60(2) 948–9
art. 60(3) 946
art. 60(5) 949
art. 61 949–50
art. 62 . . . . . 529 n234, 950–2
art. 62(2) 968–9
art. 64 . . . . . 125, 127, 944, 945, 953
art. 65 . . . . . 952 n226
art. 66 952–3
art. 69 . . . . . 903, 944–6
art. 70 952
art. 70(1)(b) 946
art. 71 . . . . . 127, 903, 944, 945
art. 72 952
art. 75 929
art. 80 926
Annex 1022 n65
Declaration on the Prohibition of Military, Political or Economic Coercion in the Conclusion of Treaties 943

1970

Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft (Hague Convention) 668, 674 n134, 676, 677, 1160 n212
art. 3(2) 678
art. 8 . . . . . 687 n213

Declaration of Principles Governing the Seabed and Ocean Floor and the Subsoil Thereof Beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction (UNGA resolution 2574) 533, 629

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States (UNGA resolution 2625 (XXV)) 104, 116, 213, 214, 253, 256, 290, 291 n151, 469, 488, 495, 502, 508 n110, 522–3, 1013, 1124–5, 1127, 1148 n157, 1152–3
Hague Convention for the Recognition of Divorces and Legal Separations 652 n29

1971

Agreement Relating to the International Telecommunications Satellite Organisation (INTELSAT) 249 Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage 621, 901
Protocol (1992) 901
Convention Relating to Civil Liability in the Field of Maritime Carriage of Nuclear Material 894 n282 Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation (Montreal Convention) 668, 674 n134, 676, 677–8, 1160 n212
art. 8 . . . . . 687 n213
Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts of Violence at Airports (1988) 677, 1160 n212
Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Seabed 888, 1188 n111

1972

Convention on the International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects 546–7, 888
art. I 859
art. II 546, 854
art. III 546, 854
art. XI 821
art. XII 546
Convention for the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping from Ships and Aircraft (Oslo Convention) 621, 895
Annex I 895
Annex II 895
Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by the Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter (London Convention) 621, 895
art. 1 855

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction 1188 n110, 1189 n118
Declaration of Guiding Principles on the Use of Satellite Broadcasting (UNESCO) 550 European Convention on State Immunity 698, 707 n56
art. 1 741
art. 7 . . . . . 711 n69
art. 11 727
art. 12 . . . . . 741 n242
art. 15 708
art. 20 744
art. 23 . . . . . 742, 744
art. 28 733
Additional Protocol for the Establishment of a European Tribunal in matters of State Immunity 707
FRG–GDR, Treaty on the Basis of Relations 227, 463 n79, 964–5
Quadripartite Agreement on Berlin (France, UK, USA, USSR) 964 n48 Stockholm Declaration on the Human Environment
preamble 847
Principles
1 . . . . . 847, 848, 869
6 895
8 849–50
20 . . . . . 890 n253
21 . . . . . 850, 853, 857
24 862–3
UNESCO Convention for the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage 222

1973

Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons 222, 276 n66, 674 n134, 675–6, 1160 n212
art. 1 675–6
art. 2 . . . . . 675, 764–5
art. 3 . . . . . 675, 764–5
art. 4 . . . . . 276 n66
art. 6 764–5

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 7 764–5
art. 8 . . . . . 687 n213, 764–5
art. 63(1)(c) 665
Convention for the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid 286, 674 n134
art. 4 335
art. 7 335
Convention on Trade in Endangered Species 845 n3 International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships (MARPOL) (London) 621, 898–9
art. 8 863
Annex I 899 n316
Annex II 899 n316
Annex III 899 n316
Annex IV 899 n316
Annex V 899 n316
International Telecommunications Convention
art. 33 . . . . . 549, 552 n341
UN Environment Programme Principles of Conduct in the Field of the Environment concerning Resources Shared by Two or More States Principle 3 853

1974

Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States (UNGA resolution 3281 (XXIX)) 853, 1124–5
art. 2(2) 833
Consensus Definition of Aggression (UNGA resolution 3314 (XXIX)) 469 n104, 488, 1133
art. 1 1240
art. 3 1240
art. 3(e) 1152 n174
art. 3(g) 1133, 1153 n177
art. 5(3) 502
art. 7 . . . . . 1148 n157
Convention for the Prevention of Marine Pollution from Land-Based Sources (Paris Convention) 621, 846
art. 1 872
Protocol Extending the Convention to Atmospheric Emissions of Pollutants 875

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Convention on the Protection of the Marine Environment of the Baltic Sea (Helsinki Convention)
Annex 6 863
Nordic Convention on the Protection of the Environment 864, 893
art. 6 . . . . . 865 n115

1975

Convention on the Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space 546–7 Convention on the Representation of States in their Relations with International Organisations 761, 775–6, 1023, 1296, 1323 n182
art. 30 . . . . . 776, 1323 n182
art. 84 . . . . . 1015 nn22 and 23
art. 85(7) 1022
Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from being subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment (UNGA resolution 3452 (XXX)) 327
Final Act of the Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe 118, 214 n38, 289, 372–3, 451, 522 n197, 905, 906 n19, 1014, 1032, 1289
Kenya–UN, Headquarters Agreement 1320 n170 Treaty of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) (as amended in 1993 and 2001)
art. 2 1276
art. 6 1029
arts. 7–10 . . . . . 1029 n108
art. 58 1029
1978 Protocol on Non-Aggression 1276
1981 Protocol Relating to Mutual Assistance on Defence (1981) 1276 n358
1991 Protocol Establishing the Court of Justice 1038

1976

Agreement on the Establishment of the ASEAN Secretariat 1294
Bogotá Declaration on the Geostationary Orbit 552 Convention for the Protection of the Mediterranean Sea (Barcelona Convention)
art. 2 872

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Protocol of Co-operation in Case of Emergency (1976) 863 Protocols amending (1980/1982) 898 n314
Declaration of ASEAN Concord 1294
Japan–UN, Headquarters Agreement 1320 n170 Treaty of Amity and Co-operation in South East Asia (as amended 1987 and 1998) (ASEAN) 1294

1977

Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage Resulting from Exploration and Exploitation of Seabed Mineral Resources 900
Convention on the Prohibition of Military or any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques 1190
European Convention on the Legal Status of Migrant Workers 368 n151 European Convention on the Suppression of Terrorism 1164
art. 1 . . . . . 687 n211
Protocol amending (2003) 1164
FRG–Netherlands, Agreement on the Siting of Nuclear Power Installations 866 n116
IAEA–UNDRO, Agreement on the Coordination of Assistance Activities in the Case of Nuclear Accident 891
OECD Recommendation of Equal Right of Access in Relation to Transfrontier Pollution 857, 864, 871
Panama Canal Treaty 539, 540, 658
Protocol additional to the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Geneva Convention IV) (Protocol I) (relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts) 326, 401–2, 670, 1168
art. 1(2) 1169 n12, 1172
art. 1(4) 1149 n157, 1172, 1173 n30, 1195 n143
art. 4 . . . . . 1179 n61
art. 20 . . . . . 1186, 1199
art. 35 1187
art. 35(2) 1187
art. 35(3) 1190
art. 43 . . . . . 1173, 1178
art. 44 1173
art. 44(3) 1173
art. 45 1173

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 45(3) 1174
art. 48 . . . . . 1184, 1186
art. 50(1) 1176–7
art. 51 1185
art. 51(4) 1185
art. 51(6) 1199
art. 52 1186
art. 52(2) 1184–5, 1186
art. 53 1186
arts. 53–6 1186
art. 54 1186
art. 55 1190
art. 56 1186
art. 57 1185
art. 75 . . . . . 1174, 1175 n37, 1177 n48
art. 83 1199
art. 85 . . . . . 401, 1199
art. 87 . . . . . 443 n219
art. 90 . . . . . 1022, 1200
Protocol additional to the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Geneva Convention IV) (Protocol II) (relating to the Protection of Victims of Non-International Armed Conflicts) 326, 401–2, 435, 1168, 1195–8
art. 1 1195
art. 1(2) 1195
art. 4 1196
art. 5 1196
art. 6 1196
art. 15 1196
art. 17 1196
art. 19 1199
UK–USA Air Services Agreement (Bermuda II) 691–2, 906 n21

1978

Australia–Papua New Guinea, Maritime Boundaries Treaty 596 n210
FRG–Switzerland, Agreement on Nuclear Installations 866 n116
Kuwait Regional Convention for Co-operation on the Protection of the Marine Environment from Pollution (including Protocols of 1978, 1989 and 1990) 898 n314

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. XI 865 n115
Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Convention 626–8 Vienna Convention on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties 958–9, 1023–4, 1296 n58
art. 2 959
art. 2(1)(e) 959
art. 2(1)(f) 977
art. 7 967
art. 8 . . . . . 967, 979 n125
art. 9 . . . . . 967, 979
art. 11 . . . . . 529, 959, 969
art. 12 . . . . . 970, 981
art. 12(3) 969 n75
art. 15 . . . . . 972 n92, 973–4
art. 16 977–8
art. 17 979
art. 17(3) 972, 979
art. 24 978
art. 26 . . . . . 103 n137
art. 27(2) 979 n124
art. 29 . . . . . 972 n92
art. 30 . . . . . 978 n122
art. 31 972–3
art. 31(1) 971–2
art. 31(2) 972
art. 34 . . . . . 975–7, 980–1
art. 35 975–6
art. 41 1015

1979

Agreement concerning the Activities of States on the Moon and other Celestial Bodies (Moon Treaty) 534, 859
art. III 882
art. IV 548
art. VI(2) 549
art. VII 882
art. XI 533–4, 548–9, 882
art. XI(4) 549
art. XI(5) 548
art. XI(7) 548

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. XIV 859
art. XV 1015 n23
Austria–UN, Headquarters Agreement 1320 n170
China–USA, Claims Settlement Agreement 823 n267 Constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organisation (UNIDO)
art. 22(1) 1035
Convention against the Taking of Hostages 668, 676, 1160 n212
art. 5 676
art. 9 665
Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women 269, 287, 288, 924
art. 4(1) 289
art. 9 662
arts. 17–21 323
art. 21 323
art. 22 322–3
Optional Protocol (1999) 324
Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution (Geneva) 871–3
preamble 853
art. 1 . . . . . 856, 871–2
art. 1(b) 872–3
art. 2 . . . . . 855 n54, 873
art. 3 873
art. 4 873
art. 5 . . . . . 864, 873
art. 6 873
art. 8 873
art. 8(b) 864 n110, 873
Protocol dealing with Long-Term Financing (1984) 873
Protocol on Reduction of Sulphur Emissions (Helsinki) (1985) 873
Protocol on Control of Nitrogen Oxides Emissions (Sophia) (1988) 873
Protocol on Control of Volatile Organic Compounds Emissions (1991) 873–4 Protocol on Further Reduction of Sulphur Emissions (Oslo) (1994) 867, 874 Protocol on Persistent Organic Pollutants (1998) 874

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Protocol on Heavy Metals (1998) 874
Protocol on Acidification, Eutrophication and Ground-Level Ozone (1999) 874 Egypt–Israel, Peace Treaty 1228 n117, 1292
art. 5 540
art. 5(2) 578

1980

Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources 537 n275
Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material 1160 n212 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons which may be Deemed to be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (as amended on 3 May 1996)
preamble 1187
Protocol I 1189
Protocol II (as amended 1996) 1189
Protocol III 1190
Protocol IV 1190
European Outline Convention on Transfrontier Co-operation between Territorial Communities or Authorities 368 n151
Iceland–Norway, Agreement concerning Fishery and Continental Shelf Questions 1023
Portugal–Spain, Agreement on the Siting of Nuclear Power Installations 866 n116 UK–International Maritime Satellite Organisation; Headquarters Agreement
art. 6 . . . . . 1327 n199

1981

African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights (Banjul) 275, 391–5
art. 5 326
arts. 19–22 392
art. 20 290
art. 23 393
art. 24 847
arts. 27–9 392
art. 33 1181

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 45 392
arts. 47–54 393
art. 50 . . . . . 273 n47
art. 55 393
art. 56 393
art. 58(1) 393
art. 58(2) 393
art. 58(3) 393
art. 62 394
Protocol on the Establishment of an African Court of Human Rights (1998)
art. 5 394
art. 34(6) 394–5
Convention for Co-operation in the Protection and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region 898 n314
Convention for the Protection of the Marine Environment and Coastal Areas of the South-East Pacific (Lima) and Protocols 898 n314
Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief (UNGA resolution 36/55) 287, 305
Iran–US, Claims Settlement Declaration 818
art. III 1044
art. IV 1044
art. V 1043–4
Treaty Establishing the Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States 1276 n355
art. 14(3) 1022 n65, 1023
UK–Philippines, Investment Agreement 839 n356
UK–USA, Agreement on Vessels Trafficking in Drugs 619

1982

France, FRG, UK, US, Agreement Concerning Interim Arrangements Relating to Polymetallic Nodules of the Deep Seabed 631
FRG–Switzerland, Agreement on the Siting of Nuclear Power Installations 866 n116 ILA Montreal Rules on Transfrontier Pollution 856
art. 3 857
art. 5 864

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

ILC Draft Articles on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organisations or between International Organisations 953–4
art. 36 bis 953
art. 66 954
International Telecommunications Union Convention and Optional Protocol
art. 50 1034
art. 82 1034
International Tin Agreement (Sixth) 734, 1315–17, 1325
Law of the Sea Convention 488, 555–6, 1024
Part I
art. 1 629
art. 1(2) 639
art. 1(4) 856, 857
Part II, section 2
art. 3 569
art. 5 558
art. 7 . . . . . 561 n35
art. 7(4) 559
art. 8(1) 556
art. 8(2) 557
art. 10 . . . . . 562 n43
art. 13(1) 558–9
art. 13(2) 559
art. 15 591–2
Part II, section 3
art. 17 . . . . . 570, 608
art. 18 571
art. 19(2) 571, 573–4
art. 21 573
art. 21(1) 572
art. 22 . . . . . 572, 573
art. 23 573
art. 24 571–2
art. 25 573
Part II, section 3(b)
art. 27(1) 574
art. 28 574–5

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Part II, section 3(c)
art. 29(2) 573 n93
arts. 29–32 575
art. 31 . . . . . 704 n33
art. 32 . . . . . 704 n33
Part II, section 4
art. 33 580
Part III, section 1
art. 34 576
art. 35 576
art. 35(c) 578
art. 36 576
Part III, section 2
art. 37 576
art. 38 . . . . . 542, 576, 577
art. 38(1) 576, 577, 608
arts. 38–42 577
art. 39 . . . . . 542, 577
art. 41 577
art. 42 577
art. 44 . . . . . 576, 577
Part III, section 3
art. 45 576–7
art. 45(2) 577
Part IV
art. 46(a) 566
art. 46(b) 566
art. 47 566–7
art. 47(4) 559
art. 49 567
art. 50 567
art. 51 567–8
art. 52 568
art. 52(1) 608
art. 53 568
art. 53(2) 608
Part V
art. 55 . . . . . 580, 582
art. 56 . . . . . 582, 586
art. 56(1) 624

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 57 582
art. 58 . . . . . 582–3, 636
art. 58(1) 608
art. 59 . . . . . 108–9, 582–3
art. 60 589
art. 60(2) 583
art. 61 624
arts. 61–9 582
art. 62 624
art. 63(1) 624
art. 63(2) 625
art. 64 624
art. 65 624
art. 66 624
art. 67 624
art. 68 624
art. 69(1) 608
art. 69(2) 608
art. 69(4) 608
art. 70(1) 608
art. 70(2) 608
art. 70(5) 608
art. 71 608
art. 72 582
art. 74 . . . . . 108, 596, 601
art. 74(1) 601 n243
Part VI
art. 76 587
art. 76(1) 587
art. 76(3) 587
art. 76(4) 587
art. 76(5) 587
art. 76(6) 587
art. 76(7) 587
art. 76(8) 587
art. 76(9) 587
art. 77 588
art. 77(4) 588–9, 624
art. 78 589
art. 79 589

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 80 589
art. 82 590
art. 82(3) 590
art. 83 . . . . . 108, 595, 601
art. 83(1) 601 n243
Part VII, section 1
art. 86 609
art. 87 . . . . . 608, 609
art. 88 610
art. 90 608
art. 91 . . . . . 611–12, 664
art. 92 . . . . . 613, 614
art. 94 . . . . . 611 n306, 614
art. 95 . . . . . 614, 704 n33
art. 96 . . . . . 614, 704 n33
art. 97 . . . . . 614, 618
art. 98 614
art. 99 . . . . . 397 n3, 614, 616
art. 101 . . . . . 398, 615
art. 105 . . . . . 398, 615
art. 106 615
art. 108 616
art. 109 . . . . . 615, 617
art. 110 . . . . . 616, 617
art. 111 . . . . . 617, 643
art. 112 629
art. 113 614
art. 115 614
Part VII, section 2
art. 116(b) 624
arts. 117–20 624
Part VIII
art. 121(1) 564
art. 121(2) 565
art. 121(3) 565, 582, 588
Part X
art. 125 607
arts. 127–30 607–8
art. 131 608
Part XI 582, 621–2, 629–35, 640

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Part XI, section 2
art. 136 . . . . . 533–4, 629
art. 137 . . . . . 533–4, 629
art. 139 855
art. 140 . . . . . 108, 629
art. 143 629
art. 148 608
art. 149 994
Part XI, section 3
art. 150 629
art. 151 630
art. 152 608
art. 153 639
art. 159(1) 634
art. 160 608
art. 161 608
Part XI, section 4
art. 157 633
art. 159(1) 634
art. 160 634
art. 161(1) 634
art. 162 634
arts. 163–5 634
arts. 166–9 634
art. 170 636
Part XI, section 5
art. 187 . . . . . 637, 639, 640
art. 188 . . . . . 637, 640
Part XII, section 1
art. 192 . . . . . 622, 853
art. 194 . . . . . 622–5, 853, 855, 857, 898
Part XII, section 2
art. 198 863
Part XII, section 4
art. 204 865
art. 206 865
Part XII, section 5
art. 207 . . . . . 898 n314
art. 211 622
art. 211(2) 899

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 211(7) 863
art. 212 875
Part XII, section 6
art. 217 899
art. 218 899
art. 220 899
Part XII, section 9
art. 235 . . . . . 622, 855
Part XIII 582
Part XIII, section 3
art. 246(5) 636
art. 246(6) 636
art. 256 629
Part XV 638
Part XV, section 1 635–71
art. 279 635
art. 280 635
art. 281(1) 637–8
art. 283 635
art. 283(1) 1015
art. 284 635
Part XV, section 2 635
art. 286 635
art. 287 . . . . . 635, 1055 n285
art. 289 639
art. 290 641
art. 290(5) 643, 644
art. 290(6) 641
art. 292 . . . . . 642–3, 819
art. 292(1) 639
art. 293 639–40
art. 294 641
art. 295 819
Part XV, section 3
art. 297(1) 636
art. 297(2) 636
art. 297(3) 636, 637
art. 298(1) 637
Part XVI
art. 303 994

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Part XVII
art. 311(1) 556 n10
Agreement Relating to the Implementation of Part XI 556
Annex II 587
art. 4 588
Annex III
art. 3 629
art. 4 629
art. 5 629
art. 8 629–30
art. 9 629–30
Annex IV 635
Annex V, section 1 635
Annex V, section 2 . . . . . 636, 637
Annex VI 635, 638–9
see also Statute of the Law of the Sea Tribunal
Annex VI, section 4 637
Annex VII 635–6, 637, 1055 n285
Annex VIII 636
art. 1 636
Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes (UNGA resolution 37/590) 1014 section I para. 3 1014
para. 6 . . . . . 1026 n78
para. 10 . . . . . 1014, 1016 n28
Statute of the Law of the Sea Tribunal
art. 2 639
art. 5 639
art. 8 639
art. 9 639
art. 13 639
art. 14 640
art. 15(1) 640
art. 15(3) 640
art. 17 639
arts. 18–22 639
art. 20(1) 639
art. 20(2) 639
art. 21 639

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 22 639
art. 23 640
art. 25(1) 641
art. 28 641
art. 31 641–2
art. 32 642
art. 33 642
art. 35 640
art. 36 640
art. 38 640
art. 39 640

1983

Canada–Denmark, Agreement for Co-operation Relating to the Marine Environment 865 n112
Convention for Co-operation in Dealing with Pollution of the North Sea by Oil and Other Harmful Substances 900
Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean (Cartagena) and Protocols of 1983 and 1990 . . . . . 898 n314
Declaration of Principles Governing the Use by States of Artificial Earth Satellites for International Direct Television Broadcasting (UNGA resolution 37/92) 550
France–UK, Exchange of Notes concerning Exchanges of Information in the Event of Emergencies Occurring in One of the Two States which could have Radiological Consequences 890 n254 Vienna Convention on Succession of States in Respect of State Property, Archives and Debts 958–9, 986–1001
art. 2 959
art. 2(1)(e) 977 n117
art. 8 987–8
art. 10 988
art. 11 . . . . . 959, 969, 989
art. 12 . . . . . 970, 989 n174
art. 14 987
art. 14(2)(b) 991 n185
art. 15(1)(b) 990
art. 15(1)(d) 991 n185
art. 17 . . . . . 987, 989, 990–1
art. 17(1)(c) 991

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 18 . . . . . 987, 989
art. 18(1)(b) 990 n181
art. 18(1)(c) 991 n185
art. 18(1)(d) 991
art. 20 994
art. 21 988
arts. 21–4 994
art. 22 987
art. 23 987
art. 27 994–5
art. 28 . . . . . 987, 996
art. 28(1)(b) 995
art. 28(1)(c) 995
art. 28(2) 995
art. 28(3) 996
art. 29 996
art. 30 . . . . . 987, 996
art. 31 . . . . . 987, 996
art. 33 997
art. 35 988
art. 37 987
art. 38 . . . . . 987, 1000–1
art. 39 997
art. 40 999–1000
art. 41 . . . . . 987, 1000
art. 42 1015

1984

Belgium, France, FRG, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, UK, US, Provisional Understanding Regarding Deep Seabed Mining 631
China–UK, Joint Declaration on the Question of Hong Kong with Annexes 1008–9
Annex I 1009
art. XIII 1009
Convention for the Protection of Submarine Cables 619
IAEA Guidelines for Mutual Emergency Assistance Arrangements in Connection with a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency 891
UN Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment 269, 274 n88, 305, 326–30, 674 n134, 675, 716 n98, 909

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 1 327
art. 2 . . . . . 276, 327
art. 3 . . . . . 327, 328, 329
art. 4 . . . . . 327, 675
art. 5 . . . . . 327, 675
art. 5(1)(c) 665
art. 7 . . . . . 327, 675
art. 8 675
art. 14 327
art. 16 276
art. 17(2) 327
arts. 17–24 327
art. 19 328
art. 20 328
art. 21 328
art. 22 . . . . . 328, 330
art. 28(1) 328
Optional Protocol (2003) 330

1985

Convention Establishing the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency 842 Declaration on the Human Rights of Individuals who are not Nationals of the Country in which they live (UNGA resolution 40/144) 826
European Charter of Local Self-Government 368 n151
Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture (Charter of the Organisation of American States, Protocol of Cartagena de Indias) 326, 384
Treaty Establishing a South Pacific Nuclear-Free Zone (Rarotonga) 610, 888 n246, 1188 n111
Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer 846, 867, 876, 1022 n65, 1024
art. 1(1) 875
art. 1(2) 857, 876
art. 2 . . . . . 855, 876
art. 2(1) 876
art. 7 876
art. 11 876
1989 Helsinki Declaration on the Protection of the Ozone Layer 877

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

1986 Declaration on the Right to Development (UNGA resolution 41/128)
art. 1 301
art. 3 301
art. 4 301
art. 8 301
art. 9 301
France–New Zealand, Agreement Implementing Ruling of the Secretary-General of the United Nations on the Solution of the Rainbow Warrior Dispute 779, 797–8, 946
France–New Zealand, Agreement Providing for the Submission of Disputes Arising from the Rainbow Warrior Affair to the Secretary-General of the United Nations 779
France–United Kingdom, Treaty concerning the Construction and Operation by Private Concessionaires of a Channel Fixed Link (Treaty of Canterbury) Protocol concerning Frontier Controls and Policing etc. (1991) 657
art. 38(1) 655
art. 38(2) 655
Protocol (2000) 655
Principles on Remote Sensing 551–2
Single European Act 1288
Treaty on Assistance in Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency 889, 891–2
art. 2(1) 891
art. 2(2) 892
art. 2(5) 892
art. 3(a) 892
art. 5 892
art. 7 892
art. 8 892
art. 10(2) 892
UK–USSR, Agreement on the Settlement of Mutual Financial and Property Claims 840–1
Vienna Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident 890
art. 2 890
art. 5 890
art. 6 890
Statements of Voluntary Application 890

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organisations and between International Organisations 903, 904, 953–5, 1296 n58
art. 2(d) 914
art. 34 1315
art. 35 1315
art. 66(2) 954–5
art. 73 953
art. 74(3) 954–5

1987

ASEAN Manila Declaration 1294
Belgium, Canada, Italy, Netherlands, USSR, Agreement on the Resolution of Practical Problems with respect to Deep Sea Mining Areas 631–5
China–UK, Agreement on the Settlement of Property Claims 841 n365 European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment 326, 330 n360, 346, 362–5
art. 1 363
art. 2 363–4
art. 5 363
art. 7 363
art. 8 364
art. 9(1) 364
art. 10(2) 364
art. 11(1) 364
art. 12 364
Protocol 1 . . . . . 362 n109
Protocol 2 . . . . . 363 n111
Montreal Protocol on Ozone-Depleting Substances 846, 867, 876–7, 878, 879
art. 1 856
art. 1(5) 877
art. 1(6) 877
art. 3 . . . . . 856–7, 877
1990 Amendments 869 n132, 877
1992 Copenhagen Adjustments 877–8
1992 Montreal Adjustment 874

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Natural Rubber Agreement 1329 n211
OAS Agreement Establishing an International Verification and Follow-up Commission (Contadora Process) (Esquipulas II) 1031, 1229 n122
SAARC Regional Convention on Suppression of Terrorism 1164
UK–Hungary, Investment Agreement 839 n356

1987/8

Denmark–UK, Agreement on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident and Exchange of Information Concerning the Operation and Management of Nuclear Facilities 890–1
Netherlands–UK, Agreement on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident and Exchange of Information Concerning the Operation and Management of Nuclear Facilities 890–1
Norway–UK, Agreement on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident and Exchange of Information Concerning the Operation and Management of Nuclear Facilities 890–1

1988

Canada, ESRO Member States, Japan, USA, Agreement on Space Stations 548 n323
art. 22 . . . . . 548 n323
Convention for the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities 537–8, 858
art. 1(15) 857 n65, 858
art. 7 855
art. 8 855
art. 8(2) 1015
Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts Against the Safety of Maritime Navigation 616 n324, 674 n134, 1160 n212
Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts Against the Safety of Fixed Platforms Located on the Continental Shelf 1160 n212
Protocol (1989) 616 n324, 674 n134
Protocol (2005) in respect of WMD 620
Vienna Convention Against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances 619, 674 n134

1989

Basle Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and Their Disposal 846
art. 4 896

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 6 896
art. 13 863
Chad–Libya, Framework Agreement on the Peaceful Settlement of the Territorial Dispute 1011
Concluding Document of the Vienna Follow-Up to the Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (1975) 373–4
Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries 1173 n31 Convention on the Rights of the Child 305, 317–18, 659 n59
art. 2(1) 288
art. 6 331
art. 7 . . . . . 331, 662
art. 13 331
art. 14 331
art. 19 331
art. 24 331
art. 29 847
art. 32 331
art. 33 331
art. 38 331
art. 43 331
art. 44 331
art. 45 331–2
Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict (2000) 332, 1176 n45
Optional Protocol on the Question of the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography (2000) 332
Decisions of the Sofia CSCE Conference on the Environment 847
European Charter on Environment and Health 848 ILC Draft Articles on the Diplomatic Courier and Diplomatic Bag
art. 3(2) 759
art. 10 761
art. 17 761
art. 18 761–2
art. 21 762
ILO Convention No. 169 (Indigenous and Tribal Populations in Independent Countries) 298–9
art. 1(2) 298
art. 1(3) 298

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

International Convention on Salvage 900
UK–USSR, Bilateral Investment Treaty 838–9
USA–USSR, Agreement on Bering Straits Regional Commission 578

1990

Agreement Establishing the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development
art. 2(1) 869
arts. 46–55 . . . . . 1319 n168
Bergen Ministerial Declaration on Sustainable Development 867–8
Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam 395
Charter of Paris for a New Europe 375, 451, 1032, 1289
Concluding Document of the Copenhagen Follow-Up to the Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (1975) 374
Dublin Declaration on the Environmental Imperative 848 n18
ECE Code of Conduct on Accidental Pollution of Transboundary Inland Waters 858, 860
FRG–France, UK, USA, Agreement on the Settlement of Certain Matters Relating to Berlin 228
Exchange of Notes Relating to the Presence of Allied Troops in Berlin 228 n162
FRG–GDR, Treaty Establishing a Monetary, Economic and Social Union 228, 965 FRG–GDR, Treaty on the Establishment of German Unity (Unification Treaty) 228, 965
art. 1 965–6
art. 7 966
art. 8 966
art. 11 . . . . . 966 n57, 971, 972
art. 12 . . . . . 966 n57, 972–3
art. 21 992
art. 22 992
art. 23 998
Annex I 971, 972 n94
FRG/GDR, France, UK, USA, USSR, Treaty on the Final Settlement with Respect to Germany 228, 965, 1188 n111

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

IAEA Code of Practice on the International Transboundary Movement of Radioactive Waste 896–7 International Convention on Oil Pollution Preparedness, Response and Co-operation 870–1, 900 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families
art. 2 333
art. 3 333
art. 18 333
art. 22 333
art. 25 333
art. 26 333
art. 28 333
art. 30 333
art. 31 333
art. 73 334
art. 76 334
art. 77 334
Model Status of Forces Agreement for Peacekeeping Operations 1231
USA–USSR, Maritime Boundary Agreement 584
Yemen, People's Democratic Republic–Yemen Arab Republic, Merger Agreement 963–4

1991

Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay, Uruguay, Mercosur Treaty Protocol of Brasilia (1991) 1038 Belarus, Russia, Ukraine, Minsk Agreement 960–1
art. 5 . . . . . 968, 1291
art. 6 1291
art. 7 1291
Canada–USA, Air Quality Agreement 875 Convention on Environmental Impact Assessment in a Transboundary Context (ESRO) 847–8
art. 2 . . . . . 858 n68
art. 3 . . . . . 864 n107, 865 n113
art. 3(4) 866 n119
art. 3(8) 867
art. 5 866
art. 6(1) 867

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 7 867
Appendix I 866
Appendix III 866
Appendix V 867
Convention on the Marking of Plastic Explosives for the Purpose of Detection 1160 n212 Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards (UN Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities)
art. 3 1198
art. 4 1198
art. 6 1198
art. 8 1198
art. 10 1198
art. 12 1198
art. 14 1198
EU Declaration on Yugoslavia 452
EU Guidelines on Recognition of New States 207, 451–2, 461, 522, 976
European Commission–USA, Agreement Regarding the Application of Competition Laws 694
ILC Draft Articles on Jurisdictional Immunities of States and Their Property 737 n217, 738
Model Status of Forces Agreement for Peacekeeping Operations 1232–3 OAU Convention on the Ban of the Import into Africa and the Control of Transboundary Movement and Management of Hazardous Wastes within Africa (Bamako Convention) 896
art. 4(3) 868 n129
Paris Peace Agreements (Cambodia) 231
Yamoussoukro IV Accord (Libya) 1277

1992

Agenda 21 (Rio) 870 n140
para. 8 . . . . . 870 n137
para. 39 . . . . . 870 n137
Convention on Biological Diversity (Rio) 534 n260, 845 n3, 846, 868 preamble 870 n138
art. 1 . . . . . 870 n138

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 8 . . . . . 870 n138
art. 11 . . . . . 870 n138
art. 121 . . . . . 870 n138
art. 161 . . . . . 870 n138
art. 171 . . . . . 870 n138
art. 181 . . . . . 870 n138
Convention on the Protection of the Black Sea Against Pollution 898 n314 Convention on the Protection of the Marine Environment of the Baltic Sea Area 898 n314 Convention for the Protection of the Marine Environment of the North-East Atlantic 898 n314
art. 9 . . . . . 891 n259
Convention on the Protection and Use of Transboundary Watercourses and International Lakes 884–5
art. 1(1) 883
art. 1(2) 884
art. 2 855
art. 2(1) 884
art. 2(5) 868, 871 n145
art. 3 884
arts. 4–6 885
art. 7 885
art. 9 885
art. 10 885
arts. 11–13 885
art. 14 885
art. 15 885
Annex I 884
Annex III 884
Convention on the Transboundary Effects of Industrial Accidents 870–1, 897
art. 1(g) 897
art. 2(2) 897
art. 4 897
art. 6 897
art. 7 897
art. 8 897
art. 10 897
Annex I 897

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Annex II 897
Annex III 897
Annex IV 897
Annex V 897
Annex IX 897
Czech Republic–Slovakia, Treaty for the General Delimitation of the Common State Frontiers 968 n69
Decisions of the Helsinki CSCE Conference 375–6 Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities (UNGA resolution 47/135) 297
art. 1 368
Declaration and Treaty establishing the Southern African Development Community (SADC) 2001 Protocol Establishing an Organ on Politics, Defence and Security Co-operation 1029–30
art. 2(f) 1030
art. 3 1030
art. 4 1030
art. 5 1030
art. 6 1030
art. 7 1030
art. 11(2) 1030
art. 11(3) 1030
European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages 365
art. 15 365
art. 16 . . . . . 365, 366
art. 17 365
art. 20 366
European Convention on the Participation of Foreigners in Public Life at Local Level 368 n151
Framework Agreement on Enhancing ASEAN Economic Co-operation 1294
International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage: see Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage (1969)
International Sugar Agreement 1329 n211
Mozambique–RENAMO rebels, Peace Agreement 1223 n97, 1229 n122
North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA)
Chapter 11 1038–9

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 1110 835
art. 1120 . . . . . 1041 n288
art. 1131 1039
art. 1132 1039
art. 1134 1039
art. 1136 1039
Chapter 14 1038–9
Chapter 19 1038–9
arts. 1903–5 1039
Chapter 20 1039–40
art. 2001 . . . . . 1039 n173
art. 2002 . . . . . 1042 n173
arts. 2003–8 1039
art. 2011 1039
arts. 2014–17 1039–40
art. 2018 1040
art. 2019 1040
OSCE Convention on Conciliation and Arbitration 1033
art. 1 1033
art. 2 1033
art. 3 1033
art. 4 1033
art. 25 1033
art. 26 1033
art. 26(1) 1033 n138
art. 31 1033
Rio Declaration on Environment and Development 848 Principles
1 848
2 . . . . . 850, 853
3 . . . . . 302, 850, 869
4 869
7 . . . . . 863, 868–9
9 890
13 863
14 895
15 . . . . . 867, 868
16 870
18 864

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

19 . . . . . 104 n142, 865
27 . . . . . 104 n142, 863, 869–70
Statement of Principles for a Global Consensus on the Management, Conservation and Sustainable Development of All Types of Forests (Rio) 870
Treaty on European Union (Maastricht Treaty) 179, 241–2, 370, 1288
Title I
art. 6 370
art. 7 370
art. A 241
art. F(2) 370
Title V 370
Title VI
art. K.1 370
art. K.2 370
Title VIII
art. 49 370
UN Framework Convention on Climate Change 857, 878–80
art. 1(1) 857
art. 1(8) 878
art. 2 878
art. 3(1) 869
art. 3(3) 868
art. 3(4) 870
art. 4(1) 879
art. 4(2) 879
art. 4(8) 879
art. 7 880
arts. 8–10 880
Annex I 879
Annex II 879
USA–Belarus, Kazakhstan, Russia, Ukraine, Agreement for Admission to START 976–7

1993

Alma Ata Declaration 209, 961 n21, 968 n69, 976–7, 1291
Charter Establishing the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) 240–1, 1291
art. 1 . . . . . 240, 1291

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 21 . . . . . 240, 1291
art. 22 . . . . . 240, 1291
art. 23 . . . . . 240–1, 1291
art. 27 1291
art. 28 1291
art. 30 1291
art. 31 1291
art. 32 1291
art. 33 1291
China–Taiwan, Agreements Concerning Cross-Straits Activities 235 n197
China–UK, Exchange of Notes with regard to Liability for Damages Arising During the Launch Phase of Asiasat Satellite 546 n319
CIS Treaty on Economic Union 241, 1291–2 Convention for the Conservation of Southern Bluefin Tuna 628 n367, 637–8
art. 16 637–8
Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction 1188 n111, 1189
Cotonou Peace Agreement (Libya) 1277 Council of Europe Convention on Civil Liability for Environmental Damage 858
art. 2(7) 858
art. 2(10) 858
Declaration of Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space (UNGA resolution 47/68) 547, 881 n206
Holy See–Israel, Fundamental Agreement 244 n241
Hungary–Slovakia, Special Agreement for the Submission of a Dispute to the ICJ 887
Indian Ocean Tuna Commission Agreement 628 n367
Israel–Palestine Liberation Organisation, Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government 246
Israel–Palestine Liberation Organisation, Exchange of Letters of Mutual Recognition and Commitment to the Peace Process 246 n252
OAU Declaration on a Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution (Cairo Declaration) 1027–8
Rwanda–UN, Agreement on the Status of UN Mission 1233 n143

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 4 632
art. 5 632
art. 7 632
art. 45 632
art. 155(1) 633
Annex 633
Arab Charter on Human Rights 395
art. 8 395
art. 9 395
art. 13 395
art. 25 395
art. 27 395
art. 28 395
art. 40 395
art. 41 395
Bosnia and Herzegovina–Croatia, Preliminary Agreement Concerning the Establishment of a Confederation 238 n215 Chad–Libya, Agreement concerning the Practical Modalities for the Implementation of the ICJ Judgment of 3 February 1994
art. 1 1011
art. 6 1011
Convention on Nuclear Safety
art. 2(1) 892
art. 4 892
art. 5 892–3
art. 7 892
art. 7(2) 893
art. 8 893
art. 9 893
arts. 10–19 893
arts. 20–5 892–3
art. 28 893
Convention on the Preservation and Management of Pollock Resources in the Central Bering Sea 627 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel 668
art. 2(2) 1232
art. 4 1231
art. 6 1231
art. 9 . . . . . 676, 1231–2

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 10 . . . . . 676, 1232
art. 11 . . . . . 276 n66
arts. 13–15 1232
art. 14 676
art. 17 1232
Decisions of the Budapest OSCE Conference 377
Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences (UNGA resolution 48/104) 325
Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism (UNGA resolution 49/60) 1160 n212 European Energy Charter Treaty
art. 1(6) 830, 839 n356
art. 13 835
art. 19 850
art. 26(4) 1041 n188
ILA Revised Draft Articles for a Convention on State Immunity 708, 709 n64, 734–5 Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearances of Persons 384–5
art. 13 384
art. 14 384–5
Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence Against Women 325 n329
art. 7 385
art. 10 385
art. 11 385
art. 12 385
Israel–Jordan, Treaty of Peace 531
art. 14(3) 578
art. 18 . . . . . 844 n2
Annex I(b) 657–8
Annex I(c) 655
Annex II 844 n2
Annex IV 844 n2
Israel–Palestine Liberation Organisation, Cairo Agreement Providing for the Withdrawal of Israeli Forces from Jericho and the Gaza Strip and the Transfer of Authority to a Palestine Authority 247
Protocol (1995) for the Transfer of Additional Powers 247 Statute of the International Criminal Court for Rwanda (ICTR)
art. 2 . . . . . 430 n183, 432

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

arts. 2–4 408
art. 3 . . . . . 408, 436, 670
art. 4 . . . . . 408, 434 n206, 1196 n151
art. 6 . . . . . 408, 735
art. 6(3) 443 n229
art. 6(4) 443 n229
art. 7 408
art. 9 409
art. 10 408
art. 55 441–2
art. 66 442
art. 67 442–3
UN Convention to Combat Desertification 846 n12

1995

Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea (1982) Relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks 619 n338, 625–6
art. 1(3) 625
art. 5 . . . . . 625, 868 n129
art. 6 . . . . . 625, 868 n129
art. 8 625
art. 10 625–6
art. 17(3) 626
art. 19 626
art. 21 626
art. 22 626
art. 22(1)(f) 618 n334
art. 23 626
CIS Agreement for the Defence of External Borders 1291
CIS Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms 240–1, 378–9
art. 14 378
art. 17 378
art. 21 378
art. 29 378
art. 34 378
Council of Europe Agreement on Illicit Traffic by Sea 619

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Council of Europe Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities 346, 365–8
art. 4 366
art. 5 366
art. 7 366
art. 8 366
art. 9 366
art. 10(2) 367
art. 11(3) 367
art. 14(2) 367
art. 15 367
art. 24 367
art. 25 367
art. 26 367
Dayton General Framework Agreement for Peace 210, 377 n201, 1033–8, 1279 Agreement on Military Aspects
art. 12 231
Annex 1–B 1034
Annex 2 . . . . . 239 n217
art. V 109 n169
Annex 3 1033
Annex 4 . . . . . 239 n217
Annex 6 . . . . . 231 n179, 379–4, 1034
art. II 379
art. VIII 380
art. X 380
art. XI 380
art. XIV 380
Annex 7 . . . . . 231 n179
Annex 10 . . . . . 204, 231–2
Draft Inter-American Commission Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples 300, 385
European Convention on the Exercise of Children's Rights 368 n151
European Convention on Simplified Extradition Procedure 687 n213
Israel–Palestinian Authority, Interim Agreement on the West Bank and Gaza 247

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Memorandum of Understanding Concerning Establishment of the Inter-Organisation Programme for the Sound Management of Chemicals 897
Treaty on the Southeast Asia Nuclear Weapon-Free Zone 610, 1188–9 n111 Ukraine–USA, Exchange of Notes Relating to Bilateral Agreements between the Two States 977

1996

African Nuclear Weapon-Free Treaty (Pelindaba) 610, 1189 n111
Convention on Extradition between the Member States of the European Union 687 n213 Declaration on International Co-operation in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space (UNGA resolution 51/126) 544
ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind 410
art. 1(2) 439 n226
art. 8 671
art. 9 671
art. 16 671
art. 17 . . . . . 402, 671
art. 18 671
art. 19 671
art. 20 671
art. 20(d) 1187 n101

1997

Consolidated Treaty Establishing the European Community (Treaty of Amsterdam) (EC Treaty) 179, 241, 370–1, 635
art. 10 . . . . . 623 n351
art. 17 . . . . . 810 n211
art. 20 . . . . . 810 n211
art. 85 695–6
art. 130r(2) 868
art. 173 695
art. 174 870
art. 281 1297
art. 282 . . . . . 1299 n71
art. 292 . . . . . 623 n351
Convention on the Law of the Non-Navigational Uses of International Watercourses 531 n251, 865, 885–6

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 2 883
arts. 4–6 885
art. 5 . . . . . 108, 885
art. 6 . . . . . 862, 885
art. 7 . . . . . 855 n50, 885
art. 8 885
art. 9 885
art. 11 885
arts. 11–17 885–6
art. 12 885
art. 18 886
art. 19 886
art. 20 886
art. 21(1) 886
art. 22 886
art. 23 886
Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombing 1160 n212, 1161
art. 11 . . . . . 687 n211
art. 15 . . . . . 276 n66
EU–USA, Memorandum of Understanding Regarding the Application of Competition Laws 694–5 European Convention on Nationality 659 n59
art. 3(2) 813 n224
art. 18 1006
art. 19 1005–6
art. 20 1006
ILC Preliminary Conclusions on Reservations to Normative Multilateral Treaties Including Human Rights Treaties 924
Israel–Palestinian Authority, Hebron Agreement 247
Joint Convention on the Safety of Spent Fuel Management and on the Safety of Radioactive Waste Management 893 n277, 897 n302
Kyoto Protocol 880–1
2001 Marrakesh Accords amending 881
Ottawa Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and their Destruction 1190

1998

Arab Convention for the Suppression of Terrorism 1164

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Convention on Access to Information, Public Participation in Decision-Making and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters (Aarhus) 848–9
art. 1 849
art. 9 849
art. 10(2) 849
art. 15 849
Protocol for Registration of Releases into the Environment (2003) 849
Geneva Agreements on Afghanistan 1019
Israel–Palestinian Authority, Wye River Agreement 247
Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade 896 Statute of the International Criminal Court 422
art. 5 . . . . . 411, 439, 670
art. 5(2) 439–40
art. 6 . . . . . 411, 430 n183
arts. 6–8 411
art. 7 . . . . . 411, 436–7
art. 8 . . . . . 411, 434 n206
art. 9 411
art. 11 411
art. 12(2) 412
art. 12(3) 411
art. 13(a) 412
art. 13(b) 412
art. 14 412
art. 15 413
art. 17 414
art. 17(2)a–c 415
art. 17(3) 415
art. 20(3) 415
art. 25 411
art. 27 735
art. 28 . . . . . 443 n229
art. 33 . . . . . 443 n229
art. 34 415
art. 36 415

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Statute of the International Criminal Court for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) 410–17
art. 1 404
art. 2 433–4
arts. 2–5 404
art. 3 . . . . . 434, 435–6, 1192
art. 3(a) 1187 n101
art. 4 430–3
art. 5 . . . . . 436–8, 670
art. 7 . . . . . 404–5, 735
art. 7(3) 443 n229
art. 7(4) 443 n229
art. 8(2)(c) 436
art. 8(2)(e) 436
art. 9 405
art. 10 405
art. 11 404
art. 12 404
art. 13 404
art. 14 404
art. 17 404
arts. 18–20 406
art. 21 440–1
art. 24 406
art. 25 406
art. 29 . . . . . 155, 405
Treaty Establishing the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa (Comesa) 1038, 1115 n371
Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action 276, 280–1, 301–2, 324–5, 332, 336
Appendix II 366

1994

Agreement Establishing the World Trade Organisation (Marrakesh) 1287
Annex 2 (Dispute Settlement Understanding) 1036–8 Agreement on the Implementation of the Seabed Provisions of the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea 632–3
art. 1 632
art. 2 632

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 36(8)(a)(iii) 65 n75
art. 38 415
art. 39(2)(b)(i) 417
art. 39(2)(b)(ii) 416
art. 39(2)(b)(iii) 416
art. 40 415
art. 42 415
art. 43 415
art. 53 416
arts. 53–5 415
art. 56(3) 417
art. 64 416
art. 68 416–17
art. 75(2) 416
art. 77 416
art. 81 417
art. 82 417
art. 83 417
art. 98(2) 414
art. 124 411
art. 126 926

1999

Convention of the Organisation of the Islamic Conference on Combating International Terrorism 1164
Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism 1160 n212, 1161 ILC Draft Articles on Nationality of Natural Persons in Relation to a Succession of States
art. 1 1006
art. 4 1006
art. 5 1006
art. 8 . . . . . 1008 n261
art. 11 1006
art. 12 1007
art. 13 . . . . . 1007 n258
art. 16 1006
art. 18 1006
art. 21 1007
art. 22 1007–8

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 23 . . . . . 1007, 1008 n262
art. 24 1007–8
art. 26 . . . . . 1007 n260
Inter-American Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Persons with Disabilities 385 n238
Israel–Palestinian Authority, Protocol Establishing Safe-Passage between Gaza and the West Bank 247
Israel–Palestinian Authority, Sharm el Sheikh Memorandum 247

2000

European Charter of Fundamental Rights 371
art. 20 371
art. 21 371
ILA International Instrument on the Protection of the Environment from Damage Caused by Space Debris (Buenos Aires) 547, 882
art. 4(e) 1016 n28
art. 8 882

2001

African Union, Constitutive Act
art. 3 1293
art. 4 1293
Protocol on Politics, Defence and Security Co-operation 526 n219
Convention on the Conservation and Management of Highly Migratory Fish Stocks in the Western and Central Pacific Ocean 627–8
Convention on International Interests in Mobile Equipment 552 n341
Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants (Stockholm) 874 ILC Articles on State Responsibility (including earlier drafts) 780–1, 785
art. 1 781
art. 2 782
art. 3 782
art. 4 786–7
art. 5 787–8
art. 6 788
art. 7 789
art. 8 . . . . . 789–90, 791

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 9 791
art. 10 791–2
art. 11 792–3
art. 12 782
art. 13 782
art. 14 782
art. 15 782
art. 16 782
art. 17 782
art. 18 . . . . . 782, 796
art. 19 807–8
art. 19 [1996] 806 n184, 807–8
art. 20 . . . . . 1152 n171
art. 21 . . . . . 793, 1132
art. 22 794
art. 23 796
art. 23(2) 796
art. 24 797
art. 24(2) 797
art. 25 798
art. 30 . . . . . 800, 803 n161
art. 31 802
art. 31(2) 805
art. 34 802
art. 36(1) 804–5
art. 36(2) 804–5
art. 37 806
art. 37(3) 806 n187
art. 39 . . . . . 802 n152
art. 40 [1996] 799 n130
art. 40(2) 127 n242, 808
art. 41 808
art. 41(3) 808
art. 42 799
art. 44 . . . . . 808, 819–20
art. 45 799
art. 46 799
art. 47 799
art. 48 800
art. 49 795

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 50 795
art. 51 795
art. 52 795
art. 57 . . . . . 780 n15
art. 58 . . . . . 780 n15
art. 60 794
art. 70 794
ILC Draft Articles on Prevention of Transboundary Harm from Hazardous Activities 855, 856, 860–2, 868 n130
art. 1 . . . . . 858, 860
art. 2 860
art. 3 860–1
art. 4 861
art. 5 861
art. 6 861
art. 7 . . . . . 861, 865 n115
art. 8 865
art. 9 861
art. 10 861–2
art. 12 861
art. 13 861
art. 14 861
art. 17 861
OSCE Declaration and Plan of Action on Combating Terrorism 1164
Treaty of Nice 179, 241 n228, 371
Yugoslav Agreement on Succession Issues 988 Annex A
art. 2 988
art. 2(1) 989
art. 3 988
art. 3(1) 991
art. 3(2) 991, 996
art. 5 . . . . . 902 n192
art. 6 989
art. 7 988
Annex B
art. 4(3) 988
Annex C
art. 2 1000

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Annex D 996
Appendix 993

2002

Inter-American Convention against Terrorism 1164
Machakos Protocol (Sudan) 1265
Protocol Relating to the Establishment of the Peace and Security Council of the African Union 526 n219, 1026–7
art. 2 1028
art. 4 1028
art. 5 1028
art. 6 1028
art. 7 1028
art. 9 1028–9
art. 10 1028
art. 11 1028
art. 12 1028
arts. 13–15 1028
art. 16 1029
art. 22 1028
Statute of the Sierra Leone Special Court
art. 1(2) 418
arts. 2–4 420
art. 3 . . . . . 434 n206
art. 5 420
art. 8 420
art. 9 420
art. 12(1) 419
art. 15 419
art. 16 419
art. 20 419
art. 21 419
UN–Sierra Leone (Establishment of Sierra Leone Special Court) (Security Council resolution 1315 (2000)) 418
art. 1 418

2003

Declaration of ASEAN Concord II 1294
Proliferation Security Initiative and Interdiction Principles 619–20
UK–US Extradition Agreement 687 n211

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

2004

UN–Cambodia, Agreement for the Establishment of Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia 421–3
art. 2 421
art. 3 422
art. 5 421
art. 6 421
art. 7 . . . . . 421 n135
art. 9 421
art. 12 421
UN Convention on State Immunity 698, 717
art. 2(1)(b) 709, 732 n187, 734
art. 2(1)(c) 720–1, 725
art. 2(2) 709–10
art. 5 . . . . . 707, 708–9
art. 8 741
art. 9 . . . . . 741 n241
art. 10 724–5
art. 17 . . . . . 741 n242
art. 18 . . . . . 743 n248
art. 19 744
art. 20 744

2005

Comprehensive Peace Agreement (Sudan) 1265
Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism 1161
Council of Europe Convention on the Prevention of Terrorism 1164
Protocol additional to the Geneva Conventions (1949) relating to the Adoption of an Additional Distinctive Emblem 1170 Statute of the Iraqi High Tribunal 428–9
art. 1 429
arts. 11–14 429
art. 14 . . . . . 434 206
art. 15 429

2006

Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance 335 n381
art. 2 334
art. 4 334

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 5 334
art. 29 334–5
art. 30 335
art. 31 335
art. 32 335
art. 33 335
art. 34 335
Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities 335 n381
arts. 5–9 334
arts. 34–6 334
Optional Protocol 334
Darfur Peace Agreement 1265–6
European Convention on the Avoidance of Statelessness in Relation to State Succession 1005 n252 ILC Articles on Diplomatic Protection
art. 1 . . . . . 809, 817–18
art. 3 . . . . . 812 n223
art. 4 814
art. 5(1) 815
art. 6(1) 815
art. 8 . . . . . 811 n212
art. 9 817
art. 11 817
art. 12 . . . . . 817 n240
art. 14 820
art. 15 820
ILC Draft Principles on the Allocation of Loss in the Case of Transboundary Harm Arising out of Hazardous Activities 862
Principle 1 . . . . . 858 n71
Principle 4 . . . . . 871 n145
Principle 5 . . . . . 864 n107

2007

ASEAN Charter 1294–5
art. 9 1294
art. 10 1294
art. 11 1294
art. 12 1294
art. 14 1294

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 20 1294
art. 22 . . . . . 1034 n145, 1295 n54
ASEAN Convention on Counter Terrorism 1164 ILC Draft Articles on the Effects of Armed Conflicts on Treaties
art. 2(1) 904 n9
art. 2(b) 1126 n37
art. 3 . . . . . 946 n202, 952 n225
ILC Draft Articles on the Responsibility of International Organisations 1310–13
art. 2 1296
art. 3 . . . . . 1311 n135
art. 4 1312
art. 6 1312
art. 12 1312
art. 17 1313
art. 18 1313
arts. 19–22 1313
art. 23 . . . . . 1313 n141
art. 25 . . . . . 1312 n140
art. 33 1313
art. 34 1313
arts. 37–42 . . . . . 1313 n142
Statute of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon
art. 1 428
art. 2 428
art. 4 428
art. 7 428
art. 8 428
art. 11 428
art. 12 428
art. 13 428
Treaty of Lisbon 242, 371–2
Protocol 30 on the application of the Charter of Fundamental Rights to Poland and the United Kingdom 371 n172
UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples 307 n220
art. 1 299
art. 3 299
art. 4 299
art. 5 299
art. 6 299

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

art. 7(2) 299
art. 8 299
arts. 9–37 299
UN–Lebanon, Agreement for the Establishment of a Special Tribunal for Lebanon 427–8

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

ABBREVIATIONS

AC	Law Reports, Appeal Cases
AD	Annual Digest and Reports of Public International Law Cases (now International Law Reports)
AFDI	Annuaire Français de Droit International
AJIL	American Journal of International Law
All ER	All England Law Reports
ALR	Argus Law Reports (1895–1959); Australian Argus Law Reports (1960–73); Australian Law Reports (1973–)
Annuaire	Annuaire de l'Institut de Droit International
AU	African Union
Australian YIL	Australian Yearbook of International Law
B & C	Barnewall Cresswell (English Reports)
BCLC	Butterworths Company Law Cases
BFSP	British and Foreign State Papers
BPIL	British Practice in International Law
Bull.	Bulletin
Burr.	Burrow's Reports
BYIL	British Year Book of International Law
Cal	California Reports
Canadian YIL	Canadian Yearbook of International Law
Cass. Crim.	Cour de Cassation, France, Criminal
CCC	Canadian Criminal Cases
Cd, Cmd or Cmnd	UK Command Papers
Ch.	Law Reports, Chancery Division
Cl. Ct.	US Court of Claims Reports
CLJ	Cambridge Law Journal
CLR	Commonwealth Law Reports
CMLR	Common Market Law Reports

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Co.Litt.	Coke on Littleton (First Institute)
COMECON	Council for Mutual Economic Assistance
Cr App R	Criminal Appeal Reports
Cranch	Cranch Reports, United States Supreme Court
Crim. L. Forum	Criminal Law Forum
Crim. LR	Criminal Law Review
C.Rob.	C. Robinson's Admiralty Reports
Dall.	Dallas, Pennsylvania and United States Reports
Dir. Mar.	Diritto Marittimo, Italy
DLR	Dominion Law Reports
Dod.	Dodson's Admiralty Reports
DUSPIL	Digest of US Practice in International Law
EC	European Communities
ECHR	European Convention on Human Rights
ECOSOC	Economic and Social Council
ECR	European Court Reports
ECSC	European Coal and Steel Community
EEC	European Economic Community
EJIL	European Journal of International Law
Encyclopedia	Encyclopedia of Public International Law
ER	English Reports
Euratom	European Atomic Energy Community
EWCA Civ.	England and Wales, Court of Appeal, Civil
EWHC Admin.	England and Wales, High Court
Ex.D.	Law Reports, Exchequer Division
F.2d	Federal Reporter (Second Series)
Fam.	Law Reports, Family Division
FAO	Food and Agriculture Organisation
FCO	Foreign and Commonwealth Office
FCR	Federal Court Reports (Australia)
Finnish YIL	Finnish Yearbook of International Law
F.(J.)	Faculty of Advocates
FLR	Family Law Reports
F.Supp.	Federal Supplement
GAOR	General Assembly Official Records
GDR	German Democratic Republic
German YIL	German Yearbook of International Law
HC Deb.	House of Commons Debates

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

HLC	House of Lords Reports (Clark)
HL Deb.	House of Lords Debates
HMSO	Her Majesty's Stationery Office
HR	Hague Academy of International Law, Recueil des Cours
HRJ	Human Rights Journal
HRLJ	Human Rights Law Journal
HRQ	Human Rights Quarterly
ICAO	International Civil Aviation Organisation
ICJ	International Court of Justice
ICLQ	International and Comparative Law Quarterly
ICR	Industrial Cases Reports
ICRC	International Committee of the Red Cross
ICSID	International Centre for the Settlement of Investment Disputes
ICTY	International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia
IJIL	Indian Journal of International Law
ILA	International Law Association
ILC	International Law Commission
ILM	International Legal Materials
ILO	International Labour Organisation
ILR	International Law Reports (see also Annual Digest and Reports of Public International Law Cases)
Iran–US CTR	Iran–United States Claims Tribunal Reports
ITU	International Telecommunications Union
KB	Law Reports, King's Bench Division
L.Ed.	US Supreme Court, Reports, Lawyers' Edition
LL. R	Lloyd's Law Reports
LNOJ	League of Nations Official Journal
LNTS	League of Nations Treaty Series
LQR	Law Quarterly Review
LR A&E	Law Reports: Admiralty and Ecclesiastical
MLR	Modern Law Review
NATO	North Atlantic Treaty Organisation
NE	Northeastern Reporter
Netherlands YIL	Netherlands Yearbook of International Law

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

NGO	Non-governmental organisation
NILR	Netherlands International Law Review
NLM	National Liberation Movement
NQHR	Netherlands Quarterly of Human Rights
NY	New York Reports
NYS	New York Supplement
NZLR	New Zealand Law Reports
OAS	Organisation of American States
OAU	Organisation of African Unity
OECD	Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development
OECS	Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States
OR	Ontario Reports
P.	Law Reports, Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, 1891–
PAIGC	Partido Africano da Independencia da Guine e Cabo Verde
PASIL	Proceedings of the American Society of International Law
PCA	Permanent Court of Arbitration
PCIJ	Permanent Court of International Justice
PD	Law Reports, Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, 1875–90
Pet.	Peter's United States Supreme Court Reports
PLO	Palestine Liberation Organisation
QB	Law Reports, Queen's Bench Division
RecChl	Recommendation of the Committee of Ministers on the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages
RFDA	Revue Française de Droit Administratif
RGDIP	Revue Française de Droit International Public
RIAA	United Nations Reports of International Arbitral Awards
R (J)	Justiciary cases in vols. of Session Cases, 1873–98
SA	South African Reports
SC	Supreme Court
SCOR	Security Council Official Records
SCR	Supreme Court Reports (Canada)

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

S. Ct.	Supreme Court Reporter
SR (NSW)	New South Wales, State Reports
Stat.	United States Statutes at Large
TFSC	'Turkish Federated State of Cyprus'
TRNC	'Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus'
UKHL	United Kingdom, House of Lords
UKMIL	United Kingdom Materials in International Law
UNCESCR	United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights
UNCIO	United Nations Conference of International Organisation
UNCLOS	United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea
UNESCO	United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation
UNHRC	United Nations Human Rights Committee
UNJYB	United Nations Juridical Yearbook
UNTS	United Nations Treaty Series
US	United States Reports (Supreme Court)
US Av R	United States Aviation Reports
US and C Av R	United States and Canadian Aviation Reports
USC	United States Code
USLW	United States Law Weekly
Va. JIL	Virginia Journal of International Law
Ves. Jun.	Vesey Junior's Chancery Reports
VR	Victoria Reports
Wheat	Wheaton, United States Supreme Court Reports
WHO	World Health Organisation
WLR	Weekly Law Reports
Yale JIL	Yale Journal of International Law
YBWA	Yearbook of World Affairs
ZACC	South African Constitutional Court
ZaöRV	Zeitschrift für ausländisches öffentliches Recht und Völkerrecht

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

1

The nature and development of international law

In the long march of mankind from the cave to the computer a central role has always been played by the idea of law – the idea that order is necessary and chaos inimical to a just and stable existence. Every society, whether it be large or small, powerful or weak, has created for itself a framework of principles within which to develop. What can be done, what cannot be done, permissible acts, forbidden acts, have all been spelt out within the consciousness of that community. Progress, with its inexplicable leaps and bounds, has always been based upon the group as men and women combine to pursue commonly accepted goals, whether these be hunting animals, growing food or simply making money.

Law is that element which binds the members of the community together in their adherence to recognised values and standards. It is both permissive in allowing individuals to establish their own legal relations with rights and duties, as in the creation of contracts, and coercive, as it punishes those who infringe its regulations. Law consists of a series of rules regulating behaviour, and reflecting, to some extent, the ideas and preoccupations of the society within which it functions.

And so it is with what is termed international law, with the important difference that the principal subjects of international law are nation-states, not individual citizens. There are many contrasts between the law within a country (municipal law) and the law that operates outside and between states, international organisations and, in certain cases, individuals.

International law itself is divided into conflict of laws (or private international law as it is sometimes called) and public international law (usually just termed international law).[1] The former deals with those cases, within particular legal systems, in which foreign elements obtrude, raising questions as to the application of foreign law or the role of foreign courts.[2]

[1] This term was first used by J. Bentham: see Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation, London, 1780.

[2] See e.g. C. Cheshire and P. North, Private International Law, 13th edn, London, 1999.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

For example, if two Englishmen make a contract in France to sell goods situated in Paris, an English court would apply French law as regards the validity of that contract. By contrast, public international law is not simply an adjunct of a legal order, but a separate system altogether,[3] and it is this field that will be considered in this book.

Public international law covers relations between states in all their myriad forms, from war to satellites, and regulates the operations of the many international institutions. It may be universal or general, in which case the stipulated rules bind all the states (or practically all depending upon the nature of the rule), or regional, whereby a group of states linked geographically or ideologically may recognise special rules applying only to them, for example, the practice of diplomatic asylum that has developed to its greatest extent in Latin America.[4] The rules of international law must be distinguished from what is called international comity, or practices such as saluting the flags of foreign warships at sea, which are implemented solely through courtesy and are not regarded as legally binding.[5] Similarly, the mistake of confusing international law with international morality must be avoided. While they may meet at certain points, the former discipline is a legal one both as regards its content and its form, while the concept of international morality is a branch of ethics. This does not mean, however, that international law can be divorced from its values.

In this chapter and the next, the characteristics of the international legal system and the historical and theoretical background necessary to a proper appreciation of the part to be played by the law in international law will be examined.

Law and politics in the world community

It is the legal quality of international law that is the first question to be posed. Each side to an international dispute will doubtless claim legal justification for its actions and within the international system there is no independent institution able to determine the issue and give a final decision.

Virtually everybody who starts reading about international law does so having learned or absorbed something about the principal characteristics of ordinary or domestic law. Such identifying marks would include the [3] See the Serbian Loans case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 14, pp. 41–2.

[4] See further below, p. 92.

[5] North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 44; 41 ILR, p. 29. See also M. Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source of International Law', 47 BYIL, 1974–5, p. 1.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

existence of a recognised body to legislate or create laws, a hierarchy of courts with compulsory jurisdiction to settle disputes over such laws and an accepted system of enforcing those laws. Without a legislature, judiciary and executive, it would seem that one cannot talk about a legal order.[6] And international law does not fit this model. International law has no legislature. The General Assembly of the United Nations comprising delegates from all the member states exists, but its resolutions are not legally binding save for certain of the organs of the United Nations for certain purposes.[7] There is no system of courts. The International Court of Justice does exist at The Hague but it can only decide cases when both sides agree[8] and it cannot ensure that its decisions are complied with. Above all there is no executive or governing entity. The Security Council of the United Nations, which was intended to have such a role in a sense, has at times been effectively constrained by the veto power of the five permanent members (USA; USSR, now the Russian Federation; China; France; and the United Kingdom).[9] Thus, if there is no identifiable institution either to establish rules, or to clarify them or see that those who break them are punished, how can what is called international law be law?

It will, of course, be realised that the basis for this line of argument is the comparison of domestic law with international law, and the assumption of an analogy between the national system and the international order. And this is at the heart of all discussions about the nature of international law.

At the turn of the nineteenth century, the English philosopher John Austin elaborated a theory of law based upon the notion of a sovereign issuing a command backed by a sanction or punishment. Since international law did not fit within that definition it was relegated to the category of 'positive morality'.[10] This concept has been criticised for oversimplifying and even confusing the true nature of law within a society and for overemphasising the role of the sanction within the system by linking it to every rule.[11] This is not the place for a comprehensive summary of Austin's

[6] See generally, R. Dias, Jurisprudence, 5th edn, London, 1985, and H. L. A. Hart, The Concept of Law, Oxford, 1961.

[7] See article 17(1) of the United Nations Charter. See also D. Johnson, 'The Effect of Resolutions of the General Assembly of the United Nations', 32 BYIL, 1955–6, p. 97 and below, chapter 22.

[8] See article 36 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice and below, chapter 19.

[9] See e.g. Bowett's Law of International Institutions (eds. P. Sands and P. Klein), 5th edn, London, 2001, and below, chapter 23.

[10] See J. Austin, The Province of Jurisprudence Determined (ed. H. L. A. Hart), London, 1954, pp. 134–42.

[11] See e.g. Hart, Concept of Law, chapter 10.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

theory but the idea of coercion as an integral part of any legal order is a vital one that needs looking at in the context of international law.

The role of force

There is no unified system of sanctions[12] in international law in the sense that there is in municipal law, but there are circumstances in which the use of force is regarded as justified and legal. Within the United Nations system, sanctions may be imposed by the Security Council upon the determination of a threat to the peace, breach of the peace or act of aggression.[13] Such sanctions may be economic, for example those proclaimed in 1966 against Rhodesia,[14] or military as in the Korean war in 1950,[15] or indeed both, as in 1990 against Iraq.[16]

Coercive action within the framework of the UN is rare because it requires co-ordination amongst the five permanent members of the Security Council and this obviously needs an issue not regarded by any of the great powers as a threat to their vital interests.

Korea was an exception and joint action could only be undertaken because of the fortuitous absence of the USSR from the Council as a protest at the seating of the Nationalist Chinese representatives.[17]

Apart from such institutional sanctions, one may note the bundle of rights to take violent action known as self-help.[18] This procedure to resort to force to defend certain rights is characteristic of primitive systems of law with blood-feuds, but in the domestic legal order such procedures and [12] See e.g. W. M. Reisman, 'Sanctions and Enforcement' in The Future of the International Legal Order (eds. C. Black and R. A. Falk), New York, 1971, p. 273; J. Brierly, 'Sanctions', 17 Transactions of the Grotius Society, 1932, p. 68; Hart, Concept of Law, pp. 211–21; A. D'Amato, 'The Neo-Positivist Concept of International Law', 59 AJIL, 1965, p. 321; G. Fitzmaurice, 'The Foundations of the Authority of International Law and the Problem of Enforcement', 19 MLR, 1956, p. 1, and The Effectiveness of International Decisions (ed. S. Schwebel), Leiden, 1971.

[13] Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter. See below, chapter 22.

[14] Security Council resolution 221 (1966). Note also Security Council resolution 418 (1977) imposing a mandatory arms embargo on South Africa.

[15] Security Council resolutions of 25 June, 27 June and 7 July 1950. See D. W. Bowett, United Nations Forces, London, 1964.

[16] Security Council resolutions 661 and 678 (1990). See The Kuwait Crisis: Basic Documents (eds. E. Lauterpacht, C. Greenwood, M. Weller and D. Bethlehem), Cambridge, 1991, pp. 88 and 98. See also below, chapter 22.

[17] See E. Luard, A History of the United Nations, vol. I, The Years of Western Domination 1945–55, London, 1982, pp. 229–74, and below, chapter 22.

[18] See D. W. Bowett, Self-Defence in International Law, Manchester, 1958, and I. Brownlie, International Law and the Use of Force by States, Oxford, 1963.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

methods are now within the exclusive control of the established authority. States may use force in self-defence, if the object of aggression, and may take action in response to the illegal acts of other states. In such cases the states themselves decide whether to take action and, if so, the extent of their measures, and there is no supreme body to rule on their legality or otherwise, in the absence of an examination by the International Court of Justice, acceptable to both parties, although international law does lay down relevant rules.[19]

Accordingly those writers who put the element of force to the forefront of their theories face many difficulties in describing the nature, or rather the legal nature of international law, with its lack of a coherent, recognised and comprehensive framework of sanctions. To see the sanctions of international law in the states' rights of self-defence and reprisals[20] is to misunderstand the role of sanctions within a system because they are at the disposal of the states, not the system itself. Neither must it be forgotten that the current trend in international law is to restrict the use of force as far as possible, thus leading to the absurd result that the more force is controlled in international society, the less legal international law becomes.

Since one cannot discover the nature of international law by reference to a definition of law predicated upon sanctions, the character of the international legal order has to be examined in order to seek to discover whether in fact states feel obliged to obey the rules of international law and, if so, why. If, indeed, the answer to the first question is negative, that states do not feel the necessity to act in accordance with such rules, then there does not exist any system of international law worthy of the name.

The international system[21]

The key to the search lies within the unique attributes of the international system in the sense of the network of relationships existing primarily, if not exclusively, between states recognising certain common principles

[19] See below, chapter 19. See also M. Barkin, Law Without Sanctions, New Haven, 1967.

[20] See e.g. H. Kelsen, General Theory of Law and State, London, 1946, pp. 328 ff.

[21] See L. Henkin, How Nations Behave, 2nd edn, New York, 1979, and Henkin, International Law: Politics and Values, Dordrecht, 1995; M. A. Kaplan and N. Katzenbach, The Political Foundations of International Law, New York, 1961; C. W. Jenks, The Common Law of Mankind, London, 1958; W. Friedmann, The Changing Structure of International Law, New York, 1964; A. Sheikh, International Law and National Behaviour, New York, 1974; O. Schachter, International Law in Theory and Practice, Dordrecht, 1991; T. M. Franck, The Power of Legitimacy Among Nations, Oxford, 1990; R. Higgins, Problems and Process, Oxford, 1994, and Oppenheim's International Law (eds. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992, vol. I, chapter 1.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

and ways of doing things.[22] While the legal structure within all but the most primitive societies is hierarchical and authority is vertical, the international system is horizontal, consisting of over 190 independent states, all equal in legal theory (in that they all possess the characteristics of sovereignty) and recognising no one in authority over them. The law is above individuals in domestic systems, but international law only exists as between the states. Individuals only have the choice as to whether to obey the law or not. They do not create the law. That is done by specific institutions. In international law, on the other hand, it is the states themselves that create the law and obey or disobey it.[23] This, of course, has profound repercussions as regards the sources of law as well as the means for enforcing accepted legal rules.

International law, as will be shown in succeeding chapters, is primarily formulated by international agreements, which create rules binding upon the signatories, and customary rules, which are basically state practices recognised by the community at large as laying down patterns of conduct that have to be complied with.

However, it may be argued that since states themselves sign treaties and engage in action that they may or may not regard as legally obligatory, international law would appear to consist of a series of rules from which states may pick and choose. Contrary to popular belief, states do observe international law, and violations are comparatively rare. However, such violations (like armed attacks and racial oppression) are well publicised and strike at the heart of the system, the creation and preservation of international peace and justice. But just as incidents of murder, robbery and rape do occur within national legal orders without destroying the system as such, so analogously assaults upon international legal rules point up the weaknesses of the system without denigrating their validity or their necessity. Thus, despite the occasional gross violation, the vast majority of the provisions of international law are followed.[24]

[22] As to the concept of 'international community', see e.g. G. Abi-Saab, 'Whither the International Community?', 9 EJIL, 1998, p. 248, and B. Simma and A. L. Paulus, 'The "International Community": Facing the Challenge of Globalisation', 9 EJIL, 1998, p. 266. See also P. Weil, 'Le Droit International en Quête de son Identité', 237 HR, 1992 VI, p. 25.

[23] This leads Rosenne to refer to international law as a law of co-ordination, rather than, as in internal law, a law of subordination, Practice and Methods of International Law, Dordrecht, 1984, p. 2.

[24] See H. Morgenthau, Politics Among Nations, 5th edn, New York, 1973, pp. 290–1; Henkin, How Nations Behave, pp. 46–9; J. Brierly, The Outlook for International Law, Oxford, 1944, p. 5, and P. Jessup, A Modern Law of Nations, New York, 1948, pp. 6–8.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

In the daily routine of international life, large numbers of agreements and customs are complied with. However, the need is felt in the hectic interplay of world affairs for some kind of regulatory framework or rules network within which the game can be played, and international law fulfils that requirement. States feel this necessity because it imports an element of stability and predictability into the situation.

Where countries are involved in a disagreement or a dispute, it is handy to have recourse to the rules of international law even if there are conflicting interpretations since at least there is a common frame of reference and one state will be aware of how the other state will develop its argument. They will both be talking a common language and this factor of communication is vital since misunderstandings occur so easily and often with tragic consequences. Where the antagonists dispute the understanding of a particular rule and adopt opposing stands as regards its implementation, they are at least on the same wavelength and communicate by means of the same phrases. That is something. It is not everything, for it is a mistake as well as inaccurate to claim for international law more than it can possibly deliver. It can constitute a mutually understandable vocabulary book and suggest possible solutions which follow from a study of its principles. What it cannot do is solve every problem no matter how dangerous or complex merely by being there. International law has not yet been developed, if it ever will, to that particular stage and one should not exaggerate its capabilities while pointing to its positive features.

But what is to stop a state from simply ignoring international law when proceeding upon its chosen policy? Can a legal rule against aggression, for example, of itself prevail over political temptations? There is no international police force to prevent such an action, but there are a series of other considerations closely bound up with the character of international law which might well cause a potential aggressor to forbear.

There is the element of reciprocity at work and a powerful weapon it can be. States quite often do not pursue one particular course of action which might bring them short-term gains, because it could disrupt the mesh of reciprocal tolerance which could very well bring long-term disadvantages. For example, states everywhere protect the immunity of foreign diplomats for not to do so would place their own officials abroad at risk.[25] This constitutes an inducement to states to act reasonably and moderate demands in the expectation that this will similarly encourage other states to act reasonably and so avoid confrontations. Because the rules can ultimately be changed by states altering their patterns of behaviour and causing one custom to supersede another, or by mutual agreement, a certain definite reference to political life is retained. But the point must be made that a state, after weighing up all possible alternatives, might very well feel that the only method to protect its vital interests would involve a violation of international law and that responsibility would just have to be taken. Where survival is involved international law may take second place.

[25] See Case Concerning United States Diplomatic and Consular Staff in Tehran, ICJ Reports, 1980, p. 3; 61 ILR, p. 502. See also the US Supreme Court decision in Boos v. Barry 99 L. Ed. 2d 333, 345–6 (1988); 121 ILR, p. 499.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Another significant factor is the advantages, or 'rewards', that may occur in certain situations from an observance of international law. It may encourage friendly or neutral states to side with one country involved in a conflict rather than its opponent, and even take a more active role than might otherwise have been the case. In many ways, it is an appeal to public opinion for support and all states employ this tactic.

In many ways, it reflects the esteem in which law is held. The Soviet Union made considerable use of legal arguments in its effort to establish its non-liability to contribute towards the peacekeeping operations of the United Nations,[26] and the Americans too, justified their activities with regard to Cuba[27] and Vietnam[28] by reference to international law. In some cases it may work and bring considerable support in its wake, in many cases it will not, but in any event the very fact that all states do it is a constructive sign.

A further element worth mentioning in this context is the constant formulation of international business in characteristically legal terms. Points of view and disputes, in particular, are framed legally with references to precedent, international agreements and even the opinions of juristic authors. Claims are pursued with regard to the rules of international law and not in terms of, for example, morality or ethics.[29] This has brought into being a class of officials throughout governmental departments, in [26] See Certain Expenses of the United Nations, ICJ Reports, 1962, p. 151; 34 ILR, p. 281, and R. Higgins, United Nations Peace-Keeping; Documents and Commentary, Oxford, 4 vols., 1969–81.

[27] See e.g. A. Chayes, The Cuban Missile Crisis, Oxford, 1974, and Henkin, How Nations Behave, pp. 279–302.

[28] See e.g. The Vietnam War and International Law (ed. R. A. Falk), Princeton, 4 vols., 1968–76; J. N. Moore, Law and the Indo-China War, Charlottesville, 1972, and Henkin, How Nations Behave, pp. 303–12.

[29] See Hart, Concept of Law, p. 223.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

addition to those working in international institutions, versed in international law and carrying on the everyday functions of government in a law-oriented way. Many writers have, in fact, emphasised the role of officials in the actual functioning of law and the influence they have upon the legal process.[30]

Having come to the conclusion that states do observe international law and will usually only violate it on an issue regarded as vital to their interests, the question arises as to the basis of this sense of obligation.[31] The nineteenth century, with its business-oriented philosophy, stressed the importance of the contract, as the legal basis of an agreement freely entered into by both (or all) sides, and this influenced the theory of consent in international law.[32] States were independent, and free agents, and accordingly they could only be bound with their own consent. There was no authority in existence able theoretically or practically to impose rules upon the various nation-states. This approach found its extreme expression in the theory of auto-limitation, or self-limitation, which declared that states could only be obliged to comply with international legal rules if they had first agreed to be so obliged.[33]

Nevertheless, this theory is most unsatisfactory as an account of why international law is regarded as binding or even as an explanation of the international legal system.[34] To give one example, there are about 100 states that have come into existence since the end of the Second World War and by no stretch of the imagination can it be said that such states have consented to all the rules of international law formed prior to their establishment. It could be argued that by 'accepting independence', states consent to all existing rules, but to take this view relegates consent to the role of a mere fiction.[35]

[30] See e.g. M. S. McDougal, H. Lasswell and W. M. Reisman, 'The World Constitutive Process of Authoritative Decision' in International Law Essays (eds. M. S. McDougal and W. M. Reisman), New York, 1981, p. 191.

[31] See e.g. J. Brierly, The Basis of Obligation in International Law, Oxford, 1958.

[32] See W. Friedmann, Legal Theory, 5th edn, London, 1967, pp. 573–6. See also the Lotus case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, p. 18.

[33] E.g. G. Jellinek, Allgemeine Rechtslehre, Berlin, 1905.

[34] See also Hart, Concept of Law, pp. 219–20. But see P. Weil, 'Towards Relative Normativity in International Law?', 77 AJIL, 1983, p. 413 and responses thereto, e.g. R. A. Falk, 'To What Extent are International Law and International Lawyers Ideologically Neutral?' in Change and Stability in International Law-Making (eds. A. Cassese and J. Weiler), 1989, p. 137, and A. Pellet, 'The Normative Dilemma: Will and Consent in International Law-Making', 12 Australian YIL, 1992, p. 22.

[35] See further below, p. 88.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

This theory also fails as an adequate explanation of the international legal system, because it does not take into account the tremendous growth in international institutions and the network of rules and regulations that have emerged from them within the last generation.

To accept consent as the basis for obligation in international law[36] begs the question as to what happens when consent is withdrawn. The state's reversal of its agreement to a rule does not render that rule optional or remove from it its aura of legality. It merely places that state in breach of its obligations under international law if that state proceeds to act upon its decision. Indeed, the principle that agreements are binding (pacta sunt servanda) upon which all treaty law must be based cannot itself be based upon consent.[37]

One current approach to this problem is to refer to the doctrine of consensus.[38] This reflects the influence of the majority in creating new norms of international law and the acceptance by other states of such new rules. It attempts to put into focus the change of emphasis that is beginning to take place from exclusive concentration upon the nation-state to a consideration of the developing forms of international co-operation where such concepts as consent and sanction are inadequate to explain what is happening.

Of course, one cannot ignore the role of consent in international law. To recognise its limitations is not to neglect its significance. Much of international law is constituted by states expressly agreeing to specific normative standards, most obviously by entering into treaties. This cannot be minimised. Nevertheless, it is preferable to consider consent as important not only with regard to specific rules specifically accepted (which is not the sum total of international law, of course) but in the light of the approach of states generally to the totality of rules, understandings, patterns of behaviour and structures underpinning and constituting the international system.[39] In a broad sense, states accept or consent to the general system of international law, for in reality without that no such system could possibly operate. It is this approach which may be characterised as consensus [36] See e.g. J. S. Watson, 'State Consent and the Sources of International Obligation', PASIL, 1992, p. 108.

[37] See below, chapter 3.

[38] See e.g. A. D'Amato, 'On Consensus', 8 Canadian YIL, 1970, p. 104. Note also the 'gentleman's agreement on consensus' in the Third UN Conference on the Law of the Sea: see L. Sohn, 'Voting Procedures in United Nations Conference for the Codification of International Law', 69 AJIL, 1975, p. 318, and UN Doc. A/Conf.62/WP.2.

[39] See e.g. J. Charney, 'Universal International Law', 87 AJIL, 1993, p. 529.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

or the essential framework within which the demand for individual state consent is transmuted into community acceptance.

It is important to note that while states from time to time object to particular rules of international law and seek to change them, no state has sought to maintain that it is free to object to the system as a whole. Each individual state, of course, has the right to seek to influence by word or deed the development of specific rules of international law, but the creation of new customary rules is not dependent upon the express consent of each particular state.

The function of politics

It is clear that there can never be a complete separation between law and policy. No matter what theory of law or political philosophy is professed, the inextricable bonds linking law and politics must be recognised.

Within developed societies a distinction is made between the formulation of policy and the method of its enforcement. In the United Kingdom, Parliament legislates while the courts adjudicate and a similar division is maintained in the United States between the Congress and the courts system. The purpose of such divisions, of course, is to prevent a concentration of too much power within one branch of government. Nevertheless, it is the political branch which makes laws and in the first place creates the legal system. Even within the hierarchy of courts, the judges have leeway in interpreting the law and in the last resort make decisions from amongst a number of alternatives.[40] This position, however, should not be exaggerated because a number of factors operate to conceal and lessen the impact of politics upon the legal process. Foremost amongst these is the psychological element of tradition and the development of the so-called 'law-habit'.[41] A particular legal atmosphere has been created, which is buttressed by the political system and recognises the independent existence of law institutions and methods of operation characterised as 'just' or 'legal'. In most countries overt interference with the juridical process would be regarded as an attack upon basic principles and hotly contested. The use of legal language and accepted procedures together with the pride of the legal profession reinforce the system and emphasise the degree [40] See e.g. R. Dworkin, Taking Rights Seriously, London, 1977.

[41] See e.g. K. Llewellyn, The Common Law Tradition, Boston, 1960, and generally D. Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, 4th edn, London, 1979.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of distance maintained between the legislative–executive organs and the judicial structure.[42]

However, when one looks at the international legal scene the situation changes. The arbiters of the world order are, in the last resort, the states and they both make the rules (ignoring for the moment the secondary, if growing, field of international organisations) and interpret and enforce them.

While it is possible to discern an 'international legal habit' amongst governmental and international officials, the machinery necessary to enshrine this does not exist.

Politics is much closer to the heart of the system than is perceived within national legal orders, and power much more in evidence.[43] The interplay of law and politics in world affairs is much more complex and difficult to unravel, and signals a return to the earlier discussion as to why states comply with international rules. Power politics stresses competition, conflict and supremacy and adopts as its core the struggle for survival and influence.[44] International law aims for harmony and the regulation of disputes. It attempts to create a framework, no matter how rudimentary, which can act as a kind of shock-absorber clarifying and moderating claims and endeavouring to balance interests. In addition, it sets out a series of principles declaring how states should behave. Just as any domestic community must have a background of ideas and hopes to aim at, even if few can be or are ever attained, so the international community, too, must bear in mind its ultimate values.

However, these ultimate values are in a formal sense kept at arm's length from the legal process. As the International Court noted in the South-West Africa case,[45] 'It is a court of law, and can take account of moral principles only in so far as these are given a sufficient expression in legal form. Law exists, it is said, to serve a social need; but precisely for that reason it can do so only through and within the limits of its own discipline. Otherwise, it is not a legal service that would be rendered.'[46]

International law cannot be a source of instant solutions to problems of conflict and confrontation because of its own inherent weaknesses

[42] See P. Stein and J. Shand, Legal Values in Western Society, Edinburgh, 1974.

[43] See generally Henkin, How Nations Behave, and Schachter, International Law, pp. 5–9.

[44] See G. Schwarzenberger, Power Politics, 3rd edn, London, 1964, and Schwarzenberger, International Law, 3rd edn, London, 1957, vol. I, and Morgenthau, Politics Among Nations.

[45] ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 6, 34.

[46] But see Higgins' criticism that such a formulation may be question-begging with regard to the identity of such 'limits of its own discipline', Problems, p. 5.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in structure and content. To fail to recognise this encourages a utopian approach which, when faced with reality, will fail.[47] On the other hand, the cynical attitude with its obsession with brute power is equally inaccurate, if more depressing.

It is the medium road, recognising the strength and weakness of international law and pointing out what it can achieve and what it cannot, which offers the best hope. Man seeks order, welfare and justice not only within the state in which he lives, but also within the international system in which he lives.

Historical development[48]

The foundations of international law (or the law of nations) as it is understood today lie firmly in the development of Western culture and political organisation.

The growth of European notions of sovereignty and the independent nation-state required an acceptable method whereby inter-state relations could be conducted in accordance with commonly accepted standards of [47] Note, of course, the important distinction between the existence of an obligation under international law and the question of the enforcement of that obligation. Problems with regard to enforcing a duty cannot affect the legal validity of that duty: see e.g. Judge Weeramantry's Separate Opinion in the Order of 13 September 1993, in the Bosnia case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 325, 374; 95 ILR, pp. 43, 92.

[48] See in particular A. Nussbaum, A Concise History of the Law of Nations, rev. edn, New York, 1954; Encyclopedia of Public International Law (ed. R. Bernhardt), Amsterdam, 1984, vol. VII, pp. 127–273; J. W. Verzijl, International Law in Historical Perspective, Leiden, 10 vols., 1968–79, and M. Koskenniemi, The Gentle Civilizer of Nations: The Rise and Fall of International Law, 1870–1960, Cambridge, 2001. See also W. Grewe, The Epochs of International Law (trans. and rev. M. Byers), New York, 2000; A. Cassese, International Law in a Divided World, Oxford, 1986, and Cassese, International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005, chapter 2; Nguyen Quoc Dinh, P. Daillier and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 7th edn, Paris, 2002, p. 41; H. Thierry, 'L'Evolution du Droit International', 222 HR, 1990 III, p. 9; P. Guggenheim, 'Contribution à l'Histoire des Sources du Droit des Gens', 94 HR, 1958 II, p. 5; A. Truyol y Serra, Histoire de Droit International Public, Paris, 1995; D. Gaurier, Histoire du Droit International Public, Rennes, 2005; D. Korff, 'Introduction à l'Histoire de Droit International Public', 1 HR, 1923 I, p. 1; P. Le Fur, 'Le Développement Historique de Droit International', 41 HR, 1932 III, p. 501; O. Yasuaki, 'When was the Law of International Society Born? An Inquiry of the History of International Law from an Intercivilisational Perpective', 2 Journal of the History of International Law, 2000, p. 1, and A. Kemmerer, 'The Turning Aside: On International Law and its History' in Progress in International Organisation (eds. R. A. Miller and R. Bratspies), Leiden, 2008, p. 71. For a general bibliography, see P. Macalister-Smith and J. Schwietzke, 'Literature and Documentary Sources relating to the History of International Law', 1 Journal of the History of International Law, 1999, p. 136.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

behaviour, and international law filled the gap. But although the law of nations took root and flowered with the sophistication of Renaissance Europe, the seeds of this particular hybrid plant are of far older lineage. They reach far back into history.

Early origins

While the modern international system can be traced back some 400 years, certain of the basic concepts of international law can be discerned in political relationships thousands of years ago.[49] Around 2100 BC, for instance, a solemn treaty was signed between the rulers of Lagash and Umma, the city-states situated in the area known to historians as Mesopotamia. It was inscribed on a stone block and concerned the establishment of a defined boundary to be respected by both sides under pain of alienating a number of Sumerian gods.[50] The next major instance known of an important, binding, international treaty is that concluded over 1,000 years later between Rameses II of Egypt and the king of the Hittites for the establishment of eternal peace and brotherhood.[51] Other points covered in that agreement signed, it would seem, at Kadesh, north of Damascus, included respect for each other's territorial integrity, the termination of a state of aggression and the setting up of a form of defensive alliance.

Since that date many agreements between the rival Middle Eastern powers were concluded, usually aimed at embodying in a ritual form a state of subservience between the parties or attempting to create a political alliance to contain the influence of an over-powerful empire.[52]

[49] See D. J. Bederman, International Law in Antiquity, Cambridge, 2001.

[50] Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 1–2. Note the discovery in the excavated city of Ebla, the capital of a civilisation at least 4,500 years old, of a copy of a political treaty between Ebla and the city of Abarsal: see Times Higher Education Supplement, 19 May 1995, p. 20. See also R. Cohen, On Diplomacy in the Ancient Near East: The Amarna Letters, Discussion Paper of the Centre for the Study of Diplomacy, University of Leicester, 1995; O. Butkevych, 'History of Ancient International Law: Challenges and Prospects', 5 Journal of the History of International Law, 2003, p. 189; A. Altman, 'Tracing the Earliest Recorded Concepts of International Law. The Early Dynastic Period in Southern Mesopotamia', 6 Journal of the History of International Law, 2004, p. 153, and 'Tracing the Earliest Recorded Concepts of International Law. (2) The Old Akkadian and Ur III Periods in Mesopotamia', 7 Journal of the History of International Law, 2005, p. 115.

[51] Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 1–2.

[52] Preiser emphasises that the era between the seventeenth and fifteenth centuries BC witnessed something of a competing state system involving five independent (at various times) states: Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 133–4.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The role of ancient Israel must also be noted. A universal ethical stance coupled with rules relating to warfare were handed down to other peoples and religions and the demand for justice and a fair system of law founded upon strict morality permeated the thought and conduct of subsequent generations.[53] For example, the Prophet Isaiah declared that sworn agreements, even where made with the enemy, must be performed.[54] Peace and social justice were the keys to man's existence, not power.

After much neglect, there is now more consideration of the cultures and standards that evolved, before the birth of Christ, in the Far East, in the Indian[55] and Chinese[56] civilisations. Many of the Hindu rules displayed a growing sense of morality and generosity and the Chinese Empire devoted much thought to harmonious relations between its constituent parts. Regulations controlling violence and the behaviour of varying factions with regard to innocent civilians were introduced and ethical values instilled in the education of the ruling classes. In times of Chinese dominance, a regional tributary-states system operated which fragmented somewhat in times of weakness, but this remained culturally alive for many centuries.

However, the predominant approach of ancient civilisations was geographically and culturally restricted. There was no conception of an [53] See P. Weil, 'Le Judaisme et le Développement du Droit International', 151 HR, 1976, p. 253, and S. Rosenne, 'The Influence of Judaism on International Law', Nederlands Tijdschrift voor Internationaal Recht, 1958, p. 119.

[54] See Nussbaum, Law of Nations, p. 3.

[55] Ibid. See also C. H. Alexandrowicz, An Introduction to the History of the Law of Nations in the East Indies, Leiden, 1967, and Alexandrowicz, 'The Afro-Asian World and the Law of Nations (Historical Aspects)', 123 HR, 1967, p. 117; L. Chatterjee, International Law and Inter-State Relations in Ancient India, 1958; Nagendra Singh, 'The Distinguishing Characteristics of the Concept of the Law of Nations as it Developed in Ancient India', Liber Amicorum for Lord Wilberforce (eds. A. Bos and I. Brownlie), Oxford, 1987, p. 91; R. P. Anand, International Law and the Developing Countries, The Hague, 1987; International Law and Practice in Ancient India (ed. H. S. Bhatia), New Delhi, 1977; Nagendra Singh, India and International Law, New Delhi, 1969, and P. Bandyopadhyay, International Law and Custom in Ancient India, New Delhi, 1982.

[56] Nussbaum, Law of Nations, p. 4; Liu Tchoan Pas, Le Droit des Gens et de la Chine Antique, Paris, 2 vols., 1926; P. Gong, The Standard of 'Civilisation' in International Society, 1984, pp. 130–63; pp. 164–200 with regard to Japan; pp. 201–37 with regard to Siam; I. C. Y. Hsu, China's Entrance into the Family of Nations, Harvard, 1960; K. Iriye, 'The Principles of International Law in the Light of Confucian Doctrine', 120 HR, 1967, p. 1, and Wang Tieya, 'International Law in China', 221 HR, 1990 II, p. 195. See also C. F. Amerasinghe, 'South Asian Antecedents of International Law' in International Law – Theory and Practice (ed. K. Wellens), The Hague, 1998, p. 3, and E. Y.-J. Lee, 'Early Development of Modern International Law in East Asia – With Special Reference to China, Japan and Korea', 4 Journal of the History of International Law, 2002, p. 42.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

international community of states co-existing within a defined framework. The scope for any 'international law' of states was extremely limited and all that one can point to is the existence of certain ideals, such as the sanctity of treaties, which have continued to this day as important elements in society. But the notion of a universal community with its ideal of world order was not in evidence.

The era of classical Greece, from about the sixth century BC and onwards for a couple of hundred years, has, one must note, been of overwhelming significance for European thought. Its critical and rational turn of mind, its constant questioning and analysis of man and nature and its love of argument and debate were spread throughout Europe and the Mediterranean world by the Roman Empire which adopted Hellenic culture wholesale, and penetrated Western consciousness with the Renaissance. However, Greek awareness was limited to their own competitive city-states and colonies. Those of different origin were barbarians not deemed worthy of association.

The value of Greece in a study of international law lies partly in the philosophical, scientific and political analyses bequeathed to mankind and partly in the fascinating state of inter-relationship built up within the Hellenistic world.[57] Numerous treaties linked the city-states together in a network of commercial and political associations. Rights were often granted to the citizens of the states in each other's territories and rules regarding the sanctity and protection of diplomatic envoys developed. Certain practices were essential before the declaration of war, and the horrors of war were somewhat ameliorated by the exercise, for example, of religious customs regarding sanctuaries. But no overall moral approach similar to those emerging from Jewish and Hindu thought, particularly, evolved. No sense of a world community can be traced to Greek ideology in spite of the growth of Greek colonies throughout the Mediterranean area. This was left to the able administrators of the Roman Empire.[58]

The Romans had a profound respect for organisation and the law.[59] The law knitted together their empire and constituted a vital source of [57] Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 5–9, and A. Lanni, 'The Laws of War in Ancient Greece', Harvard Law School Public Law Research Paper No. 07-24, 2007. See also G. Ténékidès, 'Droit International et Communautés Fédérales dans la Grèce des Cités', 90 HR, 1956, p. 469; S. L. Ager, Interstate Arbitrations in the Greek World, 337-90 BC, Berkeley, 1996, and Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 154–6.

[58] Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 136–9, and Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 10–16.

[59] See e.g. A. Jolowicz, Historical Introduction to Roman Law, 3rd edn, London, 1972. See also A. Watson, International Law in Archaic Rome, Baltimore, 1993.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

reference for every inhabitant of the far-flung domain. The early Roman law (the jus civile) applied only to Roman citizens. It was formalistic and hard and reflected the status of a small, unsophisticated society rooted in the soil.

It was totally unable to provide a relevant background for an expanding, developing nation. This need was served by the creation and progressive augmentation of the jus gentium. This provided simplified rules to govern the relations between foreigners, and between foreigners and citizens. The instrument through which this particular system evolved was the official known as the Praetor Peregrinus, whose function it was to oversee all legal relationships, including bureaucratic and commercial matters, within the empire.

The progressive rules of the jus gentium gradually overrode the narrow jus civile until the latter system ceased to exist. Thus, the jus gentium became the common law of the Roman Empire and was deemed to be of universal application.

It is this all-embracing factor which so strongly distinguishes the Roman from the Greek experience, although, of course, there was no question of the acceptance of other nations on a basis of equality and the jus gentium remained a 'national law' for the Roman Empire.

One of the most influential of Greek concepts taken up by the Romans was the idea of Natural Law.[60] This was formulated by the Stoic philosophers of the third century BC and their theory was that it constituted a body of rules of universal relevance. Such rules were rational and logical, and because the ideas and precepts of the 'law of nature' were rooted in human intelligence, it followed that such rules could not be restricted to any nation or any group but were of worldwide relevance. This element of universality is basic to modern doctrines of international law and the Stoic elevation of human powers of logical deduction to the supreme pinnacle of 'discovering' the law foreshadows the rational philosophies of the West. In addition to being a fundamental concept in legal theory, Natural Law is vital to an understanding of international law, as well as being an indispensible precursor to contemporary concern with human rights.

Certain Roman philosophers incorporated those Greek ideas of Natural Law into their own legal theories, often as a kind of ultimate justification [60] See e.g. Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, pp. 79–169.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of the jus gentium, which was deemed to enshrine rational principles common to all civilised nations.

However, the law of nature was held to have an existence over and above that of the jus gentium. This led to much confusion over the exact relationship between the two ideas and different Roman lawyers came to different conclusions as to their identity and characteristics. The important factors though that need to be noted are the theories of the universality of law and the rational origins of legal rules that were founded, theoretically at least, not on superior force but on superior reason.

The classical rules of Roman law were collated in the Corpus Juris Civilis, a compilation of legal material by a series of Byzantine philosophers completed in AD 534.[61] Such a collection was to be invaluable when the darkness of the early Middle Ages, following the Roman collapse, began gradually to evaporate. For here was a body of developed laws ready made and awaiting transference to an awakening Europe.

At this stage reference must be made to the growth of Islam.[62] Its approach to international relations and law was predicated upon a state of hostility towards the non-Moslem world and the concept of unity, Dar al-Islam, as between Moslem countries. Generally speaking, humane rules of warfare were developed and the 'peoples of the book' (Jews and Christians) were treated better than non-believers, although in an inferior position to Moslems. Once the period of conquest was over and power was consolidated, norms governing conduct with non-Moslem states began to develop. The law dealing with diplomats was founded upon notions of hospitality and safety (aman), while rules governing international agreements grew out of the concept of respecting promises made.[63]

[61] See generally with regard to Byzantium, M. De Taube, 'L'Apport de Byzance au Développement du Droit International Occidental', 67 HR, 1939, p. 233, and S. Verosta, 'International Law in Europe and Western Asia between 100–650 AD', 113 HR, 1964, p. 489.

[62] See e.g. M. Al Ghunaimi, The Muslim Conception of International Law and the Western Approach, The Hague, 1968; A. Draz, 'Le Droit International Public et l'Islam', 5 Revue Égyptienne de Droit International, p. 17; C. Stumpf, 'Christian and Islamic Traditions of Public International Law', 7 Journal of the History of International Law, 2005, p. 69; H. Khadduri, 'Islam and the Modern Law of Nations', 50 AJIL, 1956, p. 358, and Khadduri, War and Peace in the Law of Islam, 2nd edn, Baltimore, 1962, and S. Mahmassani, 'The Principles of International Law in the Light of Islamic Doctrine', 117 HR, 1966, p. 205. See also 'L'Asile et les Refugiés dans la Tradition Musulmane', Report of the Sixty-Ninth Conference, International Law Association, London, 2000, p. 305, and Y. Ben Achour Yadh, 'La Civilisation Islamique et le Droit International', RGDIP, 2006, p. 19.

[63] See Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 141–2, and Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 51–4.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Middle Ages and the Renaissance

The Middle Ages were characterised by the authority of the organised Church and the comprehensive structure of power that it commanded.[64] All Europe was of one religion, and the ecclesiastical law applied to all, notwithstanding tribal or regional affiliations. For much of the period, there were struggles between the religious authorities and the rulers of the Holy Roman Empire.

These conflicts were eventually resolved in favour of the Papacy, but the victory over secularism proved of relatively short duration. Religion and a common legacy derived from the Roman Empire were strongly unifying influences, while political and regional rivalries were not. But before a recognised system of international law could be created, social changes were essential.

Of particular importance during this era were the authority of the Holy Roman Empire and the supranational character of canon law.[65] Nevertheless, commercial and maritime law developed apace. English law established the Law Merchant, a code of rules covering foreign traders, and this was declared to be of universal application.[66]

Throughout Europe, mercantile courts were set up to settle disputes between tradesmen at the various fairs, and while it is not possible to state that a Continental Law Merchant came into being, a network of common regulations and practices weaved its way across the commercial fabric of Europe and constituted an embryonic international trade law.[67]

Similarly, maritime customs began to be accepted throughout the Continent. Founded upon the Rhodian Sea Law, a Byzantine work, many of whose rules were enshrined in the Rolls of Oleron in the twelfth century, and other maritime textbooks, a series of commonly applied customs relating to the sea permeated the naval powers of the Atlantic and Mediterranean coasts.[68] [64] Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 17–23, and Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 143–9.

[65] Note in particular the influence of the Church on the rules governing warfare and the binding nature of agreements: see Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 17–18, and Bernhardt Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 146–7. See also M. Keen, The Laws of War in the Late Middle Ages, London, 1965.

[66] See G. Holdsworth, A History of English Law, London, 1924, vol. 5, pp. 60–3.

[67] Ibid., pp. 63–129.

[68] Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 29–31. Note also the influence of the Consolato del Mare, composed in Barcelona in the mid-fourteenth century, and the Maritime Code of Wisby (c. 1407) followed by the Hanseatic League.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Such commercial and maritime codes, while at this stage merely expressions of national legal systems, were amongst the forerunners of international law because they were created and nurtured against a backcloth of cross-national contacts and reflected the need for rules that would cover international situations.

Such rules, growing out of the early Middle Ages, constituted the seeds of international law, but before they could flourish, European thought had first to be developed by that intellectual explosion known as the Renaissance.

This complex of ideas changed the face of European society and ushered in the modern era of scientific, humanistic and individualistic thought.[69]

The collapse of the Byzantine Empire centred on Constantinople before the Turkish armies in 1453 drove many Greek scholars to seek sanctuary in Italy and enliven Western Europe's cultural life. The introduction of printing during the fifteenth century provided the means to disseminate knowledge, and the undermining of feudalism in the wake of economic growth and the rise of the merchant classes provided the background to the new inquiring attitudes taking shape.

Europe's developing self-confidence manifested itself in a sustained drive overseas for wealth and luxury items. By the end of the fifteenth century, the Arabs had been ousted from the Iberian peninsula and the Americas reached.

The rise of the nation-states of England, France and Spain in particular characterised the process of the creation of territorially consolidated independent units, in theory and doctrine, as well as in fact. This led to a higher degree of interaction between sovereign entities and thus the need to regulate such activities in a generally acceptable fashion. The pursuit of political power and supremacy became overt and recognised, as Machiavelli's The Prince (1513) demonstrated.

The city-states of Italy struggled for supremacy and the Papacy too became a secular power. From these hectic struggles emerged many of the staples of modern international life: diplomacy, statesmanship, the theory of the balance of power and the idea of a community of states.[70]

Notions such as these are immediately appreciable and one can identify with the various manoeuvres for political supremacy. Alliances, betrayals, manipulations of state institutions and the drive for power are not unknown to us. We recognise the roots of our society.

[69] See e.g. Friedmann, Changing Structure, pp. 114–16.
[70] See e.g. G. Mattingley, Renaissance Diplomacy, London, 1955.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

It was the evolution of the concept of an international community of separate, sovereign, if competing, states, that marks the beginning of what is understood by international law. The Renaissance bequeathed the prerequisites of independent, critical thought and a humanistic, secular approach to life as well as the political framework for the future. But it is the latter factor which is vital to the subsequent growth of international law. The Reformation and the European religious wars that followed emphasised this, as did the growing power of the nations. In many ways these wars marked the decline of a continental system founded on religion and the birth of a continental system founded on the supremacy of the state.

Throughout these countries the necessity was felt for a new conception of human as well as state relationships. This search was precipitated, as has been intimated, by the decline of the Church and the rise of what might be termed 'free-thinking'. The theory of international law was naturally deeply involved in this reappraisal of political life and it was tremendously influenced by the rediscovery of Greco-Roman ideas. The Renaissance stimulated a rebirth of Hellenic studies and ideas of Natural Law, in particular, became popular.

Thus, a distinct value-system to underpin international relations was brought into being and the law of nations was heralded as part of the universal law of nature.

With the rise of the modern state and the emancipation of international relations, the doctrine of sovereignty emerged. This concept, first analysed systematically in 1576 in the Six Livres de la République by Jean Bodin, was intended to deal with the structure of authority within the modern state. Bodin, who based his study upon his perception of the politics of Europe rather than on a theoretical discussion of absolute principles, emphasised the necessity for a sovereign power within the state that would make the laws. While such a sovereign could not be bound by the laws he himself instituted, he was subject to the laws of God and of nature.[71]

The idea of the sovereign as supreme legislator was in the course of time transmuted into the principle which gave the state supreme power vis-à-vis other states. The state was regarded as being above the law. Such [71] See A. Gardot, 'Jean Bodin – Sa Place Parmi les Fondateurs du Droit International', 50 HR, 1934, p. 549. See also, for a discussion of sovereignty and the treaty-making power in the late middle ages, T. Meron, 'The Authority to Make Treaties in the Late Middle Ages', 89 AJIL, 1995, p. 1.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

notions as these formed the intellectual basis of the line of thought known as positivism which will be discussed later.[72]

The early theorists of international law were deeply involved with the ideas of Natural Law and used them as the basis of their philosophies. Included within that complex of Natural Law principles from which they constructed their theories was the significant merging of Christian and Natural Law ideas that occurred in the philosophy of St Thomas Aquinas.[73] He maintained that Natural Law formed part of the law of God, and was the participation by rational creatures in the Eternal Law. It complemented that part of the Eternal Law which had been divinely revealed. Reason, declared Aquinas, was the essence of man and thus must be involved in the ordering of life according to the divine will. Natural Law was the fount of moral behaviour as well as of social and political institutions, and it led to a theory of conditional acceptance of authority with unjust laws being unacceptable. Aquinas' views of the late thirteenth century can be regarded as basic to an understanding of present Catholic attitudes, but should not be confused with the later interpretation of Natural Law which stressed the concepts of natural rights.

It is with such an intellectual background that Renaissance scholars approached the question of the basis and justification of a system of international law. Maine, a British historical lawyer, wrote that the birth of modern international law was the grandest function of the law of nature and while that is arguable, the point must be taken.[74] International law began to emerge as a separate topic to be studied within itself, although derived from the principles of Natural Law.

The founders of modern international law

The essence of the new approach to international law can be traced back to the Spanish philosophers of that country's Golden Age.[75] The leading figure of this school was Francisco Vitoria, Professor of Theology at the University of Salamanca (1480–1546). His lectures were preserved by his students and published posthumously. He demonstrated a remarkably progressive attitude for his time towards the Spanish conquest of the [72] Below, p. 49. [73] Summa Theologia, English edn, 1927.

[74] H. Maine, Ancient Law, London, 1861, pp. 56 and 64–6.

[75] Note Preiser's view that '[t]here was hardly a single important problem of international law until the middle of the 17th century which was not principally a problem of Spain and the allied Habsburg countries': Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, p. 150. See also Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 79–93.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

South American Indians and, contrary to the views prevalent until then, maintained that the Indian peoples should be regarded as nations with their own legitimate interests. War against them could only be justified on the grounds of a just cause. International law was founded on the universal law of nature and this meant that non-Europeans must be included within its ambit. However, Vitoria by no means advocated the recognition of the Indian nations as equal to the Christian states of Europe. For him, opposing the work of the missionaries in the territories was a just reason for war, and he adopted a rather extensive view as to the rights of the Spaniards in South America. Vitoria was no liberal and indeed acted on behalf of the Spanish Inquisition, but his lectures did mark a step forward in the right direction.[76]

Suárez (1548–1617) was a Jesuit and Professor of Theology who was deeply immersed in medieval culture. He noted that the obligatory character of international law was based upon Natural Law, while its substance derived from the Natural Law rule of carrying out agreements entered into.[77]

From a totally different background but equally, if not more, influential was Alberico Gentili (1552–1608). He was born in Northern Italy and fled to England to avoid persecution, having converted to Protestantism. In 1598 his De Jure Belli was published.[78] It is a comprehensive discussion of the law of war and contains a valuable section on the law of treaties. Gentili, who became a professor at Oxford, has been called the originator of the secular school of thought in international law and he minimised the hitherto significant theological theses.

It is, however, Hugo Grotius, a Dutch scholar, who towers over this period and has been celebrated, if a little exaggeratedly, as the father of international law. He was born in 1583 and was the supreme Renaissance man. A scholar of tremendous learning, he mastered history, theology, mathematics and the law.[79] His primary work was the De Jure Belli ac Pacis, [76] Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 79–84, and Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 151–2. See also F. Vitoria, De Indis et de Jure Belli Relectiones, Classics of International Law, Washington, DC, 1917, and J. B. Scott, The Spanish Origin of International Law, Francisco de Vitoria and his Law of Nations, Washington, DC, 1934.

[77] Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 84–91. See also ibid., pp. 92–3 regarding the work of Ayala (1548–84).

[78] Ibid., pp. 94–101. See also A. Van der Molen, Alberico Gentili and the Development of International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1968.

[79] Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 102–14. See also W. S. M. Knight, The Life and Works of Hugo Grotius, London, 1925, and 'Commemoration of the Fourth Century of the Birth of Grotius' (various articles), 182 HR, 1984, pp. 371–470.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

written during 1623 and 1624. It is an extensive work and includes rather more devotion to the exposition of private law notions than would seem appropriate today. He refers both to Vitoria and Gentili, the latter being of special influence with regard to many matters, particularly organisation of material.

Grotius finally excised theology from international law and emphasised the irrelevance in such a study of any conception of a divine law. He remarked that the law of nature would be valid even if there were no God: a statement which, although suitably clothed in religious protestation, was extremely daring. The law of nature now reverted to being founded exclusively on reason. Justice was part of man's social make-up and thus not only useful but essential. Grotius conceived of a comprehensive system of international law and his work rapidly became a university textbook. However, in many spheres he followed well-trodden paths. He retained the theological distinction between a just and an unjust war, a notion that was soon to disappear from treatises on international law, but which in some way underpins modern approaches to aggression, self-defence and liberation.

One of his most enduring opinions consists in his proclamation of the freedom of the seas. The Dutch scholar opposed the 'closed seas' concept of the Portuguese that was later elucidated by the English writer John Selden[80] and emphasised instead the principle that the nations could not appropriate to themselves the high seas. They belonged to all. It must, of course, be mentioned, parenthetically, that this theory happened to accord rather nicely with prevailing Dutch ideas as to free trade and the needs of an expanding commercial empire.

However, this merely points up what must not be disregarded, namely that concepts of law as of politics and other disciplines are firmly rooted in the world of reality, and reflect contemporary preoccupations. No theory develops in a vacuum, but is conceived and brought to fruition in a definite cultural and social environment. To ignore this is to distort the theory itself.

Positivism and naturalism

Following Grotius, but by no means divorced from the thought of previous scholars, a split can be detected and two different schools identified.

[80] In Mare Clausum Sive de Dominio Maris, 1635.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

On the one hand there was the 'naturalist' school, exemplified by Samuel Pufendorf (1632–94),[81] who attempted to identify international law completely with the law of nature; and on the other hand there were the exponents of 'positivism', who distinguished between international law and Natural Law and emphasised practical problems and current state practices. Pufendorf regarded Natural Law as a moralistic system, and misunderstood the direction of modern international law by denying the validity of the rules about custom. He also refused to acknowledge treaties as in any way relevant to a discussion of the basis of international law. Other 'naturalists' echoed those sentiments in minimising or ignoring the actual practices of states in favour of a theoretical construction of absolute values that seemed slowly to drift away from the complexities of political reality.

One of the principal initiators of the positivist school was Richard Zouche (1590–1660), who lived at the same time as Pufendorf, but in England.[82] While completely dismissing Natural Law, he paid scant regard to the traditional doctrines. His concern was with specific situations and his book contains many examples from the recent past. He elevated the law of peace above a systematic consideration of the law of war and eschewed theoretical expositions.

In similar style Bynkershoek (1673–1743) stressed the importance of modern practice and virtually ignored Natural Law. He made great contributions to the developing theories of the rights and duties of neutrals in war, and after careful studies of the relevant facts decided in favour of the freedom of the seas.[83]

The positivist approach, like much of modern thought, was derived from the empirical method adopted by the Renaissance. It was concerned not with an edifice of theory structured upon deductions from absolute principles, but rather with viewing events as they occurred and discussing actual problems that had arisen. Empiricism as formulated by Locke and Hume[84] denied the existence of innate principles and postulated that ideas were derived from experience. The scientific method of experiment and verification of hypotheses emphasised this approach.

From this philosophical attitude, it was a short step to reinterpreting international law not in terms of concepts derived from reason but rather in terms of what actually happened between the competing states. What [81] On the Law of Nature and of Nations, 1672. See also Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 147–50.

[82] Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 165–7. [83] Ibid., pp. 167–72.
[84] See Friedmann, Legal Theory, pp. 253–5.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

states actually do was the key, not what states ought to do given basic rules of the law of nature. Agreements and customs recognised by the states were the essence of the law of nations.

Positivism developed as the modern nation-state system emerged, after the Peace of Westphalia in 1648, from the religious wars.[85] It coincided, too, with theories of sovereignty such as those propounded by Bodin and Hobbes,[86] which underlined the supreme power of the sovereign and led to notions of the sovereignty of states.

Elements of both positivism and naturalism appear in the works of Vattel (1714–67), a Swiss lawyer. His Droit des Gens was based on Natural Law principles yet was practically oriented. He introduced the doctrine of the equality of states into international law, declaring that a small republic was no less a sovereign than the most powerful kingdom, just as a dwarf was as much a man as a giant. By distinguishing between laws of conscience and laws of action and stating that only the latter were of practical concern, he minimised the importance of Natural Law.[87]

Ironically, at the same time that positivist thought appeared to demolish the philosophical basis of the law of nature and relegate that theory to history, it re-emerged in a modern guise replete with significance for the future. Natural Law gave way to the concept of natural rights.[88]

It was an individualistic assertion of political supremacy. The idea of the social contract, that an agreement between individuals pre-dated and justified civil society, emphasised the central role of the individual, and whether such a theory was interpreted pessimistically to demand an absolute sovereign as Hobbes declared, or optimistically to mean a conditional acceptance of authority as Locke maintained, it could not fail to be a revolutionary doctrine. The rights of man constitute the heart of the American[89] and French Revolutions and the essence of modern democratic society.

[85] See L. Gross, 'The Peace of Westphalia 1648–1948', 42 AJIL, 1948, p. 20; Renegotiating Westphalia (eds. C. Harding and C. L. Lim), The Hague, 1999, especially chapter 1, and S. Beaulac, 'The Westphalian Legal Orthodoxy – Myth or Reality?', 2 Journal of the History of International Law, 2000, p. 148.

[86] Leviathan, 1651.

[87] See Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 156–64. See also N. Onuf, 'Civitas Maxima: Wolff, Vattel and the Fate of Republicanism', 88 AJIL, 1994, p. 280.

[88] See e.g. J. Finnis, Natural Law and Natural Rights, Oxford, 1980, and R. Tuck, Natural Rights Theories, Cambridge, 1979.

[89] See e.g. N. Onuf and O. Onuf, Federal Unions, Modern World, Madison, 1994.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Yet, on the other hand, the doctrine of Natural Law has been employed to preserve the absoluteness of sovereignty and the sanctity of private possessions. The theory has a reactionary aspect because it could be argued that what was, ought to be, since it evolved from the social contract or was divinely ordained, depending upon how secular one construed the law of nature to be.

The nineteenth century

The eighteenth century was a ferment of intellectual ideas and rationalist philosophies that contributed to the evolution of the doctrine of international law. The nineteenth century by contrast was a practical, expansionist and positivist era. The Congress of Vienna, which marked the conclusion of the Napoleonic wars, enshrined the new international order which was to be based upon the European balance of power. International law became Eurocentric, the preserve of the civilised, Christian states, into which overseas and foreign nations could enter only with the consent of and on the conditions laid down by the Western powers. Paradoxically, whilst international law became geographically internationalised through the expansion of the European empires, it became less universalist in conception and more, theoretically as well as practically, a reflection of European values.[90] This theme, the relationship between universalism and particularism, appears time and again in international law. This century also saw the coming to independence of Latin America and the forging of a distinctive approach to certain elements of international law by the states of that region, especially with regard to, for example, diplomatic asylum and the treatment of foreign enterprises and nationals.[91]

There are many other features that mark the nineteenth century. Democracy and nationalism, both spurred on by the wars of the French revolution and empire, spread throughout the Continent and changed the essence of international relations.[92] No longer the exclusive concern

[90] See Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 186–250, and, e.g., C. H. Alexandrowicz, The European–African Confrontation, Leiden, 1973. See also B. Bowden, 'The Colonial Origins of International Law. European Expansion and the Classical Standard of Civilisation', 7 Journal of the History of International Law, 2005, p. 1, and C. Sylvest, 'International Law in Nineteenth-Century Britain', 75 BYIL, 2004, p. 9.

[91] See below, chapters 3 and 14 respectively. See also H. Gros Espiell, 'La Doctrine du Droit International en Amérique Latine avant la Première Conférence Panaméricaine', 3 Journal of the History of International Law, 2001, p. 1.

[92] See especially A. Cobban, The Nation State and National Self-Determination, London, 1969.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of aristocratic élites, foreign policy characterised both the positive and the negative faces of nationalism. Self-determination emerged to threaten the multinational empires of Central and Eastern Europe, while nationalism reached its peak in the unifications of Germany and Italy and began to exhibit features such as expansionism and doctrines of racial superiority. Democracy brought to the individual political influence and a say in government. It also brought home the realities of responsibility, for wars became the concern of all. Conscription was introduced throughout the Continent and large national armies replaced the small professional forces.[93] The Industrial Revolution mechanised Europe, created the economic dichotomy of capital and labour and propelled Western influence throughout the world. All these factors created an enormous increase in the number and variety of both public and private international institutions, and international law grew rapidly to accommodate them.[94] The development of trade and communications necessitated greater international co-operation as a matter of practical need. In 1815, the Final Act of the Congress of Vienna established the principle of freedom of navigation with regard to international waterways and set up a Central Commission of the Rhine to regulate its use. In 1856 a commission for the Danube was created and a number of other European rivers also became the subject of international agreements and arrangements. In 1865 the International Telegraphic Union was established and in 1874 the Universal Postal Union.[95]

European conferences proliferated and contributed greatly to the development of rules governing the waging of war. The International Committee of the Red Cross, founded in 1863, helped promote the series of Geneva Conventions beginning in 1864 dealing with the 'humanisation' of conflict, and the Hague Conferences of 1899 and 1907 established the Permanent Court of Arbitration and dealt with the treatment of prisoners and the control of warfare.[96] Numerous other conferences, conventions and congresses emphasised the expansion of the rules of international law and the close network of international relations. In addition, the academic study of international law within higher education developed with the appointment of professors of the subject and the appearance of specialist textbooks emphasising the practice of states.

[93] G. Best, Humanity in Warfare, London, 1980; Best, War and Law Since 1945, Oxford, 1994, and S. Bailey, Prohibitions and Restraints in War, Oxford, 1972.

[94] See e.g. Bowett's Law of International Institutions, and The Evolution of International Organisations (ed. E. Luard), Oxford, 1966.

[95] See further below, chapter 23. [96] See further below, chapter 21.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Positivist theories dominate this century. The proliferation of the powers of states and the increasing sophistication of municipal legislation gave force to the idea that laws were basically commands issuing from a sovereign person or body. Any question of ethics or morality was irrelevant to a discussion of the validity of man-made laws. The approach was transferred onto the international scene and immediately came face to face with the reality of a lack of supreme authority.

Since law was ultimately dependent upon the will of the sovereign in national systems, it seemed to follow that international law depended upon the will of the sovereign states.

This implied a confusion of the supreme legislator within a state with the state itself and thus positivism had to accept the metaphysical identity of the state. The state had a life and will of its own and so was able to dominate international law. This stress on the abstract nature of the state did not appear in all positivist theories and was a late development.[97]

It was the German thinker Hegel who first analysed and proposed the doctrine of the will of the state. The individual was subordinate to the state, because the latter enshrined the 'wills' of all citizens and had evolved into a higher will, and on the external scene the state was sovereign and supreme.[98] Such philosophies led to disturbing results in the twentieth century and provoked a re-awakening of the law of nature, dormant throughout the nineteenth century.

The growth of international agreements, customs and regulations induced positivist theorists to tackle this problem of international law and the state; and as a result two schools of thought emerged.

The monists claimed that there was one fundamental principle which underlay both national and international law. This was variously posited as 'right' or social solidarity or the rule that agreements must be carried out (pacta sunt servanda). The dualists, more numerous and in a more truly positivist frame of mind, emphasised the element of consent.

For Triepel, another German theorist, international law and domestic (or municipal) law existed on separate planes, the former governing international relations, the latter relations between individuals and between the individual and the state. International law was based upon agreements between states (and such agreements included, according to Triepel, both

[97] See below, chapter 2.

[98] See e.g. S. Avineri, Hegel's Theory of the Modern State, London, 1972, and Friedmann, Legal Theory, pp. 164–76.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

treaties and customs) and because it was dictated by the 'common will' of the states it could not be unilaterally altered.[99]

This led to a paradox. Could this common will bind individual states and, if so, why? It would appear to lead to the conclusion that the will of the sovereign state could give birth to a rule over which it had no control. The state will was not, therefore, supreme but inferior to a collection of states' wills. Triepel did not discuss these points, but left them open as depending upon legal matters. Thus did positivist theories weaken their own positivist outlook by regarding the essence of law as beyond juridical description. The nineteenth century also saw the publication of numerous works on international law, which emphasised state practice and the importance of the behaviour of countries to the development of rules of international law.[100]

The twentieth century

The First World War marked the close of a dynamic and optimistic century. European empires ruled the world and European ideologies reigned supreme, but the 1914–18 Great War undermined the foundations of European civilisation. Self-confidence faded, if slowly, the edifice weakened and the universally accepted assumptions of progress were increasingly doubted. Self-questioning was the order of the day and law as well as art reflected this.

The most important legacy of the 1919 Peace Treaty from the point of view of international relations was the creation of the League of Nations.[101] The old anarchic system had failed and it was felt that new institutions to preserve and secure peace were necessary. The League consisted of an Assembly and an executive Council, but was crippled from the start by the absence of the United States and the Soviet Union for most of its life and remained a basically European organisation.

While it did have certain minor successes with regard to the maintenance of international order, it failed when confronted with determined aggressors. Japan invaded China in 1931 and two years later withdrew from the League. Italy attacked Ethiopia, and Germany embarked unhindered [99] Friedmann Legal Theory, pp. 576–7. See also below, chapter 4.

[100] See e.g. H. Wheaton, Elements of International Law, New York, 1836; W. E. Hall, A Treatise on International Law, Oxford, 1880; Von Martens, Völkerrecht, Berlin, 2 vols., 1883–6; Pradier-Fodéré, Traité de Droit International Public, Paris, 8 vols., 1855–1906; and Fiore, Il Diritto Internazionale Codificato e la Sua Sanzione Giuridica, 1890.

[101] See Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 251–90, and below, chapter 22.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

upon a series of internal and external aggressions. The Soviet Union, in a final gesture, was expelled from the organisation in 1939 following its invasion of Finland.

Nevertheless much useful groundwork was achieved by the League in its short existence and this helped to consolidate the United Nations later on.[102]

The Permanent Court of International Justice was set up in 1921 at The Hague and was succeeded in 1946 by the International Court of Justice.[103] The International Labour Organisation was established soon after the end of the First World War and still exists today, and many other international institutions were inaugurated or increased their work during this period.

Other ideas of international law that first appeared between the wars included the system of mandates, by which colonies of the defeated powers were administered by the Allies for the benefit of their inhabitants rather than being annexed outright, and the attempt was made to provide a form of minority protection guaranteed by the League. This latter creation was not a great success but it paved the way for later concern to secure human rights.[104]

After the trauma of the Second World War the League was succeeded in 1946 by the United Nations Organisation, which tried to remedy many of the defects of its predecessor. It established its site at New York, reflecting the realities of the shift of power away from Europe, and determined to become a truly universal institution. The advent of decolonisation fulfilled this expectation and the General Assembly of the United Nations currently has 192 member states.[105]

Many of the trends which first came to prominence in the nineteenth century have continued to this day. The vast increase in the number of international agreements and customs, the strengthening of the system of arbitration and the development of international organisations have established the essence of international law as it exists today.

Communist approaches to international law

Classic Marxist theory described law and politics as the means whereby the ruling classes maintained their domination of society. The essence of economic life was the ownership of the means of production, and all [102] See also G. Scott, The Rise and Fall of the League of Nations, London, 1973.

[103] See below, chapter 19. [104] See below, chapter 6.
[105] Following the admission of Montenegro on 28 June 2006.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

power flowed from this control. Capital and labour were the opposing theses and their mutual antagonism would eventually lead to a revolution out of which a new, non-exploitive form of society would emerge.[106] National states were dominated by the capitalist class and would have to disappear in the re-organising process. Indeed, the theory was that law and the state would wither away once a new basis for society had been established[107] and, because classical international law was founded upon the state, it followed that it too would go.

However, the reality of power and the existence of the USSR surrounded by capitalist nations led to a modification in this approach. The international system of states could not be changed overnight into a socialist order, so a period of transition was inevitable. Nevertheless basic changes were seen as having been wrought.

Professor Tunkin, for example, emphasised that the Russian October revolution produced a new series of international legal ideas. These, it is noted, can be divided into three basic, interconnected groups: (a) principles of socialist internationalism in relations between socialist states, (b) principles of equality and self-determination of nations and peoples, primarily aimed against colonialism, and (c) principles of peaceful coexistence aimed at relations between states with different social systems.[108]

We shall briefly look at these concepts in this section, but first a historical overview is necessary.

During the immediate post-revolution period, it was postulated that a transitional phase had commenced. During this time, international law as a method of exploitation would be criticised by the socialist state, but it would still be recognised as a valid system. The two Soviet theorists Korovin and Pashukanis were the dominant influences in this phase. The transitional period demanded compromises in that, until the universal victory of the revolution, some forms of economic and technical [106] See Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, chapter 10, and Friedmann, Legal Theory, chapter 29.

[107] Engels, Anti-Duhring, quoted in Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, pp. 773–4.

[108] Theory of International Law, London, 1974, p. 4, and International Law (ed. G. I. Tunkin), Moscow, 1986, chapter 3. See also B. S. Chimni, International Law and World Order, New Delhi, 1993, chapter 5; K. Grzybowski, Soviet Public International Law, Leiden, 1970, especially chapter 1, and generally H. Baade, The Soviet Impact on International Law, Leiden, 1964, and Friedmann, Legal Theory, pp. 327–40. See also R. St J. Macdonald, 'Rummaging in the Ruins, Soviet International Law and Policy in the Early Years: Is Anything Left?' in Wellens, International Law, p. 61.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

co-operation would be required since they were fundamental for the existence of the international social order.[109] Pashukanis expressed the view that international law was an interclass law within which two antagonistic class systems would seek accommodation until the victory of the socialist system. Socialism and the Soviet Union could still use the legal institutions developed by and reflective of the capitalist system.[110] However, with the rise of Stalinism and the 'socialism in one country' call, the position hardened. Pashukanis altered his line and recanted. International law was not a form of temporary compromise between capitalist states and the USSR but rather a means of conducting the class war. The Soviet Union was bound only by those rules of international law which accorded with its purposes.[111]

The new approach in the late 1930s was reflected politically in Russia's successful attempt to join the League of Nations and its policy of wooing the Western powers, and legally by the ideas of Vyshinsky. He adopted a more legalistic view of international law and emphasised the Soviet acceptance of such principles as national self-determination, state sovereignty and the equality of states, but not others. The role of international law did not constitute a single international legal system binding all states. The Soviet Union would act in pursuance of Leninist–Stalinist foreign policy ideals and would not be bound by the rules to which it had not given express consent.[112]

The years that followed the Second World War saw a tightening up of Soviet doctrine as the Cold War gathered pace, but with the death of Stalin and the succession of Khrushchev a thaw set in. In theoretical terms the law of the transitional stage was replaced by the international law of peaceful co-existence. War was no longer regarded as inevitable between capitalist and socialist countries and a period of mutual tolerance and co-operation was inaugurated.[113]

Tunkin recognised that there was a single system of international law of universal scope rather than different branches covering socialist and capitalist countries, and that international law was founded upon agreements

[109] Tunkin, Theory of International Law, p. 5.
[110] Ibid., pp. 5–6. See also H. Babb and J. Hazard, Soviet Legal Philosophy, Cambridge, MA, 1951.
[111] Grzybowski, Soviet Public International Law, pp. 6–9. [112] Ibid., p. 9.
[113] Ibid., pp. 16–22. See also R. Higgins, Conflict of Interests, London, 1964, part III.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com between states which are binding upon them. He defined contemporary general international law as:

> the aggregate of norms which are created by agreement between states of different social systems, reflect the concordant wills of states and have a generally democratic character, regulate relations between them in the process of struggle and co-operation in the direction of ensuring peace and peaceful co-existence and freedom and independence of peoples, and are secured when necessary by coercion effectuated by states individually or collectively.[114]

It is interesting to note the basic elements here, such as the stress on state sovereignty, the recognition of different social systems and the aim of peaceful co-existence. The role of sanctions in law is emphasised and reflects much of the positivist influence upon Soviet thought. Such preoccupations were also reflected in the definition of international law contained in the leading Soviet textbook by Professor Kozhevnikov and others where it was stated that:

> international law can be defined as the aggregate of rules governing relations between states in the process of their conflict and co-operation, designed to safeguard their peaceful co-existence, expressing the will of the ruling classes of these states and defended in case of need by coercion applied by states individually or collectively.[115]

Originally, treaties alone were regarded as proper sources of international law but custom became accepted as a kind of tacit or implied agreement with great stress laid upon opinio juris or the legally binding element of custom. While state practice need not be general to create a custom, its recognition as a legal form must be.[116]

Peaceful co-existence itself rested upon certain basic concepts, for example non-intervention in the internal affairs of other states and the sovereignty of states. Any idea of a world authority was condemned as a violation of the latter principle. The doctrine of peaceful co-existence was also held to include such ideas as good neighbourliness, international co-operation and the observance in good faith of international obligations.

[114] Theory of International Law, p. 251. See also G. I. Tunkin, 'Co-existence and International Law', 95 HR, 1958, pp. 1, 51 ff., and E. McWhinney, 'Contemporary Soviet General Theory of International Law: Reflections on the Tunkin Era', 25 Canadian YIL, 1989, p. 187.

[115] International Law, Moscow, 1957, p. 7.

[116] Theory of International Law, p. 118. See also G. I. Tunkin, 'The Contemporary Soviet Theory of International Law', Current Legal Problems, London, 1978, p. 177.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The concept was regarded as based on specific trends of laws of societal development and as a specific form of class struggle between socialism and capitalism, one in which armed conflict is precluded.[117] It was an attempt, in essence, to reiterate the basic concepts of international law in a way that was taken to reflect an ideological trend. But it must be emphasised that the principles themselves have long been accepted by the international community.

While Tunkin at first attacked the development of regional systems of international law, he later came round to accepting a socialist law which reflected the special relationship between communist countries. The Soviet interventions in eastern Europe, particularly in Czechoslovakia in 1968, played a large part in augmenting such views.[118] In the Soviet view relations between socialist (communist) states represented a new, higher type of international relations and a socialist international law. Common socio-economic factors and a political community created an objective basis for lasting friendly relations whereas, by contrast, international capitalism involved the exploitation of the weak by the strong. The principles of socialist or proletarian internationalism constituted a unified system of international legal principles between countries of the socialist bloc arising by way of custom and treaty. Although the basic principles of respect for state sovereignty, non-interference in internal affairs and equality of states and peoples existed in general international law, the same principles in socialist international law were made more positive by the lack of economic rivalry and exploitation and by increased co-operation. Accordingly, these principles incorporated not only material obligations not to violate each other's rights, but also the duty to assist each other in enjoying and defending such rights against capitalist threats.[119]

The Soviet emphasis on territorial integrity and sovereignty, while designed in practice to protect the socialist states in a predominantly capitalist environment, proved of great attraction to the developing nations of the Third World, anxious too to establish their own national identities and counteract Western financial and cultural influences.

[117] Tunkin, 'Soviet Theory', pp. 35–48. See also F. Vallat, 'International Law – A Forward Look', 18 YBWA, 1964, p. 251; J. Hazard, 'Codifying Peaceful Co-existence', 55 AJIL, 1961, pp. 111–12; E. McWhinney, Peaceful Co-existence and Soviet–Western International Law, Leiden, 1964, and K. Grzybowski, 'Soviet Theory of International Law for the Seventies', 77 AJIL, 1983, p. 862.

[118] See Grzybowski, Soviet Public International Law, pp. 16–22.

[119] Tunkin, Theory of International Law, pp. 431–43.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

With the decline of the Cold War and the onset of perestroika (restructuring) in the Soviet Union, a process of re-evaluation in the field of international legal theory took place.[120] The concept of peaceful coexistence was modified and the notion of class warfare eliminated from the Soviet political lexicon. Global interdependence and the necessity for international co-operation were emphasised, as it was accepted that the tension between capitalism and socialism no longer constituted the major conflict in the contemporary world and that beneath the former dogmas lay many common interests.[121] The essence of new Soviet thinking was stated to lie in the priority of universal human values and the resolution of global problems, which is directly linked to the growing importance of international law in the world community. It was also pointed out that international law had to be universal and not artificially divided into capitalist, socialist and Third World 'international law' systems.[122]

Soviet writers and political leaders accepted that activities such as the interventions in Czechoslovakia in 1968 and Afghanistan in 1979 were contrary to international law, while the attempt to create a state based on the rule of law was seen as requiring the strengthening of the international legal system and the rule of law in international relations. In particular, a renewed emphasis upon the role of the United Nations became evident in Soviet policy.[123]

The dissolution of the Soviet Union in 1991 marked the end of the Cold War and the re-emergence of a system of international relations based upon multiple sources of power untrammelled by ideological determinacy. From that point,[124] Russia as the continuation of the former Soviet Union (albeit in different political and territorial terms) entered into the Western political system and defined its actions in terms of its own national interests free from principled hostility. The return to statehood of the Baltic states and the independence of the other former republics of the Soviet Union, coupled with the collapse of Yugoslavia, has constituted [120] See, for example, Perestroika and International Law (eds. A. Carty and G. Danilenko), Edinburgh, 1990; R. Müllerson, 'Sources of International Law: New Tendencies in Soviet Thinking', 83 AJIL, 1989, p. 494; V. Vereshchetin and R. Müllerson, 'International Law in an Interdependent World', 28 Columbia Journal of Transnational Law, 1990, p. 291, and R. Quigley, 'Perestroika and International Law', 82 AJIL, 1988, p. 788.

[121] Vereshchetin and Müllerson, 'International Law', p. 292.

[122] Ibid. [123] See Quigley, 'Perestroika', p. 794.

[124] See e.g. R. Müllerson, International Law, Rights and Politics, London, 1994. See also The End of the Cold War (eds. P. Allan and K. Goldmann), Dordrecht, 1992, and W. M. Reisman, 'International Law after the Cold War', 84 AJIL, 1990, p. 859.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

a political upheaval of major significance. The Cold War had imposed a dualistic superstructure upon international relations that had had implications for virtually all serious international political disputes and had fettered the operations of the United Nations in particular. Although the Soviet regime had been changing its approach quite significantly, the formal demise both of the communist system and of the state itself altered the nature of the international system and this has inevitably had consequences for international law.[125] The ending of inexorable superpower confrontation has led to an increase in instability in Europe and emphasised paradoxically both the revitalisation and the limitations of the United Nations.

While relatively little has previously been known of Chinese attitudes, a few points can be made. Western concepts are regarded primarily as aimed at preserving the dominance of the bourgeois class on the international scene. Soviet views were partially accepted but since the late 1950s and the growing estrangement between the two major communist powers, the Chinese concluded that the Russians were interested chiefly in maintaining the status quo and Soviet–American superpower supremacy. The Soviet concept of peaceful co-existence as the mainstay of contemporary international law was treated with particular suspicion and disdain.[126]

The Chinese conception of law was, for historical and cultural reasons, very different from that developed in the West. 'Law' never attained the important place in Chinese society that it did in European civilisation.[127] A sophisticated bureaucracy laboured to attain harmony and equilibrium, and a system of legal rights to protect the individual in the Western sense did not really develop. It was believed that society would be best served by example and established morality, rather than by rules and sanctions. This Confucian philosophy was, however, swept aside after the successful [125] See e.g. R. Bilder, 'International Law in the "New World Order": Some Preliminary Reflections', 1 Florida State University Journal of Transnational Law and Policy, 1992, p. 1.

[126] See H. Chiu, 'Communist China's Attitude towards International Law', 60 AJIL, 1966, p. 245; J. K. Fairbank, The Chinese World Order, Cambridge, 1968; J. Cohen, China's Practice of International Law, Princeton, 1972; Anglo-Chinese Educational Trust, China's World View, London, 1979; J. Cohen and H. Chiu, People's China and International Law, Princeton, 2 vols., 1974, and C. Kim, 'The People's Republic of China and the Charter-based International Legal Order', 72 AJIL, 1978, p. 317.

[127] See Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, pp. 760–3; S. Van der Sprenkel, Legal Institutions in Northern China, New York, 1962, and R. Unger, Law in Modern Society, New York, 1976, pp. 86–109.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

communist revolution, to be replaced by strict Marxism–Leninism, with its emphasis on class warfare.[128]

The Chinese seem to have recognised several systems of international law, for example, Western, socialist and revisionist (Soviet Union), and to have implied that only with the ultimate spread of socialism would a universal system be possible.[129] International agreements are regarded as the primary source of international law and China has entered into many treaties and conventions and carried them out as well as other nations.[130] One exception, of course, is China's disavowal of the so-called 'unequal treaties' whereby Chinese territory was annexed by other powers, in particular the Tsarist Empire, in the nineteenth century.[131]

On the whole, international law has been treated as part of international politics and subject to considerations of power and expediency, as well as ideology. Where international rules conform with Chinese policies and interests, then they will be observed. Where they do not, they will be ignored.

However, now that the isolationist phase of its history is over, relations with other nations established and its entry into the United Nations secured, China has adopted a more active role in international relations, an approach more in keeping with its rapidly growing economic power. China has now become fully engaged in world politics and this has led to a legalisation of its view of international law, as indeed occurred with the Soviet Union.

The Third World

In the evolution of international affairs since the Second World War one of the most decisive events has been the disintegration of the colonial empires and the birth of scores of new states in the so-called Third World. This has thrust onto the scene states which carry with them a legacy of bitterness over their past status as well as a host of problems relating to [128] Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, and H. Li, 'The Role of Law in Communist China', China Quarterly, 1970, p. 66, cited in Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, pp. 801–8.

[129] See e.g. Cohen and Chiu, People's China, pp. 62–4.

[130] Ibid., pp. 77–82, and part VIII generally.

[131] See e.g. I. Detter, 'The Problem of Unequal Treaties', 15 ICLQ, 1966, p. 1069; F. Nozari, Unequal Treaties in International Law, Stockholm, 1971; Chiu, 'Communist China's Attitude', pp. 239–67, and L.-F. Chen, State Succession Relating to Unequal Treaties, Hamden, 1974.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

their social, economic and political development.[132] In such circumstances it was only natural that the structure and doctrines of international law would come under attack. The nineteenth century development of the law of nations founded upon Eurocentrism and imbued with the values of Christian, urbanised and expanding Europe[133] did not, understandably enough, reflect the needs and interests of the newly independent states of the mid- and late twentieth century. It was felt that such rules had encouraged and then reflected their subjugation, and that changes were required.[134]

It is basically those ideas of international law that came to fruition in the nineteenth century that have been so clearly rejected, that is, those principles that enshrined the power and domination of the West.[135] The underlying concepts of international law have not been discarded. On the contrary. The new nations have eagerly embraced the ideas of the sovereignty and equality of states and the principles of non-aggression and non-intervention, in their search for security within the bounds of a commonly accepted legal framework.

While this new internationalisation of international law that has occurred in the last fifty years has destroyed its European-based homogeneity, it has emphasised its universalist scope.[136] The composition of, for example, both the International Court of Justice and the Security Council of the United Nations mirrors such developments. Article 9 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice points out that the main forms of civilisation and the principal legal systems of the world must be represented within the Court, and there is an arrangement that of the ten non-permanent seats in the Security Council five should go to Afro-Asian [132] See e.g. R. P. Anand, 'Attitude of the Afro-Asian States Towards Certain Problems of International Law', 15 ICLQ, 1966, p. 35; T. O. Elias, New Horizons in International Law, Leiden, 1980, and Higgins, Conflict of Interests, part II. See also Hague Academy of International Law, Colloque, The Future of International Law in a Multicultural World, especially pp. 117–42, and Henkin, How Nations Behave, pp. 121–7.

[133] See e.g. Verzijl, International Law in Historical Perspective, vol. I, pp. 435–6. See also B. Roling, International Law in an Expanded World, Leiden, 1960, p. 10.

[134] The converse of this has been the view of some writers that the universalisation of international law has led to a dilution of its content: see e.g. Friedmann, Changing Structure, p. 6; J. Stone, Quest for Survival: The Role of Law and Foreign Policy, Sydney, 1961, p. 88, and J. Brierly, The Law of Nations, 6th edn, Oxford, p. 43.

[135] See e.g. Alexandrowicz, European–African Confrontation.

[136] See F. C. Okoye, International Law and the New African States, London, 1972; T. O. Elias, Africa and the Development of International Law, Leiden, 1972, and Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 205–51.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

states and two to Latin American states (the others going to Europe and other states). The composition of the International Law Commission has also recently been increased and structured upon geographic lines.[137]

The influence of the new states has been felt most of all within the General Assembly, where they constitute a majority of the 192 member states.[138] The content and scope of the various resolutions and declarations emanating from the Assembly are proof of their impact and contain a record of their fears, hopes and concerns.

The Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples of 1960, for example, enshrined the right of colonies to obtain their sovereignty with the least possible delay and called for the recognition of the principle of self-determination. This principle, which is discussed elsewhere in this book,[139] is regarded by most authorities as a settled rule of international law although with undetermined borders. Nevertheless, it symbolises the rise of the post-colonial states and the effect they are having upon the development of international law.

Their concern for the recognition of the sovereignty of states is complemented by their support of the United Nations and its Charter and supplemented by their desire for 'economic self-determination' or the right of permanent sovereignty over natural resources.[140] This expansion of international law into the field of economics was a major development of the twentieth century and is evidenced in myriad ways, for example, by the creation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and the establishment of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank.

The interests of the new states of the Third World are often in conflict with those of the industrialised nations, witness disputes over nationalisations. But it has to be emphasised that, contrary to many fears expressed in the early years of the decolonisation saga, international law has not been discarded nor altered beyond recognition. Its framework has been retained as the new states, too, wish to obtain the benefits of rules such as those governing diplomatic relations and the controlled use of force, while campaigning against rules which run counter to their perceived interests.

While the new countries share a common history of foreign dominance and underdevelopment, compounded by an awakening of national [137] By General Assembly resolution 36/39, twenty-one of the thirty-four members are to be nationals of Afro-Asian–Latin American states.

[138] See above, note 105. [139] See below, chapter 5, p. 205.

[140] See below, chapter 14, p. 827.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

identity, it has to be recognised that they are not a homogenous group. Widely differing cultural, social and economic attitudes and stages of development characterise them, and the rubric of the 'Third World' masks diverse political affiliations. On many issues the interests of the new states conflict with each other and this is reflected in the different positions adopted. The states possessing oil and other valuable natural resources are separated from those with few or none and the states bordering on oceans are to be distinguished from landlocked states. The list of diversity is endless and variety governs the make-up of the southern hemisphere to a far greater degree than in the north.

It is possible that in legal terms tangible differences in approach may emerge in the future as the passions of decolonisation die down and the Western supremacy over international law is further eroded. This trend will also permit a greater understanding of, and greater recourse to, historical traditions and conceptions that pre-date colonisation and an increasing awareness of their validity for the future development of international law.[141]

In the medium term, however, it has to be recognised that with the end of the Cold War and the rapid development of Soviet (then Russian)–American co-operation, the axis of dispute is turning from East–West to North–South. This is beginning to manifest itself in a variety of issues ranging from economic law to the law of the sea and human rights, while the impact of modern technology has hardly yet been appreciated.[142] Together with such factors, the development of globalisation has put additional stress upon the traditional tension between universalism and particularism.[143] Globalisation in the sense of interdependence of a high order of individuals, groups and corporations, both public and private, across national boundaries, might be seen as the universalisation of Western civilisation and thus the triumph of one special particularism.

[141] See e.g. H. Sarin, 'The Asian–African States and the Development of International Law', in Hague Academy Colloque, p. 117; Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 205–51, and R. Westbrook, 'Islamic International Law and Public International Law: Separate Expressions of World Order', 33 Va. JIL, 1993, p. 819. See also C. W. Jenks, The Common Law of Mankind, Oxford, 1958, p. 169. Note also the references by the Tribunal in the Eritrea/Yemen cases to historic title and regional legal traditions: see the judgment in Phase One: Territorial Sovereignty, 1998, 114 ILR, pp. 1, 37 ff. and Phase Two: Maritime Delimitation, 1999, 119 ILR, pp. 417, 448.

[142] See e.g. M. Lachs, 'Thoughts on Science, Technology and World Law', 86 AJIL, 1992, p. 673.

[143] See Koskenniemi, Gentle Civilizer of Nations. See also G. Simpson, Great Powers and Outlaw States: Unequal Sovereigns in the International Legal Order, Cambridge, 2004.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

On the other hand, particularism (in the guise of cultural relativism) has sometimes been used as a justification for human rights abuses free from international supervision or criticism.

Suggestions for further reading

T. M. Franck, The Power of Legitimacy Among Nations, Oxford, 1990
L. Henkin, International Law: Politics and Values, Dordrecht, 1995
R. Higgins, Problems and Process, Oxford, 1994
A. Nussbaum, A Concise History of the Law of Nations, revised edition, New York, 1954

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

2

International law today

The expanding legal scope of international concern

International law since the middle of the last century has been developing in many directions, as the complexities of life in the modern era have multiplied. For, as already emphasised, law reflects the conditions and cultural traditions of the society within which it operates. The community evolves a certain specific set of values – social, economic and political – and this stamps its mark on the legal framework which orders life in that environment. Similarly, international law is a product of its environment. It has developed in accordance with the prevailing notions of international relations and to survive it must be in harmony with the realities of the age.

Nevertheless, there is a continuing tension between those rules already established and the constantly evolving forces that seek changes within the system. One of the major problems of international law is to determine when and how to incorporate new standards of behaviour and new realities of life into the already existing framework, so that, on the one hand, the law remains relevant and, on the other, the system itself is not too vigorously disrupted.

Changes that occur within the international community can be momentous and reverberate throughout the system. For example, the advent of nuclear arms created a status quo in Europe and a balance of terror throughout the world. It currently constitutes a factor of unease as certain states seek to acquire nuclear technology. Another example is the technological capacity to mine the oceans and the consequent questions as to the nature and beneficiaries of exploitation.[1] The rise of international terrorism has posited new challenges to the system as states and international organisations struggle to deal with this phenomenon while retaining

[1] See below, chapter 11.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

respect for the sovereignty of states and for human rights.[2] There are several instances of how modern developments demand a constant reappraisal of the structure of international law and its rules.

The scope of international law today is immense. From the regulation of space expeditions to the question of the division of the ocean floor, and from the protection of human rights to the management of the international financial system, its involvement has spread out from the primary concern with the preservation of peace, to embrace all the interests of contemporary international life.

But the raison d'être of international law and the determining factor in its composition remains the needs and characteristics of the international political system. Where more than one entity exists within a system, there has to be some conception as to how to deal with other such entities, whether it be on the basis of co-existence or hostility. International law as it has developed since the seventeenth century has adopted the same approach and has in general (though with notable exceptions) eschewed the idea of permanent hostility and enmity. Because the state, while internally supreme, wishes to maintain its sovereignty externally and needs to cultivate other states in an increasingly interdependent world, it must acknowledge the rights of others. This acceptance of rights possessed by all states, something unavoidable in a world where none can stand alone, leads inevitably to a system to regulate and define such rights and, of course, obligations.

And so one arrives at some form of international legal order, no matter how unsophisticated and how occasionally positively disorderly.[3] The current system developed in the context of European civilisation as it progressed, but this has changed. The rise of the United States and the Soviet Union mirrored the decline of Europe, while the process of decolonisation also had a considerable impact. More recently, the collapse of the Soviet Empire and the Soviet Union, the rise of India and China as major powers and the phenomenon of globalisation are also impacting deeply upon the system. Faced with radical changes in the structure of power, international law needs to come to terms with new ideas and challenges.

[2] See below, chapter 20.

[3] For views as to the precise definition and characteristics of the international order or system or community, see G. Schwarzenberger and E. D. Brown, A Manual of International Law, 6th edn, London, 1976, pp. 9–12; H. Yalem, 'The Concept of World Order', 29 YBWA, 1975, and I. Pogany, 'The Legal Foundations of World Order', 37 YBWA, 1983, p. 277.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Eurocentric character of international law has been gravely weakened in the last sixty years or so and the opinions, hopes and needs of other cultures and civilisations are now playing an increasing role in the evolution of world juridical thought.[4]

International law reflects first and foremost the basic state-oriented character of world politics and this essentially because the state became over time the primary repository of the organised hopes of peoples, whether for protection or for more expansive aims. Units of formal independence benefiting from equal sovereignty in law and equal possession of the basic attributes of statehood[5] have succeeded in creating a system enshrining such values. Examples that could be noted here include non-intervention in internal affairs, territorial integrity, non-use of force and equality of voting in the United Nations General Assembly. However, in addition to this, many factors cut across state borders and create a tension in world politics, such as inadequate economic relationships, international concern for human rights and the rise in new technological forces.[6] State policies and balances of power, both international and regional, are a necessary framework within which international law operates, as indeed are domestic political conditions and tensions. Law mirrors the concern of forces within states and between states.

It is also important to realise that states need law in order to seek and attain certain goals, whether these be economic well-being, survival and security or ideological advancement. The system therefore has to be certain enough for such goals to be ascertainable, and flexible enough to permit change when this becomes necessary due to the confluence of forces demanding it.[7]

International law, however, has not just expanded horizontally to embrace the new states which have been established since the end of the Second World War; it has extended itself to include individuals, groups and international organisations, both private and public, within its scope. It has also moved into new fields covering such issues as international trade, problems of environmental protection, human rights and outer space exploration.

[4] See e.g. L. C. Green, 'Is There a Universal International Law Today?', 23 Canadian YIL, 1985, p. 3.

[5] See below, chapter 5, p. 211.

[6] For examples of this in the context of the law relating to territory, see M. N. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa: International Legal Issues, Oxford, 1986, pp. 1–11.

[7] See S. Hoffman, 'International Systems and International Law', 14 World Politics, 1961–2, p. 205.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The growth of positivism in the nineteenth century had the effect of focusing the concerns of international law upon sovereign states. They alone were the 'subjects' of international law and were to be contrasted with the status of non-independent states and individuals as 'objects' of international law. They alone created the law and restrictions upon their independence could not be presumed.[8] But the gradual sophistication of positivist doctrine, combined with the advent of new approaches to the whole system of international relations, has broken down this exclusive emphasis and extended the roles played by non-state entities, such as individuals, multinational firms and international institutions.[9] It was, of course, long recognised that individuals were entitled to the benefits of international law, but it is only recently that they have been able to act directly rather than rely upon their national states.

The Nuremberg and Tokyo Tribunals set up by the victorious Allies after the close of the Second World War were a vital part of this process. Many of those accused were found guilty of crimes against humanity and against peace and were punished accordingly. It was a recognition of individual responsibility under international law without the usual interposition of the state and has been reinforced with the establishment of the Yugoslav and Rwanda War Crimes Tribunals in the mid-1990s and the International Criminal Court in 1998.[10] Similarly the 1948 Genocide Convention provided for the punishment of offenders after conviction by national courts or by an international criminal tribunal.[11] The developing concern with human rights is another aspect of this move towards increasing the role of the individual in international law. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted by the United Nations in 1948 lists a series of political and social rights, although it is only a guideline and not legally binding as such. The European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed in 1950 and the International Covenants on Human Rights of 1966 are of a different nature and binding upon the signatories. In an effort to function satisfactorily various bodies of a supervisory and implementational nature were established. Within the European Union, individuals and corporations have certain rights of direct appeal to the European Court of Justice against decisions of the various Union institutions. In addition, individuals may appear before certain international tribunals. Nevertheless, the whole subject has been highly controversial, with some writers (for example Soviet theorists prior [8] See the Lotus case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, p. 18.

[9] See further below, chapter 5.
[10] See below, chapter 8.
[11] Ibid.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

to perestroika) denying that individuals may have rights as distinct from duties under international law, but it is indicative of the trend away from the exclusivity of the state.[12]

Together with the evolution of individual human rights, the rise of international organisations marks perhaps the key distinguishing feature of modern international law. In fact, international law cannot in the contemporary era be understood without reference to the growth in number and influence of such intergovernmental institutions, and of these the most important by far is the United Nations.[13] The UN comprises the vast majority of states (there are currently 192 member states) and that alone constitutes a political factor of high importance in the process of diplomatic relations and negotiations and indeed facilitates international co-operation and norm creation. Further, of course, the existence of the Security Council as an executive organ with powers to adopt resolutions in certain circumstances that are binding upon all member states is unique in the history of international relations.

International organisations have now been accepted as possessing rights and duties of their own and a distinctive legal personality. The International Court of Justice in 1949 delivered an Advisory Opinion[14] in which it stated that the United Nations was a subject of international law and could enforce its rights by bringing international claims, in this case against Israel following the assassination of Count Bernadotte, a United Nations official. Such a ruling can be applied to embrace other international institutions, like the International Labour Organisation and the Food and Agriculture Organisation, which each have a judicial character of their own. Thus, while states remain the primary subjects of international law, they are now joined by other non-state entities, whose importance is likely to grow even further in the future.

The growth of regional organisations should also be noted at this stage. Many of these were created for reasons of military security, for example NATO and the opposing Warsaw Pact organisations, others as an expression of regional and cultural identity such as the Organisation of African Unity (now the African Union) and the Organisation of American States. In a class of its own is the European Union which has gone far down the road of economic co-ordination and standardisation and has a range of [12] See further below, chapters 6 and 7. [13] See further below, chapter 22.

[14] Reparation for Injuries Suffered in the Service of the United Nations, ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 174; 16 AD, p. 318.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

common institutions serviced by a growing bureaucracy stationed primarily at Brussels.

Such regional organisations have added to the developing sophistication of international law by the insertion of 'regional–international law sub-systems' within the universal framework and the consequent evolution of rules that bind only member states.[15]

The range of topics covered by international law has expanded hand in hand with the upsurge in difficulties faced and the proliferation in the number of participants within the system. It is no longer exclusively concerned with issues relating to the territory or jurisdiction of states narrowly understood, but is beginning to take into account the specialised problems of contemporary society. Many of these have already been referred to, such as the vital field of human rights, the growth of an international economic law covering financial and development matters, concern with environmental despoliation, the space exploration effort and the exploitation of the resources of the oceans and deep seabed. One can mention also provisions relating to the bureaucracy of international institutions (international administrative law), international labour standards, health regulations and communications controls. Many of these trends may be seen as falling within, or rather reflecting, the phenomenon of globalisation, a term which encompasses the inexorable movement to greater interdependence founded upon economic, communications and cultural bases and operating quite independently of national regulation.[16] This in [15] See generally below, chapter 23.

[16] See e.g. A. Giddens, The Consequences of Modernity, Stanford, 1990; S. Sur, 'The State Between Fragmentation and Globalisation', 8 EJIL, 1997, p. 421; B. Simma and A. Paulus, 'The "International Community": Facing the Challenge of Globalisation. General Conclusions', 9 EJIL, 1998, p. 266, and P. M. Dupuy, 'International Law: Torn Between Coexistence, Co-operation and Globalisation. General Conclusions', 9 EJIL, 1998, p. 278. See also the Declaration of Judge Bedjaoui in the Advisory Opinion on The Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 270–1. Note that Philip Bobbitt has described five developments challenging the nation-state system, and thus in essence characterising the globalisation challenge, as follows: the recognition of human rights as norms requiring adherence within all states regardless of internal laws; the widespread deployment of weapons of mass destruction rendering the defence of state borders ineffectual for the protection of the society within; the proliferation of global and transnational threats transcending state boundaries such as those that damage the environment or threaten states through migration, population expansion, disease or famine; the growth of a world economic regime that ignores borders in the movement of capital investment to a degree that effectively curtails states in the management of their economic affairs; and the creation of a global communications network that penetrates borders electronically and threatens national languages, customs and cultures, The Shield of Achilles, London, 2002, p. xxii.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

turn stimulates disputes of an almost ideological nature concerning, for example, the relationship between free trade and environmental protection.[17] To this may be added the pressures of democracy and human rights, both operating to some extent as countervailing influences to the classical emphasis upon the territorial sovereignty and jurisdiction of states.

Modern theories and interpretations

At this point some modern theories as to the nature and role of international law will be briefly noted.

Positive Law and Natural Law

Throughout the history of thought there has been a complex relationship between idealism and realism, between the way things ought to be and the way things are, and the debate as to whether legal philosophy should incorporate ethical standards or confine itself to an analysis of the law as it stands is a vital one that continues today.[18]

The positivist school, which developed so rapidly in the pragmatic, optimistic world of the nineteenth century, declared that law as it exists should be analysed empirically, shorn of all ethical elements. Moral aspirations were all well and good but had no part in legal science. Man-made law must be examined as such and the metaphysical speculations of Natural Law rejected because what counted were the practical realities, not general principles which were imprecise and vague, not to say ambiguous.[19]

This kind of approach to law in society reached its climax with Kelsen's 'Pure Theory of Law'. Kelsen defined law solely in terms of itself and eschewed any element of justice, which was rather to be considered within the discipline of political science. Politics, sociology and history were all [17] See e.g. Myers v. Canada 121 ILR, pp. 72, 110.

[18] See e.g. D. Lyons, Ethics and the Rule of Law, London, 1984; R. Dworkin, Taking Rights Seriously, London, 1977; H. L. A. Hart, The Concept of Law, Oxford, 1961, and P. Stein and J. Shand, Legal Values in Western Society, Edinburgh, 1974. See also R. Dias, Jurisprudence, 5th edn, London, 1985.

[19] See Hart, Concept of Law, and Hart, 'Positivism and the Separation of Law and Morals', 71 Harvard Law Review, 1958, p. 593. Cf. L. Fuller, 'Positivism and Fidelity to Law – A Reply to Professor Hart', 71 Harvard Law Review, 1958, p. 630. See also D. Anzilotti, Cours de Droit International, Paris, 1929, and B. Kingsbury, 'Legal Positivism as Normative Politics: International Society, Balance of Power and Lassa Oppenheim's Positive International Law', 13 EJIL, 2002, p. 401.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

excised from the pure theory which sought to construct a logical unified structure based on a formal appraisal.[20]

Law was to be regarded as a normative science, that is, consisting of rules which lay down patterns of behaviour. Such rules, or norms, depend for their legal validity on a prior norm and this process continues until one reaches what is termed the basic norm of the whole system. This basic norm is the foundation of the legal edifice, because rules which can be related back to it therefore become legal rules. To give a simple example, a court order empowering an official to enforce a fine is valid if the court had that power which depends upon an Act of Parliament establishing the court. A rule becomes a legal rule if it is in accordance with a previous (and higher) legal rule and so on. Layer builds upon layer and the foundation of it all is the basic norm.[21]

The weakness of Kelsen's 'pure' system lies primarily in the concept of the basic norm for it relies for its existence upon non-legal issues. In fact, it is a political concept, and in the United Kingdom it would probably be the principle of the supremacy of Parliament.[22]

This logical, structured system of validity founded upon an extra-legal concept encounters difficulties when related to international law. For Kelsen international law is a primitive legal order because of its lack of strong legislative, judicial and enforcement organs and its consequent resemblance to a pre-state society. It is accordingly characterised by the use of self-help.[23] The principles of international law are valid if they can be traced back to the basic norm of the system, which is hierarchical in the same sense as a national legal system. For Kelsen, the basic norm is the rule that identifies custom as the source of law, or stipulates that 'the states ought to behave as they customarily behaved'.[24] One of the prime rules of this category is pacta sunt servanda declaring that agreements must be carried out in good faith and upon that rule is founded the second stage within the international legal order. This second stage consists of the network of norms created by international treaties and conventions [20] 'The Pure Theory of Law', 50 LQR, 1934, pp. 474, 477–85 and 51 LQR, 1935, pp. 517–22. See also the articles collected in 'The European Tradition in International Law: Hans Kelsen', 9 EJIL, 1998, pp. 287 ff.

[21] Kelsen, Pure Theory.

[22] See J. Stone, 'Mystery and Mystique in the Basic Norm', 26 MLR, 1963, p. 34, and J. Raz, Practical Reason and Norms, Oxford, 1975, pp. 129–31.

[23] General Theory of Law and State, Cambridge, 1946, pp. 328 ff. See also J. Lador-Lederer, 'Some Observations on the "Vienna School" in International Law', 17 NILR, 1970, p. 126.

[24] Kelsen, General Theory of Law and State, pp. 369–70.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

and leads on to the third stage which includes those rules established by organs which have been set up by international treaties, for instance, decisions of the International Court of Justice.[25]

The problem with Kelsen's formulation of the basic norm of international law is that it appears to be tautological: it merely repeats that states which obey rules ought to obey those rules.[26] It seems to leave no room for the progressive development of international law by new practices accepted as law for that involves states behaving differently from the way they have been behaving. Above all, it fails to answer the question as to why custom is binding.

Nevertheless, it is a model of great logical consistency which helps explain, particularly with regard to national legal systems, the proliferation of rules and the importance of validity which gives as it were a mystical seal of approval to the whole structured process. It helps illustrate how rule leads to rule as stage succeeds stage in a progression of norms forming a legal order.

Another important element in Kelsen's interpretation of law is his extreme 'monist' stance. International law and municipal law are not two separate systems but one interlocking structure and the former is supreme. Municipal law finds its ultimate justification in the rules of international law by a process of delegation within one universal normative system.[27]

Kelsen's pure theory seemed to mark the end of that particular road, and positivism was analysed in more sociological terms by Hart in his book The Concept of Law in 1961.

Hart comprehends law as a system of rules, based upon the interaction of primary and secondary rules. The former, basically, specify standards of behaviour while the latter provide the means for identifying and developing them and thus specify the constitutional procedures for change. Primitive societies would possess only the primary rules and so would be characterised by uncertainty, inefficiency and stagnation, but with increasing sophistication the secondary rules would develop and identify authority and enable the rules to be adapted to changing circumstances in a regular and accepted manner.[28]

[25] Ibid. [26] Hart terms this 'mere useless reduplication': Concept of Law, p. 230.
[27] General Theory of Law and State, pp. 366–8. See further below, chapter 4.
[28] Concept of Law, chapter 5. See also e.g. Dworkin, Taking Rights Seriously; Raz, Practical Reason, and N. MacCormick, Legal Reasoning and Legal Theory, Oxford, 1978.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The international legal order is a prime example of a simple form of social structure which consists only of the primary rules, because of its lack of a centralised legislature, network of recognised courts with compulsory jurisdiction and organised means of enforcement. Accordingly, it has no need of, or rather has not yet evolved, a basic norm or in Hart's terminology a rule of recognition, by reference to which the validity of all the rules may be tested. Following this train of thought, Hart concludes that the rules of international law do not as yet constitute a 'system' but are merely a 'set of rules'. Of course, future developments may see one particular principle, such as pacta sunt servanda, elevated to the state of a validating norm but in the present situation this has not yet occurred.[29]

This approach can be criticised for its over-concentration upon rules to the exclusion of other important elements in a legal system such as principles and policies,[30] and more especially as regards international law, for failing to recognise the sophistication or vitality of the system. In particular, the distinction between a system and a set of rules in the context of international law is a complex issue and one which is difficult to delineate.

The strength of the positivist movement waned in the last century as the old certainties disintegrated and social unrest grew. Law, as always, began to reflect the dominant pressures of the age, and new theories as to the role of law in society developed. Writers started examining the effects of sociological phenomena upon the legal order and the nature of the legal process itself, with analyses of judicial behaviour and the means whereby rules were applied in actual practice. This was typified by Roscoe Pound's view of the law as a form of social engineering, balancing the various interests within the society in the most efficacious way.[31] Law was regarded as a method of social control and conceptual approaches were rejected in favour of functional analyses. What actually happened within the legal system, what claims were being brought and how they were satisfied: these were the watchwords of the sociological school.[32]

It was in one sense a move away from the ivory tower and into the courtroom. Empirical investigations proliferated, particularly in the United States, and the sciences of psychology and anthropology as well

[29] Concept of Law, pp. 228–31. [30] See Dworkin, Taking Rights Seriously.
[31] See e.g. Philosophy of Law, New Haven, 1954, pp. 42–7. See also M. D. A. Freeman, The Legal Structure, London, 1974, chapter 4.
[32] Outlines of Jurisprudence, 5th edn, Cambridge, 1943, pp. 116–19.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

as sociology became allied to jurisprudence. Such concern with the wider social context led to the theories of Realism, which treated law as an institution functioning within a particular community with a series of jobs to do. A study of legal norms within a closed logical system in the Kelsenite vein was regarded as unable to reveal very much of the actual operation of law in society. For this an understanding of the behaviour of courts and the various legal officials was required. Historical and ethical factors were relegated to a minor role within the realist–sociological tradition, with its concentration upon field studies and 'technical' dissections. Legal rules were no longer to be accepted as the heart of the legal system.[33]

Before one looks at contemporary developments of this approach and how they have affected interpretations of international law, the revival of Natural Law has first to be considered.

In the search for meaning in life and an ethical basis to law, Natural Law has adopted a variety of different approaches. One of them has been a refurbishment of the principles enumerated by Aquinas and adopted by the Catholic Church, emphasising the dignity of man and the supremacy of reason together with an affirmation of the immorality (though not necessarily the invalidity) of law contrary to right reason and the eternal law of God.[34] A more formalistic and logic-oriented trend has been exemplified by writers such as Stammler, who tried to erect a logical structure of law with an inbuilt concept of 'Natural Law with a changing content'. This involved contrasting the concept of law, which was intended to be an abstract, formal definition universally applicable, with the idea of law, which embodies the purposes and direction of the system. This latter precept varied, of necessity, in different social and cultural contexts.[35]

As distinct from this formal idealist school, there has arisen a sociologically inspired approach to the theme of Natural Law represented by Gény and Duguit. This particular trend rejected the emphasis upon form, and concentrated instead upon the definition of Natural Law in terms

[33] See e.g. K. Llewellyn, The Common Law Tradition, Boston, 1960, and Jurisprudence, Chicago, 1962. See also W. Twining, Karl Llewellyn and the Realist Movement, London, 1973, and L. Loevinger, 'Jurimetrics – The Next Step Forward', 33 Minnesota Law Review, 1949, p. 455.

[34] See e.g. J. Maritain, Man and the State, Paris, 1951, and J. Dabin, General Theory of Law, 2nd edn, 1950.

[35] See e.g. R. Stammler, Theory of Justice, New York, 1925, and G. Del Vecchio, Formal Bases of Law, Boston, 1921.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of universal factors, physical, psychological, social and historical, which dominate the framework of society within which the law operated.[36]

The discussion of Natural Law increased and gained in importance following the Nazi experience. It stimulated a German philosopher, Radbruch, to formulate a theory whereby unjust laws had to be opposed by virtue of a higher, Natural Law.[37]

As far as international law is concerned, the revival of Natural Law came at a time of increasing concern with international justice and the formation of international institutions. Many of the ideas and principles of international law today are rooted in the notion of Natural Law and the relevance of ethical standards to the legal order, such as the principles of non-aggression and human rights.[38]

New approaches[39]

Traditionally, international law has been understood in a historical manner and studied chronologically. This approach was especially marked in the nineteenth century as international relations multiplied and international conferences and agreements came with increasing profusion. Between the world wars, the opening of government archives released a wealth of material and further stimulated a study of diplomatic history, [36] See e.g. F. Gény, Méthode d'Interprétation et Sources en Droit Privé Positif, Paris, 1899, and L. Duguit, Law in the Modern State, New York, 1919, and 'Objective Law', 20 Columbia Law Review, 1920, p. 817.

[37] Introduction to Legal Philosophy, 1947. See also Hart, 'Positivism'; Fuller, 'Positivism', and Fuller, 'The Legal Philosophy of Gustav Radbruch', 6 Journal of Legal Education, 1954, p. 481.

[38] See H. Lauterpacht, International Law and Human Rights, London, 1950. Note more generally the approach of J. Rawls, A Theory of Justice, Oxford, 1971, and A. D'Amato, 'International Law and Rawls' Theory of Justice', 5 Denver Journal of International Law and Policy, 1975, p. 525. See also J. Boyle, 'Ideals and Things: International Legal Scholarship and the Prison-house of Language', 26 Harvard International Law Journal, 1985, p. 327; A. D'Amato, 'Is International Law Part of Natural Law?', 9 Vera Lex, 1989, p. 8; E. Midgley, The Natural Law Tradition and the Theory of International Relations, London, 1975, and C. Dominicé, 'Le Grand Retour du Droit Naturel en Droit des Gens', Mélanges Grossen, 1992, p. 399.

[39] See e.g. B. S. Chimni, International Law and World Order, New Delhi, 1993; A. Cassese, International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005, chapter 1, and R. Müllerson, Ordering Anarchy: International Law in International Society, The Hague, 2000. See also D. J. Bederman, The Spirit of International Law, Athens, 2002; A. Buchanan, Justice, Legitimacy and Self-Determination, Oxford, 2004; International Law and its Others (ed. A. Orford), Cambridge, 2006; S. Rosenne, The Perplexities of Modern International Law, Leiden, 2004, and P. M. Dupuy, L'Unité de l'Ordre Juridique International, Leiden, 2003.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

while the creation of such international institutions as the League of Nations and the Permanent Court of International Justice encouraged an appreciation of institutional processes.

However, after the Second World War a growing trend appeared intent upon the analysis of power politics and the comprehension of international relations in terms of the capacity to influence and dominate. The approach was a little more sophisticated than might appear at first glance, for it involved a consideration of social and economic as well as political data that had a bearing upon a state's ability to withstand as well as direct pressures.[40] Nevertheless, it was a pessimistic interpretation because of its centring upon power and its uses as the motive force of inter-state activity.

The next 'wave of advance', as it has been called, witnessed the successes of the behaviouralist movement. This particular train of thought introduced elements of psychology, anthropology and sociology into the study of international relations and paralleled similar developments within the realist school. It reflected the altering emphasis from analyses in terms of idealistic or cynical ('realistic') conceptions of the world political order, to a mechanistic discussion of the system as it operates today, by means of field studies and other tools of the social sciences. Indeed, it is more a method of approach to law and society than a theory in the traditional sense.[41]

One can trace the roots of this school of thought to the changing conceptions of the role of government in society. The nineteenth-century ethic of individualism and the restriction of state intervention to the very minimum has changed radically. The emphasis is now more upon the responsibility of the government towards its citizens, and the phenomenal growth in welfare legislation illustrates this. Rules and regulations controlling wide fields of human activity, something that would have been unheard of in the mid-nineteenth century, have proliferated throughout the nations of the developed world and theory has had to try and keep up with such re-orientations.

[40] See e.g. H. Morgenthau, Politics Among Nations, 4th edn, New York, 1967, and K. Thompson, Political Realism and the Crisis of World Politics: An American Approach to Foreign Policy, Princeton, 1960. See also A. Slaughter Burley, 'International Law and International Relations Theory: A Dual Agenda', 87 AJIL, 1993, p. 205, and A.-M. Slaughter, A New World Order, Princeton, 2004; R. Aron, Paix et Guerre Entre des Nations, Paris, 1984; M. Koskenniemi, The Gentle Civilizer of Nations, Cambridge, 2001, chapter 6.

[41] See e.g. Contending Approaches to International Politics (eds. K. Knorr and J. Rosenau), Princeton 1969, and W. Gould and M. Barkun, International Law and the Social Sciences, Princeton, 1970.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Since the law now plays a much deeper role in society with the increase in governmental intervention, impetus has been given to legal theories that reflect this growing involvement. Law, particularly in the United States, is seen as a tool to effect changes in society and realist doctrine underlines this. It emphasises that it is community values and policy decisions that determine the nature of the law and accordingly the role of the judge is that much more important. He is no longer an interpreter of a body of formal legal rules, but should be seen more as an active element in making decisions of public policy.

This means that to understand the operation of law, one has to consider the character of the particular society, its needs and values. Law thus becomes a dynamic process and has to be studied in the context of society and not merely as a collection of legal rules capable of being comprehended on their own. The social sciences have led the way in this reinterpretation of society and their influence has been very marked on the behavioural method of looking at the law, not only in terms of general outlook but also in providing the necessary tools to dissect society and discover the way it operates and the direction in which it is heading. The interdisciplinary nature of the studies in question was emphasised, utilising all the social sciences, including politics, economics and philosophy.[42] In particular the use of the scientific method, such as obtaining data and quantitative analysis, has been very much in evidence.

Behaviouralism has divided the field of international relations into basically two studies, the first being a consideration of foreign policy techniques and the reasons whereby one particular course of action is preferred to another, and the second constituting the international systems analysis approach.[43] This emphasises the interaction of the various players on the international stage and the effects of such mutual pressures upon both the system and the participants. More than that, it examines [42] Note Barkun's comment that 'the past theoretical approaches of the legal profession have involved logical manipulations of a legal corpus more often than the empirical study of patterns of human behaviour', Law Without Sanctions, New Haven, 1968, p. 3. See also R. A. Falk, 'New Approaches to the Study of International Law', in New Approaches to International Relations (ed. M. A. Kaplan), New York, 1968, pp. 357–80, and J. Frankel, Contemporary International Theory and the Behaviour of States, London, 1973, pp. 21–2.

[43] See e.g. C. A. McClelland, Theory and the International System, New York, 1966; M. A. Kaplan, System and Process in International Politics, New York, 1964; M. A. Kaplan and N. Katzenbach, The Political Foundations of International Law, New York, 1961, and R. A. Falk and C. Black, The Future of International Legal Order, Princeton, 1969. See also A. Kiss and D. Shelton, 'Systems Analysis of International Law: A Methodological Inquiry', 17 Netherlands YIL, 1986, p. 45.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the various international orders that have existed throughout history in an attempt to show how the dynamics of each particular system have created their own rules and how they can be used as an explanation of both political activity and the nature of international law. In other words, the nature of the international system can be examined by the use of particular variables in order to explain and to predict the role of international law.

For example, the period between 1848 and 1914 can be treated as the era of the 'balance of power' system. This system depended upon a number of factors, such as a minimum number of participants (accepted as five), who would engage in a series of temporary alliances in an attempt to bolster the weak and restrict the strong, for example the coalitions Britain entered into to overawe France. It was basic to this system that no nation wished totally to destroy any other state, but merely to humble and weaken, and this contributed to the stability of the order.[44]

This system nurtured its own concepts of international law, especially that of sovereignty which was basic to the idea of free-floating alliances and the ability of states to leave the side of the strong to strengthen the weak. The balance of power collapsed with the First World War and, after a period of confusion, a discernible, loose 'bipolar' system emerged in the years following the Second World War.

This was predicated upon the polarisation of capitalism and communism and the consequent rigid alliances that were created. It included the existence of a Third World of basically non-aligned states, the objects of rivalry and of competition while not in themselves powerful enough to upset the bipolar system. This kind of order facilitated 'frontier' conflicts where the two powers collided, such as in Korea, Berlin and Vietnam, as well as modified the nature of sovereignty within the two alliances thus allowing such organisations as NATO and the European Community (subsequently European Union) on the one hand, and the Warsaw Pact and COMECON on the other, to develop. The other side of this coin has been the freedom felt by the superpowers to control wavering states within their respective spheres of influence, for example, the Soviet actions in Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia and those of the USA, particularly within Latin America.[45]

[44] See J. Frankel, International Relations in a Changing World, London, 1979, pp. 152–7, and Kaplan and Katzenbach, Political Foundations, pp. 62–70.

[45] Kaplan and Katzenbach, Political Foundations, pp. 50–5. As far as the systems approach is concerned, see also S. Hoffman, 'International Systems and International Law' in The

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Behaviouralism has been enriched by the use of such techniques as games theory.[46] This is a mathematical method of studying decision-making in conflict situations where the parties react rationally in the struggle for benefits. It can be contrasted with the fight situation, where the essence is the actual defeat of the opponent (for example, the Israel–Arab conflict), and with the debate situation, which is an effort to convince the participants of the rightness of one's cause. Other factors which are taken into account include communications, integration, environment and capabilities. Thus the range and complexity of this approach far exceeds that of prior theories.

All this highlights the switch in emphasis that has taken place in the consideration of law in the world community. The traditional view was generally that international law constituted a series of rules restricting the actions of independent states and forming exceptions to state sovereignty. The new theories tend to look at the situation differently, more from the perspective of the international order expanding its horizons than the nation-state agreeing to accept certain defined limitations upon its behaviour.

The rise of quantitative research has facilitated the collation and ordering of vast quantities of data. It is primarily a methodological approach utilising political, economic and social data and statistics, and converting facts and information into a form suitable for scientific investigation. Such methods with their behavioural and quantitative aspects are beginning to impinge upon the field of international law. They enable a greater depth of knowledge and comprehension to be achieved and a wider appreciation of all the various processes at work.[47]

International System (eds. K. Knorr and S. Verba), Westport, 1961, p. 205; G. Clark and L. Sohn, World Peace Through World Law, 3rd edn, Boston, 1966, and The Strategy of World Order (eds. R. A. Falk and S. Mendlovitz), New York, 4 vols., 1966. See now Bobbitt, Shield, book II.

[46] See e.g. R. Lieber, Theory and World Politics, London, 1972, chapter 2; Game Theory and Related Approaches to Social Behaviour (ed. H. Shubik), London, 1964, and W. J. M. Mackenzie, Politics and Social Sciences, London, 1967.

[47] Note also the functionalist approach to international law. This orientation emphasises the practical benefits to states of co-operation in matters of mutual interest: see e.g. W. Friedmann, An Introduction to World Politics, 5th edn, London, 1965, p. 57; F. Haas, Beyond the Nation State, Stanford, 1964; D. Mitrany, A Working Peace System, London, 1946; C. W. Jenks, Law, Freedom and Welfare, London, 1964, and J. Stone, Legal Controls of International Conflict, London, 1959. See also D. Johnston, 'Functionalism in the Theory of International Law', 25 Canadian YIL, 1988, p. 3.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The behavioural approach to international relations has been translated into international law theory by a number of writers, in particular Professor McDougal, with some important modifications. This 'policy-orientated' movement regards law as a comprehensive process of decision-making rather than as a defined set of rules and obligations. It is an active all-embracing approach, seeing international law as a dynamic system operating within a particular type of world order.[48] It therefore minimises the role played by rules, for such a traditional conception of international law 'quite obviously offers but the faintest glimpse of the structures, procedures and types of decision that take place in the contemporary world community'.[49] It has been emphasised that the law is a constantly evolving process of decision-making and the way that it evolves will depend on the knowledge and insight of the decision-maker.[50] In other words, it is the social process of constant human interaction that is seen as critical and in this process, claims are continually being made in an attempt to maximise values at the disposal of the participants. Eight value-institution categories have been developed to analyse this process: power, wealth, enlightenment, skill, well-being, affection, respect and rectitude. This list may be further developed. It is not exhaustive. Law is to be regarded as a product of such social processes.[51] International law is the whole process of authoritative decision-making involving crucially the concepts of authority and control. The former is defined in terms of the structure of expectation concerning the identity and competence of the decision-maker, whilst the latter refers to the actual effectiveness of a decision, whether or not authorised.[52]

[48] See e.g. M. S. McDougal, 'International Law, Power and Policy', 82 HR, 1952, p. 133; M. S. McDougal, H. Lasswell and W. M. Reisman, 'Theories about International Law: Prologue to a Configurative Jurisprudence', 8 Va. JIL, 1968, p. 188; M. S. McDougal, 'International Law and the Future', 50 Mississippi Law Journal, 1979, p. 259, and H. Lasswell and M. S. McDougal, Jurisprudence for a Free Society, Yale, 1992. See also G. Scelle, Manuel de Droit International, Paris, 1948, and Chimni, International Law, chapter 3.

[49] M. S. McDougal and W. M. Reisman, International Law in Contemporary Perspective, New Haven, 1980, p. 5.

[50] M. S. McDougal, 'The Policy-Oriented Approach to Law', 40 Virginia Quarterly Review, 1964, p. 626. See also E. Suzuki, 'The New Haven School of International Law: An Invitation to a Policy-Oriented Jurisprudence', 1 Yale Studies in World Public Order, 1974, p. 1.

[51] Suzuki, 'Policy-Oriented Jurisprudence', pp. 22–3. See also M. S. McDougal, 'Some Basic Theoretical Concepts about International Law: A Policy-Oriented Framework of Inquiry', 4 Journal of Conflict Resolution, 1960, pp. 337–54.

[52] M. S. McDougal and H. Lasswell, 'The Identification and Appraisal of Diverse Systems of Public Order', 53 AJIL, 1959, pp. 1, 9.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

McDougal's work and that of his followers emphasises the long list of values, interests and considerations that have to be taken into account within the international system by the persons actually faced with making the decisions. This stress upon the so-called 'authoritative decision-maker', whether he or she be in the United States Department of State, in the British Foreign Office or 'anyone whose choice about an event can have some international significance',[53] as the person who in effect has to choose between different options respecting international legal principles, emphasises the practical world of power and authority.

Such a decision-maker is subject to a whole series of pressures and influences, such as the values of the community in which that person operates, and the interests of the particular nation-state served. He or she will also have to consider the basic values of the world order, for instance human dignity. This approach involves a complex dissection of a wide-ranging series of factors and firmly fixes international law within the ambit of the social sciences, both with respect to the procedures adopted and the tools of analysis. International law is seen in the following terms, as > a comprehensive process of authoritative decision in which rules are continuously made and remade; that the function of the rules of international law is to communicate the perspectives (demands, identifications and expectations) of the peoples of the world about this comprehensive process of decision; and that the national application of these rules in particular instances requires their interpretation, like that of any other communication, in terms of who is using them, with respect to whom, for what purposes (major and minor), and in what context.[54]

Legal rules articulate and seek to achieve certain goals and this value factor must not be ignored. The values emphasised by this school are basically those of human dignity, familiar from the concepts of Western democratic society.[55] Indeed, Reisman has emphasised the Natural Law origins of this approach as well as the need to clarify a jurisprudence for those persons whose activities have led to innovations in such fields of international law as human rights and the protection of the environment.[56]

[53] McDougal and Reisman, International Law, p. 2.

[54] M. S. McDougal, 'A Footnote', 57 AJIL, 1963, p. 383.

[55] See M. S. McDougal, H. Lasswell and L. C. Chen, Human Rights and World Public Order, New Haven, 1980. For a discussion of the tasks required for a realistic inquiry in the light of defined goals, see McDougal, 'International Law and the Future', pp. 259, 267.

[56] 'The View from the New Haven School of International Law', PASIL, 1992, p. 118.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The policy-oriented movement has been greatly criticised by traditional international lawyers for unduly minimising the legal content of the subject and for ignoring the fact that nations generally accept international law as it is and obey its dictates.[57] States rarely indulge in a vast behavioural analysis, studiously considering every relevant element in a particular case and having regard to fundamental objectives like human dignity and welfare. Indeed, so to do may weaken international law, it has been argued.[58] In addition, the insertion of such value-concepts as 'human dignity' raises difficulties of subjectivity that ill fit within a supposedly objective analytical structure. Koskenniemi, for example, has drawn attention to the predilection of the policy-oriented approach to support the dominant power.[59]

Other writers, such as Professor Falk, accept the basic comprehensive approach of the McDougal school, but point to its inconsistencies and overfulsome cataloguing of innumerable interests. They tend to adopt a global outlook based upon a deep concern for human welfare and morality, but with an emphasis upon the importance of legal rules and structure.[60]

Professor Franck, however, has sought to refocus the essential question of the existence and operation of the system of international law in terms of inquiring into why states obey international law despite the undeveloped condition of the international legal system's structures, processes and enforcement mechanisms.[61] The answer is seen to lie in the concept of legitimacy. States will obey the rules because they see such rules and [57] See in particular P. Allott, 'Language, Method and the Nature of International Law', 45 BYIL, 1971, p. 79. Higgins has vividly drawn attention to the differences in approach to international law adopted by American and British writers: 'Policy Considerations and the International Judicial Process', 17 ICLQ, 1968, p. 58. See also T. Farer, 'Human Rights in Law's Empire: The Jurisprudence War', 85 AJIL, 1991, p. 117.

[58] Allott, 'Language', pp. 128 ff.

[59] See Gentle Civilizer of Nations, pp. 474 ff.

[60] See e.g. R. A. Falk, Human Rights and State Sovereignty, New York, 1981, and Falk, On Human Governance, Cambridge, 1995. See also The United Nations and a Just World Order (eds. R. Falk, S. Kim and S. Mendlovitz), Boulder, 1991, and Chimni, International Law, chapter 4. But note the approach of, e.g., J. S. Watson, 'A Realistic Jurisprudence of International Law', 34 YBWA, 1980, p. 265, and M. Lane, 'Demanding Human Rights: A Change in the World Legal Order', 6 Hofstra Law Review, 1978, p. 269. See also Boyle, 'Ideals and Things'.

[61] T. M. Franck, The Power of Legitimacy Among Nations, Oxford, 1990. See also Franck, 'Fairness in the International Legal and Institutional System', 240 HR, 1993 III, p. 13, chapter 2; Franck, Fairness in International Law and Institutions, Oxford, 1995, chapter 2, and Franck, 'The Power of Legitimacy and the Legitimacy of Power: International Law in an Age of Power Disequilibrium', 100 AJIL, 2006, p. 88.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

their institutional framework as possessing a high degree of legitimacy. Legitimacy itself is defined as 'a property of a rule or rule-making institution which itself exerts a pull towards compliance on those addressed normatively because those addressed believe that the rule or institution has come into being and operates in accordance with generally accepted principles of right process'.[62] Legitimacy may be empirically demonstrated but compliance may be measured not only by observing states acting in accordance with the principle in question, but also by observing the degree to which a violator actually exhibits deference to that principle even while violating it.

Legitimacy will depend upon four specific properties, it is suggested: determinacy (or readily ascertainable normative content or 'transparency'); symbolic validation (or authority approval); coherence (or consistency or general application) and adherence (or falling within an organised hierarchy of rules). In other words, it is proposed that there exist objectively verifiable criteria which help us to ascertain why international rules are obeyed and thus why the system works. This approach is supplemented by the view that legitimacy and justice as morality are two aspects of the concept of fairness, which is seen by Franck as the most important question for international law.[63] Franck, however, has also drawn attention to the 'emerging right to individuality'[64] within the context of a 'global identity crisis'[65] in which the growth of supranational institutions and the collapse of a range of states combine to undermine traditional certainties of world order. He notes that persons are increasingly likely to identify themselves as autonomous individuals and that this is both reflected and manifested in the rise and expansion of international human rights law and in the construction of multi-layered and freely selected affinities.[66] While such personal rights are increasingly protected in both national and international law, the question as to the appropriate balancing of individual, group and state rights is posed in more urgent form.

However, legitimacy may also be understood in a broader way in referring to the relationship with the international political system as a whole and as forming the link between power and the legal system. It imbues the normative order with authority and acceptability, although not as such legality. Legitimacy links law and politics in its widest sense and will depend upon the context out of which it emerges. One writer has concluded [62] Franck, Legitimacy, p. 24. [63] Franck, 'Fairness', p. 26.

[64] T. M. Franck, The Empowered Self, Oxford, 1999, p. 1.
[65] Ibid., p. 3. [66] Ibid., pp. 278–80.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

that legitimacy 'is a matter of history and thus is subject to change as new events emerge from the future and new understandings reinterpret the past'.[67] Legitimacy is important in that it constitutes a standard for the testing in the wider political environment of the relevance and acceptability of legal norms and practices. A rule seen as legitimate will benefit from a double dose of approval. A rule, institution or practice seen as illegal and illegitimate will be doubly disapproved of. A rule, or entity, which is legal but not legitimate will, it is suggested, not be able to sustain its position over the long term. A practice seen as illegal but legitimate is likely to form the nucleus of a new rule.

The recurring themes of the relationship between sovereign states and international society and the search for a convincing explanation for the binding quality of international law in a state-dominated world appear also in very recent approaches to international law theory which fall within the general critical legal studies framework.[68] Such approaches have drawn attention to the many inconsistencies and incoherences that persist within the international legal system. The search for an all-embracing general theory of international law has been abandoned in mainstream thought as being founded upon unverifiable propositions, whether religiously or sociologically based, and attention has switched to the analysis of particular areas of international law and in particular procedures for the settlement of disputes. The critical legal studies movement notes that the traditional approach to international law has in essence involved the transposition of 'liberal' principles of domestic systems onto the international scene, but that this has led to further problems.[69] Specifically, liberalism tries constantly to balance individual freedom and social order and, it is argued, inevitably ends up siding with either one or other of those propositions.[70]

[67] Bobbitt, Shield, p. 17.

[68] See e.g. The Structure and Processes of International Law (eds. R. St J. Macdonald and D. Johnston), Dordrecht, 1983; Boyle, 'Ideals and Things'; A. Carty, The Decay of International Law? A Reappraisal of the Limits of Legal Imagination in International Affairs, Manchester, 1986; D. Kennedy, International Legal Structure, Boston, 1987; M. Koskenniemi, From Apology to Utopia, Helsinki, 1989; F. V. Kratochwil, Rules, Norms and Decisions: On the Conditions of Practical and Legal Reasoning in International Relations and Domestic Affairs, Cambridge, 1989; P. Allott, Eunomia, Oxford, 1990; Allott, The Health of Nations, Cambridge, 2002; Theory and International Law: An Introduction (ed. Allott), London, 1991, and International Law (ed. M. Koskenniemi), Aldershot, 1992. See also I. Scobbie, 'Towards the Elimination of International Law: Some Radical Scepticism about Sceptical Radicalism', 61 BYIL, 1990, p. 339, and S. Marks, The Riddle of All Constitutions: International Law, Democracy and the Critique of Ideology, Cambridge, 2000.

[69] See e.g. Koskenniemi, International Law, p. xvi.

[70] Koskenniemi, From Apology to Utopia, p. 52.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Additionally, there are only two possibilities with regard to justice itself, it is either simply subjective or it is imposed. In either case, liberalism is compromised as a system.

The critical legal studies approach (sometimes termed the 'New Approaches to International Law' or NAIL) notes the close relationship that exists between law and society, but emphasises that conceptual analysis is also crucial since such concepts are not in themselves independent entities but reflect particular power relationships. The point is made that the nexus between state power and international legal concepts needs to be taken into consideration as well as the way in which such concepts in themselves reflect political factors. As Koskenniemi writes, 'a post-realist theory . . . aims to answer questions regarding the relationship of law and society and the legitimacy of constraint in a world of sovereigns as aspects of one single problem: the problem of power in concepts'.[71] The problem posed by the growth in the world community and the need to consider the range of different cultures and traditions within that community leads, it is suggested, to the decline of universality as such and the need to focus upon the specific contexts of particular problems.

In a more recent work, Koskenniemi has drawn attention not only to the continuing tension between the universalist and particularist impulses in international law,[72] but also to the related distinction between formalism and dynamism, or the contrast between rule-oriented and policy-oriented approaches. It is his view in essence that the latter approach might too easily be utilised to support a dominant political position.[73] It is the typical lawyer's answer in any event to declare that all depends upon the particular circumstances of the case and this approach is generalised in order to deal with the question of which of several relevant international rules is to predominate. It is in fact a way of noting that superior operating principles are difficult to find or justify and thus concluding that the search for universal concepts or principles is of little value. In effect, it is proposed that no coherent international system as such actually exists and that one should rather concentrate upon ad hoc legal concepts as reflecting power considerations and within the confines of the specific contexts in which the particular questions or issues have arisen. Like the policy-oriented approach, the critical legal studies view is to accept that [71] Ibid., p. xxi.

[72] See also M. Eyskens, 'Particularism versus Universalism' in International Law – Theory and Practice (ed. K. Wellens), The Hague, 1998, p. 11.

[73] Gentle Civilizer of Nations.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

international law is more than a set of rules, but it then proceeds to emphasise the indeterminacy as such of law rather than seeing law as a collection of competing norms between which choices must be made.[74] One particular area of study in recent years has been that concerned with the position of women within international law, both in terms of the structure of the system and the, for example, relative absence of females from the institutions and processes of international law and in terms of substantive law, which has until recently paid little attention to the needs and concerns of women.[75]

The fragmentation of international law?[76]

The tremendous expansion of both the rules and the institutions of international law, with the rise of more and more specialist areas, such as trade law, environmental law and human rights law, has led to arguments that international law as a holistic system is in the process of fragmentation. This has led to the fear that the centre will not be able to hold and that international law might dissolve into a series of discrete localised or limited systems with little or no interrelationship. In many ways it is the explosion

[74] See Higgins, Problems and Process, p. 9. See also J. A. Beckett, 'Countering Uncertainty and Ending Up/Down Arguments: Prolegomena to a Response to NAIL', 16 EJIL, 2005, p. 213.

[75] See e.g. H. Charlesworth and C. M. Chinkin, The Boundaries of International Law: A Feminist Analysis, Manchester, 2000; H. Charlesworth, C. M. Chinkin and S. Wright, 'Feminist Approaches to International Law', 85 AJIL, 1991, p. 613; F. Tesón, 'Feminism and International Law: A Reply', 33 Va. JIL, 1993, p. 647, and International Law: Modern Feminist Approaches (eds. D. Buss and A. Manji), Oxford, 2005. See also the 'Final Report on Women's Equality and Nationality in International Law' in Report of the Sixty-Ninth Conference, International Law Association, London, 2000, p. 248. Note that article 25(2) of the Rules of the European Court of Human Rights requires that the Sections of the Court be 'gender balanced', while article 36(8)a(iii) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court 1998 declares that the selection process for judges of the Court should include the need for a 'fair representation of female and male judges'. See also ICC-ASP/1/Res.- 2 (2002) on the procedure for nomination of judges which required a minimum number of female and male candidates.

[76] See e.g. 'Fragmentation of International Law: Difficulties Arising from the Diversification and Expansion of International Law', Report of the Study Group of the International Law Commission (finalised by M. Koskenniemi), A/CN.4/L.682, 2006; M. Koskenniemi and P. Leino, 'Fragmentation of International Law? Postmodern Anxieties', 15 Leiden Journal of International Law, 2002, p. 553; M. Prost and P. K. Clark, 'Unity, Diversity and the Fragmentation of International Law', 5 Chinese Journal of International Law, 2006, p. 341; B. Simma and D. Pulkowski, 'Of Planets and the Universe: Self-contained Regimes in International Law', 17 EJIL, 2006, p. 483, and E. Benvenisti and G. W. Downs, 'The Empire's New Clothes: Political Economy and the Fragmentation of International Law', 60 Stanford Law Review, 2007, p. 595.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of what is termed globalisation, with the consequential spread of practices and mechanisms across the world,[77] that has precipitated this problem of fragmentation, being defined in one view as the 'emergence of specialised and relatively autonomous spheres of social action and structure'.[78] This has led to a debate as to the relationship between self-contained regimes in international law and the system as a whole,[79] with the fear being expressed that the rise of specialised rules and mechanisms that have no clear authority relationship might lead to conflicts between local systems and, at the least, inconsistency in the interpretation and development of international law.[80] While to some extent the former is a real danger,[81] there is still a powerful centralising dynamic in international law and indeed a strong presumption against normative conflict:[82] for example, the principle that special law (lex specialis) derogates from general law (lex generalis), so that the more detailed and specific rule will have priority.[83] It is also true that international law, as a decentralised system, has long had to face the problem of relating together a variety of rules derived from general treaties, specific treaties and customary law, while it is indeed the case that even with the increase in specialist areas of international law, there is an increasing tendency to relate hitherto discrete spheres.[84] Further, while decisions of international courts and tribunals may not always be compatible, there is a hierarchy of authority with the International Court of Justice at the summit.[85] The International Law Commission's Report on Fragmentation reached two principal conclusions, first that 'the [77] See e.g. P. S. Berman, The Globalisation of International Law, Aldershot, 2005.

[78] International Law Commission Report on Fragmentation, p. 11.

[79] See, for an early example, B. Simma, 'Self-Contained Regimes', 16 Netherlands YIL, 1985, p. 111.

[80] See e.g. Unity and Diversity in International Law (eds. A. Zimmermann and R. Hofmann), Berlin, 2006; K. Wellens, 'Fragmentation of International Law and Establishment of an Accountability Regime for International Organizations', 25 Michigan Journal of International Law, 2004, p. 1159, and L'Influence des Sources sur l'Unité et la Fragmentation du Droit International (eds. K. C. Wellens and R. H. Viraxia), Brussels, 2006.

[81] See e.g. A. Reinisch, 'Necessity in International Arbitration – An Unnecessary Split of Opinions in Recent ICSID Cases? Comments on CMS v. Argentina and LG&E v. Argentina', 8 Journal of World Investment and Trade, 2007, p. 191.

[82] International Law Commission Report on Fragmentation, p. 25.

[83] See further below, chapter 3, p. 124.

[84] See e.g. with regard to human rights law and humanitarian law (or the laws of war), A. E. Cassimitis, 'International Humanitarian Law, International Human Rights Law, and Fragmentation of International Law', 56 ICLQ, 2007, p. 623. See further below, chapter 21, p. 1180.

[85] See further below, chapter 19, p. 1115.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

emergence of special treaty-regimes (which should not be called "self-contained") has not seriously undermined legal security, predictability or the equality of legal subjects' and second that 'increasing attention will have to be given to the collision of norms and regimes and the rules, methods and techniques for dealing with such collisions'.[86]

Conclusion

The range of theories and approaches to international law and not least the emphasis upon the close relationship between international law and international relations[87] testifies both to the importance of the subject and the inherent difficulties it faces.[88] International law is clearly much more that a simple set of rules. It is a culture in the broadest sense in that it constitutes a method of communicating claims, counter-claims, expectations and anticipations as well as providing a framework for assessing and prioritising such demands.

International law functions in a particular, concrete world system, involving a range of actors from states to international organisations, companies and individuals, and as such needs to be responsive to the needs and aspirations of such participants. The international system is composed increasingly of co-operative and competing elements participating in cross-boundary activities, but the essential normative and structural nature of international law remains. Law is not the only way in which issues transcending borders are negotiated and settled or indeed fought over. It is one of a number of methods for dealing with an existing complex and shifting system, but it is a way of some prestige and influence for it is [86] At pp. 248–9.

[87] See e.g. A.-M. Slaughter, A. S. Tulumello and S. Wood, 'International Law and International Relations Theory: A New Generation of Interdisciplinary Scholarship', 92 AJIL, 1998, p. 367, and Slaughter, A New World Order. See also Bobbitt, Shield, who posits the dying of the nation-state and its replacement by the market-state, with consequential changes with regard to both international law and its institutions, e.g. pp. 353 ff. and 667 ff.

[88] Note relatively recent arguments based on a revived power realism approach, particularly made in the US, that international law is simply a part of a complex of factors which are relevant, and implicitly subservient, to diplomacy and the pursuit of national interests: see e.g. J. L. Goldsmith and E. A. Posner, The Limits of International Law, Oxford, 2005, and M. J. Glennon, Limits of Law, Prerogatives of Power: Interventionism after Kosovo, New York, 2001, but cf. Franck, Power of Legitimacy; A. Van Aaken, 'To Do Away with International Law? Some Limits to the "Limits of International Law" ', 17 EJIL, 2006, p. 289, and G. Simpson, Great Powers and Outlaw States: Unequal Sovereigns in the International Legal Order, Cambridge, 2004.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of its very nature in the form of mutually accepted obligations.[89] Law and politics cannot be divorced. They are not identical, but they do interact on several levels. They are engaged in a crucial symbiotic relationship. It does neither discipline a service to minimise the significance of the other.

Suggestions for further reading

P. Bobbitt, The Shield of Achilles, London, 2002

H. Charlesworth and C. Chinkin, The Boundaries of International Law: A Feminist Analysis, Manchester, 2000

T. M. Franck, Fairness in International Law and Institutions, Oxford, 1995

The Empowered Self, Oxford, 1999

M. Koskenniemi, The Gentle Civilizer of Nations, Cambridge, 2001

S. Marks, The Riddle of All Constitutions: International Law, Democracy and the Critique of Ideology, Cambridge, 2000

R. Müllerson, Ordering Anarchy: International Law in International Society, The Hague, 2000

[89] Higgins has noted that 'international law has to be identified by reference to what the actors (most often states), often without benefit of pronouncement by the International Court of Justice, believe normative in their relations with each other', Problems and Process, p. 18.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

3

Sources

Ascertainment of the law on any given point in domestic legal orders is not usually too difficult a process.[1] In the English legal system, for example, one looks to see whether the matter is covered by an Act of Parliament and, if it is, the law reports are consulted as to how it has been interpreted by the courts. If the particular point is not specifically referred to in a statute, court cases will be examined to elicit the required information. In other words, there is a definite method of discovering what the law is. In addition to verifying the contents of the rules, this method also demonstrates how the law is created, namely, by parliamentary legislation or judicial case-law. This gives a degree of certainty to the legal process because one is able to tell when a proposition has become law and the

[1] See generally C. Parry, The Sources and Evidences of International Law, Cambridge, 1965; M. Sørensen, Les Sources de Droit International, Paris, 1946; V. D. Degan, Sources of International Law, The Hague, 1997; Oppenheim's International Law (eds. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992, p. 22; I. Brownlie, Principles of Public International Law, 6th edn, Oxford, 2003, chapter 1; Nguyen Quoc Dinh, P. Daillier and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 7th edn, Paris, 2002, p. 111; A. Boyle and C. Chinkin, The Making of International Law, Oxford, 2007; G. M. Danilenko, Law-Making in the International Community, The Hague, 1993; G. I. Tunkin, Theory of International Law, London, 1974, pp. 89–203; J. W. Verzijl, International Law in Historical Perspective, Leiden, 1968, vol. I, p. 1; H. Lauterpacht, International Law: Collected Papers, Cambridge, 1970, vol. I, p. 58; Change and Stability in International Law-Making (eds. A. Cassese and J. Weiler), Leiden, 1988; A. Bos, A Methodology of International Law, Amsterdam, 1984; A. Cassese, International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005, chapters 8–10; A. Pellet, 'Article 38' in The Statute of the International Court of Justice: A Commentary (eds. A. Zimmermann, C. Tomuschat and K. Oellers-Frahm), Oxford, 2006, p. 677; M. Virally, 'The Sources of International Law' in Manual of Public International Law (ed. M. Sørensen), London, 1968, p. 116; C. Tomuschat, 'Obligations Arising for States Without or Against Their Will', 241 HR, 1993, p. 195; B. Simma, 'From Bilateralism to Community Interest in International Law', 250 HR, 1994, p. 219; M. Mendelson, 'The International Court of Justice and the Sources of International Law' in Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice (eds. A. V. Lowe and M. Fitzmaurice), Cambridge, 1996, p. 63; G. Abi-Saab, 'Les Sources du Droit International – Un Essai de Déconstruction' in Le Droit International dans un Monde en Mutation, Montevideo, 1994, p. 29, and O. Schachter, 'Recent Trends in International Law-Making', 12 Australian YIL, 1992.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

necessary mechanism to resolve any disputes about the law is evident. It reflects the hierarchical character of a national legal order with its gradations of authority imparting to the law a large measure of stability and predictability.

The contrast is very striking when one considers the situation in international law. The lack of a legislature, executive and structure of courts within international law has been noted and the effects of this will become clearer as one proceeds. There is no single body able to create laws internationally binding upon everyone, nor a proper system of courts with comprehensive and compulsory jurisdiction to interpret and extend the law. One is therefore faced with the problem of discovering where the law is to be found and how one can tell whether a particular proposition amounts to a legal rule. This perplexity is reinforced because of the anarchic nature of world affairs and the clash of competing sovereignties. Nevertheless, international law does exist and is ascertainable. There are 'sources' available from which the rules may be extracted and analysed.

By 'sources' one means those provisions operating within the legal system on a technical level, and such ultimate sources as reason or morality are excluded, as are more functional sources such as libraries and journals. What is intended is a survey of the process whereby rules of international law emerge.[2]

Article 38(1) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice is widely recognised as the most authoritative and complete statement as to the sources of international law.[3] It provides that:

> the Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply: (a) international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognised by the contesting states; (b) international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law; (c) the general principles of law recognised by civilised nations; (d) subject to the provisions of Article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.

Although this formulation is technically limited to the sources of international law which the International Court must apply, in fact since

[2] See also, e.g., M. S. McDougal and W. M. Reisman, 'The Prescribing Function: How International Law is Made', 6 Yale Studies in World Public Order, 1980, p. 249.

[3] See e.g. Brownlie, Principles, p. 5; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 24, and M. O. Hudson, The Permanent Court of International Justice, New York, 1934, pp. 601 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the function of the Court is to decide disputes submitted to it 'in accordance with international law' and since all member states of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to the Statute by virtue of article 93 of the United Nations Charter (states that are non-members of the UN can specifically become parties to the Statute of the Court: Switzerland was the most obvious example of this until it joined the UN in 2002), there is no serious contention that the provision expresses the universal perception as to the enumeration of sources of international law.

Some writers have sought to categorise the distinctions in this provision, so that international conventions, custom and the general principles of law are described as the three exclusive law-creating processes while judicial decisions and academic writings are regarded as law-determining agencies, dealing with the verification of alleged rules.[4] But in reality it is not always possible to make hard and fast divisions. The different functions overlap to a great extent so that in many cases treaties (or conventions) merely reiterate accepted rules of customary law, and judgments of the International Court of Justice may actually create law in the same way that municipal judges formulate new law in the process of interpreting existing law.[5]

A distinction has sometimes been made between formal and material sources.[6] The former, it is claimed, confer upon the rules an obligatory character, while the latter comprise the actual content of the rules. Thus the formal sources appear to embody the constitutional mechanism for identifying law while the material sources incorporate the essence or subject-matter of the regulations. This division has been criticised particularly in view of the peculiar constitutional set-up of international law, and it tends to distract attention from some of the more important problems by its attempt to establish a clear separation of substantive and procedural elements, something difficult to maintain in international law.

[4] See e.g. G. Schwarzenberger, International Law, 3rd edn, London, 1957, vol. I, pp. 26–7.

[5] There are a number of examples of this: see below, chapter 4, p. 138.

[6] See e.g. Brownlie, Principles, p. 1. See also Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, pp. 111–12, where it is noted that 'les sources formelles du droit sont les procédés d'élaboration du droit, les diverses techniques qui autorisent à considérer qu'une règle appartient au droit positif. Les sources matérielles constituent les fondements sociologiques des normes internationales, leur base politique, morale ou économique plus ou moins explicitée par la doctrine ou les sujets du droit', and Pellet, 'Article 38' p. 714.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Custom[7]

Introduction

In any primitive society certain rules of behaviour emerge and prescribe what is permitted and what is not. Such rules develop almost subconsciously within the group and are maintained by the members of the group by social pressures and with the aid of various other more tangible implements. They are not, at least in the early stages, written down or codified, and survive ultimately because of what can be called an aura of historical legitimacy.[8] As the community develops it will modernise its

[7] See generally, A. D'Amato, The Concept of Custom in International Law, Cornell, 1971; M. Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source of International Law', 47 BYIL, 1974–5, p. 1; M. Mendelson, 'The Formation of Customary International Law', 272 HR, 1999, p. 159; B. Cheng, 'Custom: The Future of General State Practice in a Divided World' in The Structure and Process of International Law (eds. R. St J. Macdonald and D. Johnston), Dordrecht, 1983, p. 513; A. E. Roberts, 'Traditional and Modern Approaches to Customary International Law: A Reconciliation', 95 AJIL, 2001, p. 757; H. Thirlway, International Customary Law and Codification, Leiden, 1972; Sources of State Practice in International Law (eds. R. Gaebler and M. Smolka-Day), Ardley, 2002; K. Wolfke, Custom in Present International Law, 2nd edn, Dordrecht, 1993, and Wolfke, 'Some Persistent Controversies Regarding Customary International Law', Netherlands YIL, 1993, p. 1; L. Kopelmanas, 'Custom as a Means of the Creation of International Law', 18 BYIL, 1937, p. 127; H. Lauterpacht, The Development of International Law by the International Court, Cambridge, 1958, pp. 368–93; J. Kunz, 'The Nature of Customary International Law', 47 AJIL, 1953, p. 662; R. J. Dupuy, 'Coutume Sage et Coutume Sauvage', Mélanges Rousseau, Paris, 1974, p. 75; B. Stern, 'La Coutume au Coeur du Droit International', Mélanges Reuter, Paris, 1981, p. 479; R. Y. Jennings, 'Law-Making and Package Deal', Mélanges Reuter, p. 347; G. Danilenko, 'The Theory of International Customary Law', 31 German YIL, 1988, p. 9; Barberis, 'Réfléxions sur la Coutume Internationale', AFDI, 1990, p. 9; L. Condorelli, 'Custom' in International Law: Achievements and Perspectives (ed. M. Bedjaoui), Paris, 1991, p. 206; M. Byers, 'Custom, Power and the Power of Rules', 17 Michigan Journal of International Law, 1995, p. 109; H. Thirlway, 'The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice: 1960–89 (Part Two)', 61 BYIL, 1990, pp. 3, 31, and Thirlway, 'The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice: 1960–89: Supplement, 2005: Parts One and Two', 76 BYIL, 2006, pp. 1, 92; J. Kammerhofer, 'The Uncertainty in the Formal Sources of International Law: Customary International Law and Some of Its Problems', 15 EJIL, 2004, p. 523; P. M. Dupuy, 'Théorie des Sources et Coutume en Droit International Contemporain' in Le Droit International dans un Monde en Mutation, p. 51; D. P. Fidler, 'Challenging the Classic Conception of Custom', German YIL, 1997, p. 198; R. Müllerson, 'On the Nature and Scope of Customary International Law', Austrian Review of International and European Law, 1998, p. 1; M. Byers, Custom, Power and the Power of Rules, Cambridge, 1999, and A. Carty, The Decay of International Law?, Manchester, 1986, chapter 3. See also the 'Statement of Principles Applicable to the Formation of General Customary International Law' in Report of the Sixty-Ninth Conference, International Law Association, London, 2000, p. 713.

[8] See e.g. R. Unger, Law in Modern Society, London, 1976, who notes that customary law can be regarded as 'any recurring mode of interaction among individuals and groups,

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

code of behaviour by the creation of legal machinery, such as courts and legislature. Custom, for this is how the original process can be described, remains and may also continue to evolve.[9] It is regarded as an authentic expression of the needs and values of the community at any given time.

Custom within contemporary legal systems, particularly in the developed world, is relatively cumbersome and unimportant and often of only nostalgic value.[10] In international law on the other hand it is a dynamic source of law in the light of the nature of the international system and its lack of centralised government organs.

The existence of customary rules can be deduced from the practice and behaviour of states and this is where the problems begin. How can one tell when a particular line of action adopted by a state reflects a legal rule or is merely prompted by, for example, courtesy? Indeed, how can one discover what precisely a state is doing or why, since there is no living 'state' but rather thousands of officials in scores of departments exercising governmental functions? Other issues concern the speed of creation of new rules and the effect of protests.

There are disagreements as to the value of a customary system in international law. Some writers deny that custom can be significant today as a source of law, noting that it is too clumsy and slow-moving to accommodate the evolution of international law any more,[11] while others declare that it is a dynamic process of law creation and more important than treaties since it is of universal application.[12] Another view recognises that custom is of value since it is activated by spontaneous behaviour and thus mirrors the contemporary concerns of society. However, since international law now has to contend with a massive increase in the pace and variety of state activities as well as having to come to terms with many different cultural and political traditions, the role of custom is perceived to be much diminished.[13] together with the more or less explicit acknowledgement by these groups and individuals that such patterns of interaction produce reciprocal expectations of conduct that ought to be satisfied', p. 49. See also R. Dias, Jurisprudence, 5th edn, London, 1985, chapter 9, and H. L. A. Hart, The Concept of Law, Oxford, 1961.

9 See e.g. D. Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, 4th edn, London, 1979, p. 649, and H. Maine, Ancient Law, London, 1861.

10 See e.g. Dias, Jurisprudence.

11 See e.g. W. Friedmann, The Changing Structure of International Law, New York, 1964, pp. 121–3. See also I. De Lupis, The Concept of International Law, Aldershot, 1987, pp. 112–16.

12 E.g. D'Amato, Concept of Custom, p. 12.

13 C. De Visscher, Theory and Reality in Public International Law, 3rd edn, Princeton, 1960, pp. 161–2.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

There are elements of truth in each of these approaches. Amidst a wide variety of conflicting behaviour, it is not easy to isolate the emergence of a new rule of customary law and there are immense problems involved in collating all the necessary information. It is not always the best instrument available for the regulation of complex issues that arise in world affairs, but in particular situations it may meet the contingencies of modern life. As will be seen, it is possible to point to something called 'instant' customary law in certain circumstances that can prescribe valid rules without having to undergo a long period of gestation, and custom can and often does dovetail neatly within the complicated mechanisms now operating for the identification and progressive development of the principles of international law.

More than that, custom does mirror the characteristics of the decentralised international system. It is democratic in that all states may share in the formulation of new rules, though the precept that some are more equal than others in this process is not without its grain of truth. If the international community is unhappy with a particular law it can be changed relatively quickly without the necessity of convening and successfully completing a world conference. It reflects the consensus approach to decision-making with the ability of the majority to create new law binding upon all, while the very participation of states encourages their compliance with customary rules. Its imprecision means flexibility as well as ambiguity. Indeed, the creation of the concept of the exclusive economic zone in the law of the sea may be cited as an example of this process. This is discussed further in chapter 11. The essence of custom according to article 38 is that it should constitute 'evidence of a general practice accepted as law'. Thus, it is possible to detect two basic elements in the make-up of a custom. These are the material facts, that is, the actual behaviour of states, and the psychological or subjective belief that such behaviour is 'law'. As the International Court noted in the Libya/Malta case, the substance of customary law must be 'looked for primarily in the actual practice and opinio juris of states'.[14]

It is understandable why the first requirement is mentioned, since customary law is founded upon the performance of state activities and the convergence of practices, in other words, what states actually do. It is the psychological factor (opinio juris) that needs some explanation. If one left the definition of custom as state practice then one would be faced with the problem of how to separate international law from principles of morality or social usage. This is because states do not restrict their behaviour to what is legally required. They may pursue a line of conduct purely through a feeling of goodwill and in the hope of reciprocal benefits. States do not have to allow tourists in or launch satellites. There is no law imposing upon them the strict duty to distribute economic aid to developing nations. The bare fact that such things are done does not mean that they have to be done.

[14] ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 13, 29; 81 ILR, p. 239. See also the Advisory Opinion on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 253; 110 ILR, p. 163.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The issue therefore is how to distinguish behaviour undertaken because of a law from behaviour undertaken because of a whole series of other reasons ranging from goodwill to pique, and from ideological support to political bribery. And if customary law is restricted to the overt acts of states, one cannot solve this problem.

Accordingly, the second element in the definition of custom has been elaborated. This is the psychological factor, the belief by a state that behaved in a certain way that it was under a legal obligation to act that way. It is known in legal terminology as opinio juris sive necessitatis and was first formulated by the French writer François Gény as an attempt to differentiate legal custom from mere social usage.[15]

However, the relative importance of the two factors, the overt action and the subjective conviction, is disputed by various writers.[16] Positivists, with their emphasis upon state sovereignty, stress the paramount importance of the psychological element. States are only bound by what they have consented to, so therefore the material element is minimised to the greater value of opinio juris. If states believe that a course of action is legal and perform it, even if only once, then it is to be inferred that they have tacitly consented to the rule involved. Following on from this line of analysis, various positivist thinkers have tended to minimise many of the requirements of the overt manifestation, for example, with regard to repetition and duration.[17] Other writers have taken precisely the opposite line and maintain that opinio juris is impossible to prove and therefore [15] Méthode d'Interprétation et Sources en Droit Privé Positif, 1899, para. 110.

[16] See e.g. R. Müllerson, 'The Interplay of Objective and Subjective Elements in Customary Law' in International Law – Theory and Practice (ed. K. Wellens), The Hague, 1998, p. 161.

[17] See e.g. D. Anzilotti, Corso di Diritto Internazionale, 3rd edn, 1928, pp. 73–6; K. Strupp, 'Les Règles Générales du Droit International de la Paix', 47 HR, 1934, p. 263; Tunkin, Theory of International Law, pp. 113–33, and 'Remarks on the Juridical Nature of Customary Norms of International Law', 49 California Law Review, 1961, pp. 419–21, and B. Cheng, 'United Nations Resolutions on Outer Space: "Instant" International Customary Law?', 5 Indian Journal of International Law, 1965, p. 23.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of no tremendous consequence. Kelsen, for one, has written that it is the courts that have the discretion to decide whether any set of usages is such as to create a custom and that the subjective perception of the particular state or states is not called upon to give the final verdict as to its legality or not.[18]

The material fact

The actual practice engaged in by states constitutes the initial factor to be brought into account. There are a number of points to be considered concerning the nature of a particular practice by states, including its duration, consistency, repetition and generality. As far as the duration is concerned, most countries specify a recognised time-scale for the acceptance of a practice as a customary rule within their municipal systems. This can vary from 'time immemorial' in the English common law dating back to 1189, to figures from thirty or forty years on the Continent.

In international law there is no rigid time element and it will depend upon the circumstances of the case and the nature of the usage in question. In certain fields, such as air and space law, the rules have developed quickly; in others, the process is much slower. Duration is thus not the most important of the components of state practice.[19] The essence of custom is to be sought elsewhere.

The basic rule as regards continuity and repetition was laid down in the Asylum case decided by the International Court of Justice (ICJ) in 1950.[20] The Court declared that a customary rule must be 'in accordance with a constant and uniform usage practised by the States in question'.[21] The case concerned Haya de la Torre, a Peruvian, who was sought by his government after an unsuccessful revolt. He was granted asylum by Colombia in its embassy in Lima, but Peru refused to issue a safe conduct to permit Torre to leave the country. Colombia brought the matter before [18] 'Théorie du Droit International Coutumier', 1 Revue International de la Théorie du Droit, 1939, pp. 253, 264–6. See also P. Guggenheim, Traité de Droit International Public, Paris, 1953, pp. 46–8; T. Gihl, 'The Legal Character of Sources of International Law', 1 Scandinavian Studies in Law, 1957, pp. 53, 84, and Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 27–31.

[19] See D'Amato, Concept of Custom, pp. 56–8, and Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 15–16. Judge Negulesco in an unfortunate phrase emphasised that custom required immemorial usage: European Commission of the Danube, PCIJ, Series B, No. 14, 1927, p. 105; 4 AD, p. 126. See also Brownlie, Principles, p. 7, and the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 43; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 72.

[20] ICJ Reports, 1950, p. 266; 17 ILR, p. 280.

[21] ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 276–7; 17 ILR, p. 284.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the International Court of Justice and requested a decision recognising that it (Colombia) was competent to define Torre's offence, as to whether it was criminal as Peru maintained, or political, in which case asylum and a safe conduct could be allowed.

The Court, in characterising the nature of a customary rule, held that it had to constitute the expression of a right appertaining to one state (Colombia) and a duty incumbent upon another (Peru). However, the Court felt that in the Asylum litigation, state practices had been so uncertain and contradictory as not to amount to a 'constant and uniform usage' regarding the unilateral qualification of the offence in question.[22] The issue involved here dealt with a regional custom pertaining only to Latin America and it may be argued that the same approach need not necessarily be followed where a general custom is alleged and that in the latter instance a lower standard of proof would be upheld.[23]

The ICJ emphasised its view that some degree of uniformity amongst state practices was essential before a custom could come into existence in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case.[24] The United Kingdom, in its arguments against the Norwegian method of measuring the breadth of the territorial sea, referred to an alleged rule of custom whereby a straight line may be drawn across bays of less than ten miles from one projection to the other, which could then be regarded as the baseline for the measurement of the territorial sea. The Court dismissed this by pointing out that the actual practice of states did not justify the creation of any such custom. In other words, there had been insufficient uniformity of behaviour.

In the North Sea Continental Shelf cases,[25] which involved a dispute between Germany on the one hand and Holland and Denmark on the other over the delimitation of the continental shelf, the ICJ remarked that state practice, 'including that of states whose interests are specially affected', had to be 'both extensive and virtually uniform in the sense of the provision invoked'. This was held to be indispensable to the formation of a new rule of customary international law.[26] However, the Court emphasised in the Nicaragua v. United States case[27] that it was not necessary that the [22] Ibid. [23] See further below, p. 92.

[24] ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 131 and 138; 18 ILR, p. 86.

[25] ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 3; 41 ILR, p. 29.

[26] ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 43; 41 ILR, p. 72. Note that the Court was dealing with the creation of a custom on the basis of what had been purely a treaty rule. See Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', p. 21, especially footnote 5. See also the Paquete Habana case, 175 US 677 (1900) and the Lotus case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 18; 4 AD, p. 153.

[27] ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 14; 76 ILR, p. 349.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

practice in question had to be 'in absolutely rigorous conformity' with the purported customary rule. The Court continued:

> In order to deduce the existence of customary rules, the Court deems it sufficient that the conduct of states should, in general, be consistent with such rules, and that instances of state conduct inconsistent with a given rule should generally have been treated as breaches of that rule, not as indications of the recognition of a new rule.[28]

The threshold that needs to be attained before a legally binding custom can be created will depend both upon the nature of the alleged rule and the opposition it arouses. This partly relates to the problem of ambiguity where it is not possible to point to the alleged custom with any degree of clarity, as in the Asylum case where a variety of conflicting and contradictory evidence had been brought forward.

On the other hand, an unsubstantiated claim by a state cannot be accepted because it would amount to unilateral law-making and compromise a reasonably impartial system of international law. If a proposition meets with a great deal of opposition then it would be an undesirable fiction to ignore this and talk of an established rule. Another relevant factor is the strength of the prior rule which is purportedly overthrown.[29] For example, the customary law relating to a state's sovereignty over its airspace developed very quickly in the years immediately before and during the First World War. Similarly, the principle of non-sovereignty over the space route followed by artificial satellites came into being soon after the launching of the first sputniks. Bin Cheng has argued that in such circumstances repetition is not at all necessary provided the opinio juris could be clearly established. Thus, 'instant' customary law is possible.[30]

This contention that single acts may create custom has been criticised, particularly in view of the difficulties of proving customary rules any other way but through a series of usages.[31] Nevertheless, the conclusion must be that it is the international context which plays the vital part in the creation of custom. In a society constantly faced with new situations because of the dynamics of progress, there is a clear need for a reasonably speedy method of responding to such changes by a system of prompt rule-formation. In

[28] ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 98; 76 ILR, p. 432.

[29] See D'Amato, Concept of Custom, pp. 60–1, and Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', p. 19. See also Judge Alvarez, the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 152; 18 ILR, pp. 86, 105, and Judge Loder, the Lotus case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, pp. 18, 34.

[30] Cheng, 'United Nations Resolutions'.

[31] See e.g. Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, pp. 325–6.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

new areas of law, customs can be quickly established by state practices by virtue of the newness of the situations involved, the lack of contrary rules to be surmounted and the overwhelming necessity to preserve a sense of regulation in international relations.

One particular analogy that has been used to illustrate the general nature of customary law was considered by de Visscher. He likened the growth of custom to the gradual formation of a road across vacant land. After an initial uncertainty as to direction, the majority of users begin to follow the same line which becomes a single path. Not long elapses before that path is transformed into a road accepted as the only regular way, even though it is not possible to state at which precise moment this latter change occurs. And so it is with the formation of a custom. De Visscher develops this idea by reflecting that just as some make heavier footprints than others due to their greater weight, the more influential states of the world mark the way with more vigour and tend to become the guarantors and defenders of the way forward.[32]

The reasons why a particular state acts in a certain way are varied but are closely allied to how it perceives its interests. This in turn depends upon the power and role of the state and its international standing. Accordingly, custom should to some extent mirror the perceptions of the majority of states, since it is based upon usages which are practised by nations as they express their power and their hopes and fears. But it is inescapable that some states are more influential and powerful than others and that their activities should be regarded as of greater significance. This is reflected in international law so that custom may be created by a few states, provided those states are intimately connected with the issue at hand, whether because of their wealth and power or because of their special relationship with the subject-matter of the practice, as for example maritime nations and sea law. Law cannot be divorced from politics or power and this is one instance of that proposition.[33]

The influence of the United Kingdom, for example, on the development of the law of the sea and prize law in the nineteenth century when it was at the height of its power, was predominant. A number of propositions later accepted as part of international customary law appeared this way.

[32] De Visscher, Theory and Reality, p. 149. See also Lauterpacht, Development of International Law, p. 368; P. Cobbett, Leading Cases on International Law, 4th edn, London, 1922, p. 5, and Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 22–3.

[33] See e.g. the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 42–3; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 71–3.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Among many instances of this, one can point to navigation procedures. Similarly, the impact of the Soviet Union (now Russia) and the United States on space law has been paramount.[34]

One can conclude by stating that for a custom to be accepted and recognised it must have the concurrence of the major powers in that particular field. A regulation regarding the breadth of the territorial sea is unlikely to be treated as law if the great maritime nations do not agree to or acquiesce in it, no matter how many landlocked states demand it. Other countries may propose ideas and institute pressure, but without the concurrence of those most interested, it cannot amount to a rule of customary law. This follows from the nature of the international system where all may participate but the views of those with greater power carry greater weight.

Accordingly, the duration and generality of a practice may take second place to the relative importance of the states precipitating the formation of a new customary rule in any given field. Universality is not required, but some correlation with power is. Some degree of continuity must be maintained but this again depends upon the context of operation and the nature of the usage.

Those elements reflect the external manifestations of a practice and establish that it is in existence and exhibited as such. That does not mean that it is law and this factor will be considered in the next subsection. But it does mean that all states who take the trouble can discover its existence. This factor of conspicuousness emphasises both the importance of the context within which the usage operates and the more significant elements of the overt act which affirms the existence of a custom.

The question is raised at this stage of how significant a failure to act is. Just how important is it when a state, or more particularly a major state, does not participate in a practice? Can it be construed as acquiescence in the performance of the usage? Or, on the other hand, does it denote indifference implying the inability of the practice to become a custom until a decision one way or the other has been made? Failures to act are in themselves just as much evidence of a state's attitudes as are actions. They similarly reflect the way in which a nation approaches its environment. Britain consistently fails to attack France, while Chad consistently fails to send a man to the moon. But does this mean that Britain recognises a [34] See e.g. Cheng, 'United Nations Resolutions'; C. Christol, The Modern International Law of Outer Space, New York, 1982, and Christol, Space Law: Past, Present and Future, The Hague, 1991. See further below, chapter 10.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

rule not to attack its neighbour and that Chad accepts a custom not to launch rockets to the moon? Of course, the answer is in the first instance yes, and in the second example no. Thus, a failure to act can arise from either a legal obligation not to act, or an incapacity or unwillingness in the particular circumstances to act. Indeed, it has been maintained that the continued habit of not taking actions in certain situations may lead to the formation of a legal rule.[35]

The danger of saying that a failure to act over a long period creates a negative custom, that is a rule actually not to do it, can be shown by remarking on the absurdity of the proposition that a continual failure to act until the late 1950s is evidence of a legal rule not to send artificial satellites or rockets into space. On the other hand, where a particular rule of behaviour is established it can be argued that abstention from protest by states may amount to agreement with that rule.

In the particular circumstances of the Lotus case[36] the Permanent Court of International Justice, the predecessor of the International Court of Justice, laid down a high standard by declaring that abstention could only give rise to the recognition of a custom if it was based on a conscious duty to abstain. In other words, states had actually to be aware that they were not acting a particular way because they were under a definite obligation not to act that way. The decision has been criticised and would appear to cover categories of non-acts based on legal obligations, but not to refer to instances where, by simply not acting as against a particular rule in existence, states are tacitly accepting the legality and relevance of that rule.

It should be mentioned, however, that acquiescence must be based upon full knowledge of the rule invoked. Where a failure to take a course of action is in some way connected or influenced or accompanied by a lack of knowledge of all the relevant circumstances, then it cannot be interpreted as acquiescence.

What is state practice?

Some of the ingredients of state activities have been surveyed and attempts made to place them in some kind of relevant context. But what is state practice? Does it cover every kind of behaviour initiated by the state, or [35] See e.g. Tunkin, Theory of International Law, pp. 116–17. But cf. D'Amato, Concept of Custom, pp. 61–3 and 88–9.

[36] PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 18; 4 AD, p. 153.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

is it limited to actual, positive actions? To put it more simply, does it include such things as speeches, informal documents and governmental statements or is it restricted to what states actually do?

It is how states behave in practice that forms the basis of customary law, but evidence of what a state does can be obtained from numerous sources. Obvious examples include administrative acts, legislation, decisions of courts and activities on the international stage, for example treaty-making.[37] A state is not a living entity, but consists of governmental departments and thousands of officials, and state activity is spread throughout a whole range of national organs. There are the state's legal officers, legislative institutions, courts, diplomatic agents and political leaders. Each of these engages in activity which relates to the international field and therefore one has to examine all such material sources and more in order to discover evidence of what states do.[38]

The obvious way to find out how countries are behaving is to read the newspapers, consult historical records, listen to what governmental authorities are saying and peruse the many official publications. There are also memoirs of various past leaders, official manuals on legal questions, diplomatic interchanges and the opinions of national legal advisors. All these methods are valuable in seeking to determine actual state practice.

In addition, one may note resolutions in the General Assembly, comments made by governments on drafts produced by the International Law Commission, decisions of the international judicial institutions, decisions of national courts, treaties and the general practice of international organisations.[39]

[37] See e.g. Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 751, and Congo v. Belgium, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 3, 23–4; 128 ILR, pp. 60, 78–80.

[38] See e.g. Yearbook of the ILC, 1950, vol. II, pp. 368–72, and the Interhandel case, ICJ Reports, 1959, p. 27. Note also Brierly's comment that not all contentions put forward on behalf of a state represent that state's settled or impartial opinion, The Law of Nations, 6th edn, Oxford, 1963, p. 60. See also Brownlie, Principles, p. 6, and Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', p. 2.

[39] The United States has produced an extensive series of publications covering its practice in international law. See the Digests of International Law produced by Wharton (1887), Moore (1906) and Whiteman (1963–70). From 1973 to 1980 an annual Digest of US Practice in International Law has been produced, while three composite volumes covering the years 1981–8 have appeared. The series resumed with effect from the year 2000. See also H. A. Smith, Great Britain and the Law of Nations, London, 2 vols., 1932–5; A. D. McNair, International Law Opinions, Cambridge, 3 vols., 1956; C. Parry, British Digest of International Law, London, 1965, and E. Lauterpacht, British Practice in International Law, London, 1963–7. Several yearbooks now produce sections devoted to national practice, e.g. British Yearbook of International Law and Annuaire Français de Droit International.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

International organisations in fact may be instrumental in the creation of customary law. For example, the Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice declaring that the United Nations possessed international personality was partly based on the actual behaviour of the UN.[40] The International Law Commission has pointed out that 'records of the cumulative practice of international organisations may be regarded as evidence of customary international law with reference to states' relations to the organisations'.[41] The International Court has also noted that evidence of the existence of rules and principles may be found in resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council of the United Nations.[42]

States' municipal laws may in certain circumstances form the basis of customary rules. In the Scotia case decided by the US Supreme Court in 1871,[43] a British ship had sunk an American vessel on the high seas. The Court held that British navigational procedures established by an Act of Parliament formed the basis of the relevant international custom since other states had legislated in virtually identical terms. Accordingly, the American vessel, in not displaying the correct lights, was at fault. The view has also been expressed that mere claims as distinct from actual physical acts cannot constitute state practice. This is based on the precept that 'until it [a state] takes enforcement action, the claim has little value as a prediction of what the state will actually do'.[44] But as has been demonstrated this is decidedly a minority view.[45] Claims and conventions of states in various contexts have been adduced as evidence of state practice and it is logical that this should be so,[46] though the weight to be attached to such claims, may, of course, vary according to the circumstances. This [40] The Reparation case, ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 174; 16 AD, p. 318. See also the Reservations to the Genocide Convention case, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 15, 25; 18 ILR, p. 364.

[41] Yearbook of the ILC, 1950, vol. II, pp. 368–72. See also Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', p. 12.

[42] See the Court's advisory opinion in the Construction of a Wall case, ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 136, 171; 129 ILR, pp. 37, 89–90.

[43] 14 Wallace 170 (1871). See also the Nottebohm case, ICJ Reports, 1955, pp. 4, 22; 22 ILR, p. 349, and the Paquete Habana case, 175 US 677 (1900).

[44] D'Amato, Concept of Custom, pp. 88 and 50–1. See also Judge Read (dissenting), the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 191; 18 ILR, pp. 86, 132.

[45] Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 2–3. See also Thirlway, International Customary Law, p. 58.

[46] E.g. the Asylum case, ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 266, 277; 17 ILR, p. 280; the Rights of US Nationals in Morocco case, ICJ Reports, 1952, pp. 176, 200, 209; 19 ILR, p. 255, and the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 32–3, 47 and 53; 41 ILR, p. 29. See also the Fisheries Jurisdiction cases, ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 3, 47, 56–8, 81–8, 119–20, 135 and 161; 55 ILR, p. 238.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

approach is clearly the correct one since the process of claims and counter-claims is one recognised method by which states communicate to each other their perceptions of the status of international rules and norms. In this sense they operate in the same way as physical acts. Whether in abstracto or with regard to a particular situation, they constitute the raw material out of which may be fashioned rules of international law.[47] It is suggested that the formulation that 'state practice covers any act or statements by a state from which views about customary law may be inferred',[48] is substantially correct. However, it should be noted that not all elements of practice are equal in their weight and the value to be given to state conduct will depend upon its nature and provenance.

Opinio juris[49]

Once one has established the existence of a specified usage, it becomes necessary to consider how the state views its own behaviour. Is it to be regarded as a moral or political or legal act or statement? The opinio juris, or belief that a state activity is legally obligatory, is the factor which turns the usage into a custom and renders it part of the rules of international law. To put it slightly differently, states will behave a certain way because they are convinced it is binding upon them to do so.

The Permanent Court of International Justice expressed this point of view when it dealt with the Lotus case.[50] The issue at hand concerned a collision on the high seas (where international law applies) between the Lotus, a French ship, and the Boz-Kourt, a Turkish ship. Several people aboard the latter ship were drowned and Turkey alleged negligence by the French officer of the watch. When the Lotus reached Istanbul, the French officer was arrested on a charge of manslaughter and the case turned on whether Turkey had jurisdiction to try him. Among the various [47] But see Thirlway, International Customary Law, pp. 58–9.

[48] Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', p. 10. This would also include omissions and silence by states: ibid.

[49] Ibid., pp. 31–42, and D'Amato, Concept of Custom, pp. 66–72. See also Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 753; Mendelson, 'Formation', p. 245; Bos, Methodology, pp. 236 ff.; P. Haggenmacher, 'Des Deux Éléments du Droit Coutumier dans la Pratique de la Cour Internationale', 91 Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1985, p. 5; O. Elias, 'The Nature of the Subjective Element in Customary International Law', 44 ICLQ, 1995, p. 501; I. M. Lobo de Souza, 'The Role of State Consent in the Customary Process', 44 ICLQ, 1995, p. 521, and B. Cheng, 'Opinio Juris: A Key Concept in International Law that is Much Misunderstood' in International Law in the Post-Cold War World (eds. S. Yee and W. Tieya), London, 2001, p. 56.

[50] PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 18; 4 AD, p. 153.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

arguments adduced, the French maintained that there existed a rule of customary law to the effect that the flag state of the accused (France) had exclusive jurisdiction in such cases and that accordingly the national state of the victim (Turkey) was barred from trying him. To justify this, France referred to the absence of previous criminal prosecutions by such states in similar situations and from this deduced tacit consent in the practice which therefore became a legal custom.

The Court rejected this and declared that even if such a practice of abstention from instituting criminal proceedings could be proved in fact, it would not amount to a custom. It held that 'only if such abstention were based on their [the states] being conscious of a duty to abstain would it be possible to speak of an international custom'.[51] Thus the essential ingredient of obligation was lacking and the practice remained a practice, nothing more.

A similar approach occurred in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases.[52] In the general process of delimiting the continental shelf of the North Sea in pursuance of oil and gas exploration, lines were drawn dividing the whole area into national spheres. However, West Germany could not agree with either Holland or Denmark over the respective boundary lines and the matter came before the International Court of Justice.

Article 6 of the Geneva Convention on the Continental Shelf of 1958 provided that where agreement could not be reached, and unless special circumstances justified a different approach, the boundary line was to be determined in accordance with the principle of equidistance from the nearest points of the baselines from which the breadth of the territorial sea of each state is measured. This would mean a series of lines drawn at the point where Germany met Holland on the one side and Denmark on the other and projected outwards into the North Sea. However, because Germany's coastline is concave, such equidistant lines would converge and enclose a relatively small triangle of the North Sea. The Federal Republic had signed but not ratified the 1958 Geneva Convention and was therefore not bound by its terms. The question thus was whether a case could be made out that the 'equidistance–special circumstances principle' had been absorbed into customary law and was accordingly binding upon Germany.

The Court concluded in the negative and held that the provision in the Geneva Convention did not reflect an already existing custom. It was [51] PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 28; 4 AD, p. 159.

[52] ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 3; 41 ILR, p. 29.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com emphasised that when the International Law Commission had considered this point in the draft treaty which formed the basis of discussion at Geneva, the principle of equidistance had been proposed with considerable hesitation, somewhat on an experimental basis and not at all as an emerging rule of customary international law.[53] The issue then turned on whether practice subsequent to the Convention had created a customary rule. The Court answered in the negative and declared that although time was not of itself a decisive factor (only three years had elapsed before the proceedings were brought):

> an indispensable requirement would be that within the period in question, short though it might be, state practice, including that of states whose interests are specially affected, should have been both extensive and virtually uniform in the sense of the provision invoked, and should moreover have occurred in such a way as to show a general recognition that a rule of law or legal obligation is involved.[54]

This approach was maintained by the Court in the Nicaragua case[55] and express reference was made to the North Sea Continental Shelf cases. The Court noted that:

> for a new customary rule to be formed, not only must the acts concerned 'amount to a settled practice', but they must be accompanied by the opinio juris sive necessitatis. Either the States taking such action or other States in a position to react to it, must have behaved so that their conduct is 'evidence of a belief that this practice is rendered obligatory by the existence of a rule of law requiring it. The need for such a belief, i.e. the existence of a subjective element, is implicit in the very notion of the opinio juris sive necessitatis.'[56]

It is thus clear that the Court has adopted and maintained a high threshold with regard to the overt proving of the subjective constituent of customary law formation.

The great problem connected with the opinio juris is that if it calls for behaviour in accordance with law, how can new customary rules be created since that obviously requires action different from or

[53] ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 32–41.

[54] Ibid., p. 43. See also e.g. the Asylum case, ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 266, 277; 17 ILR, p. 280, and the Right of Passage case, ICJ Reports, 1960, pp. 6, 42–3; 31 ILR, pp. 23, 55.

[55] ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 14; 76 ILR, p. 349.

[56] ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 108–9; 76 ILR, pp. 442–3, citing ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 44; 41 ILR, p. 73.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

contrary to what until then is regarded as law? If a country claims a three-mile territorial sea in the belief that this is legal, how can the rule be changed in customary law to allow claims of, for example, twelve miles, since that cannot also be in accordance with prevailing law?[57] Obviously if one takes a restricted view of the psychological aspects, then logically the law will become stultified and this demonstrably has not happened.

Thus, one has to treat the matter in terms of a process whereby states behave in a certain way in the belief that such behaviour is law or is becoming law. It will then depend upon how other states react as to whether this process of legislation is accepted or rejected. It follows that rigid definitions as to legality have to be modified to see whether the legitimating stamp of state activity can be provided or not. If a state proclaims a twelve-mile limit to its territorial sea in the belief that although the three-mile limit has been accepted law, the circumstances are so altering that a twelve-mile limit might now be treated as becoming law, it is vindicated if other states follow suit and a new rule of customary law is established. If other states reject the proposition, then the projected rule withers away and the original rule stands, reinforced by state practice and common acceptance. As the Court itself noted in the Nicaragua case,[58] '[r]eliance by a State on a novel right or an unprecedented exception to the principle might, if shared in principle by other States, tend towards a modification of customary international law'. The difficulty in this kind of approach is that it is sometimes hard to pinpoint exactly when one rule supersedes another, but that is a complication inherent in the nature of custom. Change is rarely smooth but rather spasmodic.

This means taking a more flexible view of the opinio juris and tying it more firmly with the overt manifestations of a custom into the context of national and international behaviour. This should be done to accommodate the idea of an action which, while contrary to law, contains the germ of a new law and relates to the difficulty of actually proving that a state, in behaving a certain way, does so in the belief that it is in accordance with the law. An extreme expression of this approach is to infer or deduce the opinio juris from the material acts. Judge Tanaka, in his Dissenting Opinion in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, remarked that there was:

[57] See Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 32–4 for attempts made to deny or minimise the need for opinio juris.

[58] ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 109; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 443.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> no other way than to ascertain the existence of opinio juris from the fact of the external existence of a certain custom and its necessity felt in the international community, rather than to seek evidence as to the subjective motives for each example of State practice.[59]

However, states must be made aware that when one state takes a course of action, it does so because it regards it as within the confines of international law, and not as, for example, purely a political or moral gesture. There has to be an aspect of legality about the behaviour and the acting state will have to confirm that this is so, so that the international community can easily distinguish legal from non-legal practices. This is essential to the development and presentation of a legal framework amongst the states.[60]

Faced with the difficulty in practice of proving the existence of the opinio juris, increasing reference has been made to conduct within international organisations. This is so particularly with regard to the United Nations. The International Court of Justice has in a number of cases utilised General Assembly resolutions as confirming the existence of the opinio juris, focusing on the content of the resolution or resolutions in question and the conditions of their adoption.[61] The key, however, is the attitude taken by the states concerned, whether as parties to a particular treaty or as participants in the adoption of a UN resolution.[62] The Court has also referred to major codification conventions

[59] ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 176; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 171. Lauterpacht wrote that one should regard all uniform conduct of governments as evidencing the opinio juris, except where the conduct in question was not accompanied by such intention: The Development of International Law, p. 580; but cf. Cheng, 'Custom: The Future', p. 36, and Cheng, 'United Nations Resolutions', pp. 530–2.

[60] Note D'Amato's view that to become a custom, a practice has to be preceded or accompanied by the 'articulation' of a rule, which will put states on notice than an action etc. will have legal implications: Concept of Custom, p. 75. Cf. Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 35–6, who also puts forward his view that 'the practice of states needs to be accompanied by statements that something is already law before it can become law': such statements need not be beliefs as to the truths of the given situation, ibid., p. 37. Akehurst also draws a distinction between permissive rules, which do not require express statements as to opinio juris, and duty-imposing rules, which do: ibid., pp. 37–8.

[61] See e.g. the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons case, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 254–5; 110 ILR, p. 163. See also the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 31–3; the East Timor case, ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 90, 102; 105 ILR, p. 226; the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 100, 101 and 106; 76 ILR, p. 349; and the Construction of a Wall case, ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 136, 171–2; 129 ILR, pp. 37, 89–90.

[62] See the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 99–100.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

for the same purpose,[63] and to the work of the International Law Commission.[64]

Protest, acquiescence and change in customary law[65]

Customary law is thus established by virtue of a pattern of claim, absence of protest by states particularly interested in the matter at hand and acquiescence by other states.[66] Together with related notions such as recognition, admissions and estoppel, such conduct or abstinence from conduct forms part of a complex framework within which legal principles are created and deemed applicable to states.[67]

The Chamber of the International Court in the Gulf of Maine case defined acquiescence as 'equivalent to tacit recognition manifested by unilateral conduct which the other party may interpret as consent' and as founded upon the principles of good faith and equity.[68] Generally, where states are seen to acquiesce[69] in the behaviour of other states without protesting against them, the assumption must be that such behaviour is accepted as legitimate.[70]

Some writers have maintained that acquiescence can amount to consent to a customary rule and that the absence of protest implies agreement.

[63] See e.g. the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 28–32 with regard to the 1958 Continental Shelf Convention and e.g. among many cases, Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 429–30 with regard to the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969.

[64] See e.g. the Gabčíkovo–Nagymaros case, ICJ Reports, 1997, pp. 7, 38–42 and 46; 116 ILR, pp. 1, 47–51 and 55.

[65] See H. Lauterpacht, 'Sovereignty over Submarine Areas', 27 BYIL, 1950, p. 376; I. MacGibbon, 'Some Observations on the Part of Protest in International Law', 29 BYIL, 1953, p. 293, and MacGibbon, 'Customary International Law and Acquiescence', 33 BYIL, 1957, p. 115; Wolfke, Custom, pp. 157–65, and I. Sinclair, 'Estoppel and Acquiescence' in Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice (eds. A. V. Lowe and M. Fitzmaurice), Cambridge, 1996, p. 104.

[66] See, for a good example, the decision of the International Court in the El Salvador/Honduras case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 601; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 517, with regard to the joint sovereignty over the historic waters of the Gulf of Fonseca beyond the territorial sea of the three coastal states.

[67] See e.g. Sinclair, 'Estoppel and Acquiescence', p. 104 and below, chapter 10, p. 515.

[68] ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 305; 71 ILR, p. 74.

[69] Note that the Court has stated that 'the idea of acquiescence . . . presupposes freedom of will', Burkina Faso/Mali, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 597; 80 ILR, p. 459.

[70] See e.g. Grand-Duchy of Luxembourg v. Cie. Luxembourgeoise de Télédiffusion, 91 ILR, pp. 281, 286.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

In other words where a state or states take action which they declare to be legal, the silence of other states can be used as an expression of opinio juris or concurrence in the new legal rule. This means that actual protests are called for to break the legitimising process.[71]

In the Lotus case, the Court held that 'only if such abstention were based on their [the states] being conscious of having a duty to abstain would it be possible to speak of an international custom'.[72] Thus, one cannot infer a rule prohibiting certain action merely because states do not indulge in that activity. But the question of not reacting when a state behaves a certain way is a slightly different one. It would seem that where a new rule is created in new fields of international law, for example space law, acquiescence by other states is to be regarded as reinforcing the rule whether it stems from actual agreement or lack of interest depending always upon the particular circumstances of the case. Acquiescence in a new rule which deviates from an established custom is more problematic.

The decision in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case[73] may appear to suggest that where a state acts contrary to an established customary rule and other states acquiesce in this, then that state is to be treated as not bound by the original rule. The Court noted that 'in any event the . . . rule would appear to be inapplicable as against Norway inasmuch as she had always opposed any attempt to apply it to the Norwegian coast'.[74] In other words, a state opposing the existence of a custom from its inception would not be bound by it, but the problem of one or more states seeking to dissent from recognised customs by adverse behaviour coupled with the acquiescence or non-reaction of other states remains unsettled.

States fail to protest for very many reasons. A state might not wish to give offence gratuitously or it might wish to reinforce political ties or other diplomatic and political considerations may be relevant. It could be that to protest over every single act with which a state does not agree would be an excessive requirement. It is, therefore, unrealistic to expect every state [71] See e.g. MacGibbon, 'Customary International Law', p. 131, and H. S. McDougal et al., Studies in World Public Order, New Haven, 1960, pp. 763–72.

[72] PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 28; 4 ILR, p. 159.

[73] ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 116; 18 ILR, p. 86.

[74] ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 131; 18 ILR, p. 93. See also the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 26–7; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 55–6, and the Asylum case, ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 266, 277–8; 17 ILR, pp. 280, 285.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

to react to every single act of every other state. If one accepted that a failure to protest validated a derogation from an established custom in every case then scores of special relationships would emerge between different states depending upon acquiescence and protest. In many cases a protest might be purely formal or part of diplomatic manoeuvring designed to exert pressure in a totally different field and thus not intended to alter legal relationships.

Where a new rule which contradicts a prior rule is maintained by a large number of states, the protests of a few states would not overrule it, and the abstention from reaction by other countries would merely reinforce it. Constant protest on the part of a particular state when reinforced by the acquiescence of other states might create a recognised exception to the rule, but it will depend to a great extent on the facts of the situation and the views of the international community. Behaviour contrary to a custom contains within itself the seeds of a new rule and if it is endorsed by other nations, the previous law will disappear and be replaced, or alternatively there could be a period of time during which the two customs co-exist until one of them is generally accepted,[75] as was the position for many years with regard to the limits of the territorial sea.[76] It follows from the above, therefore, that customary rules are binding upon all states except for such states as have dissented from the start of that custom.[77] This raises the question of new states and custom, for the logic of the traditional approach would be for such states to be bound by all existing customs as at the date of independence. The opposite view, based upon the consent theory of law, would permit such states to choose which customs to adhere to at that stage, irrespective of the attitude of other states.[78] However, since such an approach could prove highly disruptive, the proviso is often made that by entering into relations without reservation with other states, new states signify their acceptance of the totality of international law.[79]

[75] See also protests generally: Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 38–42.

[76] See below, chapter 11, p. 568.

[77] See e.g. the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 38, 130; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 67, 137, and The Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, St Paul, 1987, vol. I, pp. 25–6. See also T. Stein, 'The Approach of the Different Drummer: The Principle of the Persistent Objector in International Law', 26 Harvard International Law Journal, 1985, p. 457, and J. Charney, 'The Persistent Objector Rule and the Development of Customary International Law', 56 BYIL, 1985, p. 1.

[78] See e.g. Tunkin, Theory of International Law, p. 129.

[79] Ibid.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Regional and local custom[80]

It is possible for rules to develop which will bind only a set group of states, such as those in Latin America,[81] or indeed just two states.[82] Such an approach may be seen as part of the need for 'respect for regional legal traditions'.[83]

In the Asylum case,[84] the International Court of Justice discussed the Colombian claim of a regional or local custom peculiar to the Latin American states, which would validate its position over the granting of asylum. The Court declared that the 'party which relies on a custom of this kind must prove that this custom is established in such a manner that it has become binding on the other party'.[85] It found that such a custom could not be proved because of uncertain and contradictory evidence.

In such cases, the standard of proof required, especially as regards the obligation accepted by the party against whom the local custom is maintained, is higher than in cases where an ordinary or general custom is alleged.

In the Right of Passage over Indian Territory case,[86] Portugal claimed that there existed a right of passage over Indian territory as between the Portuguese enclaves, and this was upheld by the International Court of Justice over India's objections that no local custom could be established between only two states. The Court declared that it was satisfied that there had in the past existed a constant and uniform practice allowing free passage and that the 'practice was accepted as law by the parties and has given rise to a right and a correlative obligation'.[87] More generally, the Court stated that 'Where therefore the Court finds a practice clearly established between two States which was accepted by the Parties as [80] See Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 29–31; Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 105; Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 762; D'Amato, Concept of Custom, chapter 8; G. Cohen-Jonathan, 'La Coutume Locale', AFDI, 1961, p. 133, and Wolfke, Custom, pp. 88–90. Local custom is sometimes referred to as regional or special custom.

[81] See e.g. H. Gros Espiel, 'La Doctrine du Droit International en Amérique Latine avant la Première Conférence Panaméricaine', 3 Journal of the History of International Law, 2001, p. 1.

[82] Note the claim by Honduras in the El Salvador/Honduras case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 597; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 513 that a 'trilateral local custom of the nature of a convention' could establish a condominium arrangement.

[83] See the Eritrea/Yemen (Maritime Delimitation) case, 119 ILR, pp. 417, 448.

[84] ICJ Reports, 1950, p. 266; 17 ILR, p. 280.

[85] ICJ Reports, 1950, p. 276; 17 ILR, p. 284.

[86] ICJ Reports, 1960, p. 6; 31 ILR, p. 23.

[87] ICJ Reports, 1960, p. 40; 31 ILR, p. 53. See Wolfke, Custom, p. 90.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

governing the relations between them, the Court must attribute decisive effect to that practice for the purpose of determining their specific rights and obligations. Such a particular practice must prevail over any general rules.'[88]

Such local customs therefore depend upon a particular activity by one state being accepted by the other state (or states) as an expression of a legal obligation or right. While in the case of a general customary rule the process of consensus is at work so that a majority or a substantial minority of interested states can be sufficient to create a new custom, a local custom needs the positive acceptance of both (or all) parties to the rule.[89] This is because local customs are an exception to the general nature of customary law, which involves a fairly flexible approach to law-making by all states, and instead constitutes a reminder of the former theory of consent whereby states are bound only by what they assent to. Exceptions may prove the rule, but they need greater proof than the rule to establish themselves.

Treaties[90]

In contrast with the process of creating law through custom, treaties (or international conventions) are a more modern and more deliberate method.[91] Article 38 refers to 'international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognised by the contracting states'. Treaties will be considered in more detail in chapter 16 but in this survey of the sources of international law reference must be made to the role of international conventions.

Treaties are known by a variety of differing names, ranging from Conventions, International Agreements, Pacts, General Acts, Charters, through to Statutes, Declarations and Covenants.[92] All these terms refer to a similar transaction, the creation of written agreements whereby the states participating bind themselves legally to act in a particular way or to set up particular relations between themselves. A series of conditions and [88] ICJ Reports, 1960, p. 44. [89] See Cohen-Jonathan, 'La Coutume Locale'.

[90] See generally A. D. McNair, The Law of Treaties, Oxford, 1961; Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 736, and A. Aust, Modern Treaty Law and Practice, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2007. See further below, chapter 16.

[91] Oppenheim's International Law emphasises that 'not only is custom the original source of international law, but treaties are a source the validity and modalities of which themselves derive from custom', p. 31.

[92] See e.g. UKMIL, 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 404.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

arrangements are laid out which the parties oblige themselves to carry out.[93]

The obligatory nature of treaties is founded upon the customary international law principle that agreements are binding (pacta sunt servanda). Treaties may be divided into 'law-making' treaties, which are intended to have universal or general relevance, and 'treaty-contracts', which apply only as between two or a small number of states. Such a distinction is intended to reflect the general or local applicability of a particular treaty and the range of obligations imposed. It cannot be regarded as hard and fast and there are many grey areas of overlap and uncertainty.[94]

Treaties are express agreements and are a form of substitute legislation undertaken by states. They bear a close resemblance to contracts in a superficial sense in that the parties create binding obligations for themselves, but they have a nature of their own which reflects the character of the international system. The number of treaties entered into has expanded over the last century, witness the growing number of volumes of the United Nations Treaty Series or the United Kingdom Treaty Series. They fulfil a vital role in international relations.

As governmental controls increase and the technological and communications revolutions affect international life, the number of issues which require some form of inter-state regulation multiplies.

For many writers, treaties constitute the most important sources of international law as they require the express consent of the contracting parties. Treaties are thus seen as superior to custom, which is regarded in any event as a form of tacit agreement.[95] As examples of important treaties one may mention the Charter of the United Nations, the Geneva Conventions on the treatment of prisoners and the protection of civilians and the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations. All kinds of agreements exist, ranging from the regulation of outer space exploration to the control of drugs and the creation of international financial and development institutions. It would be impossible to telephone abroad or post a [93] See the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969. Article 2(1)a defines a treaty for the purposes of the Convention as 'an international agreement concluded between states in written form and governed by international law, whether embodied in a single instrument or in two or more related instruments and whatever its particular designation'. See further below, p. 117 with regard to non-binding international agreements.

[94] See Virally, 'Sources', p. 126; Sørensen, Les Sources, pp. 58 ff., and Tunkin, Theory of International Law, pp. 93–5.

[95] Tunkin, Theory of International Law, pp. 91–113. See also R. Müllerson, 'Sources of International Law: New Tendencies in Soviet Thinking', 83 AJIL, 1989, pp. 494, 501–9, and Danilenko, 'Theory', p. 9.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com letter overseas or take an aeroplane to other countries without the various international agreements that have laid down the necessary, recognised conditions of operation.

It follows from the essence of an international treaty that, like a contract, it sets down a series of propositions which are then regarded as binding upon the parties. How then is it possible to treat conventions as sources of international law, over and above the obligations imposed upon the contracting parties? It is in this context that one can understand the term 'law-making treaties'. They are intended to have an effect generally, not restrictively, and they are to be contrasted with those treaties which merely regulate limited issues between a few states. Law-making treaties are those agreements whereby states elaborate their perception of international law upon any given topic or establish new rules which are to guide them for the future in their international conduct. Such law-making treaties, of necessity, require the participation of a large number of states to emphasise this effect, and may produce rules that will bind all.[96] They constitute normative treaties, agreements that prescribe rules of conduct to be followed. Examples of such treaties may include the Antarctic Treaty and the Genocide Convention. There are also many agreements which declare the existing law or codify existing customary rules, such as the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961.

Parties that do not sign and ratify the particular treaty in question are not bound by its terms. This is a general rule and was illustrated in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases[97] where West Germany had not ratified the relevant Convention and was therefore under no obligation to heed its terms. However, where treaties reflect customary law then non-parties are bound, not because it is a treaty provision but because it reaffirms a rule or rules of customary international law. Similarly, non-parties may come to accept that provisions in a particular treaty can generate customary law, depending always upon the nature of the agreement, the number of participants and other relevant factors.

[96] But this may depend upon the attitude of other states. This does not constitute a form of international legislation: see e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 32; the Reparation case, ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 185; 16 AD, p. 318, and the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, p. 56; 49 ILR, p. 2. See also Brownlie, Principles, pp. 12–14, and R. Baxter, 'Treaties and Custom', 129 HR, 1970, p. 27. See also O. Schachter, 'Entangled Treaty and Custom' in International Law at a Time of Perplexity (ed. Y. Dinstein), Dordrecht, 1989, p. 717, and Y. Dinstein, 'The Interaction Between Customary International Law and Treaties', 322 HR, 2006, p. 247.

[97] ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 25; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 54.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The possibility that a provision in a treaty may constitute the basis of a rule which, when coupled with the opinio juris, can lead to the creation of a binding custom governing all states, not just those party to the original treaty, was considered by the International Court of Justice in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases[98] and regarded as one of the recognised methods of formulating new rules of customary international law. The Court, however, declared that the particular provision had to be 'of a fundamentally norm-creating character',[99] that is, capable of forming the basis of a general rule of law. What exactly this amounts to will probably vary according to the time and place, but it does confirm that treaty provisions may lead to custom providing other states, parties and non-parties to the treaty fulfil the necessary conditions of compatible behaviour and opinio juris. It has been argued that this possibility may be extended so that generalisable treaty provisions may of themselves, without the requirement to demonstrate the opinio juris and with little passage of time, generate ipso facto customary rules.[100] This, while recognising the importance of treaties, particularly in the human rights field, containing potential norm-creating provisions, is clearly going too far. The danger would be of a small number of states legislating for all, unless dissenting states actually entered into contrary treaties.[101] This would constitute too radical a departure for the current process of law-formation within the international community.

It is now established that even where a treaty rule comes into being covering the same ground as a customary rule, the latter will not be simply absorbed within the former but will maintain its separate existence. The Court in the Nicaragua case[102] did not accept the argument of the US that the norms of customary international law concerned with self-defence had been 'subsumed' and 'supervened' by article 51 of the United Nations Charter. It was emphasised that 'even if a treaty norm and a customary norm relevant to the present dispute were to have exactly the [98] ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 41; 41 ILR, p. 71. The Court stressed that this method of creating new customs was not to be lightly regarded as having been attained, ibid.

[99] But see the minority opinions, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 56, 156–8, 163, 169, 172–80, 197–200, 221–32 and 241–7; 41 ILR, p. 85. See also the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 295; 71 ILR, pp. 74, 122, and the Libya/Malta Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 13, 29–34; 81 ILR, pp. 239, 261–6.

[100] See D'Amato, Concept of Custom, p. 104, and D'Amato, 'The Concept of Human Rights in International Law', 82 Columbia Law Review, 1982, pp. 1110, 1129–47. See also Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 42–52.

[101] D'Amato, 'Concept of Human Rights', p. 1146.

[102] ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 14; 76 ILR, p. 349.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

same content, this would not be a reason for the Court to hold that the incorporation of the customary norm into treaty law must deprive the customary norm of its applicability as distinct from the treaty norm'.[103] The Court concluded that 'it will therefore be clear that customary international law continues to exist and to apply separately from international treaty law, even where the two categories of law have an identical content'.[104] The effect of this in the instant case was that the Court was able to examine the rule as established under customary law, whereas due to an American reservation, it was unable to analyse the treaty-based obligation.

Of course, two rules with the same content may be subject to different principles with regard to their interpretation and application; thus the approach of the Court as well as being theoretically correct is of practical value also. In many cases, such dual source of existence of a rule may well suggest that the two versions are not in fact identical, as in the case of self-defence under customary law and article 51 of the Charter, but it will always depend upon the particular circumstances.[105]

Certain treaties attempt to establish a 'regime' which will, of necessity, also extend to non-parties.[106] The United Nations Charter, for example, in its creation of a definitive framework for the preservation of international peace and security, declares in article 2(6) that 'the organisation shall ensure that states which are not members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles [listed in article 2] so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security'. One can also point to the 1947 General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) which set up a common code of conduct in international trade and has had an important effect on non-party states as well, being now transmuted into the World Trade Organisation.

On the same theme, treaties may be constitutive in that they create international institutions and act as constitutions for them, outlining their proposed powers and duties.

'Treaty-contracts' on the other hand are not law-making instruments in themselves since they are between only small numbers of states and on a limited topic, but may provide evidence of customary rules. For example, a series of bilateral treaties containing a similar rule may be evidence of the existence of that rule in customary law, although this proposition needs to [103] ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 94–5; 76 ILR, pp. 428–9. See also W. Czaplinski, 'Sources of International Law in the Nicaragua Case', 38 ICLQ, 1989, p. 151.

[104] ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 96; 76 ILR, p. 430.
[105] See further below, chapter 20, p. 1131.
[106] See further below, chapter 16, p. 928.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

be approached with some caution in view of the fact that bilateral treaties by their very nature often reflect discrete circumstances.[107]

General principles of law[108]

In any system of law, a situation may very well arise where the court in considering a case before it realises that there is no law covering exactly that point, neither parliamentary statute nor judicial precedent. In such instances the judge will proceed to deduce a rule that will be relevant, by analogy from already existing rules or directly from the general principles that guide the legal system, whether they be referred to as emanating from justice, equity or considerations of public policy. Such a situation is perhaps even more likely to arise in international law because of the relative underdevelopment of the system in relation to the needs with which it is faced.

There are fewer decided cases in international law than in a municipal system and no method of legislating to provide rules to govern new situations.[109] It is for such a reason that the provision of 'the general principles of law recognised by civilised nations'[110] was inserted into article 38 as a source of law, to close the gap that might be uncovered in international law and solve this problem which is known legally as non liquet.[111] The [107] See further below, p. 686, with regard to extradition treaties and below, p. 837, with regard to bilateral investment treaties.

[108] See e.g. B. Cheng, General Principles of Law as Applied by International Courts and Tribunals, London, 1953; A. D. McNair, 'The General Principles of Law Recognised by Civilised Nations', 33 BYIL, 1957, p. 1; H. Lauterpacht, Private Law Sources and Analogies of International Law, London, 1927; G. Herczegh, General Principles of Law and the International Legal Order, Budapest, 1969; O. Schachter, International Law in Theory and Practice, Dordrecht, 1991, pp. 50–5; O. Corten, L'Utilisation du 'Raisonnable' par le Juge International, Brussels, 1997; B. Vitanyi, 'Les Positions Doctrinales Concernant le Sens de la Notion de "Principes Généraux de Droit Reconnus par les Nations Civilisées" ', 86 Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1982, p. 48; H. Waldock, 'General Course on Public International Law', 106 HR, 1962, p. 54; Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 764; Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 108; M. Sørensen, 'Principes de Droit International', 101 HR, 1960, p. 16, and V. Degan, 'General Principles of Law', 3 Finnish YIL, 1992, p. 1.

[109] Note that the International Court has regarded the terms 'principles' and 'rules' as essentially the same within international law: the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 288–90. Introducing the adjective 'general', however, shifts the meaning to a broader concept.

[110] The additional clause relating to recognition by 'civilised nations' is regarded today as redundant: see e.g. Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 769.

[111] See e.g. J. Stone, Of Law and Nations, London, 1974, chapter 3; H. Lauterpacht, 'Some Observations on the Prohibition of Non Liquet and the Completeness of the Legal Order',

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

question of gaps in the system is an important one. It is important to appreciate that while there may not always be an immediate and obvious rule applicable to every international situation, 'every international situation is capable of being determined as a matter of law'.[112]

There are various opinions as to what the general principles of law concept is intended to refer. Some writers regard it as an affirmation of Natural Law concepts, which are deemed to underlie the system of international law and constitute the method for testing the validity of the positive (i.e. man-made) rules.[113] Other writers, particularly positivists, treat it as a sub-heading under treaty and customary law and incapable of adding anything new to international law unless it reflects the consent of states. Soviet writers like Tunkin subscribed to this approach and regarded the 'general principles of law' as reiterating the fundamental precepts of international law, for example, the law of peaceful co-existence, which have already been set out in treaty and custom law.[114]

Between these two approaches, most writers are prepared to accept that the general principles do constitute a separate source of law but of fairly limited scope, and this is reflected in the decisions of the Permanent Court of International Justice and the International Court of Justice. It is not clear, however, in all cases, whether what is involved is a general principle of law appearing in municipal systems or a general principle of international law. But perhaps this is not a terribly serious problem since both municipal legal concepts and those derived from existing international practice can be defined as falling within the recognised catchment area.[115]

Symbolae Verzijl, 1958, p. 196; Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 704; H. Thirlway, 'The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice', BYIL, 1988, p. 76, and Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 44, and P. Weil, 'The Court Cannot Conclude Definitively . . . ? Non Liquet Revisited', 36 Columbia Journal of Transnational Law, 1997, p. 109. See also the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 46; 41 ILR, p. 29, and the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 135; 76 ILR, p. 349.

[112] Oppenheim's International Law, p. 13. See, however, the conclusion of the International Court that it was unable to state whether there was a rule of international law prohibiting or permitting the threat or use of nuclear weapons by a state in self-defence where its very survival was at stake: the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons case, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 244; 110 ILR, pp. 163, 194. Cf. the Dissenting Opinion of Judge Higgins, ibid.; 110 ILR, pp. 532 ff. See also Eritrea/Yemen (First Phase), 114 ILR, pp. 1, 119 and 121–2.

[113] See e.g. Lauterpacht, Private Law Sources. See also Waldock, 'General Course', p. 54; C. W. Jenks, The Common Law of Mankind, London, 1958, p. 169, and Judge Tanaka (dissenting), South-West Africa case, (Second Phase), ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 6, 294–9; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 455–9.

[114] Tunkin, Theory of International Law, chapter 7.

[115] See Brownlie, Principles, p. 16 , and Virally, 'Sources', pp. 144–8.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

While the reservoir from which one can draw contains the legal operations of 190 or so states, it does not follow that judges have to be experts in every legal system. There are certain common themes that run through the many different orders. Anglo-American common law has influenced a number of states throughout the world, as have the French and Germanic systems. There are many common elements in the law in Latin America, and most Afro-Asian states have borrowed heavily from the European experience in their efforts to modernise the structure administering the state and westernise economic and other enterprises.[116]

Reference will now be made to some of the leading cases in this field to illustrate how this problem has been addressed.

In the Chorzów Factory case in 1928,[117] which followed the seizure of a nitrate factory in Upper Silesia by Poland, the Permanent Court of International Justice declared that 'it is a general conception of law that every violation of an engagement involves an obligation to make reparation'. The Court also regarded it as:

> a principle of international law that the reparation of a wrong may consist in an indemnity corresponding to the damage which the nationals of the injured state have suffered as a result of the act which is contrary to international law.

The most fertile fields, however, for the implementation of municipal law analogies have been those of procedure, evidence and the machinery of the judicial process. In the German Settlers in Poland case,[118] the Court, approaching the matter from the negative point of view,[119] declared that 'private rights acquired under existing law do not cease on a change of sovereignty . . . It can hardly be maintained that, although the law survived, private rights acquired under it perished. Such a contention [116] See generally, R. David and J. Brierley, Major Legal Systems in the World Today, 2nd edn, London, 1978. Note that the Tribunal in AMCO v. Republic of Indonesia stated that while a practice or legal provisions common to a number of nations would be an important source of international law, the French concepts of administrative unilateral acts or administrative contracts were not such practices or legal provisions: 89 ILR, pp. 366, 461.

[117] PCIJ, Series A, No. 17, 1928, p. 29; 4 AD, p. 258. See also the Chile–United States Commission decision with regard to the deaths of Letelier and Moffitt: 31 ILM, 1982, pp. 1, 9; 88 ILR, p. 727.

[118] PCIJ, Series B, No. 6, p. 36.

[119] See also the South-West Africa cases, ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 3, 47; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 280–1, for a statement that the notion of actio popularis was not part of international law as such nor able to be regarded as imported by the concept of general principles of law.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

is based on no principle and would be contrary to an almost universal opinion and practice.'[120] The International Court of Justice in the Corfu Channel case,[121] when referring to circumstantial evidence, pointed out that 'this indirect evidence is admitted in all systems of law and its use is recognised by international decisions'. International judicial reference has also been made to the concept of res judicata, that is that the decision in the circumstances is final, binding and without appeal.[122]

In the Administrative Tribunal case,[123] the Court dealt with the problem of the dismissal of members of the United Nations Secretariat staff and whether the General Assembly had the right to refuse to give effect to awards to them made by the relevant Tribunal. In giving its negative reply, the Court emphasised that:

> according to a well-established and generally recognised principle of law, a judgment rendered by such a judicial body is res judicata and has binding force between the parties to the dispute.[124]

The question of res judicata was discussed in some detail in the Genocide Convention (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro) case,[125] where the issue focused on the meaning of the 1996 decision of the Court rejecting preliminary objections to jurisdiction.[126] The Court emphasised that the principle 'signifies that the decisions of the Court are not only binding on the parties, but are final, in the sense that they cannot be reopened by the parties as regards the issues that have been determined, save by procedures, of an exceptional nature, specially laid down for that purpose. That principle signifies that the decisions of the Court are not [120] See also the Certain German Interests in Polish Upper Silesia case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 7, p. 42, and the Free Zones of Upper Savoy and the District of Gex case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 46, p. 167.

[121] ICJ Reports, 1949, pp. 4, 18; 16 AD, pp. 155, 157.

[122] The Corfu Channel case, ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 248.

[123] ICJ Reports, 1954, p. 47; 21 ILR, p. 310.

[124] ICJ Reports, 1954, p. 53; 21 ILR, p. 314, and the Laguna del Desierto (Argentina/Chile) case, 113 ILR, pp. 1, 43, where it was stated that 'A judgment having the authority of res judicata is judicially binding on the Parties to the dispute. This is a fundamental principle of the law of nations repeatedly invoked in the jurisprudence, which regards the authority of res judicata as a universal and absolute principle of international law.' See also AMCO v. Republic of Indonesia, 89 ILR, pp. 366, 558; Cheng, General Principles, chapter 17; S. Rosenne, The Law and Practice of the International Court, 1920–2005, 4th edn, Leiden, 2006, pp. 1598 ff.; M. Shahabuddeen, Precedent in the International Court, Cambridge, 1996, pp. 30 and 168, and I. Scobbie, 'Res Judicata, Precedent and the International Court', 20 Australian YIL, 2000, p. 299.

[125] ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 113.

[126] ICJ Reports, 1996, p. 595; 115 ILR, p. 110.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

only binding on the parties, but are final, in the sense that they cannot be reopened by the parties as regards the issues that have been determined, save by procedures, of an exceptional nature, specially laid down for that purpose.'[127] The Court noted that two purposes, one general and one specific, underpinned the principle of res judicata, internationally as well as nationally. The first referred to the stability of legal relations that requires that litigation come to an end. The second was that it is in the interest of each party that an issue which has already been adjudicated in favour of that party not be argued again. It was emphasised that depriving a litigant of the benefit of a judgment it had already obtained must in general be seen as a breach of the principles governing the legal settlement of disputes. The Court noted that the principle applied equally to preliminary objections judgments and merits judgments and that since jurisdiction had been established by virtue of the 1996 judgment, it was not open to a party to assert in current proceedings that, at the date the earlier judgment was given, the Court had no power to give it, because one of the parties could now be seen to have been unable to come before it. This would be to call in question the force as res judicata of the operative clause of the judgment.[128]

Further, the Court in the preliminary objections phase of the Right of Passage case[129] stated that:

> it is a rule of law generally accepted, as well as one acted upon in the past by the Court, that, once the Court has been validly seized of a dispute, unilateral action by the respondent state in terminating its Declaration [i.e. accepting the jurisdiction of the Court], in whole or in part, cannot divest the Court of jurisdiction.

The Court has also considered the principle of estoppel which provides that a party that has acquiesced in a particular situation cannot then proceed to challenge it. In the Temple case[130] the International Court of Justice applied the doctrine, but in the Serbian Loans case[131] in 1929, in which French bondholders were demanding payment in gold francs as against paper money upon a series of Serbian loans, the Court declared the principle inapplicable.

As the International Court noted in the ELSI case,[132] there were limitations upon the process of inferring an estoppel in all circumstances, since [127] Ibid., at para. 115. [128] Ibid., at paras. 116–23.

[129] ICJ Reports, 1957, pp. 125, 141–2; 24 ILR, pp. 840, 842–3.
[130] ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 6, 23, 31 and 32; 33 ILR, pp. 48, 62, 69–70.
[131] PCIJ, Series A, No. 20; 5 AD, p. 466.
[132] ICJ Reports, 1989, pp. 15, 44; 84 ILR, pp. 311, 350.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

'although it cannot be excluded that an estoppel could in certain circumstances arise from a silence when something ought to have been said, there are obvious difficulties in constructing an estoppel from a mere failure to mention a matter at a particular point in somewhat desultory diplomatic exchanges'.[133] The meaning of estoppel was confirmed in Cameroon v. Nigeria,[134] where the Court emphasised that 'An estoppel would only arise if by its acts or declarations Cameroon had consistently made it fully clear that it had agreed to settle the boundary dispute submitted to the Court by bilateral avenues alone. It would further be necessary that, by relying on such an attitude, Nigeria had changed position to its own detriment or had suffered some prejudice.'

Another example of a general principle was provided by the Arbitration Tribunal in the AMCO v. Republic of Indonesia case,[135] where it was stated that 'the full compensation of prejudice, by awarding to the injured party the damnum emergens and lucrum cessans is a principle common to the main systems of municipal law, and therefore, a general principle of law which may be considered as a source of international law'. Another principle would be that of respect for acquired rights.[136] One crucial general principle of international law is that of pacta sunt servanda, or the idea that international agreements are binding. The law of treaties rests inexorably upon this principle since the whole concept of binding international agreements can only rest upon the presupposition that such instruments are commonly accepted as possessing that quality.[137]

Perhaps the most important general principle, underpinning many international legal rules, is that of good faith.[138] This principle is enshrined [133] See also the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, pp. 52 ff.; 6 AD, pp. 95, 100–2; the decision of the Eritrea/Ethiopia Boundary Commission of 13 April 2002, 130 ILR, pp. 1, 35–6; and the Saiga (No. 2) case, 120 ILR, pp. 143, 230; Brownlie, Principles, p. 615, and H. Thirlway, 'The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice, 1960–89 (Part One)', 60 BYIL, 1989, pp. 4, 29. See also below, chapter 10, p. 515.

[134] ICJ Reports, 1998, pp. 275, 303. [135] 89 ILR, pp. 366, 504.

[136] See, for example, the German Interests in Polish Upper Silesia case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 7, 1926, p. 22; Starrett Housing Corporation v. Iran 85 ILR p. 34; the Shufeld claim, 5 AD, p. 179, and AMCO v. Republic of Indonesia 89 ILR, pp. 366, 496. See further below, p. 830.

[137] See Brownlie, Principles, pp. 591–2, and McNair, Law of Treaties, vol. I, chapter 30. See also article 26 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969, and AMCO v. Republic of Indonesia 89 ILR, pp. 366, 495–7.

[138] Oppenheim's International Law notes that this is 'of overriding importance', p. 38. See E. Zoller, Bonne Foi en Droit International Public, Paris, 1977; R. Kolb, La Bonne Foie en Droit International Public, Paris, 2000; Thirlway, 'Law and Procedure of the ICJ (Part One)' pp. 3, 7 ff., and Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 7; and G. Fitzmaurice, The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice, Cambridge, 1986, vol. I, p. 183 and vol. II, p. 609.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in the United Nations Charter, which provides in article 2(2) that 'all Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter', and the elaboration of this provision in the Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2625 (XXV), 1970, referred to the obligations upon states to fulfil in good faith their obligations resulting from international law generally, including treaties. It therefore constitutes an indispensable part of the rules of international law generally.[139]

The International Court declared in the Nuclear Tests cases[140] that:

> One of the basic principles governing the creation and performance of legal obligations, whatever their source, is the principle of good faith. Trust and confidence are inherent in international co-operation, in particular in an age when this co-operation in many fields is becoming increasingly essential. Just as the very rule of pacta sunt servanda in the law of treaties is based on good faith, so also is the binding character of an international obligation assumed by unilateral obligation.

Nevertheless, the Court has made the point that good faith as a concept is 'not in itself a source of obligation where none would otherwise exist'.[141] The principle of good faith, therefore, is a background principle informing and shaping the observance of existing rules of international law and in addition constraining the manner in which those rules may legitimately be exercised.[142] As the International Court has noted, the principle of good faith relates 'only to the fulfilment of existing obligations'.[143] A further principle to be noted is that of ex injuria jus non oritur, which [139] See also Case T-115/94, Opel Austria Gmbh v. Republic of Austria, 22 January 1997.

[140] ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 253, 267; 57 ILR, pp. 398, 412.

[141] The Border and Transborder Armed Actions case (Nicaragua v. Honduras), ICJ Reports, 1988, p. 105; 84 ILR, p. 218. See also Judge Ajibolo's Separate Opinion in the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 71–4; 100 ILR, pp. 1, 69–72, and the statement by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in the Re-introduction of the Death Penalty in Peru case, 16 Human Rights Law Journal, 1995, pp. 9, 13.

[142] See also the Fisheries Jurisdiction cases, ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 3, 33; 55 ILR, pp. 238, 268; the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 46–7; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 76; the Lac Lannoux case, 24 ILR, p. 119, and the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons case, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 264 ff.; 110 ILR, pp. 163, 214–15. Note also Principles 19 and 27 of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, 1992, 31 ILM, 1992, p. 876.

[143] Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 1998, pp. 275, 304.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

posits that facts flowing from wrongful conduct cannot determine the law.[144]

Thus it follows that it is the Court which has the discretion as to which principles of law to apply in the circumstances of the particular case under consideration, and it will do this upon the basis of the inability of customary and treaty law to provide the required solution. In this context, one must consider the Barcelona Traction case[145] between Belgium and Spain. The International Court of Justice relied heavily upon the municipal law concept of the limited liability company and emphasised that if the Court were to decide the case in disregard of the relevant institutions of municipal law it would, without justification, invite serious legal difficulties. It would lose touch with reality, for there are no corresponding institutions of international law to which the Court could resort.[146]

However, international law did not refer to the municipal law of a particular state, but rather to the rules generally accepted by municipal legal systems which, in this case, recognise the idea of the limited company.

Equity and international law[147]

Apart from the recourse to the procedures and institutions of municipal legal systems to reinforce international law, it is also possible to see in a [144] See e.g. the Gabčíkovo–Nagymaros Project case, ICJ Reports, 1997, pp. 7, 76; 116 ILR, p. 1, and the Brcko case, 36 ILM, 1997, pp. 396, 422.

[145] ICJ Reports, 1970, p. 3; 46 ILR, p. 178.

[146] ICJ Reports, 1970, p. 37; 46 ILR, p. 211. See also generally the Abu Dhabi arbitration, 1 ICLQ, 1952, p. 247; 18 ILR, p. 44, and Texaco v. Libya 53 ILR, p. 389.

[147] See M. Akehurst, 'Equity and General Principles of Law', 25 ICLQ, 1976, p. 801; B. Cheng, 'Justice and Equity in International Law', 8 Current Legal Problems, 1955, p. 185; V. Degan, L'Equité et le Droit International, Paris, 1970; C. de Visscher, De l'Equité dans le Réglement Arbitral ou Judiciaire des Litiges de Droit International Public, Paris, 1972; E. Lauterpacht, 'Equity, Evasion, Equivocation and Evolution in International Law', Proceedings of the American Branch of the ILA, 1977–8, p. 33, and E. Lauterpacht, Aspects of the Administration of International Justice, Cambridge, 1991, pp. 117–52; R. Y. Jennings, 'Equity and Equitable Principles', Annuaire Suisse de Droit International, 1986, p. 38; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 43; R. Higgins, Problems and Process, Oxford, 1994, chapter 13; M. Miyoshi, Considerations of Equity in the Settlement of Territorial and Boundary Disputes, The Hague, 1993; S. Rosenne, 'Equitable Principles and the Compulsory Jurisdiction of International Tribunals', Festschrift für Rudolf Bindschedler, Berne, 1980, p. 410, and Rosenne, 'The Position of the International Court of Justice on the Foundations of the Principle of Equity in International Law' in Forty Years International Court of Justice: Jurisdiction, Equality and Equity (eds. A. Bloed and P. Van Dijk), Dordrecht, 1988, p. 108; Pirotte, 'La Notion d'Équité dans la Jurisprudence Récente de la CIJ', 77 Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1973, p. 131; Chattopadhyay, 'Equity in International Law: Its Growth and Development',

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

number of cases references to equity[148] as a set of principles constituting the values of the system. The most famous decision on these lines was that of Judge Hudson in the Diversion of Water from the Meuse case[149] in 1937 regarding a dispute between Holland and Belgium. Hudson pointed out that what are regarded as principles of equity have long been treated as part of international law and applied by the courts. 'Under article 38 of the Statute', he declared, 'if not independently of that article, the Court has some freedom to consider principles of equity as part of the international law which it must apply.' However, one must be very cautious in interpreting this, although on the broadest level it is possible to see equity (on an analogy with domestic law) as constituting a creative charge in legal development, producing the dynamic changes in the system rendered inflexible by the strict application of rules.[150]

The concept of equity[151] has been referred to in several cases. In the Rann of Kutch Arbitration between India and Pakistan in 1968[152] the Tribunal agreed that equity formed part of international law and that accordingly the parties could rely on such principles in the presentation of their cases.[153] The International Court of Justice in the North

5 Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law, 1975, p. 381; R. Lapidoth, 'Equity in International Law', 22 Israel Law Review, 1987, p. 161; Schachter, International Law, p. 49; A. V. Lowe, 'The Role of Equity in International Law', 12 Australian YIL, 1992, p. 54; P. Weil, 'L'Équité dans la Jurisprudence de la Cour International de Justice' in Lowe and Fitzmaurice, Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice, p. 121; Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 723; Thirlway, 'Law and Procedure of the ICJ (Part One)', p. 49, and Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 26. Note especially Judge Weeramantry's study of equity in the Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway) case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 38, 211; 99 ILR, pp. 395, 579.

148 Equity generally may be understood in the contexts of adapting law to particular areas or choosing between several different interpretations of the law (equity infra legem), filling gaps in the law (equity praetor legem) and as a reason for not applying unjust laws (equity contra legem): see Akehurst, 'Equity', and Judge Weeramantry, the Jan Mayen case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 38, 226–34; 99 ILR, pp. 395, 594–602. See also below, chapter 17, for the extensive use of equity in the context of state succession.

149 PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 70, pp. 73, 77; 8 AD, pp. 444, 450.

150 See e.g. Judge Weeramantry, the Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway) case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 38, 217; 99 ILR, pp. 395, 585. Cf. Judge Schwebel's Separate Opinion, ICJ Reports, 1993, p. 118; 99 ILR, p. 486.

151 Note that the International Court in the Tunisia /Libya Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 60; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 53, declared that 'equity as a legal concept is a direct emanation of the idea of justice'. However, see G. Abi-Saab's reference to the International Court's 'flight into equity' in 'The ICJ as a World Court' in Lowe and Fitzmaurice, Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice, pp. 3, 11.

152 50 ILR, p. 2.

153 Ibid., p. 18. In deciding the course of the boundary in two deep inlets, the Tribunal had recourse to the concept of equity: ibid., p. 520.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Sea Continental Shelf cases directed a final delimitation between the parties – West Germany, Holland and Denmark – 'in accordance with equitable principles'[154] and discussed the relevance to equity in its consideration of the Barcelona Traction case.[155] Judge Tanaka, however, has argued for a wider interpretation in his Dissenting Opinion in the Second Phase of the South-West Africa cases[156] and has treated the broad concept as a source of human rights ideas.[157]

However, what is really in question here is the use of equitable principles in the context of a rule requiring such an approach. The relevant courts are not applying principles of abstract justice to the cases,[158] but rather deriving equitable principles and solutions from the applicable law.[159] The Court declared in the Libya/Malta case[160] that 'the justice of which equity is an emanation, is not an abstract justice but justice according to the rule of law; which is to say that its application should display consistency and a degree of predictability; even though it also looks beyond it to principles of more general application'.

Equity has been used by the courts as a way of mitigating certain inequities, not as a method of refashioning nature to the detriment of legal rules.[161] Its existence, therefore, as a separate and distinct source of law is at best highly controversial. As the International Court noted in the Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case,[162]

[154] ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 53; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 83. Equity was used in the case in order to exclude the use of the equidistance method in the particular circumstances: ibid., pp. 48–50; 41 ILR, pp. 78–80.

[155] ICJ Reports, 1970, p. 3; 46 ILR, p. 178. See also the Burkina Faso v. Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 631–3; 80 ILR, pp. 459, 532–5.

[156] ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 6, 294–9; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 455–9. See also the Corfu Channel case, ICJ Reports, 1949, pp. 4, 22; 16 AD, p. 155.

[157] See also AMCO v. Republic of Indonesia 89 ILR, pp. 366, 522–3.

[158] The International Court of Justice may under article 38(2) of its Statute decide a case ex aequo et bono if the parties agree, but it has never done so: see e.g. Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 730.

[159] See the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 47; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 76, and the Fisheries Jurisdiction cases, ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 3, 33; 55 ILR, pp. 238, 268. The Court reaffirmed in the Libya/Malta case, ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 13, 40; 81 ILR, pp. 238, 272, 'the principle that there can be no question of distributive justice'.

[160] ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 13, 39; 81 ILR, pp. 238, 271.

[161] See the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 49–50; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 78–80, and the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case, Cmnd 7438, 1978, pp. 116–17; 54 ILR, pp. 6, 123–4. See also the Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 60; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 53, and the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 313–14 and 325–30; 71 ILR, pp. 74, 140–1 and 152–7.

[162] ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 60; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 53.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> it is bound to apply equitable principles as part of international law, and to balance up the various considerations which it regards as relevant in order to produce an equitable result. While it is clear that no rigid rules exist as to the exact weight to be attached to each element in the case, this is very far from being an exercise of discretion or conciliation; nor is it an operation of distributive justice.[163]

The use of equitable principles, however, has been particularly marked in the 1982 Law of the Sea Convention. Article 59, for example, provides that conflicts between coastal and other states regarding the exclusive economic zone are to be resolved 'on the basis of equity', while by article 74 delimitation of the zone between states with opposite or adjacent coasts is to be effected by agreement on the basis of international law in order to achieve an equitable solution. A similar provision applies by article 83 to the delimitation of the continental shelf.[164] These provisions possess flexibility, which is important, but are also somewhat uncertain. Precisely how any particular dispute may be resolved, and the way in which that is likely to happen and the principles to be used are far from clear and an element of unpredictability may have been introduced.[165] The Convention on the Law of the Non-Navigational Uses of International Watercourses, 1997,[166] also lays great emphasis upon the concept of equity. Article 5, for example, provides that watercourse states shall utilise an international watercourse in an equitable and reasonable manner both in their own territories and in participating generally in the use, development and protection of such a watercourse.

Equity may also be used in certain situations in the delimitation of non-maritime boundaries. Where there is no evidence as to where a boundary line lies, an international tribunal may resort to equity. In the case of Burkina Faso/Republic of Mali,[167] for example, the Court noted with regard [163] See generally R. Y. Jennings, 'The Principles Governing Marine Boundaries' in Festschrift für Karl Doehring, Berlin, 1989, p. 408, and M. Bedjaoui, 'L"énigme" des "principes équitables" dans le Droit des Délimitations Maritimes', Revista Español de Derecho Internacional, 1990, p. 376.

[164] See also article 140 providing for the equitable sharing of financial and other benefits derived from activities in the deep sea-bed area.

[165] However, see Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 443, where the Court declared that its jurisprudence showed that in maritime delimitation disputes, 'equity is not a method of delimitation, but solely an aim that should be borne in mind in effecting the delimitation'. See further below, chapter 11, p. 590.

[166] Based on the Draft Articles of the International Law Commission: see the Report of the International Law Commission on the Work of its Forty-Sixth Session, A/49/10, 1994, pp. 197, 218 ff.

[167] ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 633; 80 ILR, pp. 459, 535.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

to the pool of Soum, that 'it must recognise that Soum is a frontier pool; and that in the absence of any precise indication in the texts of the position of the frontier line, the line should divide the pool of Soum in an equitable manner'. This would be done by dividing the pool equally. Although equity did not always mean equality, where there are no special circumstances the latter is generally the best expression of the former.[168] The Court also emphasised that 'to resort to the concept of equity in order to modify an established frontier would be quite unjustified'.[169]

Although generalised principles or concepts that may be termed community value-judgements inform and pervade the political and therefore the legal orders in the broadest sense, they do not themselves constitute as such binding legal norms. This can only happen if they have been accepted as legal norms by the international community through the mechanisms and techniques of international law creation. Nevertheless, 'elementary principles of humanity' may lie at the base of such norms and help justify their existence in the broadest sense, and may indeed perform a valuable role in endowing such norms with an additional force within the system. The International Court has, for example, emphasised in the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons Advisory Opinion[170] that at the heart of the rules and principles concerning international humanitarian law lies the 'overriding consideration of humanity'.

Judicial decisions[171]

Although these are, in the words of article 38, to be utilised as a subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law rather than as an actual source of law, judicial decisions can be of immense importance. While by virtue of [168] Ibid.

[169] Ibid. See also the El Salvador/Honduras case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 514–15, and the Brcko case, 36 ILM, 1997, pp. 396, 427 ff. However, note that in the latter case, the Arbitral Tribunal was expressly authorised to apply 'relevant legal and equitable principles': see article V of Annex 2 of the Dayton Accords, 1995, ibid., p. 400. See also J. M. Sorel, 'L'Arbitrage sur la Zona de Brcko Tragi-comédie en Trois Actes et un Épilogue à Suivre', AFDI, 1997, p. 253.

[170] ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 257, 262–3; 110 ILR, pp. 163, 207, 212–13. See also the Corfu Channel case, ICJ Reports, 1949, pp. 4, 22; 16 AD, p. 155. See further below, chapter 21, p. 1187.

[171] See e.g. Lauterpacht, Development of International Law; Waldock, 'General Course', and Schwarzenberger, International Law, pp. 30 ff. See also Thirlway, 'Law and Procedure of the ICJ (Part Two)', pp. 3, 127, and Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 114; Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 784, and P. Cahier, 'Le Rôle du Juge dans l'Élaboration du Droit International' in Theory of International Law at the Threshold of the 21st Century (ed. J. Makerczyk), The Hague, 1996, p. 353.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

article 59 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice the decisions of the Court have no binding force except as between the parties and in respect of the case under consideration, the Court has striven to follow its previous judgments and insert a measure of certainty within the process: so that while the doctrine of precedent as it is known in the common law, whereby the rulings of certain courts must be followed by other courts, does not exist in international law, one still finds that states in disputes and textbook writers quote judgments of the Permanent Court and the International Court of Justice as authoritative decisions.

The International Court of Justice itself will closely examine its previous decisions and will carefully distinguish those cases which it feels should not be applied to the problem being studied.[172] But just as English judges, for example, create law in the process of interpreting it, so the judges of the International Court of Justice sometimes do a little more than merely 'determine' it. One of the most outstanding instances of this occurred in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case,[173] with its statement of the criteria for the recognition of baselines from which to measure the territorial sea, which was later enshrined in the 1958 Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea and Contiguous Zone.

Other examples include the Reparation case,[174] which recognised the legal personality of international institutions in certain cases, the Genocide case,[175] which dealt with reservations to treaties, the Nottebohm case,[176] which considered the role and characteristics of nationality and the range of cases concerning maritime delimitation.[177]

Of course, it does not follow that a decision of the Court will be invariably accepted in later discussions and formulations of the law. One example of this is part of the decision in the Lotus case,[178] which was criticised and later abandoned in the Geneva Conventions on the Law of the Sea. But this is comparatively unusual and the practice of the Court is to examine its own relevant case-law with considerable attention and to depart from it rarely.[179] At the very least, it will constitute the starting point of analysis, so that, for example, the Court noted in the Cameroon

[172] See further Shahabuddeen, Precedent.

[173] ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 116; 18 ILR, p. 86. See further below, chapter 11, p. 558.

[174] ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 174; 16 AD, p. 318. See further below, chapter 23, p. 1296.

[175] ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 15; 18 ILR, p. 364.

[176] ICJ Reports, 1955, p. 4; 22 ILR, p. 349.

[177] See e.g. Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 116, and see below, chapter 11, p. 590.

[178] PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 18; 4 AD, p. 5. See below, p. 618.

[179] See e.g. Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 93; Liechtenstein v. Germany, ICJ Reports, 2005, p. 6 and the Construction of a Wall advisory opinion, ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 135, 154–6; 129 ILR, pp. 37, 71–4.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

v. Nigeria case that 'the real question is whether, in this case, there is cause not to follow the reasoning and conclusion of earlier cases'.[180]

In addition to the Permanent Court and the International Court of Justice, the phrase 'judicial decisions' also encompasses international arbitral awards and the rulings of national courts. There have been many international arbitral tribunals, such as the Permanent Court of Arbitration created by the Hague Conferences of 1899 and 1907 and the various mixed-claims tribunals, including the Iran–US Claims Tribunal, and, although they differ from the international courts in some ways, many of their decisions have been extremely significant in the development of international law. This can be seen in the existence and number of the Reports of International Arbitral Awards published since 1948 by the United Nations.

One leading example is the Alabama Claims arbitration,[181] which marked the opening of a new era in the peaceful settlement of international disputes, in which increasing use was made of judicial and arbitration methods in resolving conflicts. This case involved a vessel built on Merseyside to the specifications of the Confederate States, which succeeded in capturing some seventy Federal ships during the American Civil War. The United States sought compensation after the war for the depredations of the Alabama and other ships and this was accepted by the Tribunal. Britain had infringed the rules of neutrality and was accordingly obliged to pay damages to the United States. Another illustration of the impact of arbitral awards is the Island of Palmas case[182] which has proved of immense significance to the subject of territorial sovereignty and will be discussed in chapter 10. In addition, the growing significance of the case-law of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda needs to be noted. As a consequence, it is not rare for international courts of one type or another to cite each other's decisions, sometimes as support[183] and sometimes to disagree.[184]

[180] ICJ Reports, 1998, pp. 275, 292.

[181] J. B. Moore, International Arbitrations, New York, 1898, vol. I, p. 653.

[182] 2 RIAA, p. 829; 4 AD, p. 3. See also the Beagle Channel award, HMSO, 1977; 52 ILR, p. 93, and the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case, Cmnd 7438, 1978; 54 ILR, p. 6.

[183] See e.g. the references in the Saiga (No. 2) case, International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, judgment of 1 July 1999, paras. 133–4; 120 ILR, p. 143, to the Gabčíkovo–Nagymaros case, ICJ Reports, 1997, p. 7.

[184] For example, the views expressed in the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia's decision in the Tadić case (IT-94-1-A, paras. 115 ff; 124 ILR, p. 61) disapproving of the approach adopted by the ICJ in the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986,

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

As has already been seen, the decisions of municipal courts[185] may provide evidence of the existence of a customary rule. They may also constitute evidence of the actual practice of states which, while not a description of the law as it has been held to apply, nevertheless affords examples of how states actually behave, in other words the essence of the material act which is so necessary in establishing a rule of customary law.[186] British and American writers, in particular, tend to refer fairly extensively to decisions of national courts.

One may, finally, also point to decisions by the highest courts of federal states, like Switzerland and the United States, in their resolution of conflicts between the component units of such countries, as relevant to the development of international law rules in such fields as boundary disputes. A boundary disagreement between two US states which is settled by the Supreme Court is in many ways analogous to the International Court of Justice considering a frontier dispute between two independent states, and as such provides valuable material for international law.[187]

Writers[188]

Article 38 includes as a subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law, 'the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations'.

Historically, of course, the influence of academic writers on the development of international law has been marked. In the heyday of Natural Law it was analyses and juristic opinions that were crucial, while the role of state practice and court decisions was of less value. Writers such as Gentili, Grotius, Pufendorf, Bynkershoek and Vattel were the supreme authorities of the sixteenth to eighteenth centuries and determined the scope, form and content of international law.[189]

p. 14, with regard to the test for state responsibility in respect of paramilitary units. The International Court indeed reaffirmed its approach in the Genocide Convention (Bosnia v. Serbia) case, ICJ Reports, 2007, paras. 402 ff.

185 See e.g. Thirty Hogsheads of Sugar, Bentzon v. Boyle 9 Cranch 191 (1815); the Paquete Habana 175 US 677 (1900) and the Scotia 14 Wallace 170 (1871). See also the Lotus case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 18; 4 AD, p. 153. For further examples in the fields of state and diplomatic immunities particularly, see below, chapter 13.

186 See e.g. Congo v. Belgium, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 3, 24; 128 ILR, pp. 60, 80.

187 See e.g. Vermont v. New Hampshire 289 US 593 (1933) and Iowa v. Illinois 147 US 1 (1893).

188 See e.g. Parry, British Digest, pp. 103–5 and Lauterpacht, Development of International Law, pp. 23–5. See also R. Y. Jennings, 'International Lawyers and the Progressive Development of International Law' in Makerczyk, Theory of International Law at the Threshold of the 21st Century, 1996, p. 325, and Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 790.

189 See above, chapter 1.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

With the rise of positivism and the consequent emphasis upon state sovereignty, treaties and custom assumed the dominant position in the exposition of the rules of the international system, and the importance of legalistic writings began to decline. Thus, one finds that textbooks are used as a method of discovering what the law is on any particular point rather than as the fount or source of actual rules. There are still some writers who have had a formative impact upon the evolution of particular laws, for example Gidel on the law of the sea,[190] and others whose general works on international law tend to be referred to virtually as classics, for example Oppenheim and Rousseau, but the general influence of textbook writers has somewhat declined.

Nevertheless, books are important as a way of arranging and putting into focus the structure and form of international law and of elucidating the nature, history and practice of the rules of law. Academic writings also have a useful role to play in stimulating thought about the values and aims of international law as well as pointing out the defects that exist within the system, and making suggestions as to the future.

Because of the lack of supreme authorities and institutions in the international legal order, the responsibility is all the greater upon the publicists of the various nations to inject an element of coherence and order into the subject as well as to question the direction and purposes of the rules.

States in their presentation of claims, national law officials in their opinions to their governments, the various international judicial and arbitral bodies in considering their decisions, and the judges of municipal courts when the need arises, all consult and quote the writings of the leading juristic authorities.[191]

Of course, the claim can be made, and often is, that textbook writers merely reflect and reinforce national prejudices,[192] but it is an allegation which has been exaggerated. It should not lead us to dismiss the value of writers, but rather to assess correctly the writer within his particular environment.

Other possible sources of international law

In the discussion of the various sources of law prescribed by the Statute of the International Court of Justice, it might have been noted that there is a [190] Droit International Public de la Mer, Chateauroux, 3 vols., 1932–4.

[191] See Brownlie, Principles, pp. 23–4.

[192] See e.g. Huber in the Spanish Zone of Morocco case, 2 RIAA, pp. 615, 640; 2 AD, pp. 157, 164 (note). See also Carty, Decay of International Law?, pp. 128–31.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

distinction between, on the one hand, actual sources of rules, that is those devices capable of instituting new rules such as law-making treaties, customary law and many decisions of the International Court of Justice since they cannot be confined to the category of merely determining or elucidating the law, and on the other hand those practices and devices which afford evidence of the existence of rules, such as juristic writings, many treaty-contracts and some judicial decisions both at the international and municipal level. In fact, each source is capable, to some extent, of both developing new law and identifying existing law. This results partly from the disorganised state of international law and partly from the terms of article 38 itself.

A similar confusion between law-making, law-determining and law-evidencing can be discerned in the discussion of the various other methods of developing law that have emerged since the conclusion of the Second World War. Foremost among the issues that have arisen and one that reflects the growth in the importance of the Third World states and the gradual de-Europeanisation of the world order is the question of the standing of the resolutions and declarations of the General Assembly of the United Nations.[193]

Unlike the UN Security Council, which has the competence to adopt resolutions under articles 24 and 25 of the UN Charter binding on all member states of the organisation,[194] resolutions of the Assembly are generally not legally binding and are merely recommendatory, putting forward opinions on various issues with varying degrees of majority [193] See e.g. O. Y. Asamoah, The Legal Significance of the Declarations of the General Assembly of the United Nations, The Hague, 1966; D. Johnson, 'The Effect of Resolutions of the General Assembly of the United Nations', 32 BYIL, 1955–6, p. 97; J. Castañeda, Legal Effects of United Nations Resolutions, New York, 1969, and R. A. Falk, 'On the Quasi-Legislative Competence of the General Assembly', 60 AJIL, 1966, p. 782. See also A. Cassese, International Law in a Divided World, London, 1986, pp. 192–5; M. Virally, 'La Valeur Juridique des Recommendations des Organisations Internationales', AFDI, 1956, p. 69; B. Sloan, 'The Binding Force of a Recommendation of the General Assembly of the United Nations', 25 BYIL, 1948, p. 1, and Sloan, 'General Assembly Resolutions Revisited (40 Years After)', 58 BYIL, 1987, p. 39; Thirlway, 'Law and Procedure of the ICJ (Part One)', p. 6; O. Schachter, 'United Nations Law', 88 AJIL, 1994, p. 1; A. Pellet, 'La Formation du Droit International dans le Cadre des Nations Unies', 6 EJIL, 1995, p. 401, and Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 711; and S. Schwebel, 'United Nations Resolutions, Recent Arbitral Awards and Customary International Law' in Realism in Law-Making (eds. M. Bos and H. Siblesz), Dordrecht, 1986, p. 203. See also Judge Weeramantry's Dissenting Opinion in the East Timor case, ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 90, 185; 105 ILR, pp. 226, 326.

[194] See e.g. the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 54; 49 ILR, p. 29 and the Lockerbie case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 3, 15; 94 ILR, p. 478. See further below, chapter 22.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

support.[195] This is the classic position and reflects the intention that the Assembly was to be basically a parliamentary advisory body with the binding decisions being taken by the Security Council.

Nowadays, the situation is somewhat more complex. The Assembly has produced a great number of highly important resolutions and declarations and it was inevitable that these should have some impact upon the direction adopted by modern international law. The way states vote in the General Assembly and the explanations given upon such occasions constitute evidence of state practice and state understanding as to the law. Where a particular country has consistently voted in favour of, for example, the abolition of apartheid, it could not afterwards deny the existence of a usage condemning racial discrimination and it may even be that that usage is for that state converted into a binding custom.

The Court in the Nicaragua case tentatively expressed the view that the opinio juris requirement could be derived from the circumstances surrounding the adoption and application of a General Assembly resolution. It noted that the relevant > opinio juris may, though with all due caution, be deduced from, inter alia, the attitude of the Parties [i.e. the US and Nicaragua] and the attitude of States towards certain General Assembly resolutions, and particularly resolution 2625 (XXV) entitled 'Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations'.[196]

The effect of consent to resolutions such as this one 'may be understood as acceptance of the validity of the rule or set of rules declared by the resolution by themselves'.[197] This comment, however, may well have referred solely to the situation where the resolution in question defines or elucidates an existing treaty (i.e. Charter) commitment.

Where the vast majority of states consistently vote for resolutions and declarations on a topic, that amounts to a state practice and a binding rule may very well emerge provided that the requisite opinio juris can be proved. For example, the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, which was adopted with no opposition and only nine abstentions and followed a series of resolutions [195] Some resolutions of a more administrative nature are binding: see e.g. article 17 of the UN Charter.

[196] ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 99–100; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 433–4.

[197] ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 100; 76 ILR, p. 434.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in general and specific terms attacking colonialism and calling for the self-determination of the remaining colonies, has, it would seem, marked the transmutation of the concept of self-determination from a political and moral principle to a legal right and consequent obligation, particularly taken in conjunction with the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law.[198]

Declarations such as that on the Legal Principles Governing Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space (1963) can also be regarded as examples of state practices which are leading to, or have led to, a binding rule of customary law. As well as constituting state practice, it may be possible to use such resolutions as evidence of the existence of or evolution towards an opinio juris without which a custom cannot arise. Apart from that, resolutions can be understood as authoritative interpretations by the Assembly of the various principles of the United Nations Charter depending on the circumstances.[199]

Accordingly, such resolutions are able to speed up the process of the legalisation of a state practice and thus enable a speedier adaptation of customary law to the conditions of modern life. The presence of representatives of virtually all of the states of the world in the General Assembly enormously enhances the value of that organ in general political terms and in terms of the generation of state practice that may or may not lead to binding custom. As the International Court noted, for example, in the Nicaragua case,[200] 'the wording of certain General Assembly declarations adopted by states demonstrates their recognition of the principle of the prohibition of force as definitely a matter of customary international law'. The Court put the issue the following way in the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons Advisory Opinion:[201]

> The Court notes that General Assembly resolutions, even if they are not binding, may sometimes have normative value. They can, in certain circumstances, provide evidence important for establishing the existence of a rule or the emergence of an opinio juris. To establish whether this is true of a General Assembly resolution, it is necesary to look at its content and

[198] See further below, chapter 5, p. 251.

[199] See e.g. O. Schachter, 'Interpretation of the Charter in the Political Organs of the United Nations' in Law, States and International Order, 1964, p. 269; R. Higgins, The Development of International Law Through the Political Organs of the United Nations, Oxford, 1963, and M. N. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa: International Legal Issues, Oxford, 1986, chapter 2.

[200] ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 102; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 436.

[201] ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 254–5; 110 ILR, pp. 163, 204–5.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> the conditions of its adoption; it is also necessary to see whether an opinio juris exists as to its normative character. Or a series of resolutions may show the gradual evolution of the opinio juris required for the establishment of a new rule.

The Court in this case examined a series of General Assembly resolutions concerning the legality of nuclear weapons and noted that several of them had been adopted with substantial numbers of negative votes and abstentions. It was also pointed out that the focus of such resolutions had not always been constant. The Court therefore concluded that these resolutions fell short of establishing the existence of an opinio juris on the illegality of nuclear weapons.[202]

Nevertheless, one must be alive to the dangers in ascribing legal value to everything that emanates from the Assembly. Resolutions are often the results of political compromises and arrangements and, comprehended in that sense, never intended to constitute binding norms. Great care must be taken in moving from a plethora of practice to the identification of legal norms.

As far as the practice of other international organisations is concerned,[203] the same approach, but necessarily tempered with a little more caution, may be adopted. Resolutions may evidence an existing custom or constitute usage that may lead to the creation of a custom and the opinio juris requirement may similarly emerge from the surrounding circumstances, although care must be exercised here.[204]

It is sometimes argued more generally that particular non-binding instruments or documents or non-binding provisions in treaties form a special category that may be termed 'soft law'. This terminology is meant to indicate that the instrument or provision in question is not of itself 'law', but its importance within the general framework of international legal development is such that particular attention requires to be paid to it.[205] 'Soft law' is not law. That needs to be emphasised, but a document,

[202] Ibid., p. 255; 110 ILR, p. 205. See as to other cases, above, p. 84.

[203] See generally, as to other international organisations in this context, A. J. P. Tammes, 'Decisions of International Organs as a Source of International Law', 94 HR, 1958, p. 265; Virally, 'La Valeur Juridique', p. 66, and H. Thierry, 'Les Résolutions des Organes Internationaux dans la Jurisprudence de la Cour Internationale de Justice', 167 HR, 1980, p. 385.

[204] See the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 100–2; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 434–6.

[205] See e.g. Boyle and Chinkin, The Making of International Law, pp. 211 ff.; Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 712; H. Hillgenberg, 'A Fresh Look at Soft Law', 10 EJIL, 1999, p. 499; M. Bothe, 'Legal and Non-Legal Norms – A Meaningful Distinction in International Relations', 11

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

for example, does not need to constitute a binding treaty before it can exercise an influence in international politics. The Helsinki Final Act of 1975 is a prime example of this. This was not a binding agreement, but its influence in Central and Eastern Europe in emphasising the role and importance of international human rights proved incalculable.[206] Certain areas of international law have generated more 'soft law', in the sense of the production of important but non-binding instruments, than others. Here one may cite particularly international economic law[207] and international environmental law.[208] The use of such documents, whether termed, for example, recommendations, guidelines, codes of practice or standards, is significant in signalling the evolution and establishment of guidelines, which may ultimately be converted into legally binding rules. This may be accomplished either by formalisation into a binding treaty or by acceptance as a customary rule, provided that the necessary conditions have been fulfilled. The propositions of 'soft law' are important and influential, but do not in themselves constitute legal norms. In many cases, it may be advantageous for states to reach agreements with each other or through international organisations which are not intended to be binding and thus subject to formal legal implementation, but which reflect a political intention to act in a certain way. Such agreements may be more flexible, easier to conclude and easier to adhere to for domestic reasons.

A study by the US State Department concerning non-binding international agreements between states[209] noted that Netherlands YIL, 1980, p. 65; I. Seidl-Hohenveldern, 'International Economic Soft Law', 163 HR, 1980, p. 164, and Seidl-Hohenveldern, International Economic Law, 2nd edn, Dordrecht, 1992, p. 42; J. Gold, 'Strengthening the Soft International Law of Exchange Arrangements', 77 AJIL, 1983, p. 443; PASIL, 1988, p. 371; G. J. H. Van Hoof, Re-thinking the Sources of International Law, Deventer, 1983, p. 187; C. M. Chinkin, 'The Challenge of Soft Law: Development and Change in International Law', 38 ICLQ, 1989, p. 850; L. Henkin, International Law, Politics and Values, Dordrecht, 1995, pp. 94 and 192; W. M. Reisman, 'The Concept and Functions of Soft Law in International Politics' in Essays in Honour of Judge Taslim Olawale Elias (eds. E. G. Bello and B. Ajibola), Dordrecht, 1992, vol. I, p. 135; A. E. Boyle, 'Some Reflections on the Relationship of Treaties and Soft Law', 48 ICLQ, 1999, p. 901; F. Francioni, 'International "Soft Law": A Contemporary Assessment' in Lowe and Fitzmaurice, Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice, p. 167, and Commitment and Compliance: The Role of Non-Binding Norms in the International Legal System (ed. D. Shelton), Oxford, 2000

206 See e.g. the reference to it in the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 3, 100; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 434.

207 See e.g. Seidl-Hohenveldern, International Economic Law, pp. 42 ff.

208 See e.g. P. Birnie and A. Boyle, International Law and the Environment, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2002, pp. 24 ff.

209 Memorandum of the Assistant Legal Adviser for Treaty Affairs, US State Department, quoted in 88 AJIL, 1994, pp. 515 ff. See also A. Aust, 'The Theory and Practice of Informal

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> it has long been recognised in international practice that governments may agree on joint statements of policy or intention that do not establish legal obligations. In recent decades, this has become a common means of announcing the results of diplomatic exchanges, stating common positions on policy issues, recording their intended course of action on matters of mutual concern, or making political commitments to one another. These documents are sometimes referred to as non-binding agreements, gentlemen's agreements, joint statements or declarations.

What is determinative as to status in such situations is not the title given to the document in question, but the intention of the parties as inferred from all the relevant circumstances as to whether they intended to create binding legal relationships between themselves on the matter in question.

The International Law Commission

The International Law Commission was established by the General Assembly in 1947 with the declared object of promoting the progressive development of international law and its codification.[210] It consists of thirty-four members from Africa, Asia, America and Europe, who remain in office for five years each and who are appointed from lists submitted by national governments. The Commission is aided in its deliberations by consultations with various outside bodies including the Asian–African Legal Consultative Committee, the European Commission on Legal Cooperation and the Inter-American Council of Jurists.[211]

International Instruments', 35 ICLQ, 1984, p. 787; O. Schachter, 'The Twilight Existence of Nonbinding International Agreements', 71 AJIL, 1977, p. 296; McNair, The Law of Treaties, p. 6, and A. T. Guzman, 'The Design of International Agreements', 16 EJIL, 2005, p. 579.

[210] See, as to the relationship between codification and progressive development, Judge ad hoc Sørensen's Dissenting Opinion in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 242–3; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 217–19.

[211] See articles 2, 3 and 8 of the Statute of the ILC. See also e.g. B. Ramcharan, The International Law Commission, Leiden, 1977; The Work of the International Law Commission, 4th edn, New York, 1988; I. Sinclair, The International Law Commission, Cambridge, 1987; The International Law Commission and the Future of International Law (eds. M. R. Anderson, A. E. Boyle, A. V. Lowe and C. Wickremasinghe), London, 1998; International Law on the Eve of the Twenty-first Century: Views from the International Law Commission, New York, 1997; S. Rosenne, 'The International Law Commission 1949–59', 36 BYIL, 1960, p. 104, and Rosenne, 'Relations Between Governments and the International Law Commission', 19 YBWA, 1965, p. 183; B. Graefrath, 'The International Law Commission Tomorrow: Improving its Organisation and Methods of Work', 85 AJIL, 1991, p. 597, and R. P. Dhokalia, The Codification of Public International Law, Manchester, 1970.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Many of the most important international conventions have grown out of the Commission's work. Having decided upon a topic, the International Law Commission will prepare a draft. This is submitted to the various states for their comments and is usually followed by an international conference convened by the United Nations. Eventually a treaty will emerge. This procedure was followed in such international conventions as those on the Law of the Sea in 1958, Diplomatic Relations in 1961, Consular Relations in 1963, Special Missions in 1969 and the Law of Treaties in 1969. Of course, this smooth operation does not invariably occur, witness the many conferences at Caracas in 1974, and Geneva and New York from 1975 to 1982, necessary to produce a new Convention on the Law of the Sea.

Apart from preparing such drafts, the International Law Commission also issues reports and studies, and has formulated such documents as the Draft Declaration on Rights and Duties of States of 1949 and the Principles of International Law recognised in the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal and in the Judgment of the Tribunal of 1950. The Commission produced a set of draft articles on the problems of jurisdictional immunities in 1991, a draft statute for an international criminal court in 1994 and a set of draft articles on state responsibility in 2001. The drafts of the ILC are often referred to in the judgments of the International Court of Justice. Indeed, in his speech to the UN General Assembly in 1997, President Schwebel noted in referring to the decision in the Gabčíkovo–Nagymaros Project case[212] that the judgment:

> is notable, moreover, because of the breadth and depth of the importance given in it to the work product of the International Law Commission. The Court's Judgment not only draws on treaties concluded pursuant to the Commission's proceedings: those on the law of treaties, of State succession in respect of treaties, and the law of international watercourses. It gives great weight to some of the Commission's Draft Articles on State Responsibility, as did both Hungary and Slovakia. This is not wholly exceptional; it rather illustrates the fact that just as the judgments and opinions of the Court have influenced the work of the International Law Commission, so the work of the Commission may influence that of the Court.[213]

Thus, one can see that the International Law Commission is involved in at least two of the major sources of law. Its drafts may form the bases of

[212] ICJ Reports, 1997, p. 7; 116 ILR, p. 1.
[213] See www.icj-cij.org/icjwww/ipresscom/SPEECHES/Ga1997e.htm.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

international treaties which bind those states which have signed and ratified them and which may continue to form part of general international law, and its work is part of the whole range of state practice which can lead to new rules of customary law. Its drafts, indeed, may constitute evidence of custom, contribute to the corpus of usages which may create new law and evidence the opinio juris.[214] In addition, it is not to be overlooked that the International Law Commission is a body composed of eminently qualified publicists, including many governmental legal advisers, whose reports and studies may be used as a method of determining what the law actually is, in much the same way as books.

Other bodies

Although the International Law Commission is by far the most important of the organs for the study and development of the law, there do exist certain other bodies which are involved in the same mission. The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), for example, are actively increasing the range of international law in the fields of economic, financial and development activities, while temporary organs such as the Committee on the Principles of International Law have been engaged in producing various declarations and statements. Nor can one overlook the tremendous work of the many specialised agencies like the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO), which are constantly developing international law in their respective spheres.

There are also some independent bodies which are actively involved in the field. The International Law Association and the Institut de Droit International are the best known of such organisations which study and stimulate the law of the world community, while the various Harvard Research drafts produced before the Second World War are still of value today.

Unilateral acts

In certain situations, the unilateral acts of states, including statements made by relevant state officials, may give rise to international legal

[214] See above, p. 84.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

obligations.[215] Such acts might include recognition and protests, which are intended to have legal consequences. Unilateral acts, while not sources of international law as understood in article 38(1) of the Statute of the ICJ, may constitute sources of obligation.[216] For this to happen, the intention to be bound of the state making the declaration in question is crucial, as will be the element of publicity or notoriety.[217] Such intention may be ascertained by way of interpretation of the act, and the principle of good faith plays a crucial role. The International Court has stressed that where states make statements by which their freedom of action is limited, a restrictive interpretation is required.[218] Recognition will be important here in so far as third states are concerned, in order for such an act or statement to be opposable to them. Beyond this, such unilateral statements may be used as evidence of a particular view taken by the state in question.[219]

[215] See Virally, 'Sources', pp. 154–6; Brownlie, Principles, pp. 612–15; W. Fiedler, 'Unilateral Acts in International Law' in Encyclopedia of Public International Law (ed. R. Bernhardt), Amsterdam, 2000, vol. IV, p. 1018; G. Venturini, 'La Portée et les Effets Juridiques des Attitudes et des Actes Unilatéraux des États', 112 HR, 1964, p. 363; J. Charpentier, 'Engagements Unilatéraux et Engagements Conventionnels' in Theory of International Law at the Threshold of the 21st Century, p. 367; A. P. Rubin, 'The International Legal Effects of Unilateral Declarations', 71 AJIL, 1977, p. 1; K. Zemanek, 'Unilateral Legal Acts Revisited' in Wellens, International Law, p. 209; E. Suy, Les Actes Unilateraux en Droit International Public, Paris, 1962, and J. Garner, 'The International Binding Force of Unilateral Oral Declarations', 27 AJIL, 1933, p. 493. The International Law Commission has been studying the question of the Unilateral Acts of States since 1996, see A/51/10, pp. 230 and 328–9. See also the Fifth Report, A/CN.4/525, 2002.

[216] See e.g. the Report of the International Law Commission, A/57/10, 2002, p. 215.

[217] The Nuclear Tests cases, ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 253, 267; 57 ILR, pp. 398, 412. See also the Request for an Examination of the Situation in Accordance with Paragraph 63 of the Court's Judgment of 20 December 1974 in the Nuclear Tests (New Zealand v. France) Case, ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 288, 305; 106 ILR, pp. 1, 27; the Nova-Scotia/Newfoundland (First Phase) case, 2001, para. 3.14; 128 ILR, pp. 425, 449; and the Eritrea/Ethiopia case, 2002, para. 4.70; 130 ILR, pp. 1, 69. Such a commitment may arise in oral pleadings before the Court itself: see Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, p. 452.

[218] Nuclear Tests cases, ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 253, 267; 57 ILR, pp. 398, 412. See also the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 132; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 466, and the Burkina Faso v. Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 573–4; 80 ILR, pp. 459, 477–8. The Court in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases declared that the unilateral assumption of the obligations of a convention by a state not party to it was 'not lightly to be presumed', ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 25; 41 ILR, p. 29. The Court in the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, para. 229, noted that a denial could not be interpreted as a binding undertaking where not made in response to a claim by the other party or in the context of a dispute between them.

[219] See e.g. the references to a press release issued by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Norway and the wording of a communication of the text of an agreement to Parliament by the Norwegian Government in the Jan Mayen case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 38, 51; 99 ILR,

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Hierarchy of sources and jus cogens[220]

The question of the hierarchy of sources is more complex than appears at first sight. Although there does exist a presumption against normative conflict,[221] international law is not as clear as domestic law in listing the order of constitutional authority[222] and the situation is complicated by the proliferation of international courts and tribunals existing in a non-hierarchical fashion,[223] as well as the significant expansion of international law, both substantively and procedurally. Judicial decisions and writings clearly have a subordinate function within the hierarchy in view of their description as subsidiary means of law determination in article 38(1) of the statute of the ICJ, while the role of general principles of law as a way of complementing custom and treaty law places that category fairly firmly in third place.[224] The question of priority as between custom and treaty law is more complex.[225] As a general rule, that which is later in time will have priority. Treaties are usually formulated to replace or codify existing custom,[226] while treaties in turn may themselves fall out of use and be replaced by new customary rules. However, where the same rule appears pp. 395, 419. See also Judge Ajibola's Separate Opinion in the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 58; 100 ILR, pp. 1, 56.

220 See D. Shelton, 'Normative Hierarchy in International Law', 100 AJIL, 2006, p. 291; M. Koskenniemi, 'Hierarchy in International Law: A Sketch', 8 EJIL, 1997, p. 566; B. Simma and D. Pulkowski, 'Of Planets and the Universe: Self-contained Regimes in International Law', 17 EJIL, 2006, p. 483; P. Weil, 'Towards Relative Normativity in International Law?', 77 AJIL, 1983, p. 413, and 'Vers une Normativité Relative en Droit International?' 86 RGDIP, 1982, p. 5; M. Akehurst, 'The Hierarchy of the Sources of International Law', 47 BYIL, 1974–5, p. 273, and Virally, 'Sources', pp. 165–6. See also H. Mosler, The International Society as a Legal Community, Leiden, 1980, pp. 84–6; Thirlway, 'Law and Procedure of the ICJ (Part One)', p. 143, and Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 52, and U. Fastenrath, 'Relative Normativity in International Law', 4 EJIL, 1993, p. 305.

221 See e.g. 'Fragmentation of International Law: Difficulties Arising from the Diversification and Expansion of International Law', Report of the Study Group of the International Law Commission (finalised by M. Koskenniemi), A/CN.4/L.682, 2006, p. 25.

222 Pellet, however, notes that while there is no formal hierarchy as between conventions, custom and general principles, the International Court uses them in successive order and 'has organized a kind of complementarity between them', 'Article 38', p. 773. Dupuy argues that there is no hierarchy of sources: see Droit International Public, 8th edn, Paris, 2006, pp. 370 ff. The ILC Study on Fragmentation, however, agrees with writers proclaiming that 'treaties generally enjoy priority over custom and particular treaties over general treaties', p. 47.

223 See further below, chapter 19, p. 1115.

224 Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 780.

225 Ibid., p. 778, and see H. Villager, Customary International Law and Treaties, Dordrecht, 1985.

226 See R. Baxter, 'Multilateral Treaties as Evidence of Customary International Law', BYIL, 1965–6, p. 275.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in both a treaty and a custom, there is no presumption that the latter is subsumed by the former. The two may co-exist.[227] There is in addition a principle to the effect that a special rule prevails over a general rule (lex specialis derogat legi generali), so that, for example, treaty rules between states as lex specialis would have priority as against general rules of treaty or customary law between the same states,[228] although not if the general rule in question was one of jus cogens.[229]

The position is complicated by the existence of norms or obligations deemed to be of a different or higher status than others, whether derived from custom or treaty. These may be obligations erga omnes or rules of jus cogens. While there may be significant overlap between these two in terms of the content of rules to which they relate, there is a difference in nature. The former concept concerns the scope of application of the relevant rule, that is the extent to which states as a generality may be subject to the rule in question and may be seen as having a legal interest in the matter.[230] It has, therefore, primarily a procedural focus. Rules of jus cogens, on the other hand, are substantive rules recognised to be of a higher status as such. The International Court stated in the Barcelona Traction case[231] that there existed an essential distinction between the obligations of a state towards the international community as a whole and those arising vis-à-vis another state in the field of diplomatic protection. By their very nature the former concerned all states and 'all states can be held to have a legal interest in their protection; they are obligations erga omnes'. Examples of such obligations included the outlawing of aggression and of genocide and the protection from slavery and racial discrimination.[232] To this one may

[227] See the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 95.

[228] See ILC Report on Fragmentation, pp. 30 ff., and Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 1270 and 1280. See also the Gabčíkovo–Nagymaros case, ICJ Reports, 1997, pp. 7, 76; 116 ILR, pp. 1, 85; the Beagle Channel case, 52 ILR, pp. 141–2; the Right of Passage case, ICJ Reports, 1960, pp. 6, 44; 31 ILR, pp. 23, 56; the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons case, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 240; 110 ILR, pp. 163, 190; the Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 38; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 31, and the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 3, 137; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 471.

[229] See e.g. the OSPAR (Ireland v. UK) case, 126 ILR, p. 364, para. 84, and further below, p. 623.

[230] See e.g. Article 48 of the ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility and the commentary thereto, A/56/10, pp. 126 ff. See also the Furundžija case before the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, 121 ILR, pp. 213, 260.

[231] ICJ Reports, 1970, pp. 3, 32; 46 ILR, pp. 178, 206.

[232] See also the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 100; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 468, and Judge Weeramantry's Dissenting Opinion in the East Timor case, ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 90, 172 and 204; 105 ILR pp. 226; 313 and 345. See, in addition, Simma, 'Bilateralism',

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

add the prohibition of torture.[233] Further, the International Court in the East Timor case stressed that the right of peoples to self-determination 'has an erga omnes character',[234] while reiterating in the Genocide Convention (Bosnia v. Serbia) case that 'the rights and obligations enshrined in the Convention are rights and obligations erga omnes'.[235]

This easing of the traditional rules concerning locus standi in certain circumstances with regard to the pursuing of a legal remedy against the alleged offender state may be linked to the separate question of superior principles in international law. Article 53 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969, provides that a treaty will be void 'if, at the time of its conclusion, it conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law'. Further, by article 64, if a new peremptory norm of general international law emerges, any existing treaty which is in conflict with that norm becomes void and terminates. This rule (jus cogens) will also apply in the context of customary rules so that no derogation would be permitted to such norms by way of local or special custom.

Such a peremptory norm is defined by the Convention as one 'accepted and recognised by the international community of states as a whole as a norm from which no derogation is permitted and which can be modified only by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character'.[236] The concept of jus cogens is based upon an acceptance of fundamental and superior values within the system and in some respects is akin to the notion of public order or public policy in domestic legal orders.[237] It also reflects the influence of Natural pp. 230 ff.; M. Ragazzi, The Concept of International Obligations Erga Omnes, Oxford, 1997, and J. Crawford, The International Law Commission's Articles on State Responsibility, Cambridge, 2002, pp. 242–4.

[233] See e.g. the Furundžija case, 121 ILR, pp. 213, 260.

[234] ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 90, 102; 105 ILR, p. 226.

[235] ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 595, 616; 115 ILR, p. 10.

[236] It was noted in US v. Matta-Ballesteros that: 'Jus cogens norms which are nonderogable and peremptory, enjoy the highest status within customary international law, are binding on all nations, and cannot be preempted by treaty', 71 F.3d 754, 764 n. 4 (9th circuit, 1995).

[237] See e.g. J. Sztucki, Jus Cogens and the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, New York, 1974; I. Sinclair, The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 2nd edn, Manchester, 1984, p. 203; M. Virally, 'Réflexions sur le Jus Cogens', 12 AFDI, 1966, p. 1; Shelton, 'Normative Hierarchy', pp. 297 ff.; C. Rozakis, The Concept of Jus Cogens in the Law of Treaties, Amsterdam, 1976; Cassese, International Law, chapter 11; Gomez Robledo, 'Le Jus Cogens International', 172 HR, 1981 p. 17; G. Gaja, 'Jus Cogens beyond the Vienna Conventions', 172 HR, 1981, p. 279; Crawford, ILC's Articles, pp. 187–8 and 243; J. Verhoeven, 'Jus Cogens and Reservations or "Counter-Reservations" to the Jurisdiction of the International Court

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Law thinking. Rules of jus cogens are not new rules of international law as such. It is a question rather of a particular and superior quality that is recognised as adhering in existing rules of international law. Various examples of rules of jus cogens have been provided, particularly during the discussions on the topic in the International Law Commission, such as an unlawful use of force, genocide, slave trading and piracy.[238] However, no clear agreement has been manifested regarding other areas,[239] and even the examples given are by no means uncontroverted. Nevertheless, the rise of individual responsibility directly for international crimes marks a further step in the development of jus cogens rules. Of particular importance, however, is the identification of the mechanism by which rules of jus cogens may be created, since once created no derogation is permitted.

A two-stage approach is here involved in the light of article 53: first, the establishment of the proposition as a rule of general international law and, secondly, the acceptance of that rule as a peremptory norm by the international law community of states as a whole. It will be seen therefore that a stringent process is involved, and rightly so, for the establishment of a higher level of binding rules has serious implications for the international law community. The situation to be avoided is that of foisting peremptory norms upon a political or ideological minority, for that in the long run would devalue the concept. The appropriate test would thus require universal acceptance of the proposition as a legal rule by states and recognition of it as a rule of jus cogens by an overwhelming majority of Justice' in Wellens, International Law, p. 195, and L. Hannikainen, Peremptory Norms (Jus Cogens) in International Law, Helsinki, 1988. See also article 26 of the ILC's Articles on State Responsibility, 2001, and below, chapter 16, p. 944.

238 Yearbook of the ILC, 1966, vol. II, p. 248. See, as regards the prohibition of torture as a rule of jus cogens, the decision of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in the Furundžija case, 121 ILR, pp. 257–8 and 260–2; Siderman v. Argentina 26 F.2d 699, 714–18; 103 ILR, p. 454; Ex Parte Pinochet (No. 3) [2000] 1 AC 147, 247 (Lord Hope), 253–4 (Lord Hutton) and 290 (Lord Phillips); 119 ILR, pp. 135, 200, 206–7 and 244, and the Al-Adsani case, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 21 November 2001, para. 61; 123 ILR, pp. 24, 41–2. See also, as regards the prohibition of extrajudicial killing, the decision of the US District Court in Alejandre v. Cuba 121 ILR, pp. 603, 616, and as regards non-discrimination, the decision of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in its advisory opinion concerning the Juridical Condition and Rights of the Undocumented Migrants, OC-18/03, Series A, No. 18 (2003).

239 See e.g. Lord Slynn in Ex Parte Pinochet (No. 1) who stated that 'Nor is there any jus cogens in respect of such breaches of international law [international crimes] which require that a claim of state or head of state immunity . . . should be overridden', [2000] 1 AC 61, 79; 119 ILR, pp. 50, 67.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of states, crossing ideological and political divides.[240] It is also clear that only rules based on custom or treaties may form the foundation of jus cogens norms. This is particularly so in view of the hostile attitude of many states to general principles as an independent source of international law and the universality requirement of jus cogens formation. As article 53 of the Vienna Convention notes, a treaty that is contrary to an existing rule of jus cogens is void ab initio,[241] whereas by virtue of article 64 an existing treaty that conflicts with an emergent rule of jus cogens terminates from the date of the emergence of the rule. It is not void ab initio, nor by article 71 is any right, obligation or legal situation created by the treaty prior to its termination affected, provided that its maintenance is not in itself contrary to the new peremptory norm. Article 41(2) of the ILC's Articles on State Responsibility, 2001, provides that no state shall recognise as lawful a 'serious breach' of a peremptory norm.[242] Reservations that offended a rule of jus cogens may well be unlawful,[243] while it has been suggested that state conduct violating a rule of jus cogens may not attract a claim of state immunity.[244] The relationship between the rules of jus cogens and article 103 of the United Nations Charter, which states that obligations under the Charter have precedence as against obligations under other international agreements, was discussed by Judge Lauterpacht in his Separate Opinion in the Bosnia case.[245] He noted in particular that 'the relief which article 103 of the Charter may give the Security Council in case of conflict between one of its decisions and an operative treaty obligation cannot – as a matter of simple hierarchy of norms – extend to a conflict between a Security Council resolution and jus cogens'.

[240] See e.g. Sinclair, Vienna Convention, pp. 218–24, and Akehurst, 'Hierarchy'.

[241] See Yearbook of the ILC, 1966, vol. II, pp. 91–2.

[242] One that involves a gross or systematic failure by the responsible state to fulfil the obligation, article 40(2). See also article 50(d).

[243] See e.g. Judges Padilla Nervo, Tanaka and Sørensen in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 97, 182 and 248; 41 ILR, p. 29. See also General Comment No. 24 (52) of the UN Human Rights Committee, CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.6.

[244] See e.g. Cassese, International Law, pp. 105 ff, citing the Dissenting Opinion of Judge Wald in Princz v. Federal Republic of Germany, a decision of the US Court of Appeals, 1994, 103 ILR, p. 618, but see the Al-Adsani case, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 21 November 2001; 123 ILR, p. 24.

[245] ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 325, 440; 95 ILR, pp. 43, 158. See also the decision of the House of Lords in the Al-Jedda case, [2007] UKHL 58 concerning the priority of article 103 obligations (here Security Council resolutions) over article 5 of the European Convention on Human Rights.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Suggestions for further reading

M. Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source of International Law', 47 BYIL, 1974–5, p. 1

A. Boyle and C. Chinkin, The Making of International Law, Oxford, 2007

B. Cheng, General Principles of Law as Applied by International Courts and Tribunals, London, 1953

C. Parry, The Sources and Evidences of International Law, Cambridge, 1965

A. Pellet, 'Article 38' in The Statute of the International Court of Justice: A Commentary (eds. A. Zimmermann, C. Tomuschat and K. Oellers-Frahm), Oxford, 2006, p. 677

P. Weil, 'Towards Relative Normativity in International Law?', 77 AJIL, 1983, p. 413

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

4

International law and municipal law

The role of the state in the modern world is a complex one. According to legal theory, each state is sovereign and equal.[1] In reality, with the phenomenal growth in communications and consciousness, and with the constant reminder of global rivalries, not even the most powerful of states can be entirely sovereign. Interdependence and the close-knit character of contemporary international commercial and political society ensures that virtually any action of a state could well have profound repercussions upon the system as a whole and the decisions under consideration by other states. This has led to an increasing interpenetration of [1] See generally Oppenheim's International Law (eds. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992, vol. I, p. 52; L. Reydams, Universal Jurisdiction: International and Municipal Legal Perspectives, Oxford, 2004; Y. Shany, Regulating Jurisdictional Relations Between National and International Courts, Oxford, 2007; J. W. Verzijl, International Law in Historical Perspective, Leiden, 1968, vol. I, p. 90; R. A. Falk, The Role of Domestic Courts in the International Legal Order, Princeton, 1964; H. Kelsen, Principles of International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1966, pp. 290–4 and 551–88; I. Brownlie, Principles of Public International Law, 6th edn, Oxford, 2003, chapter 2; H. Lauterpacht, International Law: Collected Papers, Cambridge, 1970, vol. I, pp. 151–77; A. Cassese, International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005, chapter 12, and Cassese, 'Modern Constitutions and International Law', 192 HR, 1985 III, p. 335; Nguyen Quoc Dinh, P. Daillier and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 7th edn, Paris, 2002, p. 92; R. Higgins, Problems and Process, Oxford, 1994, chapter 12; K. Marek, 'Les Rapports entre le Droit International et le Droit Interne à la Lumière de la Jurisprudence de la CIJ', Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1962, p. 260; L. Ferrari-Bravo, 'International Law and Municipal Law: The Complementarity of Legal Systems' in The Structure and Process of International Law (eds. R. St J. Macdonald and D. Johnston), Dordrecht, 1983, p. 715; F. Morgenstern, 'Judicial Practice and the Supremacy of International Law', 27 BYIL, 1950, p. 42; B. Conforti, International Law and the Role of Domestic Legal Systems, The Hague, 1993; J. G. Starke, 'Monism and Dualism in the Theory of International Law Considered from the Standpoint of the Rule of Law', 92 HR, 1957, pp. 5, 70–80; H. Thirlway, 'The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice, 1960–89 (Part One)', 60 BYIL, 1989, pp. 4, 114; Report of the Committee on International Law and Municipal Law, International Law Association: Report of the Sixty-Sixth Conference, 1994, p. 326; V. Erades, Interactions Between International and Municipal Law – A Comparative Caselaw Study, Leiden, 1993, and V. Heiskanen, International Legal Topics, Helsinki, 1992, chapter 1.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

international law and domestic law across a number of fields, such as human rights, environmental and international investment law, where at the least the same topic is subject to regulation at both the domestic and the international level (and indeed the regional level in the case of the European Union). With the rise and extension of international law, questions begin to arise paralleling the role played by the state within the international system and concerned with the relationship between the internal legal order of a particular country and the rules and principles governing the international community as a whole. Municipal law governs the domestic aspects of government and deals with issues between individuals, and between individuals and the administrative apparatus, while international law focuses primarily upon the relations between states. That is now, however, an overly simplistic assertion. There are many instances where problems can emerge and lead to difficulties between the two systems. In a case before a municipal court a rule of international law may be brought forward as a defence to a charge, as for example in R v. Jones, where the defence of seeking to prevent a greater crime (essentially of international law) was claimed with regard to the alleged offence of criminal damage (in English law),[2] or where a vessel is being prosecuted for being in what, in domestic law, is regarded as territorial waters but in international law would be treated as part of the high seas. Further, there are cases where the same situation comes before both national and international courts, which may refer to each other's decisions in a complex process of interaction. For example, the failure of the US to allow imprisoned foreign nationals access to consular assistance in violation of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963 was the subject of case-law before the International Court of Justice,[3] the Inter-American Court of Human Rights[4] and US courts,[5] while there is a growing tendency for domestic courts to be used to address violations of international law.[6]

[2] [2006] UKHL 16; 132 ILR, p. 668. See further below, p. 146.

[3] See e.g. the LaGrand case, ICJ Reports, 2001, p. 466; 134 ILR, p. 1, and the Avena case, ICJ Reports, 2004, p. 12; 134 ILR, p. 120.

[4] The Right to Information on Consular Assistance in the Framework of the Guarantees of the Due Process of Law, Inter-American Court of Human Rights, Series A, No. 16, 1999.

[5] See e.g. Breard v. Greene 523 US 371 (1998) and Sanchez-Llamas v. Oregon 126 S Ct 2669 (2006). See also Medillin v. Texas 522 US (2008) (Slip Opinion).

[6] See e.g. R v. Jones [2006] UKHL 16; 132 ILR, p. 668; ex parte Abbasi [2002] EWCA Civ 1598; 126 ILR, p. 685, and R (Gentle) v. Prime Minister [2006] EWCA Civ 1689; 132 ILR, p. 721.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The theories[7]

Positivism stresses the overwhelming importance of the state and tends to regard international law as founded upon the consent of states. It is actual practice, illustrated by custom and by treaty, that formulates the role of international law, and not formalistic structures, theoretical deductions or moral stipulations. Accordingly, when positivists such as Triepel[8] and Strupp[9] consider the relationship of international law to municipal law, they do so upon the basis of the supremacy of the state, and the existence of wide differences between the two functioning orders. This theory, known as dualism, stresses that the rules of the systems of international law and municipal law exist separately and cannot purport to have an effect on, or overrule, the other.

This is because of the fundamentally different nature of inter-state and intra-state relations and the different legal structure employed on the one hand by the state and on the other hand as between states. Where municipal legislation permits the exercise of international law rules, this is on sufferance as it were and is an example of the supreme authority of the state within its own domestic jurisdiction, rather than of any influence maintained by international law within the internal sphere.[10]

Those writers who disagree with this theory and who adopt the monist approach tend to fall into two distinct categories: those who, like Lauterpacht, uphold a strong ethical position with a deep concern for human rights, and others, like Kelsen, who maintain a monist position on formalistic logical grounds. The monists are united in accepting a unitary view of law as a whole and are opposed to the strict division posited by the positivists.

The 'naturalist' strand represented in England by Lauterpacht's works sees the primary function of all law as concerned with the well-being of individuals, and advocates the supremacy of international law as the [7] See above, chapters 1 and 2. See also J. H. Jackson, 'Status of Treaties in Domestic Legal Systems: A Policy Analysis', 86 AJIL, 1992, p. 310; N. Valticos, 'Pluralité des Ordres Juridiques et Unité de Droit International Public' in Theory of International Law at the Threshold of the 21st Century (ed. J. Markarczyk), The Hague, 1996, p. 301, and J. Dhommeaux, 'Monismes et Dualismes en Droit International des Droits de l'Homme', AFDI, 1995, p. 447.

[8] H. Triepel, Völkerrecht und Landesrecht, Berlin, 1899.

[9] K. Strupp, 'Les Règles Générales du Droit International de la Paix', 47 HR, 1934, p. 389. See also D. Anzilotti, Corso di Diritto Internazionale, 3rd edn, Rome, 1928, vol. I, pp. 43 ff.

[10] See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 53.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

best method available of attaining this. It is an approach characterised by deep suspicion of an international system based upon the sovereignty and absolute independence of states, and illuminated by faith in the capacity of the rules of international law to imbue the international order with a sense of moral purpose and justice founded upon respect for human rights and the welfare of individuals.[11]

The method by which Kelsen elucidates his theory of monism is markedly different and utilises the philosophy of Kant as its basis. Law is regarded as constituting an order which lays down patterns of behaviour that ought to be followed, coupled with provision for sanctions which are employed once an illegal act or course of conduct has occurred or been embarked upon. Since the same definition appertains within both the internal sphere and the international sphere, a logical unity is forged, and because states owe their legal relationship to one another to the rules of international law, such as the one positing equality, since states cannot be equal before the law without a rule to that effect, it follows that international law is superior to or more basic than municipal law.[12]

Reference has already been made to Kelsen's hierarchical system whereby the legality of a particular rule is affirmed once it conforms to an anterior rule. This process of referring back to previous or higher rules ends with the so-called basic norm of the legal order. However, this basic norm is basic only in a relative sense, since the legal character of states, such as their jurisdiction, sovereignty and equality, is fixed by international law. Thus, Kelsen emphasises the unity of the entire legal order upon the basis of the predominance of international law by declaring that it is the basic norm of the international legal order which is the ultimate reason of validity of the national legal orders too.[13]

A third approach, being somewhat a modification of the dualist position and formulated by Fitzmaurice and Rousseau amongst others, attempts to establish a recognised theoretical framework tied to reality. This approach begins by denying that any common field of operation exists as between international law and municipal law by which one system is superior or inferior to the other. Each order is supreme in its own sphere, [11] Lauterpacht, International Law. See also Lauterpacht, International Law and Human Rights, London, 1950.

[12] Kelsen, Principles, pp. 557–9. See also Kelsen, General Theory of Law and State, Cambridge, 1945, pp. 363–80. Note that Scelle, for example, founds international legal monism upon an intersocial monism, essentially a sociological explanation: see Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 96.

[13] See further above, chapter 2, p. 50.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

much as French law and English law are in France and England. And just as one cannot talk in terms of the supremacy of French law over English law, but only of two distinct legal systems each operating within its own field, so it is possible to treat international law and municipal law in the same way. They are both the legal element contained within the domestic and international systems respectively, and they exist within different juridical orders.

What may, and often does, happen is what is termed a conflict of obligations, that is the state within its own domestic sphere does not act in accordance with its obligations as laid down by international law. In such a case, the domestic position is unaffected (and is not overruled by the contrary rule of international law) but rather the state as it operates internationally has broken a rule of international law and the remedy will lie in the international field, whether by means of diplomatic protest or judicial action.

This method of solving the problem does not delve deeply into theoretical considerations, but aims at being practical and in accord with the majority of state practice and international judicial decisions.[14] In fact, the increasing scope of international law has prompted most states to accept something of an intermediate position, where the rules of international law are seen as part of a distinct system, but capable of being applied internally depending on circumstance, while domestic courts are increasingly being obliged to interpret rules of international law.[15]

The role of municipal rules in international law[16]

The general rule with regard to the position of municipal law within the international sphere is that a state which has broken a stipulation of international law cannot justify itself by referring to its domestic legal situation. It is no defence to a breach of an international obligation to [14] G. Fitzmaurice, 'The General Principles of International Law Considered from the Standpoint of the Rule of Law', 92 HR, 1957 II, pp. 5, 70–80. See also C. Rousseau, Droit International Public, Paris, 1979, pp. 4–16; E. Borchard, 'The Relations between International Law and Municipal Law', 27 Virginia Law Review, 1940, p. 137; M. S. McDougal, 'The Impact of International Law upon National Law: A Policy-Orientated Perspective' in McDougal et al., Studies in World Public Order, New Haven, 1960, p. 157.

[15] See further as to relevant theories, Shany, Regulating Jurisdictional Relations, pp. 92 ff.

[16] See e.g. C. W. Jenks, The Prospects of International Adjudication, London, 1964, chapter 9; H. Lauterpacht, The Development of International Law by the International Court, London, 1958, and Morgenstern, 'Judicial Practice', pp. 43 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

argue that the state acted in such a manner because it was following the dictates of its own municipal laws. The reasons for this inability to put forward internal rules as an excuse to evade international responsibility are obvious. Any other situation would permit international law to be evaded by the simple method of domestic legislation.

Accordingly, state practice and decided cases have established this provision and thereby prevented countries involved in international litigation from pleading municipal law as a method of circumventing international law. Article 27 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969 lays down that in so far as treaties are concerned, a party may not invoke the provisions of its internal law as justification for its failure to carry out an international agreement, while article 46(1) provides that a state may not invoke the fact that its consent to be bound by a treaty has been expressed in violation of a provision of its internal law regarding competence to conclude treaties as invalidating its consent.[17] This is so unless the violation of its internal law in question was 'manifest and concerned a rule of fundamental importance'. Article 46(2) states that such a violation is manifest where it would be objectively evident to any state conducting itself in the matter in accordance with normal practice and in good faith. The International Court considered this provision in Cameroon v. Nigeria in the context of Nigeria's argument that the Maroua Declaration of 1975 signed by the two heads of state was not valid as it had not been ratified.[18] It was noted that article 7(2) of the Vienna Convention provided that heads of state belonged to the group of persons who in virtue of their functions and without having to produce full powers are considered as representing their state. The Court also took the view that 'there is no general legal obligation for States to keep themselves informed of legislative and constitutional developments in other States which are or may become important for the international relations of these States'.[19]

[17] Note also article 13 of the Draft Declaration on the Rights and Duties of States, 1949, which provides that every state 'has the duty to carry out in good faith its obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law, and it may not invoke provisions in its constitution or its laws as an excuse for failure to perform this duty', Yearbook of the ILC, 1949, pp. 286, 289.

[18] ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 430 ff.

[19] Ibid., p. 430. But see the view of the Court in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case that the UK as a coastal state greatly interested in North Sea fishing 'could not have been ignorant' of a relevant Norwegian decree, despite claiming that Norway's delimitation system was not known to it: ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 116; 18 ILR, pp. 86, 101.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Such provisions are reflected in the case-law. In the Alabama Claims arbitration of 1872, the United States objected strenuously when Britain allowed a Confederate ship to sail from Liverpool to prey upon American shipping. It was held that the absence of British legislation necessary to prevent the construction or departure of the vessel could not be brought forward as a defence, and Britain was accordingly liable to pay damages for the depredations caused by the warship in question.[20] In the Polish Nationals in Danzig case, the Court declared that 'a State cannot adduce as against another State its own constitution with a view to evading obligations incumbent upon it under international law or treaties in force'.[21]

The International Court, in the Applicability of the Obligation to Arbitrate case,[22] has underlined 'the fundamental principle of international law that international law prevails over domestic law', while Judge Shahabuddeen emphasised in the Lockerbie case[23] that inability under domestic law to act was no defence to non-compliance with an international obligation. This was reinforced in the LaGrand case,[24] where the Court noted that the effect of the US procedural default rule,[25] which was to prevent counsel for the LaGrand brothers from raising the violation by the US of its obligations under the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963 before the US federal courts system, had no impact upon the responsibility of the US for the breach of the convention.[26] The Court underlined this approach in the Avena case,[27] noting that 'The rights guaranteed under the Vienna Convention are treaty rights which the United States has undertaken to comply with in relation to the individual concerned, irrespective of the due process rights under the United States constitutional law.' The [20] J. B. Moore, International Arbitrations, New York, 1898, vol. I, pp. 495, 653. See also e.g. the Free Zones case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 46, 1932, p. 167; 6 AD, p. 362; the Greco-Bulgarian Communities case, PCIJ, Series B, No. 17, 1930, p. 32; 5 AD, p. 4, and the Nottebohm case, ICJ Reports, 1955, pp. 4, 20–1; 22 ILR, pp. 349, 357–8.

[21] PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 44, pp. 21, 24; 6 AD, p. 209. See also the Georges Pinson case, 5 RIAA, p. 327; 4 AD, p. 9.

[22] ICJ Reports, 1988, pp. 12, 34; 82 ILR, pp. 225, 252.

[23] ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 3, 32; 94 ILR, pp. 478, 515. See also Westland Helicopters Ltd and AOI 80 ILR, pp. 595, 616.

[24] ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 466, 497–8; 134 ILR, pp. 1, 35–6.

[25] This US federal rule of criminal law essentially prevents a claim from being heard before a federal court if it has not been presented to a state court: see ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 477–8.

[26] See also the Advisory Opinion of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights on the Promulgation and Enforcement of Law in Violation of the Convention, 116 ILR, pp. 320, 332–3.

[27] ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 12, 65; 134 ILR, pp. 120, 168.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Court took a step further in that case, which also concerned the failure to allow foreign prisoners access to the consular officials of their state in breach of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, declaring that 'the remedy to make good these violations should consist in an obligation on the United States to permit review and reconsideration of these nationals' cases by the United States courts . . . with a view to ascertaining whether in each case the violation of Article 36 committed by the competent authorities caused actual prejudice to the defendant in the process of administration of criminal justice'.[28] By way of contrast, the International Court pointed out in the Elettronica Sicula SpA (ELSI) case[29] that the fact that an act of a public authority may have been unlawful in municipal law did not necessarily mean that the act in question was unlawful in international law.

However, such expressions of the supremacy of international law over municipal law in international tribunals do not mean that the provisions of domestic legislation are either irrelevant or unnecessary.[30] On the contrary, the role of internal legal rules is vital to the workings of the international legal machine. One of the ways that it is possible to understand and discover a state's legal position on a variety of topics important to international law is by examining municipal laws.[31] A country will express its opinion on such vital international matters as the extent of its territorial sea, or the jurisdiction it claims or the conditions for the acquisition of nationality through the medium of its domestic law-making. Thus, it is quite often that in the course of deciding a case before it, an international court will feel the necessity to make a study of relevant pieces of municipal legislation. Indeed, there have been instances, such as the Serbian Loans case of 1929,[32] when the crucial issues turned upon the interpretation of internal law, and the rules of international law in [28] Ibid., p. 60. President Bush then issued an order to the state courts to give effect to the decision of the International Court: see 44 ILM, p. 461 (28 February 2005). The US also withdrew its acceptance of the Optional Protocol to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, which had provided for the jurisdiction of the International Court in cases of dispute over the convention.

[29] ICJ Reports, 1989, pp. 15, 73–4; 84 ILR, pp. 311, 379–80. See also Compañía de Aguas del Aconquija v. Argentina 41 ILM, 2002, pp. 1135, 1154.

[30] See e.g. Jenks, Prospects, pp. 547–603, and K. Marek, Droit International et Droit Interne, Paris, 1961. See also Brownlie, Principles, pp. 36–40.

[31] See e.g. the Anglo-Iranian Oil Co. case, ICJ Reports, 1952, p. 93; 19 ILR, p. 507.

[32] PCIJ, Series A, No. 20; 5 AD, p. 466. See also the Brazilian Loans case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 21.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

a strict sense were not at issue. Further, a court may turn to municipal law concepts where this is necessary in the circumstances.[33] However, it is clear that caution is necessary where an international court or tribunal is considering concepts of national law in the absence of an express or implied requirement so to do and no automatic transposition should occur.[34]

In addition to the role of municipal law in revealing the legal position of the state on topics of international importance, the rules of municipal law can be utilised as evidence of compliance or non-compliance with international obligations. This was emphasised in the Certain German Interests in Polish Upper Silesia case, where the Permanent Court of International Justice declared that:

> From the standpoint of International Law and of the Court, which is its organ, municipal laws are merely facts which express the will and constitute the activities of States, in the same manner as do legal decisions or administrative measures. The Court is certainly not called upon to interpret the Polish law as such; but there is nothing to prevent the Court's giving judgment on the question whether or not, in applying that law, Poland is acting in conformity with its obligations towards Germany under the Geneva Convention.[35]

Nevertheless, and despite the many functions that municipal law rules perform within the sphere of international law, the point must be emphasised that the presence or absence of a particular provision within the internal legal structure of a state, including its constitution if there is one, cannot be applied to evade an international obligation. Any other solution would render the operations of international law rather precarious.

[33] See e.g. the Barcelona Traction case concerning the nature of a limited liability company, ICJ Reports, 1970, p. 3; 46 ILR, p. 178.

[34] See e.g. the Exchange of Greek and Turkish Populations case, PCIJ, Series B, No. 10, pp. 19–21; 3 AD, p. 378. See also the Separate Opinion of Judge McNair in the South West Africa case, ICJ Reports, 1950, p. 148; 17 ILR, p. 47, noting that private law institutions could not be imported into international law 'lock, stock and barrel'; the Separate Opinion of Judge Fitzmaurice in the Barcelona Traction case, ICJ Reports, 1970, pp. 3, 66–7; 46 ILR, pp. 178, 240–1, and the Separate and Dissenting Opinion of President Cassese in the Erdemović case, 111 ILR, pp. 298, 387 ff.

[35] PCIJ, Series A, No. 7, p. 19; 3 AD, p. 5. See also the Saiga (No. 2) case before the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, 120 ILR, pp. 143, 188, and Benin v. Niger, ICJ Reports, 2005, pp. 90, 125 and 148. For criticism, see e.g. Brownlie, Principles, pp. 38–40.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

International law before municipal courts[36]

The problem of the role of international law within the municipal law system is, however, rather more complicated than the position discussed above, and there have been a number of different approaches to it. States are, of course, under a general obligation to act in conformity with the rules of international law and will bear responsibility for breaches of it, whether committed by the legislative, executive or judicial organs and irrespective of domestic law.[37] Further, international treaties may impose requirements of domestic legislation upon states parties,[38] while binding Security Council resolutions may similarly require that states take particular action within their jurisdictions.[39] There is indeed a clear trend towards the increasing penetration of international legal rules within domestic systems coupled with the exercise of an ever-wider jurisdiction with regard to matters having an international dimension by domestic courts. This has led to a blurring of the distinction between the two previously maintained autonomous zones of international and domestic law, a re-evaluation of the role of international legal rules and a greater preparedness by domestic tribunals to analyse the actions of their governments in the light of international law.[40] Further, domestic courts may often have to determine the meaning of an international rule that is relevant for a case before them[41] or to seek to resolve conflicts between international rules, [36] See e.g. Morgenstern, 'Judicial Practice', pp. 48–66, and Conforti, International Law. See also H. Mosler, 'L'Application du Droit International Public par les Tribunaux Nationaux', 91 HR, 1957 I, p. 619; W. Wenger, 'Réflexions sur l'Application du Droit International Public par les Tribunaux Internes', 72 Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1968, p. 921; E. Benveniste, 'Judges and Foreign Affairs: A Comment on the Institut de Droit International's Resolution on "The Activities of National Courts and the International Relations of their State"', 5 EJIL, 1994, p. 423.

[37] See e.g. the Exchange of Greek and Turkish Populations case, PCIJ, Series B, No. 10, p. 20, and the Finnish Ships Arbitration, 3 RIAA, p. 1484. See further below, chapter 14.

[38] See e.g. as to requirements imposed by anti-terrorist conventions, below, chapter 12, p. 673. See also the decision of Trial Chamber II in the Furundžija case, 121 ILR, pp. 218, 248–9.

[39] See as to the effect of counter-terrorism and weapons of mass destruction proliferation measures taken by the Security Council, below chapter 22, pp. 1208, 1210 and 1240.

[40] See e.g. Shany, Regulating Jurisdictional Relations; A. Nollkaemper, 'Internationally Wrongful Acts in Domestic Courts', 101 AJIL, 2007, p. 760, and New Perspectives on the Divide Between National and International Law (eds. A. Nollkaemper and J. E. Nijman), Oxford, 2007. See also Conforti, International Law.

[41] For example, the concept of jurisdiction as laid down in the European Convention on Human Rights: see Al-Skeini v. Secretary of State for Defence [2007] UKHL 26; 133 ILR, p. 693.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

such as that between state immunity and the prohibition of torture[42] and that between treaty rules of human rights and binding Security Council resolutions.[43]

In this section, the approach adopted by municipal courts will be noted. We shall look first at the attitudes adopted by the British courts, and then proceed to note the views taken by the United States and other countries.[44]

The United Kingdom[45]

It is part of the public policy of the UK that the courts should in principle give effect to clearly established rules of international law.[46] Various theories have been put forward to explain the applicability of international law rules within the jurisdiction. One expression of the positivist–dualist position has been the doctrine of transformation. This is based upon the perception of two quite distinct systems of law, operating separately, and maintains that before any rule or principle of international law can have any effect within the domestic jurisdiction, it must be expressly and specifically 'transformed' into municipal law by the use of the appropriate constitutional machinery, such as an Act of Parliament. This doctrine grew from the procedure whereby international agreements are rendered operative in municipal law by the device of ratification by the sovereign and the idea has developed from this that any rule of international law must be transformed, or specifically adopted, to be valid within the internal legal order.

[42] See e.g. Jones v. Saudi Arabia [2006] UKHL 26; 129 ILR, p. 713.

[43] See Al-Jedda v. Secretary of State for Defence [2007] UKHL 58.

[44] Note the view expressed in Oppenheim's International Law, p. 54, that 'states show considerable flexibility in the procedures whereby they give effect within their territories to the rules of international law . . . while the procedures vary, the result that effect is given within states to the requirements of international law is by and large achieved by all states'.

[45] See e.g. Morgenstern, 'Judicial Practice'; H. Lauterpacht, 'Is International Law a Part of the Law of England?', 25 Transactions of the Grotius Society, 1939, p. 51; J. E. S. Fawcett, The British Commonwealth in International Law, London, 1963, chapter 2; Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 39–41, and W. Holdsworth, Essays in Law and History, Oxford, 1946, p. 260. See also J. Collier, 'Is International Law Really Part of the Law of England?', 38 ICLQ, 1989, p. 924; Higgins, Problems and Process, chapter 12; R. O'Keefe, 'Customary International Crimes in English Courts', 72 BYIL, 2001, p. 293; K. Reece Thomas, 'The Changing Status of International Law in English Domestic Law', 53 NILR, 2006, p. 371; S. Fatima, Using International Law in Domestic Courts, Oxford, 2005, and D. Feldman, 'Monism, Dualism and Constitutional Legitimacy', 20 Australian YIL, 1999, p. 105.

[46] See e.g. Upjohn J in In re Claim by Herbert Wragg & Co. Ltd [1956] Ch. 323, 334, and Lord Cross in Oppenheimer v. Cattermole [1976] AC 249, 277; 72 ILR, p. 446.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Another approach, known as the doctrine of incorporation, holds that international law is part of the municipal law automatically without the necessity for the interposition of a constitutional ratification procedure. The best-known exponent of this theory is the eighteenth-century lawyer Blackstone, who declared in his Commentaries that:

> the law of nations, wherever any question arises which is properly the object of its jurisdiction, is here adopted in its full extent by the common law, and it is held to be a part of the law of the land.[47]

This doctrine refers to customary international law and different rules apply to treaties. However, the previously accepted dichotomy between the reception of custom and treaty if now maintained absolutely would distort the many developments currently taking place. As will be seen, English courts have had to deal with the effect of legal decisions emanating from the EU and its Court of Justice and the European Court of Human Rights,[48] as well as the other consequences resulting from membership of the EU and of the Council of Europe; have been concerned with the interpretation of an increasing number of rules of international law incorporated into English law through the ratification of international treaties (particularly the significant number dealing with terrorist issues) and subsequent domestic legislation that they have required;[49] have sought to tackle conflicts of international legal rules and have dealt with the changing configuration of the doctrine of non-justiciability of issues raising questions as to the executive's conduct of foreign policy. They have also had to concern themselves with the validity of foreign laws deemed to conflict with international law and the acceptability of evidence obtained abroad in circumstances that may have violated international law.[50] English courts take judicial notice of international law, so that formal proof of a proposition does not need to be demonstrated (unlike propositions of foreign law) and this itself has been a key factor in determining the relationship between international law and domestic law. Judges are deemed to know international law. In practice this means that judges and lawyers trained in domestic law have had to grapple with the [47] Commentaries, IV, chapter 5.

[48] See section 3(1) of the European Communities Act 1972 and section 2 of the Human Rights Act 1998, incorporating into domestic law respectively the EU treaties and the European Convention on Human Rights. See also Kay v. Lambeth Borough Council [2006] UKHL 10.

[49] See below, chapter 12, p. 673.

[50] See below, p. 186. See also A & Ors v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2005] UKHL 71.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com different sources of international law and the difficulties of this task have percolated through the relationship.

Customary international law

It is in this sphere that the doctrine of incorporation has become the main British approach. It is an old-established theory dating back to the eighteenth century, owing its prominence at that stage to the considerable discussion then taking place as to the precise extent of diplomatic immunity. A few of the more important cases will be briefly surveyed. In Buvot v. Barbuit,[51] Lord Talbot declared unambiguously that 'the law of nations in its full extent was part of the law of England', so that a Prussian commercial agent could not be rendered liable for failing to perform a decree. This was followed twenty-seven years later by Triquet v. Bath,[52] where Lord Mansfield, discussing the issue as to whether a domestic servant of the Bavarian Minister to Britain could claim diplomatic immunity, upheld the earlier case and specifically referred to Talbot's statement.

This acceptance of customary international law rules as part and parcel of the common law of England, so vigorously stated in a series of eighteenth-century cases, was subject to the priority granted to Acts of Parliament and tempered by the principle of stare decisis or precedent, maintained by the British courts and ensuring that the judgments of the higher courts are binding upon the lower courts of the hierarchical system. Accordingly, a rule of international law would not be implemented if it ran counter to a statute or decision by a higher court.[53] It is also important to admit that during this period the rules of customary international law were relatively few in number so that few conflicts between the systems were to be envisaged.

In the nineteenth century, a series of cases occurred which led many writers to dispute the validity of the hitherto accepted incorporation doctrine and replace it with the theory of transformation, according to which the rules of customary international law only form part of English law if they have been specifically adopted, either by legislation or case-law. The turning point in this saga is marked by the case of R v. Keyn[54] which concerned a German ship, the Franconia, which collided with and sank a British vessel in the English Channel within three miles of the English

[51] (1737) Cases t. Talbot 281. [52] (1764) 3 Burr. 1478.

[53] But see Trendtex Trading Corporation v. Central Bank of Nigeria [1977] 2 WLR 356; 64 ILR, p. 111; below, p. 144.

[54] (1876) 2 Ex.D. 63.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

coast. The German captain was indicted for manslaughter following the death of a passenger from the British ship, and the question that came before the Court for Crown Cases Reserved was whether an English court did indeed have jurisdiction to try the offence in such circumstances.

The Court came to the conclusion that no British legislation existed which provided for jurisdiction over the three-mile territorial sea around the coasts. It was true that such a rule might be said to exist in international law, but it was one thing to say that the state had the right to legislate over a part of what had previously been the high seas, and quite another to conclude that the state's laws operate at once there, independently of any legislation. One thing did not follow from another, and it was imperative to keep distinct on the one hand the power of Parliament to make laws, and on the other the authority of the courts, without appropriate legislation, to apply the criminal law where it could not have been applied before. The question, as Lord Cockburn emphasised, was whether, acting judicially, the Court could treat the power of Parliament to legislate as making up for the absence of actual legislation. The answer came in the negative and the German captain was released.

This case was seen by some as marking a change to a transformation approach,[55] but the judgment was in many respects ambiguous, dealing primarily with the existence or not of any right of jurisdiction over the territorial sea.[56] In many respects the differences between the incorporation and transformation theories have revolved in practice more around evidential questions than any comprehensive theoretical revolution. In any event, any doubts as to the outcome of any further Franconia situations were put to rest by the Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act 1878, which expressed British jurisdiction rights in similar circumstances.

The opinions put forward in the West Rand Gold Mining Co. case[57] showed a further blurring of the distinction between the incorporation and transformation theories. Lord Alverstone declared that whatever had received the common consent of civilised nations must also have received the assent of Great Britain and as such would be applied by the municipal tribunals. However, he went on to modify the impact of this by noting that any proposed rule of international law would have to be proved by satisfactory evidence to have been 'recognised and acted upon by our own [55] See e.g. Holdsworth, Essays, pp. 263–6, and W. Halsbury, Laws of England, 3rd edn, London, 1968, vol. VII, p. 264.

[56] See e.g. Lauterpacht, 'Is International Law a Part?', pp. 60–1.

[57] [1905] 2 KB 391.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

country' or else be of such a nature that it could hardly be supposed any civilised state would repudiate it. Lord Mansfield's view in Triquet's case could not be so interpreted as to include within the common law rules of international law which appear in the opinions of textbook writers and as to which there is no evidence that Britain ever assented.[58] This emphasis on assent, it must be noted, bears a close resemblance to the views put forward by the Court in R v. Keyn as to the necessity for conclusive evidence regarding the existence and scope of any particular rule of customary law. Indeed, the problem is often one of the uncertainty of existence and scope of customary law.

Not long after the West Rand case, another important dispute came before the courts. In Mortensen v. Peters,[59] a Danish captain was convicted by a Scottish court for contravening a fishing by-law regarding the Moray Firth. His ship had been operating within the Moray Firth and was within the area covered by the relevant by-law, but it was beyond the three-mile limit recognised by international law. The issue came to the Scottish Court of Justiciary, where Lord Dunedin, in discussing the captain's appeal, concentrated upon the correct construction to be made of the relevant legislation. He noted that an Act of Parliament duly passed and assented to was supreme and the Court had no option but to give effect to its provisions. In other words, statutes had predominance over customary law, and a British court would have to heed the terms of an Act of Parliament even if it involved the breach of a rule of international law. This is so even though there is a presumption in British law that the legislation is to be so construed as to avoid a conflict with international law. Where such a conflict does occur, the statute has priority and the state itself will have to deal with the problem of the breach of a customary rule.[60]

This modified incorporation doctrine was clearly defined by Lord Atkin in Chung Chi Cheung v. R.[61] He noted that:

> international law has no validity except in so far as its principles are accepted and adopted by our own domestic law . . . The courts acknowledge the existence of a body of rules which nations accept among themselves. On any judicial issue they seek to ascertain what the relevant rule is, and having [58] Ibid., pp. 407–8. [59] (1906) 8 F.(J.) 93.

[60] See also 170 HC Deb., col. 472, 4 March 1907 and the Trawling in Prohibited Areas Prevention Act 1909.

[61] [1939] AC 160; 9 AD, p. 264. See also Commercial and Estates Co. of Egypt v. Board of Trade [1925] 1 KB 271, 295; 2 AD, p. 423.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> found it they will treat it as incorporated into the domestic law, so far as it is not inconsistent with rules enacted by statutes or finally declared by their tribunals.

It goes without saying, of course, that any alleged rule of customary law must be proved to be a valid rule of international law, and not merely an unsupported proposition.

One effect of the doctrines as enunciated by the courts in practice is that international law is not treated as a foreign law but in an evidential manner as part of the law of the land. This means that whereas any rule of foreign law has to be proved as a fact by evidence, as occurs with other facts, the courts take judicial notice of any rule of international law and may refer, for example, to textbooks rather than require the presence and testimony of expert opinion.[62]

In ascertaining the existence and nature of any particular rule, the courts may have recourse to a wider range of authoritative material than would normally be the case, such as 'international treaties and conventions, authoritative textbooks, practice and judicial decisions' of the courts of other countries.[63]

The case of Trendtex Trading Corporation v. Central Bank of Nigeria raised anew many of these issues. The case concerned a claim for sovereign or state immunity by the Central Bank of Nigeria.[64] In Trendtex all three judges of the Court of Appeal accepted the incorporation doctrine as the correct one. Lord Denning, reversing his opinion in an earlier case,[65] stressed that otherwise the courts could not recognise changes in the norms of international law.[66] Stephenson LJ emphasised in an important statement that:

> it is the nature of international law and the specific problems of ascertaining it which create the difficulty in the way of adopting or incorporating or recognising as already incorporated a new rule of international law.[67]

[62] Lord Advocate's Reference No. 1 of 2000, 2001, SLT 507, 512–13.

[63] Per Lord MacMillan, The Cristina [1938] AC 485, 497; 9 AD, p. 250. See Re Piracy Jure Gentium [1934] AC 586, 588; 7 AD, p. 213, and Stephenson LJ, Trendtex Trading Corporation v. Central Bank of Nigeria [1977] 2 WLR 356, 379; 64 ILR, pp. 111, 135. But see also Lauterpacht, 'Is International Law a Part?', p. 87, note m.

[64] [1977] 2 WLR 356; 64 ILR, p. 111. See further below, chapter 13.

[65] R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Thakrar [1974] 2 WLR 593, 597; 59 ILR, p. 450.

[66] [1977] 2 WLR 356, 365; 64 ILR, pp. 111, 128. See also Shaw LJ, ibid., 386 and Stephenson LJ, ibid., 378–81.

[67] [1977] 2 WLR 356, 379.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The issue of stare decisis, or precedent, and customary international law was also discussed in this case. It had previously been accepted that the doctrine of stare decisis would apply in cases involving customary international law principles as in all other cases before the courts, irrespective of any changes in the meantime in such law.[68] This approach was reaffirmed in Thai-Europe Tapioca Service Ltd v. Government of Pakistan.[69] However, in Trendtex, Lord Denning and Shaw LJ emphasised that international law did not know a rule of stare decisis.[70] Where international law had changed, the court could implement that change 'without waiting for the House of Lords to do it'.[71] The true principle, noted Shaw LJ, was that 'the English courts must at any given time discover what the prevailing international rule is and apply that rule'.[72] This marked a significant approach and one that in the future may have some interesting consequences, for example, in the human rights field.

The dominant incorporationist approach was clearly reaffirmed by the Court of Appeal in Maclaine Watson v. Department of Trade and Industry.[73] This case concerned the consequences of the demise of the International Tin Council and the attempts inter alia to render states that were members of the ITC liable for the debts incurred by that unfortunate organisation. Nourse LJ emphasised that the Trendtex case had resolved the rivalry between the incorporation and transformation doctrines in favour of the former.[74] One of the major points at issue in the Tin Council litigation was whether a rule existed in international law stipulating that the states members of an international organisation with separate personality could be rendered liable for the latter's debts.

If such a rule did exist, the question would then arise as to how that would be accepted or manifested in the context of municipal law. This, of course, would depend upon the precise content of such a claimed international rule and, as Kerr LJ noted, no such rule did exist in international law permitting action against member states 'in any national court'.[75] It was [71] Per Lord Denning, [1977] 2 WLR 356, 366.

[68] See e.g. Chung Chi Cheung v. R [1939] AC 160, 169; 9 AD, p. 264. But see Morgenstern, 'Judicial Practice', pp. 80–2.

[69] [1975] 3 All ER 961, 967, 969–70; 64 ILR, p. 81.

[70] [1977] 2 WLR 356, 365; 64 ILR, pp. 111, 128.

[72] Ibid., 388; 64 ILR, p. 152. But cf. Stephenson LJ, ibid., 381. See also e.g. Goff J, I° Congreso del Partido [1977] 3 WLR 778, 795; 64 ILR, p. 154. This approach was supported by Lord Slynn in Ex Parte Pinochet (No. 1) [2000] 1 AC 61, 77; 119 ILR, pp. 50, 65.

[73] [1988] 3 WLR 1033; 80 ILR, p. 49.

[74] [1988] 3 WLR 1116; 80 ILR, p. 132.

[75] [1988] 3 WLR 1095; 80 ILR, p. 109.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

also not possible for an English court to remedy the gap in international law by itself creating such a rule.[76] Nourse LJ, however, took a different position on this point, stating that 'where it is necessary for an English court to decide such a question [i.e. an uncertain question of international law], and whatever the doubts and difficulties, it can and must do so'.[77] This, with respect, is not and cannot be the case, not least because it strikes at the heart of the community-based system of international law creation.

Lord Oliver in the House of Lords judgment[78] clearly and correctly emphasised that

> It is certainly not for a domestic tribunal in effect to legislate a rule into existence for the purposes of domestic law and on the basis of material that is wholly indeterminate.[79]

Such approaches find support in the Pinochet decisions. Lord Lloyd, for example, in Ex Parte Pinochet (No. 1) referred to the 'well-established principles of customary international law, which principles form part of the common law of England',[80] while Lord Slynn took the view that the doctrine of precedent did not apply to the incorporation of rules of customary international law.[81] Lord Millett in Ex Parte Pinochet (No. 3) stressed that 'Customary international law is part of the common law.'[82] In Lord Advocate's Reference No. 1 of 2000, the High Court of Justiciary stated that 'A rule of customary international law is a rule of Scots law',[83] and the point was emphasised by the Arbitration Tribunal in Sandline v. Papua New Guinea that 'it is part of the public policy of England that its courts should give effect to clearly established rules of international law'.[84]

The doctrine that customary international law formed part of the law of England was discussed by the House of Lords in R v. Jones,[85] where the issue focused upon whether the customary international law rule prohibiting aggression had automatically entered into English criminal law. Lord Bingham, while noting that the general principle was not at issue

[76] Ibid. [77] [1988] 3 WLR 1118; 80 ILR, p. 135.
[78] [1989] 3 All ER 523; 81 ILR, p. 671. [79] [1989] 3 All ER 554; 81 ILR, p. 715.
[80] [2000] 1 AC 61, 98 and see also at 90; 119 ILR, pp. 50, 87.
[81] See Ex Parte Pinochet (No. 1) [2000] 1 AC 61, 77; 119 ILR, pp. 50, 65.
[82] [2000] 1 AC 147, 276; 119 ILR, pp. 135, 230. See also Regina (European Roma Rights Centre) v. Immigration Officer at Prague Airport and Another [2004] UKHL 55, paras. 22 ff. (per Lord Bingham); 131 ILR, pp. 652, 671 ff.
[83] 2001 SLT 507, 512. See also S. Neff, 'International Law and Nuclear Weapons in Scottish Courts', 51 ICLQ, 2002, p. 171.
[84] 117 ILR, pp. 552, 560. [85] [2006] UKHL 16; 132 ILR, p. 668.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

between the parties, commented that he 'would for my part hesitate, at any rate without much fuller argument, to accept this proposition in quite the unqualified terms in which it has often been stated'. Preference was expressed for the view maintained by Brierly that international law was not a part, but was rather one of the sources, of English law.[86]

More specifically, the House of Lords unanimously accepted that the incorporation doctrine did not apply to the customary international law offence of aggression. While it was accepted that a crime recognised in customary international law 'may' be assimilated into domestic criminal law without statutory provision, this was not automatic.[87] The English courts no longer had the power to create new criminal offences, which could only now be done by statute, and in practice when domestic effect was sought for customary international crimes this was achieved through legislation.[88] Further, a charge of aggression would involve a determination not only of the guilt of the accused, but also of the state itself and possibly of other states, should the state go to war with allies and this raised constitutional issues as to non-justiciability.[89]

Accordingly, a degree of caution may therefore now be necessary with regard to the traditionally and baldly expressed proposition that customary international law is part of English law. This will be subject not only, as in the past, to the rule that common law (including where incorporating an international customary rule) gives way to statute, but also to considerations of a constitutional nature. Courts will be obliged to [86] Ibid., para. 11; 132 ILR, p. 675, and see J. Brierly, 'International Law in England' 51 LQR, 1935, 24, 31.

[87] R v. Jones, para. 23; 132 ILR, p. 680, per Lord Bingham, who noted that 'customary international law is applicable in the English courts only where the constitution permits', quoting O'Keefe, 'Customary International Crimes in English Courts', p. 335, and that 'international law could not create a crime triable directly, without the intervention of Parliament, in an English court', quoting Sir Franklin Berman, 'Jurisdiction: The State' in Asserting Jurisdiction: International and European Legal Perspectives (P. Capps, M. Evans and S. Konstadinidis eds.), Oxford, 2003, pp. 3, 11.

[88] R v. Jones, para. 28; 132 ILR, p. 683. See also Knuller (Publishing, Printing and Promotions) Ltd v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1973] AC 435. Lord Hoffmann in R v. Jones noted that 'new domestic offences should in my opinion be debated in Parliament, defined in a statute and come into force on a prescribed date. They should not creep into existence as a result of an international consensus to which only the executive of this country is a party', para. 62; 132 ILR, pp. 694–5, and see Lord Mance at paras. 102–3; 132 ILR, pp. 705–6. See also Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain (2004) 159 L Ed 2d 718, 765; 127 ILR, pp. 769, 807 (per Scalia J) and the Federal Court of Australia decision in Nulyarimma v. Thompson (1999) 165 ALR 621, 630; 120 ILR, pp. 353, 364.

[89] R v. Jones, para. 30; 132 ILR, p. 684, and Lord Hoffmann, paras. 63–7; 132 ILR, pp. 695–6. See further as to non-justiciability, below, p. 179.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com conduct an enquiry, as before, into whether a particular provision indeed constitutes a rule of custom, and additionally into whether there are any constitutional bars to incorporation.

Treaties[90]

As far as treaties are concerned, different rules apply as to their application within the domestic jurisdiction for very good historical and political reasons. While customary law develops through the evolution of state practice, international conventions are in the form of contracts binding upon the signatories. For a custom to emerge it is usual, though not always necessary, for several states to act in a certain manner believing it to be in conformity with the law. Therefore, in normal circumstances the influence of one particular state is not usually decisive. In the case of treaties, the states involved may create new law that would be binding upon them irrespective of previous practice or contemporary practice. In other words, the influence of the executive is generally of greater impact where treaty law is concerned than is the case with customary law and this is particularly so where, as in the UK, ratification of treaties is an executive act.

It follows from this that were treaties to be rendered applicable directly within the state without any intermediate stage after signature and ratification and before domestic operation, the executive would be able to legislate without the legislature. Because of this, any incorporation theory approach to treaty law has been rejected. Indeed, as far as this topic is concerned, it seems to turn more upon the particular relationship between the executive and legislative branches of government than upon any preconceived notions of international law.

One of the principal cases in English law illustrating this situation is the case of the Parlement Belge.[91] It involved a collision between this ship and a British tug, and the claim for damages brought by the latter vessel [90] See generally A. D. McNair, The Law of Treaties, Oxford, 1961, pp. 81–97; A. Aust, Modern Treaty Law and Practice, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2007, chapter 10; F. A. Mann, 'The Enforcement of Treaties by English Courts', 44 Transactions of the Grotius Society, 1958–9, p. 29; R. Higgins in The Effect of Treaties in Domestic Law (eds. F. Jacobs and S. Roberts), London, 1987, p. 123; D. Lasok, 'Les Traités Internationaux dans la Système Juridique Anglaise', 70 Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1966, p. 961; I. Sinclair, 'The Principles of Treaty Interpretation and their Application by the English Courts', 12 ICLQ, 1963, p. 508; I. Sinclair and S. J. Dickson, 'National Treaty Law and Practice: United Kingdom' in National Treaty Law and Practice (eds. M. Leigh and M. R. Blakeslee), 1995, p. 223, and C. Warbrick, 'Treaties', 49 ICLQ, 2000, p. 944.

[91] (1879) 4 PD 129.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

before the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty division of the High Court. The Parlement Belge belonged to the King of the Belgians and was used as a cargo boat. During the case, the Attorney General intervened to state that the Court had no jurisdiction over the vessel as it was the property of the Belgian monarch, and that further, by a political agreement of 1876 between Britain and Belgium, the same immunity from foreign legal process as applied to warships should apply also to this packet boat. In discussing the case, the Court concluded that only public ships of war were entitled to such immunity and that such immunity could not be extended to other categories by a treaty without parliamentary consent. Indeed, it was stated that this would be 'a use of the treaty-making prerogative of the Crown . . . without precedent, and in principle contrary to the law of the constitution'.[92]

It is the Crown which in the UK possesses the constitutional authority to enter into treaties and this prerogative power cannot be impugned by the courts.[93] However, this power may be affected by legislation. Section 6 of the European Parliamentary Elections Act 1978 provided, for example, that no treaty providing for any increase in the powers of the European Parliament would be ratified by the UK without being first approved by Parliament.[94] Thus it is that treaties cannot operate of themselves within the state, but require the passing of an enabling statute. The Crown in the UK retains the right to sign and ratify international agreements, but is unable to legislate directly. Before a treaty can become part of English law, an Act of Parliament is essential. This fundamental proposition was clearly spelt out by Lord Oliver in the House of Lords decision in Maclaine Watson v. Department of Trade and Industry.[95] He noted that:

> as a matter of the constitutional law of the United Kingdom, the royal prerogative, whilst it embraces the making of treaties, does not extend to altering the law or conferring rights on individuals or depriving individuals of rights which they enjoy in domestic law without the intervention of Parliament. Treaties, as it is sometimes expressed, are not self-executing.

[92] Ibid., p. 154.

[93] See e.g. Council of Civil Service Unions v. Minister for the Civil Service [1985] AC 374, 418. See also Rustomjee v. R (1876) 2 QBD 69 and Lonrho Exports v. ECGD [1996] 4 All ER 673; 108 ILR, pp. 596, 611.

[94] See R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Rees-Mogg [1994] 2 WLR 115.

[95] [1989] 3 All ER 523, 531; 81 ILR, pp. 671, 684. See also Lonrho Exports v. ECGD [1996] 4 All ER 673, 687; 108 ILR, pp. 596, 611.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> Quite simply, a treaty is not part of English law unless and until it has been incorporated into the law by legislation.[96]

It therefore followed that as far as individuals were concerned such treaties were res inter alia acta from which they could not derive rights and by which they could not be deprived of rights or subjected to obligations.[97] Lord Templeman emphasised that 'Except to the extent that a treaty becomes incorporated into the laws of the United Kingdom by statute, the courts of the United Kingdom have no power to enforce treaty rights and obligations at the behest of a sovereign government or at the behest of a private individual.'[98] This was reaffirmed by Lord Bingham in A (FC) and Others (FC) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, noting that 'a treaty, even if ratified by the United Kingdom, has no binding force in the domestic law of this country unless it is given effect by statute or expresses principles of customary international law'.[99] The interpretation of treaties not incorporated by statute into municipal law, and the decision as to whether they have been complied with, are matters exclusively for the Crown as 'the court must speak with the same voice as the Executive'.[100] An exception is where reference to a treaty is needed in order to explain the relevant factual background,[101] for example where the terms of a treaty are incorporated into a contract.[102] Where the legislation in question refers expressly to a relevant but unincorporated treaty, it is [96] [1989] 3 All ER 523, 544–5; 81 ILR, p. 701. See also Littrell v. USA (No. 2) [1995] 1 WLR 82. But see R. Y. Jennings, 'An International Lawyer Takes Stock', 39 ICLQ, 1990, pp. 513, 523–6.

[97] [1989] 3 All ER 523, 544–5; 81 ILR, p. 701. See further as to the non-justiciability of unincorporated treaties, below, p. 183.

[98] [1989] 3 All ER 523, 526; 81 ILR, p. 676. See also Ex Parte Brind [1991] 1 AC 696, 747–8; 85 ILR, p. 29, and R v. Lyons [2002] UKHL 44; 131 ILR, p. 538.

[99] [2005] UKHL 71, para. 27. Lord Bingham in R v. Asfaw [2008] UKHL 31, para. 29 stated that, 'While, therefore, one would expect any government intending to legislate inconsistently with an obligation binding on the UK to make its intention very clear, there can on well known authority be no ground in domestic law for failing to give effect to an enactment in terms unambiguously inconsistent with such an obligation.'

[100] Lonrho Exports v. ECGD [1996] 4 All ER 673, 688; 108 ILR, pp. 596, 613. See also GUR Corporation v. Trust Bank of Africa Ltd [1986] 3 All ER 449, 454, 459 and 466–7; 75 ILR, p. 675, and Sierra Leone Telecommunications v. Barclays Bank [1998] 2 All ER 821, 828; 114 ILR, p. 466.

[101] Lord Oliver in Maclaine Watson v. Department of Trade and Industry emphasised that the conclusion of an international treaty is a question of fact, thus a treaty may be referred to as part of the factual background against which a particular issue arises, [1989] 3 All ER 523, 545; 81 ILR, pp. 671, 702. See further below, pp. 183–5.

[102] Lonrho Exports v. ECGD [1996] 4 All ER 673, 688; 108 ILR, pp. 596, 613.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

permissible to utilise the latter in order to constrain any discretion provided for in the former.[103] Further, it has been argued that ratification of an international treaty (where no incorporation has taken place) may give rise to legitimate expectations that the executive, in the absence of statutory or executive indications to the contrary, will act in conformity with the treaty.[104]

However, treaties relating to the conduct of war, cession of territory and the imposition of charges on the public purse[105] do not need an intervening act of legislation before they can be made binding upon the citizens of the country.[106] A similar situation exists also with regard to relatively unimportant administrative agreements which do not require ratification, providing of course they do not purport to alter municipal law. In certain cases, Parliament will give its approval generically in advance for the conclusion of treaties in certain fields within specified limits, subject to the terms negotiated for particular treaties being promulgated by statutory instrument (secondary legislation).[107] Such exceptions occur because it is felt that, having in mind the historical compromises upon which the British constitutional structure is founded, no significant legislative powers are being lost by Parliament. In all other cases where the rights and duties of British subjects are affected, an Act of Parliament is necessary to render the provisions of the particular treaty operative within Britain. In conclusion, it may be stated that parliamentary legislation will [103] See e.g. R v. Secretary of State, On the Application of the Channel Tunnel Group 119 ILR, pp. 398, 407–8.

[104] See Lord Woolf MR in Ex Parte Ahmed and Patel [1998] INLR 570, 584, relying upon the approach of the High Court of Australia in Minister of Immigration v. Teoh, as to which see below, p. 167. Hobhouse LJ in Ex Parte Ahmed and Patel noted that where the Secretary of State had adopted a specific policy, it was not possible to derive a legitimate expectation from the treaty going beyond the scope of the policy: at 592. Note, as to the special position of human rights treaties as against other multilateral treaties, e.g. Matthew v. Trinidad and Tobago State [2004] UKPC 33; 134 ILR, p. 687.

[105] See the evidence presented by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the Royal Commission on the Reform of the House of Lords, UKMIL, 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 405.

[106] See e.g. S. de Smith and R. Brazier, Constitutional and Administrative Law, 6th edn, London, 1989, pp. 140–2, and W. Wade and O. H. Phillips, Constitutional and Administrative Law, 9th edn, London, 1977, pp. 303–6. See also Attorney-General for Canada v. Attorney-General for Ontario [1937] AC 326, 347; 8 AD, p. 41; Walker v. Baird [1892] AC 491; Republic of Italy v. Hambro's Bank [1950] 1 All ER 430; Cheney v. Conn [1968] 1 WLR 242; 41 ILR, p. 421; Porter v. Freudenberg [1915] 1 KB 857, 874–80, and McNair, Law of Treaties, pp. 89–91.

[107] See the evidence presented by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the Royal Commission on the Reform of the House of Lords, UKMIL, 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 405, citing the examples of extradition and double-taxation treaties.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

be required where a treaty for its application in the UK requires a modification of, or addition to, existing common law or statute, affects private rights, creates financial obligations for the UK, provides for an increase in the powers of the European Parliament, involves the cession of British territory or increases the powers of the Crown.[108]

There is no rule specifying the precise legislative method of incorporation of a treaty[109] and a variety of means are available in practice.[110] For example, a treaty may be incorporated into domestic law by being given the force of law in a statute with or without being scheduled to the relevant act; by being referred to in a statute otherwise than in an incorporating statute; by tangential reference in a statute;[111] and by statutory referral to definitions contained in a treaty.[112]

It is the practice in the UK to lay before both Houses of Parliament all treaties which the UK has either signed or to which it intends to accede.[113] The text of any agreement requiring ratification, acceptance, approval or accession has to be laid before Parliament at least twenty-one sitting days before any of these actions is taken.[114] This is termed the 'Ponsonby Rule'.[115] All treaties signed after 1 January 1997 and laid before Parliament

[108] Sinclair and Dickson, 'National Treaty Law', p. 230.

[109] See Regina (European Roma Rights Centre) v. Immigration Officer at Prague Airport and Another [2004] UKHL 55, para. 42; 131 ILR, p. 683 (per Lord Steyn).

[110] See e.g. Fatima, Using International Law, pp. 57 ff.

[111] For example, section 2 of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 provides that nothing in the immigration rules within the Immigration Act 1971 shall lay down any practice contrary to the Refugee Convention.

[112] See e.g the International Criminal Court Act 2001.

[113] It is also the practice to put before Parliament Orders in Council made under the United Nations Act 1946 in order, for example, to implement United Nations sanctions internally: see s. 1(4) of the Act and H. Fox and C. Wickremasinghe, 'UK Implementation of UN Economic Sanctions', 42 ICLQ, 1993, pp. 945, 959. See also R v. HM Treasury and the Bank of England, ex parte Centro-Com, Times Law Report, 7 October 1993.

[114] Since 1998, it has been the FCO's practice to apply the Ponsonby Rule also to treaties subject simply to the mutual notification of the completion of constitutional or other internal procedures by each party: see the evidence presented by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the Royal Commission on the Reform of the House of Lords, UKMIL, 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 408.

[115] See 171 HC Deb., col. 2001, 1 April 1924. This is regarded not as a binding rule but as a constitutional usage: see Wade and Phillips, Constitutional and Administrative Law, p. 304. See also the Foreign and Commonwealth Office Nationality, Treaty and Claims Department's handbook entitled International Agreements: Practice and Procedure – Guidance Notes, 1992, quoted in UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 705, and Erskine May's Treatise on the Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usages of Parliament (eds. D. Limon and W. R. McKay), 22nd edn, London, 1997. If primary or secondary legislation is required in order to ensure compliance with obligations arising under a treaty, the Government will not ratify a treaty

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

under this rule are accompanied by an Explanatory Memorandum.[116] The UK government, however, is currently reviewing issues of governance, including the prerogative powers, which include the making and ratification of treaties, the deployment and use of armed forces abroad, acquiring and ceding territory and the conduct of diplomacy.[117] It has been proposed that the Ponsonby rule be placed on a statutory footing.[118]

There is in English law a presumption that legislation is to be so construed as to avoid a conflict with international law.[119] This operates particularly where the Act of Parliament which is intended to bring the treaty into effect is itself ambiguous. Accordingly, where the provisions of a statute implementing a treaty are capable of more than one meaning, and one interpretation is compatible with the terms of the treaty while others are not, it is the former approach that will be adopted. For, as Lord Diplock pointed out: 'Parliament does not intend to act in breach of international law, including therein specific treaty obligations.'[120]

However, where the words of a statute are unambiguous the courts have no choice but to apply them irrespective of any conflict with international agreements.[121] Of course, any breach of an international until such legislation has been implemented: see Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, 220 HC Deb., WA, cols. 483–4, 9 March 1993, quoted in UKMIL, 64 BYIL, 1993, p. 629.

116 UKMIL, 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 406. See also the Second Report of the House of Commons Select Committee on Procedure – Parliamentary Scrutiny of Treaties, 2000, HC 210 (www.parliament.the-stationery-office.co.uk/pa/cm199900/cmselect/cmproced/210/21003.htm). See also the Government Response, HC 990 (www.parliament.the-stationery-office.co.uk/pa/cm199900/cmselect/cmproced/210/21003.htm).

117 See The Governance of Britain, Cm 7170, 2007. See also the Prime Minister's statement to the House of Commons, Hansard HC vol. 462 col. 815, 3 July 2007, and C. Warbrick, 'The Governance of Britain', 57 ICLQ, 2008, p. 209. See further The Governance of Britain – War, Powers and Treaties: Limiting Executive Powers, Cm 7239, 2007.

118 The Governance of Britain, para. 33, and Warbrick, 'Governance', p. 216.

119 See e.g. Garland v. British Rail Engineering Ltd [1983] 2 AC 751; 93 ILR, p. 622, and Ex Parte Brind [1991] 1 AC 696, 748; 85 ILR, p. 29, where this presumption is referred to as 'a mere canon of construction which involves no importation of international law into the domestic field'. See also Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 12th edn, London, 1969, p. 183; A (FC) and Others (FC) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2005] UKHL 71, para. 27, and Al-Skeini v. Secretary of State for Defence [2007] UKHL 26, para. 45; 133 ILR, pp. 715–16 (per Lord Rodger).

120 Salomon v. Commissioners of Customs and Excise [1967] 2 QB 116, 143; Post Office v. Estuary Radio Ltd [1968] 2 QB 740 and Brown v. Whimster [1976] QB 297. See also National Smokeless Fuels Ltd v. IRC, The Times, 23 April 1986, p. 36, and Lord Oliver in Maclaine Watson v. Department of Trade and Industry [1989] 3 All ER 523, 545; 81 ILR, pp. 671, 702.

121 Ellerman Lines v. Murray [1931] AC 126; 5 AD, p. 342 and IRC v. Collco Dealings Ltd [1962] AC 1; 33 ILR, p. 1. See Sinclair, 'Principles of Treaty Interpretation', and C. Schreuer, 'The obligation will import the responsibility of the UK at the international level irrespective of domestic considerations.[122] Attempts have been made in the past to consider treaties in the context of domestic legislation not directly enacting them, or as indications of public policy, particularly with regard to human rights treaties,[123] and it seems that account may be taken of them in seeking to interpret ambiguous provisions.[124] However, ministers are under no obligation to do this in reaching decisions.[125]

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

One particular issue has arisen in the case of the implementation of international obligations and that relates to United Nations sanctions. In the UK, such sanctions are enforced as a consequence of the United Nations Act 1946 which enables the Crown to adopt Orders in Council so that effect can be given to sanctions.[126] Such secondary legislation tends to be detailed and thus the possibility of differential interpretations arises. It is to be noted that the relevance and application of rules of the European Interpretation of Treaties by Domestic Courts', 45 BYIL, 1971, p. 255. See also F. A. Mann, Foreign Affairs in English Courts, Oxford, 1986, pp. 97–114; R. Gardiner, 'Treaty Interpretation in the English Courts since Fothergill v. Monarch Airlines (1980)', 44 ICLQ, 1995, p. 620, and Fatima, Using International Law, pp. 65 ff.

122 See above, p. 133. 123 See e.g. Blathwayt v. Baron Cawley [1976] AC 397.

124 See e.g. in the context of the European Convention on Human Rights prior to its incorporation by the Human Rights Act 1998, R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Bhajan Singh [1975] 2 All ER 1081; 61 ILR, p. 260; R v. Chief Immigration Officer, Heathrow Airport, ex parte Salamat Bibi [1976] 3 All ER 843; 61 ILR, p. 267; R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Phansopkar [1976] QB 606; 61 ILR, p. 390; Waddington v. Miah [1974] 1 WLR 683; 57 ILR, p. 175; Cassell v. Broome [1972] AC 1027; Malone v. MPC [1979] Ch. 344; 74 ILR, p. 304; R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Anderson [1984] 1 All ER 920; Trawnik v. Ministry of Defence [1984] 2 All ER 791 and Ex Parte Launder [1997] 1 WLR 839. In R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Brind [1991] 1 AC 696, it was held that subordinate legislation and executive discretion did not fall into this category. See also Derbyshire County Council v. Times Newspapers Ltd [1993] AC 534 HL; Rantzen v. Mirror Group Newspapers (1986) Ltd [1993] 3 WLR 953 CA; Attorney-General v. Associated Newspapers Ltd [1993] 3 WLR 74; R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Wynne [1993] 1 WLR 115 and R v. Brown [1993] 2 WLR 556. See also A. Cunningham, 'The European Convention on Human Rights, Customary International Law and the Constitution', 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 537.

125 See e.g. R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Fernandes [1984] 2 All ER 390.

126 See e.g. the Iraq and Kuwait (UN Sanctions) Order 1990, SI 1990 No. 1651; the Serbia and Montenegro (UN Sanctions) Orders 1992 and 1993, SI 1992 No. 1302 and SI 1993 No. 1188; the Libya (UN Sanctions) Orders 1992 and 1993, SI 1992 Nos. 973 and 975 and SI 1993 No. 2807; the Former Yugoslavia (UN Sanctions) Order 1994, SI 1994 No. 2673.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Union may also be in issue.[127] Further, one may note the obligation contained in article 29 of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, adopted by binding UN Security Council resolution 827 (1993), for all states to co-operate with the Tribunal and in particular to 'comply without undue delay with any request for assistance or an order issued by a Trial Chamber', including the arrest and detention of persons and their surrender or transfer to the Tribunal. This was implemented by secondary legislation adopted under the United Nations Act 1946.[128]

In the interpretation of international treaties incorporated by statute, the English courts have adopted a broader approach than is customary in statutory interpretation.[129] In particular, recourse to the relevant travaux préparatoires may be possible.[130] However, different approaches have been taken by the British courts as to how to deal with the question of interpretation in such circumstances. In Sidhu v. British Airways, Lord Hope, adopting the broad approach signalled in Fothergill v. Monarch Airlines, stated that it was 'well-established that a purposive approach should be taken to the interpretation of international conventions which have the force of law in this country'.[131] Lord Mustill in Semco Salvage v. Lancer Navigation took a more traditional approach founded upon the relevant articles of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969,[132] in particular emphasising the significance of a textual interpretation of the words

[127] See e.g. Ex Parte Centro-Com [1994] 1 CMLR 109; [1997] ECR I-81, and [1997] 3 WLR 239; 117 ILR, p. 444. See also R. Pavoni, 'UN Sanctions in EU and National Law: The Centro-Com Case', 48 ICLQ, 1999, p. 582. See further below, p. 1251, note 237.

[128] The UN (International Tribunal) (Former Yugoslavia) Order 1996, SI 1996 No. 716. See for differing approaches to this procedure, C. Warbrick, 'Co-operation with the International Criminal Tribunal for Yugoslavia', 45 ICLQ, 1996, p. 947, and H. Fox, 'The Objections to Transfer of Criminal Jurisdiction to the Tribunal', 46 ICLQ, 1997, p. 434.

[129] Lord Slynn stated in R (Al Fawwaz) v. Governor of Brixton Prison that 'to apply to extradition treaties the strict canons appropriate to the construction of domestic statutes would often tend to defeat rather than to serve [their] purpose', [2001] UKHL 69, para. 39, citing Lord Bridge in Ex Parte Postlethwaite [1988] AC 924, 947.

[130] See Buchanan v. Babco [1978] AC 141 and Fothergill v. Monarch Airlines [1981] AC 251; 74 ILR, p. 648. Compare in the latter case the restrictive approach of Lord Wilberforce, [1981] AC 278; 74 ILR, p. 656 with that of Lord Diplock, [1981] AC 283; 74 ILR, pp. 661–2. See also Goldman v. Thai Airways International Ltd [1983] 3 All ER 693. Note also that in Wahda Bank v. Arab Bank plc Times Law Reports, 16 December 1992, Phillips J referred to UN sanctions resolutions in examining the question of the applicability of the Order in Council implementing the sanctions internally to the case in question. See further Re H (Minors) [1998] AC 72.

[131] [1997] 1 All ER 193, 202.

[132] See below, chapter 16, p. 932.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in question as understood in their ordinary meaning.[133] In a rather special position is the Human Rights Act 1998, which incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights. Section 3(1) provides that, 'So far as it is possible to do so, primary and subordinate legislation must be read and given effect in a way which is compatible with Convention rights', although this does not affect the validity, continuing operation or enforcement of any incompatible primary legislation.[134] The obligation imposed by s. 3 arises crucially in relation to both previous and subsequent enactments.[135] Where legislation cannot be rendered compatible with Convention rights, then a declaration of incompatibility can be made under s. 4 and Parliament may then modify the offending provisions under s. 10. The courts have also adopted a broader, purposive approach to interpretation of domestic legislation in order to ensure its compatibility with the Convention.[136] In the process of interpreting domestic legislation so as to render it compatible if possible with the Convention rights, the courts 'must take into account'[137] any relevant jurisprudence from the European Court of Human Rights, although this is not a provision imposing an obligation to follow such case-law.[138] Reference should also be made to the growing importance of entry into the European Communities in this context. The case-law of the Communities demonstrates that fundamental rights are an integral part of the general principles of law, the observance of which the European Court of Justice seeks to ensure. The system provides that Community law prevails over national law and that the decisions of the European Court are to be applied by the domestic courts of the member states. The potential for change through this route is, therefore, significant.[139] Further, in interpreting domestic legislation made pursuant to the European Communities Act 1972 where the former appears to conflict with the Treaty of Rome (establishing the European Community), [134] Section 3(2)b. Nor that of incompatible subordinate legislation where primary legislation prevents removal of the incompatibility: section 3(2)c.

[133] [1997] 1 All ER 502, 512.

[135] Section 3(2)a. See further H. Fenwick, Civil Liberties and Human Rights, 3rd edn, London, 2002, p. 139, and R. Clayton and H. Tomlinson, Human Rights Law, London, 2000, chapter 4.

[136] See e.g. the decision of the House of Lords in R v. A [2001] 2 WLR 1546 and R (on the application of Alconbury Ltd) v. Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions [2001] 2 All ER 929.

[137] Section 2 of the Human Rights Act.

[138] See further below, chapter 7, p. 351.

[139] See e.g. Nold v. EC Commission [1974] ECR 491, 508 and Rutili v. Ministry of Interior of French Republic [1975] ECR 1219.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the House of Lords has held that a purposive approach should be adopted.[140]

The United States[141]

As far as the American position on the relationship between municipal law and customary international law is concerned, it appears to be very similar to British practice, apart from the need to take the Constitution into account. The US Supreme Court in Boos v. Barry emphasised that, 'As a general proposition, it is of course correct that the United States has a vital national interest in complying with international law.' However, the rules of international law were subject to the Constitution.[142]

An early acceptance of the incorporation doctrine was later modified as in the UK. It was stated in the Paquete Habana case[143] that > international law is part of our law and must be ascertained and administered by the courts of justice of appropriate jurisdiction as often as questions of right depending upon it are duly presented for their determination.[144]

[140] Pickstone v. Freemans [1988] 3 WLR 265. See also Litster v. Forth Dry Dock Engineering [1989] 1 All ER 1194.

[141] See e.g. J. F. Murphy, The United States and the Rule of Law in International Affairs, Cambridge, 2004, chapter 2; J. J. Paust, International Law as Law of the United States, Durham, NC, 1996, and Paust, 'International Law as Law of the United States: Trends and Prospects', 1 Chinese JIL, 2002, p. 615; Morgenstern, 'Judicial Practice'; I. Seidl-Hohenveldern, 'Transformation or Adoption of International Law into Municipal Law', 12 ICLQ, 1963, p. 88; Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 74 ff.; C. Dickinson, 'The Law of Nations as Part of the National Law of the United States', 101 University of Pennsylvania Law Review, 1953, p. 793; R. A. Falk, The Role of Domestic Courts in the International Legal Order, Princeton, 1964; R. B. Lillich, 'Domestic Institutions' in The Future of the International Legal Order (eds. C. Black and R. A. Falk), New York, 1972, vol. IV, p. 384; L. Henkin, Foreign Affairs and the Constitution, New York, 1972; L. Henkin, 'International Law: as Law in the United States', 82 Michigan Law Review, 1984, p. 1555; J. J. Paust, 'Customary International Law: Its Nature, Sources and Status as Law in the United States', 12 Michigan Journal of International Law, 1990, p. 59, and L. Henkin, R. C. Pugh, O. Schachter and H. Smit, International Law: Cases and Materials, 3rd edn, St Paul, 1993, chapter 3. See also Treaties and Other International Agreements: A Study Prepared for the Committee on Foreign Relations, US Senate, 2001.

[142] 99 L Ed 2d 333, 345–7 (1988); 121 ILR, p. 551.

[143] 175 US 677 (1900). See also Respublica v. De Longchamps 1 Dall. 111.

[144] 175 US 677, 700. See Hilton v. Guyot 159 US 113 and United States v. Melekh 190 F.Supp. 67 (1960), cf. Pauling v. McElroy 164 F.Supp. 390 (1958).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Similarly, the early pure incorporation cases gave way to a more cautious approach.[145]

The current accepted position is that customary international law in the US is federal law and that its determination by the federal courts is binding on the state courts.[146] The similarity of approach with the UK is not surprising in view of common historical and cultural traditions, and parallel restraints upon the theories are visible. US courts are bound by the doctrine of precedent and the necessity to proceed according to previously decided cases, and they too must apply statute as against any rules of customary international law that do not accord with it.[147] The Court of Appeals reaffirmed this position in the Committee of United States Citizens Living in Nicaragua v. Reagan case,[148] where it was noted that 'no enactment of Congress can be challenged on the ground that it violates customary international law'.[149]

It has been noted that the political and judicial organs of the United States have the power to ignore international law, where this occurs pursuant to a statute or 'controlling executive act'. This has occasioned much controversy,[150] as has the general relationship between custom and inconsistent pre-existing statutes.[151] However, it is now accepted that statutes supersede earlier treaties or customary rules of international law.[152] It has also been held that it would run counter to the Constitution for a court to decide that a decision of the International Court of Justice overrules a binding decision of the US Supreme Court and thus affords a judicial [145] See e.g. Cook v. United States 288 US 102 (1933); 6 AD, p. 3 and United States v. Claus 63 F.Supp. 433 (1944).

[146] See US v. Belmont 301 US 324, 331, 57 S.Ct. 758, 761 (1937); 8 AD, p. 34 and Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, St Paul, 1987, vol. I, pp. 48–52. See also Kadić v. Karadžić 70 F.3d 232, 246 (2d Cir. 1995); 104 ILR, pp. 149, 159; and In Re Estate of Ferdinand E. Marcos Human Rights Litigation 978 F.2d 493, 502 (9th Cir. 1992); 103 ILR, pp. 521, 529. However, see C. A. Bradley and J. L. Goldsmith, 'Customary International Law as Federal Common Law: A Critique of the Modern Position', 110 Harvard Law Review, 1997, p. 816, and J. Paust, 'Customary International Law in the United States: Clean and Dirty Laundry', 40 German YIL, 1997, p. 78.

[147] See e.g. Schroeder v. Bissell 5 F.2d 838, 842 (1925).

[148] 859 F.2d 929 (1988).

[149] Ibid., at 939. See also Tag v. Rogers 267 F.2d 664, 666 (1959); 28 ILR, p. 467 and US v. Yunis (No. 3) 724 F.2d 1086, 1091 (1991); 88 ILR, pp. 176, 181.

[150] See Brown v. United States 12 US (8 Cranch) 110, 128 (1814) and Whitney v. Robertson 124 US 190, 194 (1888). See also Henkin, 'International Law', p. 1555. See also Rodriguez-Fernandez v. Wilkinson 654 F.2d 1382 (1981); 505 F.Supp. 787 (1980); US v. PLO 695 F.Supp. 1456 (1988) and Klinghoffer v. SNC Achille Lauro 739 F.Supp. 854 (1990).

[151] See Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, pp. 63–9 (§115); the Reagan case, 859 F.2d 929, and Goldklang, 'Back on Board the Paquete Habana', 25 Va. JIL, 1984, p. 143.

[152] See previous footnote.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

remedy to an individual for a violation of the Constitution.[153] However, the question of the impact of a ruling of the International Court upon US courts has been discussed in the light of decisions of the former[154] as to the violation of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963 by the failure to permit access to consular officials by imprisoned foreigners.[155]

There does exist, as in English law, a presumption that legislation does not run counter to international law and, as it was stated by the Court in Schroeder v. Bissell,[156]

> unless it unmistakably appears that a congressional act was intended to be in disregard of a principle of international comity, the presumption is that it was intended to be in conformity with it.[157]

The relationship between US law and customary law has been the subject of re-examination in the context of certain human rights situations. In Filartiga v. Pena-Irala,[158] the US Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit dealt with an action brought by Paraguayans against a Paraguayan for the torture and death of the son of the plaintiff. The claim was based on the Alien Tort Claims Act of 1789[159] which provides that '[t]he district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action by an alien for a tort only, committed in violation of the law of nations'. The Court of Appeals held that torture constituted a violation of international customary law and was thus actionable. The Court accordingly held against the [153] Valdez v. Oklahoma, US Court of Criminal Appeals of Oklahoma, Case No. PCD-2001-1011, 2002.

[154] See the LaGrand case (Germany v. United States of America), ICJ Reports, 2001, p. 466; 134 ILR, p. 1, and the Avena and Other Mexican Nationals case (Mexico v. United States of America), ICJ Reports, 2004, p. 12; 134 ILR, p. 120.

[155] See e.g. Torres v. State of Oklahoma 43 ILM, 2004, p. 1227, and Sanchez-Llamas v. Oregon 126 S. Ct. 2669 (2006), holding that a violation of article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations did not necessarily require reversal of a criminal conviction or sentence. As to civil remedies, see United States v. Rodriguez 162 Fed. Appx. 853, 857 (11th Cir. 2006), Cornejo v. County of San Diego 504 F.3d 853, 872 (9th Cir. 2007) and Gandara v. Bennett, Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, judgment of 22 May 2008, holding that the Vienna Convention did not create judicially enforceable individual rights. It was emphasised in Cornejo that '[f]or any treaty to be susceptible to judicial enforcement it must both confer individual rights and be self-executing', at p. 856.

[156] 5 F.2d 838 (1925).

[157] Ibid., p. 842. See also Macleod v. United States 229 US 416 (1913) and Littlejohn & Co. v. United States 270 US 215 (1926); 3 AD, p. 483.

[158] 630 F.2d 876 (1980); 77 ILR, p. 169. See e.g. R. B. Lillich, Invoking Human Rights Law in Domestic Courts, Charlottesville, 1985, and Comment, 'Torture as a Tort in Violation of International Law', 33 Stanford Law Review, 1981, p. 353.

[159] 28 USC 1350 (1988).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

defendant despite the fact that both parties were alien and all the operative acts occurred in Paraguay. The Court also noted that in ascertaining the content of international law, the contemporary rules and principles of international law were to be interpreted and not those as of the date of the prescribing statute.[160] Other cases came before the courts in which the incorporation of international customary law provisions concerning human rights issues was argued with mixed success.[161] An attempt to obtain a judgment in the US against the Republic of Argentina for torturing its own citizens, however, ultimately foundered upon the doctrine of sovereign immunity,[162] while it has been held that acts of 'international terrorism' are not actionable under the Alien Tort Claims Act.[163] In Kadić v. Karadžić,[164] the US Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held that claims based on official torture and summary executions did not exhaust the list of actions that may be covered by the Alien Tort Claims Act and that allegations of genocide, war crimes and other violations of international humanitarian law would also be covered.[165] However, in Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain,[166] the Supreme Court held that the Alien Tort Claims Act was a jurisdictional statute creating no new causes of action and enacted on the understanding that the common law would provide a cause of action for [160] 630 F.2d 876, 881 (1980); 77 ILR, pp. 169, 175. See also Amerada Hess v. Argentine Republic 830 F.2d 421; 79 ILR, p. 1. The norms of international law were to be found by 'consulting the works of jurists, writing professedly on public law; or by the general usage and practice of nations; or by judicial decisions recognising and enforcing that law', 630 F.2d 876, 880; 77 ILR, p. 174, quoting United States v. Smith 18 US (5 Wheat.), 153, 160–1. See also Kadić v. Karadžić 34 ILM, 1995, p. 1592.

[161] See e.g. Fernandez v. Wilkinson 505 F.Supp. 787 (1980) and In re Alien Children Education Litigation 501 F.Supp. 544 (1980).

[162] Siderman v. Republic of Argentina, No. CV 82-1772-RMT (MCx) and International Practitioner's Notebook, July 1985, p. 1. See also below, chapter 13.

[163] Tel-Oren v. Libyan Arab Republic 517 F.Supp. 542 (1981), aff'd per curiam, 726 F.2d 774 (1984), cert. denied 53 USLW 3612 (1985); 77 ILR, p. 192. See e.g. A. D'Amato, 'What Does Tel-Oren Tell Lawyers?', 79 AJIL, 1985, p. 92. See also De Sanchez v. Banco Central de Nicaragua 770 F.2d 1385, 1398 (1985); 88 ILR, pp. 75, 90 and Linder v. Portocarrero 747 F.Supp. 1452; 99 ILR, p. 55.

[164] 34 ILM, 1995, p. 1592.

[165] Note that the US Torture Victim Protection Act 1992 provides a cause of action for official torture and extrajudicial killing where an individual, under actual or apparent authority or colour of law of any foreign law subjects, engages in such activities. This is not a jurisdictional statute, so that claims of official torture will be pursued under the jurisdiction conferred by the Alien Tort Claims Act or under the general federal question jurisdiction of section 1331: see e.g. Xuncax v. Gramajo 886 F.Supp. 162 (1995); 104 ILR, p. 165. In addition, local remedies must have been exhausted.

[166] 542 US 692, 714 ff. (2004).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the modest number of international law violations thought to carry personal liability at the time, being offences against ambassadors, violation of safe conducts, and piracy. The federal courts, it was declared, should not recognise claims under federal common law for violations of any international law norm with less 'definite content and acceptance among civilized nations' than these particular offences deemed to exist at the date of the adoption of the act.[167] Accordingly, both 'a specificity comparable to the features of the 18th-century paradigms' and a foundation resting upon 'a norm of international character accepted by the civilized world' were required in order to form the basis of a claim under the statute.[168]

The relative convergence of practice between Britain and the United States with respect to the assimilation of customary law is not reflected as regards the treatment of international treaties.[169] In the United Kingdom, it is the executive branch which negotiates, signs and ratifies international agreements, with the proviso that parliamentary action is required prior to the provisions of the agreement being accepted as part of English law. In the United States, on the other hand, Article VI Section 2 of the Constitution provides that:

> all Treaties made or which shall be made with the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land and the Judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or Laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding.[170]

There is also a difference in the method of approval of treaties, for Article II of the Constitution notes that while the President has the power to make international agreements, he may only ratify them if at least two-thirds of the Senate approve.

There is an exception and this is the institution of the executive agreements. These are usually made by the President on his own authority, but still constitute valid treaties within the framework of international law. As distinct from ordinary treaties, the creation of executive agreements [167] Ibid., at 732.

[168] Ibid., at 725 and 738. See also Vietnam Association for Victims of Agent Orange v. Dow Chemical Company, US Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, Docket No. 05-1953-cv, 22 February 2008.

[169] See e.g. Jackson, 'Status of Treaties', p. 310, and D. Vagts, 'The United States and its Treaties: Observance and Breach', 95 AJIL, 2001, p. 313.

[170] See e.g. Ware v. Hylton 3 US (3 Dall.) 199 (1796) and Foster v. Neilson 27 US (2 Pet.) 253 (1829). See also on treaty powers and the 'reserved powers' of the states the tenth amendment, Missouri v. Holland 252 US 416 (1920); 1 AD, p. 4 and United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corporation 299 US 304 (1936); 8 AD, p. 48.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

is not expressly covered by the Constitution, but rather implied from its terms and subsequent practice, and they have been extensively used. The Supreme Court, in cases following the 1933 Litvinov Agreement, which established US recognition of the Soviet government and provided for the assignment to the US of particular debts owing to the USSR, emphasised that such executive agreements possessed the same status and dignity as treaties made by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate under Article II of the Constitution.[171]

American doctrines as to the understanding of treaty law are founded upon the distinction between 'self-executing' and 'non-self-executing' treaties.[172] The former are able to operate automatically within the domestic sphere, without the need for any municipal legislation, while the latter require enabling acts before they can function inside the country and bind the American courts. Self-executing treaties apply directly within the United States as part of the supreme law of the land, whereas those conventions deemed not self-executing are obliged to undergo a legislative transformation and, until they do so, they cannot be regarded as legally enforceable against American citizens or institutions.[173]

But how does one know when an international agreement falls into one category or the other? This matter has absorbed the courts of the United States for many years, and the distinction appears to have been made upon the basis of political content. In other words, where a treaty involves political questions of definition or exposition, then the issue should be left to the legislative organs of the nation, rather than automatic operation.[174] Examples of this would include the acquisition or loss of territory

[171] See e.g. United States v. Pink 315 US 203 (1942); 10 AD, p. 48. See, as regards the President's power to settle claims and create new rules of law applicable to pending legislation, Dames & Moore v. Regan 101 SC 2972 (1981); 72 ILR, p. 270.

[172] See e.g. Y. Iwasawa, 'The Doctrine of Self-Executing Treaties in the United States: A Critical Analysis', 26 Va. JIL, 1986, p. 635; J. Paust, 'Self-Executing Treaties', 82 AJIL, 1986, p. 760; T. Buergenthal, 'Self-Executing and Non-Self-Executing Treaties in National and International Law', 235 HR, 1992 IV, p. 303, and C. M. Vázquez, 'The Four Doctrines of Self-Executing Treaties', 89 AJIL, 1995, p. 695.

[173] See e.g. Foster v. Neilson 27 US (2 Pet.) 253, 311, 7 L.Ed. 415 (1829); United States v. Percheman 32 US (7 Pet.) 51 (1833); United States v. Postal 589 F.2d 862, 875 (5th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 US 832 and Linder v. Portocarrero 747 F.Supp. 1452, 1463; 99 ILR, pp. 55, 67–8.

[174] See Chief Justice Marshall, Foster v. Neilson 27 US (2 Pet.) 253, 314 (1829). See also J. C. Yoo, 'Globalism and the Constitution: Treaties, Non-Self-Execution, and the Original Understanding', 99 Columbia Law Review, 1999, p. 1955, and Vagts, 'US and its Treaties', p. 321.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com and financial arrangements. The Supreme Court in Edye v. Robertson[175] declared that treaties which > contain provisions which are capable of enforcement as between private parties in the courts of the country . . . [are] in the same category as other laws of Congress.

This would seem to mean that an international convention would become a law of the land, where its terms determine the rights and duties of private citizens, and contrasts with the position where a political issue is involved and the treaty is thereby treated as non-self-executing.

Of course such generalisations as these are bound to lead to considerable ambiguity and doubt in the case of very many treaties; and the whole matter was examined again in 1952 before the Supreme Court of California in Sei Fujii v. California.[176] The plaintiff was a Japanese citizen who had purchased some land in 1948 in California. By legislation enacted in that state, aliens had no right to acquire land. To prevent the property from going to the state, the plaintiff argued that, amongst other things, such legislation was not consistent with the Charter of the United Nations, an international treaty which called for the promotion of human rights without racial distinction.

The issue raised was whether the UN Charter was a self-executing treaty and, by virtue of such, part of the law of the land, which would supersede inconsistent local statutes. The Court declared that, in making a decision as to whether a treaty was self-executing or not, it would have to consult the treaty itself to try to deduce the intentions of the signatories and examine all relevant circumstances. Following Edye's case it would have to see whether the provisions of the treaty laid down rules that were to be enforceable of themselves in the municipal courts.

The Court concluded after a comprehensive survey that the relevant provisions of the UN Charter were not intended to be self-executing. They laid down various principles and objectives of the United Nations Organisation, but 'do not purport to impose legal obligations on the individual member nations or to create rights in private persons'. The Court held that it was obvious that further legislative action by the signatories would be called for to turn the principles of the UN into domestic laws binding upon the individual citizens of states.[177] Accordingly, they could not be regarded as part of the law of the land and could not operate to deflect

[175] 112 US 580 (1884). [176] 38 Cal (2d) 718 (1952). [177] Ibid., p. 721.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the Californian legislation in question. The case was decided in favour of the plaintiff, but on other grounds altogether.[178]

As is the case with the UK system, it is possible for the US legislature to take action which not only takes no account of international law rules but may be positively contrary to them, and in such an instance the legislation would be supreme within the American jurisdiction.

In Diggs v. Schultz,[179] for example, the Court had to consider the effect of the Byrd Amendment which legalised the importation into the USA of strategic materials, such as chrome from Rhodesia, a course of action which was expressly forbidden by a United Nations Security Council resolution which in the circumstances was binding. The Court noted that the Byrd Amendment was 'in blatant disregard of our treaty undertakings' but concluded that: 'under our constitutional scheme, Congress can denounce treaties if it sees fit to do so, and there is nothing the other branches of government can do about it.' Although in municipal terms the Amendment was unchallengeable, the United States was, of course, internationally liable for the breach of an international legal rule.[180]

However, there is a presumption that Congress will not legislate contrary to the international obligations of the state[181] and a principle of [178] See e.g. People of Saipan ex rel. Guerrero v. United States Department of Interior 502 F.2d 90 (1974); 61 ILR, p. 113. See also Camacho v. Rogers 199 F.Supp. 155 (1961) and Diggs v. Dent 14 ILM, 1975, p. 797. Note also O. Schachter, 'The Charter and the Constitution', 4 Vanderbilt Law Review, 1951, p. 643. In Medillin v. Texas 128 S. Ct. 1346 (2008), the US Supreme Court held that the decision of the International Court of Justice in the Avena (Mexico v. US) case, ICJ Reports, 2004, p. 12, requiring the US to provide 'further review and reconsideration' of the convictions in question, did not constitute directly enforceable federal law as the relevant treaties (the UN Charter, the Statute of the International Court and the Optional Protocol to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations) were non-self-executing. See further as to the Avena case, below, chapter 13, p. 773 and chapter 19, p. 1103, note 305. See also the similar conclusion adopted by the Supreme Court of the Netherlands in Association of Lawyers for Peace and Four Other Organizations v. State of the Netherlands, Nr C02/217HR; LJN: AN8071; NJ 2004/329.

[179] 470 F.2d 461, 466–7 (1972); 60 ILR, pp. 393, 397. See also Breard v. Greene 523 US 371, 376 (1998) and Havana Club Holding, Inc. v. Galleon SA 974 F.Supp. 302 (SDNY 1997), aff'd 203 F.3d (2d Cir. 2000).

[180] This, of course, reflects the general rule. See e.g. G. Hackworth, Digest of International Law, Washington, 1940–4, vol. V, pp. 185–6 and 324–5. See also Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, 1987, para. 115(1)b.

[181] See e.g. Marshall CJ, Murray v. Schooner Charming Betsy 6 US (2 Cranch) 64; Weinberger v. Rossi 456 US 25 (1982) and Cook v. United States 288 US 102 (1933). See also R. Steinhardt, 'The Role of International Law as a Canon of Domestic Statutory Construction', 43 Vanderbilt Law Review, 1990, p. 1103, and C. A. Bradley, 'The Charming Betsy Canon and Separation of Powers', 86 Georgia Law Journal, 1998, p. 479.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

interpretation that where an act and a treaty deal with the same subject, the courts will seek to construe them so as to give effect to both of them without acting contrary to the wording of either. Where the two are inconsistent, the general rule has been posited that the later in time will prevail, provided the treaty is self-executing.[182]

The question of a possible conflict between treaty obligations and domestic legislation was raised in United States v. Palestine Liberation Organisation.[183] The Anti-Terrorism Act of the previous year[184] provided for the closure of all PLO offices in the United States and this was construed by the Attorney-General to include the PLO mission to the United Nations, an action which would have breached the obligations of the US under the United Nations Headquarters Agreement. However, the District Court found that it could not be established that the legislation clearly and unequivocally intended that an obligation arising out of the Headquarters Agreement, a valid treaty, was to be violated.[185]

The issue of the relationship between international treaties and municipal law came before the US Supreme Court in Breard v. Greene.[186] The Court noted that 'respectful consideration' should be given to the interpretation of an international treaty by a relevant international court;[187] however, 'it has been recognised in international law that absent a clear and express statement to the contrary, the procedural rules of the forum State govern the implementation of the treaty in that State'.[188] Accordingly, the effect of resort to a domestic procedural rule might result in preventing the provision of an international treaty from being applied in any given case. The Supreme Court also affirmed that international treaties under the Constitution were recognised as the 'supreme law of the land', but so were the provisions of the Constitution. An Act of Congress was [182] See the decision of the Supreme Court in Whitney v. Robertson 124 US 190 (1888). The Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, pp. 63 ff. suggests that an Act of Congress will supersede an earlier rule of international law or a provision in an international agreement 'if the purpose of the act to supersede the earlier rule or provision is clear or if the act and the earlier rule or provision cannot be fairly reconciled'.

[183] 695 F.Supp. 1456 (1988). [184] 22 USCA, paras. 5201–3.

[185] Ibid. See the Advisory Opinion of the International Court in the Applicability of the Obligation to Arbitrate case, ICJ Reports, 1988, p. 12; 82 ILR, p. 225. See also DUSPIL, 1981–8, part I, pp. 8 ff.

[186] 140 L.Ed. 2d 529 (1998); 118 ILR, p. 22.

[187] The issue concerned the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963, and the international court in question was the International Court of Justice in Paraguay v. USA, ICJ Reports, 1998, p. 248; 118 ILR, p. 1.

[188] 140 L.Ed.2d 529, 537 (1998); 118 ILR, p. 22.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

'on full parity' with a treaty, so that a later statute would render an earlier treaty null to the extent of any conflict.[189]

Other countries

In other countries where the English common law was adopted, such as the majority of Commonwealth states and, for example, Israel,[190] it is possible to say that in general the same principles apply. Customary law is regarded on the whole as part of the law of the land.[191] Municipal laws are presumed not to be inconsistent with rules of international law, but in cases of conflict the former have precedence.

The Canadian Supreme Court in the Reference Re Secession of Quebec judgment[192] noted that it had been necessary for the Court in a number of cases to look to international law to determine the rights or obligations of some actor within the Canadian legal system.[193] As far as treaties are concerned, Lord Atkin expressed the general position in Attorney-General for Canada v. Attorney-General for Ontario,[194] in a case dealing with the respective legislative competences of the Dominion Parliament and the provincial legislatures. He noted that within the then British Empire it was well enshrined that the making of a treaty was an executive act, while the performance of its obligations, if they involved alteration of the existing

[189] Ibid. See above, note 178.

[190] See the Eichmann case, 36 ILR, p. 5; R. Lapidoth, Les Rapports entre le Droit International Public et le Droit Interne en Israel, Paris, 1959, and Lapidoth, 'International Law Within the Israel Legal System', 24 Israel Law Review, 1990, p. 251. See also the Affo case before the Israeli Supreme Court, 29 ILM, 1990, pp. 139, 156–7; 83 ILR, p. 121, and The Public Committee against Torture in Israel et al. v. The Government of Israel et al., HCJ 769/02. See also A & B v. State of Israel, Israeli Supreme Court, 11 June 2008.

[191] But see as to doubts concerning the application of the automatic incorporation of customary international law into Australia, I. Shearer, 'The Internationalisation of Australian Law', 17 Sydney Law Review, 1995, pp. 121, 124. See also G. Triggs, 'Customary International Law and Australian Law' in The Emergence of Australian Law (eds. M. P. Ellinghaus, A. J. Bradbrook and A. J. Duggan), 1989, p. 376. Note that Brennan J in Mabo v. Queensland (1992) 175 CLR 1, 41–2, stated that 'international law is a legitimate and important influence on the development of the common law'.

[192] (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385, 399; 115 ILR, p. 536. See also G. La Forest, 'The Expanding Role of the Supreme Court of Canada in International Law Issues', 34 Canadian YIL, 1996, p. 89.

[193] See also Reference re Powers to Levy Rates on Foreign Legations and High Commissioners' Residences [1943] SCR 208; Reference re Ownership of Offshore Mineral Rights of British Columbia [1967] SCR 792; 43 ILR, p. 93, and Reference re Newfoundland Continental Shelf [1984] 1 SCR 86; 86 ILR, p. 593.

[194] [1937] AC 326; 8 AD, p. 41.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

domestic law, required legislative action. 'The question', remarked Lord Atkin, > is not how is the obligation formed, that is the function of the executive, but how is the obligation to be performed, and that depends upon the authority of the competent legislature or legislatures.[195]

The doctrine that customary international law forms part of the domestic law of Canada has been reaffirmed in a number of cases.[196] This has also been accepted in New Zealand[197] and in Australia.[198] In Horgan v. An Taoiseach, it was affirmed that 'established principles of customary international law may be incorporated into Irish domestic law providing that they are not contrary to the provisions of the Constitution, statute law or common law'.[199] The relationship between treaties and domestic law was examined by the High Court of Australia in Minister of State for Immigration and Ethnic Affairs v. Teoh.[200] The Court upheld the traditional doctrine to the effect that the provisions of an international [195] Ibid., pp. 347–8; 8 AD, pp. 43–4. See also Pfizer Inc. v. Canada [1999] 4 CF 441 and R v. Council of Canadians 2003 CanLII 28426, paras. 35–7 (2005), affirmed 2006 CanLII 400222, 217 OAC 316.

[196] See e.g. Reference re Exemption of US Forces from Canadian Criminal Law [1943] 4 DLR 11, 41 and Reference re Powers to Levy Rates on Foreign Legations and High Commissioners' Residences [1943] SCR 208.

[197] See e.g. Marine Steel Ltd v. Government of the Marshall Islands [1981] 2 NZLR 1; 64 ILR, p. 539; and Governor of Pitcairn and Associated Islands v. Sutton [1995] 1 NZLR 426; 104 ILR, p. 508. The courts have also referred to a presumption of statutory interpretation that, so far as wording allows, legislation should be read in a way that is consistent with New Zealand's obligations: see e.g. Rajan v. Minister of Immigration [1996] 3 NZLR 543, 551 and Wellington District Legal Services v. Tangiora [1998] 1 NZLR 129, 137; 115 ILR, pp. 655, 663. See, as to the use of treaties in statutory interpretation, Attorney-General v. Zaoui [2005] NZSC 38, [2006] 1 NZLR 289, (2005) 7 HRNZ 860. See also Nguyen Tuong Van v. Public Prosecutor [2004] SGCA 47; 134 ILR, p. 660 with regard to Singapore.

[198] See e.g. Potter v. BHP Co. Ltd (1906) 3 CLR 479, 495, 506–7 and 510; Wright v. Cantrell (1943) 44 SR (NSW) 45; Polites v. Commonwealth (1945) 70 CLR 60 and Chow Hung Ching v. R (1948) 77 CLR 449. These cases are unclear as to whether the incorporationist or transformation approaches have been adopted as the appropriate theoretical basis. As to the view that international law is the 'source' of domestic law, see Dixon J in Chow Hung Ching and Merkel J in Nulyarimma v. Thompson (1999) 165 ALR 621, 653–5; 120 ILR, p. 353. See also Public International Law: An Australian Perspective (eds. S. Blay, R. Piotrowicz and B. M. Tsamenyi), Oxford, 1997, chapter 5, and H. Burmeister and S. Reye, 'The Place of Customary International Law in Australian Law: Unfinished Business', 21 Australian YIL, 2001, p. 39.

[199] 132 ILR, pp. 407, 442.

[200] (1995) 128 ALR 353; 104 ILR, p. 466. See also Blay et al., Public International Law: An Australian Perspective.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

treaty to which Australia is a party do not form part of Australian law, and do not give rise to rights, unless those provisions have been validly incorporated into municipal law by statute.[201] It was noted that this was because of the constitutional separation of functions whereby the executive made and ratified treaties, while the legislature made and altered laws.[202] The majority of the Court, however, went on to hold that the fact that a treaty had not been incorporated did not mean that its ratification by the executive held no significance for Australian law. Where a statute or subordinate legislation was ambiguous, the courts should favour that construction which accorded with Australia's obligations under the particular treaty,[203] while a statute generally had to be interpreted as far as its language permitted so that it was in conformity and not in conflict with the established rules of international law.[204] Indeed, the Court felt that a narrow conception of ambiguity in this context should be rejected.[205] Referring to Ex Parte Brind,[206] the Court stated that this principle was no more than a canon of construction and did not import the terms of the treaty into municipal law.[207] Moving beyond this approach which is generally consistent with common law doctrines, the majority of the Court took the view that ratification of a convention itself would constitute an adequate foundation for a legitimate expectation (unless there were statutory or executive indications to the contrary) that administrative decision-makers would act in conformity with the unincorporated but [201] See e.g. judgment by Mason CJ and Deane J, (1995) 128 ALR 353, 361. See also Dietrich v. The Queen (1992) 177 CLR 292, 305 and Coe v. Commonwealth of Australia (1993) 118 ALR 193, 200–1; 118 ILR, p. 322. Reaffirmed by the High Court in Kruger v. Commonwealth of Australia (1997) 146 ALR 126, 161; 118 ILR, p. 371. See e.g. Kenneth Good v. Attorney-General, Court of Appeal Civil Appeal No. 028 of 2005 for the similar situation in Botswana and Nallaratnam Singarasa v. Attorney General, S.C. Spl (LA) No. 182/99 (2006) with regard to Sri Lanka.

[202] (1995) 128 ALR 353, 362 and see e.g. Simsek v. Macphee (1982) 148 CLR 636, 641–2.

[203] Judgment of Mason CJ and Deane J. See also Chung Kheng Lin v. Minister for Immigration (1992) 176 CLR 1, 38. In Kruger v. Commonwealth of Australia, Dawson J noted that such a construction was not required where the obligations arise only under a treaty and the legislation in question was enacted before the treaty, (1997) 146 ALR 126, 161; 118 ILR, p. 371.

[204] See also Kartinyeri v. The Commonwealth (1998) 195 CLR 337 at 384 and Ahmed Ali Al-Kateb v. Goodwin [2004] HCA 37. In the latter case, McHugh J criticised the rule, but concluded that it was too well established to be repealed by judicial decision, ibid. at para. 65.

[205] (1995) 128 ALR 353, 361. See also Polites v. The Commonwealth (1945) 70 CLR 60, 68–9, 77, 80–1.

[206] [1991] 1 AC 696 at 748; 85 ILR, p. 29.

[207] (1995) 128 ALR 353, 362.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

ratified convention.[208] This particular proposition is controversial in legal doctrine, but is an interesting example of the fact that internal decision-makers may not always be expected to be immune from the influence of obligations undertaken by the state.[209]

There are further signs of an increasingly flexible approach. For example, in Hosking & Hosking v. Runting and Pacific Magazines NZ Ltd,[210] the New Zealand Court of Appeal referred to the 'increasing recognition of the need to develop the common law consistently with international treaties to which New Zealand is a party. That is an international trend. The historical approach to the State's international obligations as having no part in the domestic law unless incorporated by statute is now recognised as too rigid.' Further, the Canadian Supreme Court, in noting that genocide was a crime in both customary international law and treaty law, declared that international law was therefore called upon to play a crucial role as an aid in interpreting domestic law, particularly as regards the elements of the crime of incitement to genocide, and emphasised the importance of interpreting domestic law in a manner that accorded with the principles of customary international law and with Canada's treaty obligations.[211] This, however, would go further than most common law states would accept.

Although the basic approach adopted by the majority of common law states is clear, complications have arisen where the country in question has a written constitution, whether or not specific reference is made [208] Ibid., 365. See also the judgment of Toohey J, ibid. at 371–2, and the judgment of Gaudron J, ibid. at 375–6. Cf. the judgment of McHugh J, ibid. at 385–7.

[209] Note that after the decision in Teoh, the Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Attorney General issued a Joint Statement (10 May 1995) denying the existence of any such legitimate expectation upon the ratification of a treaty: see M. Allars, 'One Small Step for Legal Doctrine, One Giant Leap Towards Integrity in Government: Teoh's Case and the Internationalisation of Administrative Law', 17 Sydney Law Review, 1995, pp. 204, 237–41. The Government also introduced the Administrative Decisions (Effect of International Instruments) Bill 1995 into the Parliament with the specific purpose of denying that treaties or conventions give rise to a legitimate expectation of how a decision-maker will make a decision in an area affected by such international instruments. See also Trick or Treaty? Commonwealth Power to Make and Implement Treaties, a Report by the Senate Legal and Constitutional References Committee, November 1995. See now also Minister for Immigration and Multicultural Affairs; Ex Parte Lam [2003] HCA 6, which is critical of Teoh.

[210] [2004] NZCA 34, para. 6.

[211] Mugesera v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) [2005] 2 SCR 100, para. 82; 132 ILR, pp. 295–6. See also Baker v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) [1999] 2 SCR 817, paras. 69–71.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

therein to the treatment of international agreements. The use of international law in interpreting the Constitution has occasioned much debate in Australia.[212] In Ahmed Ali Al-Kateb v. Godwin, for example, two judges of the High Court of Australia came to radically different conclusions. One judge regarded the view that the Constitution should be read consistently with the rules of international law as 'heretical',[213] while another declared that 'opinions that seek to cut off contemporary Australian law (including constitutional law) from the persuasive force of international law are doomed to fail'.[214] This debate reflects differing approaches to constitutional interpretation.[215]

The Indian Constitution refers only in the vaguest of terms to the provisions of international law,[216] whereas by contrast the Irish Constitution clearly states that the country will not be bound by any treaty involving a charge upon public funds unless the terms of the agreement have been approved by the Dáil.[217] Under article 169(3) of the Cyprus Constitution, treaties concluded in accordance with that provision have as from [212] See e.g. D. Hovell and G. Williams, 'A Tale of Two Systems: The Use of International Law in Constitutional Interpretation in Australia and South Africa', 29 Melbourne University Law Review, 2005, p. 95; H. Charlesworth, M. Chiam, D. Hovell and G. Williams, 'Deep Anxieties: Australia and the International Legal Order', 25 Sydney Law Review, 2003, pp. 423, 446–63; International Law in Australia (ed. K. W. Ryan), Sydney, 1984; Blay et al., Public International Law: An Australian Perspective; A. Byrnes and H. Charlesworth, 'Federalism and the International Legal Order: Recent Developments in Australia', 79 AJIL, 1985, p. 622, and Koowarta v. Bjelke-Petersen, High Court of Australia, 39 ALR 417 (11 May 1982); 68 ILR, p. 181; Tabag v. Minister for Immigration and Ethnic Affairs, Federal Court of Australia, 45 ALR 705 (23 December 1982); Commonwealth of Australia v. State of Tasmania, High Court of Australia, 46 ALR 625 (1 July 1983); 68 ILR, p. 266; Polyukhovich v. Commonwealth (1991) 172 CLR 501 and Minister for Foreign Affairs v. Magno (1992) 37 FCR 298.

[213] [2004] HCA 37, para. 63 (McHugh J). [214] Ibid., para. 190 (Kirby J).

[215] Simpson and Williams have concluded that '[j]udges will approach extrinsic materials, such as international law, differently depending on whether they favour rigidly applying the Constitution as originally drafted and intended or, at the other extreme, updating the instrument for societal change consistent with a vision of the Constitution as a "living force" ', A. Simpson and G. Williams, 'International Law and Constitutional Interpretation', 11 Public Law Review, 2000, pp. 205, 226.

[216] See e.g. D. D. Basu, Commentaries on the Constitution of India, New Delhi, 1962, vol. II, and Constitutions of the World (ed. R. Peaslee), 3rd edn, New York, 1968, vol. II, p. 308. See also K. Thakore, 'National Treaty Law and Practice: India' in Leigh and Blakeslee, National Treaty Law and Practice, p. 79.

[217] Peaslee, Constitutions, vol. III, p. 463 (article 29(5)2). Article 29 also states that Ireland accepts the generally recognised principles of international law as its rule of conduct in its relations with other states. See e.g. Re O'Laighléis 24 ILR, p. 420 and Re Woods 53 ILR, p. 552. See also Crotty v. An Taoiseach 93 ILR, p. 480; McGimpsey v. Ireland [1988] IR 567, and Kavanagh v. Governor of Mountjoy Prison [2002] 3 IR 97, 125–6; 132 ILR, pp. 394, 401–2. Note also the decision of the Irish High Court in Horgan v. An Taoiseach on 28 publication in the Official Gazette of the Republic 'superior force to any municipal law on condition that such treaties, conventions and agreements are applied by the other party thereto'.[218] In such cases where there is a written constitution, serious questions of constitutional law may be involved, and one would have to consider the situation as it arises and within its own political context.[219] But in general common law states tend to adopt the British approach.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The practice of those states which possess the civil law system, based originally on Roman law, manifests certain differences.[220] The Basic Law of the Federal Republic of Germany,[221] for example, specifically states in article 25 that 'the general rules of public international law are an integral part of federal law. They shall take precedence over the laws and shall directly create rights and duties for the inhabitants of the federal territory.'[222] This provision, which not only treats international law as part of municipal law but regards it as superior to municipal legislation, has been the subject of a great deal of controversy as writers and lawyers have tried to establish whether international legal rules would invalidate any inconsistent municipal legislation and, indeed, whether international rules could override the constitution. Similarly, the phrase 'general rules of public international law' has led to problems over interpretation as it may refer to all aspects of international law, including customary and treaty rules, or merely general principles common to all, or perhaps only certain nations.[223]

April 2003 reaffirming that article 29 does not confer individual rights, 132 ILR, pp. 407, 446.

218 See e.g. Malachtou v. Armefti and Armefti 88 ILR, p. 199.

219 See e.g. International Law Chiefly as Interpreted and Applied in Canada (ed. H. Kindred), 6th edn, Toronto, 2000, chapter 4; Re Newfoundland Continental Shelf [1984] 1 SCR 86, and C. Okeke, The Theory and Practice of International Law in Nigeria, London, 1986.

220 See e.g. L. Wildhaber and S. Breitenmoser, 'The Relationship Between Customary International Law and Municipal Law in Western European Countries', 48 ZaöRV, 1988, p. 163; Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 63 ff., and Henkin et al., International Law: Cases and Materials, pp. 154 ff.

221 See H. D. Treviranus and H. Beemelmans, 'National Treaty Law and Practice: Federal Republic of Germany' in Leigh and Blakeslee, National Treaty Law and Practice, p. 43.

222 See e.g. the Parking Privileges for Diplomats case, 70 ILR, p. 396.

223 See e.g. German Consular Notification case (Individual Constitutional Complaint Procedure), BVerfG, 2 BvR 2115/01, 19 September 2006, and Görgülü case (Individual Constitutional Complaint), BVerfG, 2 BvR 1481/04 of 14 October 2004, 111 Entscheidungen des Bundesverfassungsgerichts (BVerfGE), 307–32, [2004] Neue Juristische Wochenschrift (NJW) 3407–3412. See also D. P. O'Connell, International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1970, vol. I, pp. 71–6, and sources therein cited. See also generally A. Drzemczewski, The European Human Rights Convention in Domestic Law, Oxford, 1983, and Peaslee, Constitutions, vol. III, p. 361.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

As far as treaties are concerned, the German federal courts will regard these as superior to domestic legislation, though they will not be allowed to operate so as to affect the constitution. Article 59 of the Basic Law declares that treaties which regulate the political relations of the federation or relate to matters of federal legislation shall require the consent or participation, in the form of a federal law, of the bodies competent in any specific case for such federal legislation. Thereafter such treaties will be treated as incorporated into German law, but with the status (no higher) of a federal law. Such laws may indeed be challenged before the German courts by means of a constitutional complaint if the treaty in question contains provisions directly encroaching upon the legal sphere of the individual.[224]

Article 91(1) of the Netherlands Constitution 1983 requires the prior approval of Parliament before treaties, or their denunciation, become binding, while article 91(3) provides that any provisions of a treaty that conflict with the Constitution or which lead to conflicts with it may be approved by the Chambers of the Parliament, provided that at least two-thirds of the votes cast are in favour. Article 93 states that provisions of treaties and of decisions by international organisations which may be binding by virtue of their contents are to become binding after they have been published, while article 94 provides that statutory regulations in force within the kingdom shall not be applicable if such application is in conflict with provisions of treaties that are binding on all persons or with resolutions by international institutions.[225] Customary international law is not referred to in the Constitution. It is deemed to apply internally, although it seems that statute will prevail in cases of conflict.[226] It is for the courts to establish whether the provisions of a treaty or decision by an [224] See the Unification Treaty Constitutionality case, 94 ILR, pp. 2, 54. See also the East Treaties Constitutionality case, 73 ILR, p. 691 and the Görgülü case (Individual Constitutional Complaint), BVerfG, 2 BvR 1481/04 of 14 October 2004, 111 Entscheidungen des Bundesverfassungsgerichts (BVerfGE), 307–32, [2004] Neue Juristische Wochenschrift (NJW) 3407–12.

[225] See e.g. E. A. Alkema, 'Fundamental Human Rights and the Legal Order of the Netherlands' in International Law in the Netherlands (eds. H. Van Panhuys et al.), Dordrecht, 1980, vol. III, p. 109; Peaslee, Constitutions, vol. III, p. 652; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 69, and H. Schermers, The Effect of Treaties in Domestic Law (eds. F. Jacobs and S. Roberts), Leiden, 1987, p. 109. See also e.g. Nordstern Allgemeine Versicherungs AG v. Vereinigte Stinees Rheinreedereien 74 ILR, p. 2 and Public Prosecutor v. JO 74 ILR, p. 130. Note also J. Klabbers, 'The New Dutch Law on the Approval of Treaties', 44 ICLQ, 1995, p. 629.

[226] See e.g. H. F. van Panhuys, 'The Netherlands Constitution and International Law: A Decade of Experience', 58 AJIL, 1964, pp. 88–108. See also Handelskwekerij GJ Bier BV v. Mines de Potasse d'Alsace SA 11 Netherlands YIL, 1980, p. 326.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

international organisation are binding on all persons within the meaning of articles 93 and 94 of the Constitution.[227]

In a provision contained in other constitutions, article 10 of the Italian Constitution of 1947 stipulates that the Italian legal order 'shall conform with the generally recognised rules of international law'. This is interpreted to indicate that international customary law will override inconsistent ordinary national legislation.[228] Article 8(1) of the Portuguese Constitution provides that the rules and principles of general or customary international law are an integral part of Portuguese law,[229] while under article 87 of Poland's Constitution of 1997, a ratified international treaty, equal to a statute, is one of the sources of law.[230] The Supreme Court of Belgium has taken the view that directly effective treaty provisions have superiority over the Constitution,[231] as well as over a conflicting legislative act.[232]

The French Constitution of 1958 declares that treaties duly ratified and published shall operate as laws within the domestic system.[233] However, the Constitution provides that, although in principle it is the President of the Republic who negotiates and ratifies treaties, with regard to important treaties such as commercial treaties which entail some form of financial outlay, treaties relating to international organisations, treaties modifying legislation and treaties affecting personal status, ratification takes place by Act of Parliament. Once the relevant legislation has been passed, the agreement is promulgated and becomes binding upon the courts.

[227] See Reinier van Arkel Foundation and Others v. Minister for Transport, Public Works and Water Management, Case Nr 200401178/1; LJN: AR2181; AB 2005/12.

[228] Cassese, International Law, p. 225, note 21. See also the decision of the Italian Court of Cassation in Canada v. Cargnello 114 ILR, p. 559, and, for a similar view in Latvia, Judgment of the Constitutional Court of the Republic of Latvia on a Request for Constitutional Review, No. 2004–01–06 of 7 July 2004, Latvian Herald, 9 July 2004, No. 108, 3056.

[229] See e.g. the decision of the Supreme Court of Portugal in the Brazilian Embassy Employee case, May 1984, 116 ILR, p. 625.

[230] See Resolution of the Supreme Court of 19 February 2003, I KZP 47/02.

[231] B.M., Cass. 16 November 2004, nr P.04.0644.N, Pas. 2004, I, 1795, RCJB 2007, 36, RW 2005–06, 387, CDPK 2005, 610, RABG 2005, 504, T.Strafr. 2005, 285. See also Gruyez and Rolland v. Municipality of Sint–Genesius–Rode, Court of Appeal of Brussels, 28 January 2003, AR nr 2002/KR/412.

[232] Franco-Suisse Le Ski (Hof van Cassatie/Cour de Cassation), 21 May 1971, Pas. 1971, I, 886.

[233] See Title VI of the Constitution. See also e.g. Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, pp. 231 ff.; P. M. Dupuy, Droit International Public, 8th edn, Paris, 2006, pp. 422 ff.; D. Alland, 'Jamais, Parfois, Toujours. Réflexions sur la Compétence de la Cour de Cassation en Matière d'Interprétation des Conventions Internationales', Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1996, p. 599; V. Kronenberger, 'A New Approach to the Interpretation of the French Constitution in Respect to International Conventions: From Hierarchy of Norms to Conflict of Competence', NILR, 2000, p. 323.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Article 55 of the Constitution provides that duly ratified or approved treaties or agreements shall upon publication override domestic laws, subject only to the application of the treaty or agreement by the other party or parties to the treaty.[234] It is also now accepted that the French courts may declare a statute inapplicable for conflicting with an earlier treaty.[235] However, the Cour de Cassation has held that the supremacy of international agreements in the domestic order does not extend to constitutional provisions.[236]

In 1993, South Africa adopted a new (interim) constitution.[237] Whereas the previous constitutions of 1910, 1961 and 1983 had been silent on the question of international law, the 1993 Constitution contained several relevant provisions. Section 231(4) states that 'the rules of customary international law binding on the Republic, shall, unless inconsistent with this Constitution or an Act of Parliament, form part of the law of the Republic'. This formulation confirms essentially the common law position and would also suggest that the principle of stare decisis is not applicable to customary international law. As far as treaties are concerned, the previous position whereby an Act of Parliament was required in order to incorporate an international agreement has been modified. While the negotiation and signature of treaties is a function of the President (section 82(1)i), ratification is now a function of the Parliament (section 231(2)).[238]

[234] See e.g. O'Connell, International Law, pp. 65–8; Rousseau, Droit International Public, and Peaslee, Constitutions, vol. III, p. 312. See also SA Rothmans International France and SA Philip Morris France 93 ILR, p. 308.

[235] See the Cafés Jacques Vabre case, 16 Common Market Law Review, 1975, p. 336 and In re Nicolo 84 AJIL, 1990, p. 765; 93 ILR, p. 286. Under article 54 of the Constitution, the Constitutional Council may declare a treaty to be contrary to the Constitution, so that the Constitution must first be amended before the treaty may be ratified or approved. See e.g. Re Treaty on European Union 93 ILR, p. 337. See also Ligue Internationale Contre le Racisme et l'Antisémitisme, AFDI, 1993, p. 963 and AFDI, 1994, pp. 963 ff.

[236] See Pauline Fraisse, 2 June 2000, Bulletin de l'Assemblée Plénière, No. 4, p. 7 and Levacher, RFDA, 2000, p. 79. The position with regard to customary law is unclear: see e.g. Aquarone, RGDIP, 1997–4, pp. 1053–4; Barbie, Cass. Crim., 6 October 1983, Bull., p. 610 and Kadahfi, RGDIP, 2001–2, pp. 474–6.

[237] See 33 ILM, 1994, p. 1043. This interim constitution came into force on 27 April 1994 and was intended to remain in force for five years to be replaced by a constitution adopted by a Constitutional Assembly consisting of the National Assembly and Senate of Parliament: see below. See J. Dugard, International Law: A South African Perspective, 2nd edn, Kenwyn, 2000, and Hovell and Williams, 'A Tale of Two Systems', pp. 113 ff.

[238] See Dugard, International Law. Note that this change means that treaties entered into before the Constitution came into force do not form part of municipal law unless expressly incorporated by legislation, while those treaties that postdate the new Constitution may.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Section 231(3) provides that 'such international agreement shall be binding on the Republic and shall form part of the law of the Republic, provided Parliament expressly so provides and such agreement is not inconsistent with this constitution'. Thus South Africa has moved from the British system to a position akin to the civil law tradition. It should also be noted that this interim constitution expressly provides that the National Defence Force shall 'not breach international customary law binding on the Republic relating to aggression', while in armed conflict, it would 'comply with its obligations under international customary law and treaties binding on the Republic' (section 227(2)).[239]

These provisions were considered and refined by the Constitutional Assembly, which on 8 May 1996 adopted a new constitution.[240] Section 231(1) of this constitution provides that the negotiating and signing of all international agreements is the responsibility of the national executive, while such an agreement would only bind the Republic after approval by resolution in both the National Assembly and the National Council of Provinces.[241] Any international agreement becomes domestic law when enacted into law by national legislation, although a self-executing provision of an agreement that has been approved by Parliament is law in the Republic unless it is inconsistent with the Constitution or an Act of Parliament.[242] Section 232 provides that customary international law is law in the Republic unless it is inconsistent with the Constitution or an Act of Parliament, while section 233 stipulates that when interpreting any legislation, every court must prefer any reasonable interpretation of the legislation which is consistent with international law over any alternative interpretation that is inconsistent with international law. It is also to be particularly noted that section 200(2) of the Constitution states that the primary object of the defence force is to defend and protect the Republic, [239] Note that article 144 of the Namibian Constitution provides that 'unless otherwise provided by this Constitution or Act of Parliament, the general rules of public international law and international agreements binding upon Namibia under this Constitution shall form part of the law of Namibia': see B. Erasmus, 'The Namibian Constitution and the Application of International Law', 15 South African Yearbook of International Law, 1989–90, p. 81.

[240] See 36 ILM, 1997, p. 744.

[241] Section 231(2). This is unless either such an agreement is of a 'technical, administrative or executive nature' or it is one not requiring ratification (or accession), in which case tabling in the Assembly and the Council within a reasonable time is required: section 231(3).

[242] Section 231(4).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

its territorial integrity and its people, 'in accordance with the Constitution and the principles of international law regulating the use of force'.[243]

The Russian Federation adopted a new constitution in 1993.[244] Under article 86, the President negotiates and signs treaties and signs the ratification documents, while under article 106 the Federal Council (the upper chamber of the federal parliament) must consider those federal laws adopted by the State Duma (the lower chamber) that concern the ratification and denunciation of international agreements. The Constitutional Court may review the constitutionality of treaties not yet in force (article 125(2)) and treaties that conflict with the Constitution are not to be given effect (article 125(6)). Article 15(4) of the new constitution provides that 'the generally recognised principles and norms of international law and the international treaties of the Russian Federation shall constitute part of its legal system. If an international treaty of the Russian Federation establishes other rules than those stipulated by the law, the rules of the international treaty shall apply.' Thus both treaty law and customary law are incorporated into Russian law, while treaty rules have a higher status than domestic laws.[245] The Constitutional Court takes the view that customary international law and international treaties ratified by Russia are norms incorporated into Russian law.[246]

[243] Note that O'Regan J stated in Kaunda v. President of the Republic of South Africa that 'our Constitution recognises and asserts that, after decades of isolation, South Africa is now a member of the community of nations, and a bearer of obligations and responsibilities in terms of international law', CCT 23/04, [2004] ZACC 5, para. 222.

[244] See G. M. Danilenko, 'The New Russian Constitution and International Law', 88 AJIL, 1994, p. 451 and Danilenko, 'Implementation of International Law in CIS States: Theory and Practice', 10 EJIL, 1999, p. 51; V. S. Vereshchetin, 'New Constitutions and the Old Problem of the Relationship between International Law and National Law', 7 EJIL, 1996, p. 29, and S. Y. Marochkin, 'International Law in the Courts of the Russian Federation: Practice of Application', 6 Chinese JIL, 2007, p. 329. See, as regards the practice of the Soviet Union, K. Grzybowski, Soviet Public International Law, Leiden, 1970, pp. 30–2.

[245] See also article 5 of the Russian Federal Law on International Treaties adopted on 16 June 1995, 34 ILM, 1995, p. 1370. This repeats article 15(4) of the Constitution and also provides that 'the provisions of officially published international treaties of the Russian Federation which do not require the publication of intra-state acts for application shall operate in the Russian Federation directly. Respective legal acts shall be adopted in order to effectuate other provisions of international treaties of the Russian Federation.' See further W. E. Butler, The Law of Treaties in Russia and the Commonwealth of Independent States, Cambridge, 2002, who notes that the change brought about by article 15(4) 'is among the most momentous changes of the twentieth century in the development of Russian Law', at p. 36.

[246] Butler, Law of Treaties in Russia, p. 37. See also generally, Constitutional Reform and International Law in Central and Eastern Europe (eds. R. Müllerson, M. Fitzmaurice

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Under article 73(3) of the Japanese Constitution of 1946,[247] the Cabinet has authority to conclude treaties with the prior or subsequent approval of the Diet, although executive agreements may be entered into without such approval, usually by simple exchange of notes. Promulgation of a treaty takes place by publication in the Official Gazette under the name of the Emperor once the Diet has approved and the Cabinet ratified the agreement (article 7). Article 98(2) provides that 'treaties concluded by Japan and established laws of nations shall be faithfully observed' and this provision is taken as incorporating international law, both relevant treaty and customary law, into Japan's legal system.[248] Japan has also experienced some difficulty[249] in the context of the relative definition of self-governing and non-self-governing treaties.[250]

This survey of the attitudes adopted by various countries of the common law and civil law traditions leads to a few concluding remarks. The first of these is that a strict adherence to either the monist or the dualist position will not suffice. Most countries accept the operation of customary rules within their own jurisdictions, providing there is no conflict with existing laws, and some will allow international law to prevail over municipal provisions. One can regard this as a significant element in extending the principles and protection of international law, whether or not it is held that the particular provision permitting this, whether by constitutional enactment or by case-law, illustrates the superiority of municipal law in so acting.

The situation as regards treaties is much more complex, as different attitudes are maintained by different states. In some countries, certain treaties will operate internally by themselves (self-executing) while others must undergo a process of domestic legalisation. There are countries where legislation is needed for virtually all international agreements: for example, and M. Andenas), The Hague, 1998; T. Schweisfurth and R. Alleweldt, 'The Position of International Law in the Domestic Legal Orders of Central and Eastern European Countries', 40 German YIL, 1997, p. 164; I. Ziemele, 'The Application of International Law in the Baltic States', 40 German YIL, 1997, p. 243, and W. Czaplinski, 'International Law and Polish Municipal Law', 53 ZaöRV, 1993, p. 871.

[247] See generally S. Oda, The Practice of Japan in International Law 1961–1970, Leiden, 1982, and Y. Iwasawa, 'The Relationship Between International Law and National Law: Japanese Experiences', 64 BYIL, 1993, p. 333. See also H. Oda, Japanese Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 1999, and Y. Iwasawa, International Law, Human Rights, and Japanese Law – The Impact of International Law on Japanese Law, Oxford, 1998.

[248] Iwasawa, 'Relationship', p. 345. [249] Ibid., pp. 349 ff.

[250] See generally with regard to China, T. Wang, 'International Law in China', 221 HR, 1990, p. 195.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Belgium.[251] It is by no means settled as a general principle whether treaties prevail over domestic rules. Some countries allow treaties to supersede all municipal laws, whether made earlier or later than the agreement. Others, such as Norway, adopt the opposite stance. Where there are written constitutions, an additional complicating factor is introduced and some reasonably stable hierarchy incorporating ordinary laws, constitutional provisions and international law has to be maintained. This is particularly so where a federal system is in operation. It will be up to the individual country to adopt its own list of preferences.[252]

Of course, such diverse attitudes can lead to confusion, but in the light of the present state of international law, it is inevitable that its enforcement and sphere of activity will become entangled with the ideas and practices of municipal law. Indeed, it is precisely because of the inadequate enforcement facilities that lie at the disposal of international law that one must consider the relationship with municipal law as of more than marginal importance. This is because the extent to which domestic courts apply the rules of international law may well determine the effectiveness of international legislation and judicial decision-making.

However, to declare that international legal rules therefore prevail over all relevant domestic legislation at all times is incorrect in the vast majority of cases and would be to overlook the real in the face of the ideal. States jealously guard their prerogatives, and few are more meaningful than the ability to legislate free from outside control; and, of course, there are democratic implications. The consequent supremacy of municipal legal systems over international law in the domestic sphere is not exclusive, but it does exist as an undeniable general principle.

It is pertinent to refer here briefly to the impact of the European Union.[253] The European Court of Justice has held that Community law has supremacy over ordinary national law,[254] and indeed over domestic [251] See article 68 of the Constitution, which deals basically with treaties of commerce and treaties which impose obligations on the state or on individuals.

[252] See generally Drzemczewski, Domestic Law, and Peaslee, Constitutions, vol. III, pp. 76 and 689. See also, as regards the Philippines, the decision of the Supreme Court (en banc) in The Holy See v. Starbright Sales Enterprises Inc. 102 ILR, p. 163, and, as regards Poland, W. Czaplinski, 'International Law and Polish Municipal Law – A Case Study', 8 Hague Yearbook of International Law, 1995, p. 31.

[253] See e.g. S. Weatherill and P. Beaumont, EC Law, 3rd edn, London, 1999; L. Collins, European Community Law in the United Kingdom, 4th edn, London, 1990, and H. Kovar, 'The Relationship between Community Law and National Law' in Thirty Years of Community Law (Commission of the European Communities), 1981, p. 109. See also above, p. 156.

[254] See Costa v. ENEL, Case 6/64 [1964] ECR 585; 93 ILR, p. 23.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

constitutional law.[255] In addition to the treaties creating the EC,[256] there is a great deal of secondary legislation issuing forth from its institutions, which can apply to the member states. This takes the form of regulations, decisions or directives. Of these, the first two are directly applicable and enforceable within each of the countries concerned without the need for enabling legislation. While it is true that the legislation for this type of activity has been passed – for example section 2(1) of the European Communities Act 1972[257] in the UK, which permits in advance this form of indirect law-making, and is thus assimilated into municipal law – the fact remains that the member states have accepted an extraterritorial source of law, binding in certain circumstances upon them. The effect is thus that directly effective Community law has precedence over inconsistent UK legislation. This was confirmed by the House of Lords in Factortame Ltd v. Secretary of State for Transport.[258] It was further noted that one of the consequences of UK entry into the European Communities and the European Communities Act 1972 was that an interim injunction could be granted, the effect of which would be to suspend the operation of a statute on the grounds that the legislation in question allegedly infringed Community law. This is one illustration of the major effect which joining the Community has had in terms of the English legal system and previously accepted legal principles. The mistake, however, should not be made of generalising from this specific relationship to the sphere of international law as a whole.

Justiciability, act of state and related doctrines

An issue is justiciable basically if it can be tried according to law.[259] It would, therefore, follow that matters that fall within the competence of the executive branch of government are not justiciable before the courts. Accordingly, the test as to whether a matter is or is not justiciable involves [255] See Internationale Handelsgesellschaft v. Einfuhr- und Vorratsstelle für Getreide und Futtermittel [1970] ECR 1125.

[256] Including the treaties of Maastricht (1992), Amsterdam (1997), Nice (2001) and Lisbon (2007, not in force).

[257] See also section 2(4).

[258] See [1990] 2 AC 85, 140 (per Lord Bridge); 93 ILR, p. 652. See also Ex parte Factortame (No. 2) [1991] 1 AC 603; 93 ILR, p. 731; R v. Secretary of State for Transport, ex parte Factortame, European Court of Justice case C-213/89, 93 ILR, p. 669 and Case C-221/89, 93 ILR, p. 731.

[259] See Mann, Foreign Affairs, chapter 4. See also L. Collins, 'Foreign Relations and the Judiciary', 51 ICLQ, 2002, p. 485.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

an illumination of that grey area where the spheres of executive and judiciary merge and overlap. Recent years have seen a reduction in the sphere of exclusive competence of the executive free from judicial oversight and a number of important cases have sought to redraw the boundary. Justiciability as a concept includes the doctrine of act of state, which generally concerns the activities of the executive in relations with other states,[260] but in the context of international law and municipal courts it refers particularly to the doctrine that no state can exercise jurisdiction over another state.[261] As such it is based upon the principles of the sovereignty and equality of states.[262] Non-justiciability acts as an evidential bar, since an issue cannot be raised or proved, in contrast to sovereign immunity, which provides that the courts cannot exercise the jurisdiction that exists with regard to the matter in question due to the status of the entity or individual concerned, although it is open to the state concerned to waive its immunity and thus remove the jurisdictional bar.[263] Non-justiciability will usually concern a clear inter-state relationship or situation which is impleaded in a seemingly private action, while immunity issues will invariably arise out of a state–private party relationship not usually relating to inter-state activities as such.[264]

The concept of non-justiciability rests upon a number of pillars, ranging from prerogative of the executive in the areas of foreign policy and national defence,[265] where it is essentially a rule of law principle in a democratic system of government delineating the separation of powers,[266] to respect for the sovereignty and independence of foreign states.[267] Accordingly, both domestic and foreign executive acts are covered. With regard [260] See e.g. Wade and Phillips, Constitutional and Administrative Law, pp. 299–303; J. B. Moore, Acts of State in English Law, New York, 1906; Mann, Foreign Affairs, chapter 9; Singer, 'The Act of State Doctrine of the UK', 75 AJIL, 1981, p. 283; M. Akehurst, 'Jurisdiction in International Law', 46 BYIL, 1972–3, pp. 145, 240, and M. Zander, 'The Act of State Doctrine', 53 AJIL, 1959, p. 826.

[261] See Lord Pearson, Nissan v. Attorney-General [1970] AC 179, 239; 44 ILR, pp. 359, 390.

[262] See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 365.

[263] See further as to sovereign or state immunity and diplomatic immunity, below, chapter 13.

[264] See e.g. Amalgamated Metal Trading v. Department of Trade and Industry, The Times, 21 March 1989, p. 40.

[265] In the UK, areas traditionally covered by the Crown prerogative: see above, p. 149.

[266] See e.g. Lord Hoffmann in R v. Lyons [2002] UKHL 44, para. 40; 131 ILR, p. 555; Lord Millett in R v. Lyons, para. 105; 131 ILR, p. 575, and Richards J in the CND case [2002] EWHC 2777 (Admin), para. 60.

[267] See Underhill v. Hernandez 168 US 250, 252.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

to the former,[268] the courts will refuse, or at the least be extremely reluctant, to adjudicate upon an exercise of sovereign power, such as making war and peace, making international treaties or ceding territory.[269] This would include the definition of territories within the UK[270] as well as the conduct of foreign affairs.[271] Lord Hoffmann held in R v. Jones that 'the making of war and peace and the disposition of the armed forces has always been regarded as a discretionary power of the Crown into the exercise of which the courts will not enquire'.[272] As far as the latter instance is [268] See Nissan v. Attorney-General [1970] AC 179 and Buron v. Denman (1848) 145 ER 450. See also S. de Smith and R. Brazier, Constitutional and Administrative Law, 6th edn, London, 1989, pp. 145–51, and Mann, Foreign Affairs, chapter 10.

[269] Not simply because they form part of the Crown's prerogative powers, but because such powers are discretionary: see Council of Civil Service Unions v. Minister for the Civil Service [1984] 3 All ER 935, 956 and Lord Hoffmann in R v. Jones [2006] UKHL 16, para. 65; 132 ILR, pp. 695–6. See also Lord Reid in Chandler v. DPP [1964] AC 763, 791; Simon Brown LJ, R v. Ministry of Defence, ex parte Smith [1996] QB 517, 539; Laws LJ, Marchiori v. The Environment Agency [2002] EWCA Civ 3, paras. 38 and 40; 127 ILR, pp. 642 and 643; CND v. Prime Minister [2002] EWHC 2759 at paras. 15 (Simon Brown LJ), 50 (Maurice Kay J) and 59 (Richards J); 126 ILR, pp. 735, 750 and 753; and R (on the application of Abbasi) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2002] EWCA Civ 1598, para. 106(iii); 126 ILR, p. 725.

[270] See The Fagernes [1927] P 311, 324 (per Atkin LJ). See also Christian v. The Queen [2006] UKPC 47, paras. 9–10 (Lord Hoffmann) and 33 (Lord Woolf); 130 ILR, pp. 699–700, 707.

[271] See e.g. R (Al-Rawi) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2006] EWCA Civ 1279, paras. 131 ff. (Laws LJ), and cases cited in footnote 266 above.

[272] [2006] UKHL 16, para. 65; 132 ILR, p. 696. He concluded that 'The decision to go to war [against Iraq], whether one thinks it was right or wrong, fell squarely within the discretionary powers of the Crown to defend the realm and conduct its foreign affairs . . . The discretionary nature or non-justiciability of the power to make war is in my opinion simply one of the reasons why aggression is not a crime in domestic law', paras. 66 and 67, ibid., and see also Lord Mance, para. 103; ibid., pp. 705–6. More cautiously, Lord Bingham noted that 'there are well established rules that the courts will be very slow to review the exercise of prerogative powers in relation to the conduct of foreign affairs and the deployment of the armed services', para. 30, ibid., p. 684. The Jones approach was applied by the Court of Appeal in R (Gentle) v. Prime Minister [2006] EWCA Civ 1689, para. 33 (Clarke MR); 132 ILR, p. 737, where it was held that the question whether the UK had acted unlawfully in sending troops to Iraq was non-justiciable for two reasons: first, because it would require consideration of at least two international instruments (Security Council resolutions 678 and 1441) and, secondly, because it would require detailed consideration of policy decisions in the fields of foreign affairs and defence 'which are the exclusive responsibility of the executive government'. In the House of Lords, [2008] UKHL 20, their Lordships essentially focused on the meaning of article 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights, but Lord Bingham referred to the 'restraint traditionally shown by the courts in ruling on what has been called high policy – peace and war, the making of treaties, the conduct of foreign relations', ibid., para. 2, while Lord Hope noted that, 'The issue of legality in this area of international law [the use of force by states] belongs

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

concerned, Lord Wilberforce declared in Buttes Gas and Oil Co. v. Hammer (No. 3):[273]

> there exists in English law a general principle that the courts will not adjudicate upon the transactions of foreign sovereign states . . . it seems desirable to consider this principle . . . not as a variety of 'act of state' but one for judicial restraint or abstention.[274]

Such a principle was not one of discretion, but inherent in the nature of the judicial process. Although that case concerned litigation in the areas of libel and conspiracy, the House of Lords felt that a determination of the issue would have involved the court in reviewing the transactions of four sovereign states and having to find that part of those transactions was contrary to international law. Quite apart from the possibility of embarrassment to the foreign relations of the executive, there were no judicial or manageable standards by which to judge such issues.[275] It has been held, for example, that judicial review would not be appropriate in a matter which would have serious international repercussions and which was more properly the sphere of diplomacy.[276] Although the Court of Appeal has noted that the keeping and disposal of foreign bank notes for commercial purposes in the UK could not be treated as sovereign acts so as to bring the activity within the protection of the Buttes non-justiciability doctrine, the acts in question had to be of a sovereign rather than of a commercial nature and performed within the territory of a foreign state.[277] Legislation can, of course, impinge upon the question as to whether an issue is or is not justiciable,[278] while the State Immunity Act 1978 removed sovereign immunity for commercial transactions.[279] to the area of relations between states . . . [and] . . . is a matter of political judgment . . . It is not part of domestic law reviewable here', ibid., para. 24 (and see para. 26). See also Lady Hale, ibid., para. 58.

273 [1982] AC 888; 64 ILR, p. 331.

274 [1982] AC 888, 931; 64 ILR, p. 344. See also Duke of Brunswick v. King of Hanover (1848) 1 HLC 1. See Fatima, Using International Law, pp. 385 ff. Note also R v. Director of the Serious Fraud Office and BAE Systems [2008] EWHC 714 (Admin), paras. 74 and 160.

275 [1982] AC 888, 938; 64 ILR, p. 351.

276 See e.g. R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Pirbhai 107 ILR, p. 462. But see the Abbasi case below, p. 188.

277 A Ltd v. B Bank 111 ILR, pp. 590, 594–6.

278 So that, for example, issues related to war crimes were justiciable in the light of the International Criminal Courts Act 2001: see R v. Jones [2006] UKHL 16, paras. 4 and 28; 132 ILR, pp. 672 and 683.

279 See Empresa Exportadora de Azucar v. Industria Azucarera Nacional SA [1983] 2 LL. R 171, 194–5; 64 ILR, p. 368. See further below, chapter 13.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

One of the questions that the Court of Appeal addressed in Maclaine Watson v. International Tin Council[280] was whether in such circumstances the doctrine of non-justiciability survived. It was emphasised that the two concepts of immunity and non-justiciability had to be kept separate and concern was expressed that the Buttes non-justiciability principle could be used to prevent proceedings being brought against states in commercial matters, contrary to the Act.[281]

The issue of justiciability was discussed in Maclaine Watson v. Department of Trade and Industry both by the Court of Appeal[282] and by the House of Lords[283] in the context of the creation of the collapsed International Tin Council by a group of states by a treaty which was unincorporated into English law. Kerr LJ emphasised that the doctrine in this context rested upon the principles that unincorporated treaties do not form part of the law of England and that such international agreements were not contracts which the courts could enforce.[284] However, this did not prevent reference to an unincorporated treaty where it was necessary or convenient, for example in order to assess the legal nature of the International Tin Council.[285] Lord Oliver in the House of Lords decision reaffirmed the essence of the doctrine of non-justiciability. He noted that it was > axiomatic that municipal courts have not and cannot have the competence to adjudicate upon or to enforce the rights arising out of transactions entered into by independent sovereign states between themselves on the plane of international law.[286]

However, this did not mean that the court must never look at or construe a treaty. A treaty could be examined as a part of the factual background against which a particular issue has arisen.[287] It was pointed out that the creation of the Council by a group of states was a sovereign act and that the adjudication of the rights and obligations between the member states of the Council and the Council itself could only be undertaken on the international plane.[288] In other words, the

[280] [1988] 3 WLR 1169; 80 ILR, p. 191.
[281] [1988] 3 WLR 1169, 1188 per Kerr LJ; 80 ILR, p. 209.
[282] [1988] 3 WLR 1033; 80 ILR, p. 49. [283] [1989] 3 All ER 523; 81 ILR, p. 671.
[284] [1988] 3 WLR 1033, 1075; 80 ILR, pp. 49, 86.
[285] [1988] 3 WLR 1033, 1075–6. See also Nourse LJ, ibid., p. 1130; 80 ILR, p. 148.
[286] [1989] 3 All ER 523, 544; 81 ILR, pp. 671, 700. See also R v. Director of the Serious Fraud Office and BAE Systems [2008] EWHC 714 (Admin), para. 107.
[287] [1989] 3 All ER 523, 545; 81 ILR, p. 701.
[288] [1989] 3 All ER 523, 559; 81 ILR, p. 722. See also Ralph Gibson LJ in the Court of Appeal judgment, [1988] 3 WLR 1033, 1143–4; 80 ILR, pp. 49, 163.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

situation appeared to involve not only the Buttes form of act of state non-justiciability, but also non-justiciability on the basis of an unincorporated treaty.[289]

Hoffmann LJ in Littrell v. USA (No. 2)[290] pointed out in the context of a status of forces agreement (providing for the placement of NATO troops in the UK) that the courts could look at such agreement to ensure that the foreign troops were here by invitation since the conclusion of a treaty was as much a fact as any other,[291] but this could not be taken to mean that the courts would actually enforce the terms of an unincorporated treaty. Additionally, it would not be open to the courts to determine whether a foreign sovereign state had broken a treaty.[292] The basic position is that: 'Ordinarily speaking, English courts will not rule upon the true meaning and effect of international instruments which apply only at the level of international law.'[293] Further, the English courts are likely to decline to seek to determine an issue where this could be 'damaging to the public interest in the field of international relations, national security or defence'.[294] Lord Bingham noted in R v. Jones that the courts would be 'very slow to adjudicate upon rights arising out of transactions entered into between [289] But see Re McKerr, where Lord Steyn noted that faced with the narrowness of this decision, a critical re-examination of this area of the law might become necessary in the future in the light of the 'growing support for the view that human rights treaties enjoy a special status', [2004] UKHL 12, paras. 51–2.

[290] [1995] 1 WLR 82, 93.

[291] Similarly, Colman J in Westland Helicopters Ltd v. Arab Organisation for Industrialisation [1995] 2 WLR 126, 149, held that reference to the terms of the treaty establishing an international organisation and to the terms of the basic statute of that organisation in order to ascertain the governing law of that organisation and its precise nature did not transgress the boundary between what was justiciable and what was non-justiciable.

[292] See British Airways Board v. Laker Airways Ltd [1985] AC 58, 85–6; Ex parte Molyneaux [1986] 1 WLR 331; 87 ILR, p. 329 and Westland Helicopters Ltd v. Arab Organisation for Industrialisation [1995] 2 WLR 126, 136. See also Minister for Arts Heritage and Environment v. Peko-Wallsend Ltd (1987) 75 ALR 218, 250–4; 90 ILR, pp. 32, 51–5, where the Australian Federal Court held that a Cabinet decision involving Australia's international relations in implementing a treaty was not a justiciable matter, and Arab Republic of Syria v. Arab Republic of Egypt 91 ILR, pp. 288, 305–6, where the Supreme Court of Brazil held that the courts of a third state could not exercise jurisdiction in a matter essentially of state succession between two other states even where the property was within the jurisdiction.

[293] CND v. Prime Minister of the UK and Others [2002] EWHC 2777 (Admin), paras. 23, 36 and 47. See also R v. Lyons [2002] 3 WLR 1562; 131 ILR, p. 538.

[294] CND v. Prime Minister of the UK, para. 47, cited with approval by the Irish High Court in Horgan v. An Taoiseach, judgment of 28 April 2003, as emphasising 'the strictly circumspect role which the courts adopt when called upon to exercise jurisdiction in relation to the Executive's conduct of international relations generally', 132 ILR, pp. 407, 440.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

sovereign states on the plane of international law'.[295] However, the rule is not absolute.[296] The courts are willing to look at the terms of an unincorporated treaty in specific situations: first, as noted above, in order to ascertain certain facts such as the existence and terms of, and the parties to, a treaty or where the treaty in question is incorporated into a contract or referred to in domestic legislation and is necessary to a particular decision, and secondly, where the national courts have to adjudicate upon the interpretation of a particular international treaty in order to determine private rights and obligations under domestic law.[297] The latter proposition would operate, for example, with regard to extradition and asylum cases where a view has to be taken with regard to the Geneva Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees, 1951 as a result of domestic legislation, the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996.[298] In Republic of Ecuador v. Occidental Exploration and Production Co., the Court of Appeal, while affirming this principle, emphasised that context was always important, so that a treaty intended by its signatories to give rise to rights in favour of private investors capable of enforcement under the treaty in consensual arbitration against one or other of its signatory states in domestic proceedings would fall within this exception and thus be justiciable.[299] The exception to non-justiciability laid down in the CND and Occidental cases was reaffirmed in In the Matter of AY Bank Ltd,[300] where it was held that the right to prove in the liquidation of a joint venture bank in the UK (involving the National Bank of Yugoslavia), upon the dissolution of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and its National Bank and consequential apportionment among the successor states, arose in domestic law, so [295] [2006] UKHL 16, para. 30; 132 ILR, p. 684. See also R (Islamic Human Rights Commission) v. CAA [2006] EWHC 2465; 132 ILR, p. 707, and R (Gentle) v. Prime Minister [2008] UKHL 20, above, p. 181, note 272.

[296] See Lord Oliver in JH Rayner (Mincing Lane) Ltd v. Department of Trade and Industry [1990] 2 AC 418, 500. Lord Steyn in Kuwait Airways Corporation v. Iraqi Airways Co. (Nos. 4 and 5) [2002] 2 AC 883, 1101 considered that the principle was not 'a categorical rule'. See also Fatima, Using International Law, pp. 273 ff.

[297] See e.g. CND v. Prime Minister [2002] EWHC 2777 (Admin), paras. 35–6 (Simon Brown LJ) and 61(iii) (Richards J).

[298] See e.g. Ex parte Adan [2000] UKHL 67.

[299] [2005] EWCA Cic 1116, paras. 31 and 37. Mance LJ went on to say that 'For the English Court to treat the extent of such rights as non-justiciable would appear to us to involve an extension, rather than an application, of existing doctrines developed in different contexts', ibid. See also paras. 39–42. Somewhat confusingly, Mance LJ concluded that the doctrine of non-justiciability could not be ousted by consent, ibid., para. 57.

[300] [2006] EWHC 830 (Ch), paras. 51 ff. See also R v. Director of the Serious Fraud Office and BAE Systems [2008] EWHC 714 (Admin), paras. 118–20.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

that the existence of the Agreement on Succession Issues, signed by the successor states formally apportioning the assets and debts of the Former Yugoslavia, did not render the question non-justiciable.

The principle of non-justiciability, which includes but goes beyond the concept of act of state,[301] must exist in an international system founded upon sovereign and formally equal states.[302] Having said that, there is no doubt that the extent of the doctrine is open to question. While the courts would regard a question concerning the constitutionality of a foreign government as non-justiciable[303] and would not as a general rule inquire into the validity of acts done in a sovereign capacity, such as the constitutionality of foreign laws,[304] the latter proposition may be subject to exceptions. The House of Lords addressed the question in Kuwait Airways Corporation v. Iraqi Airways Company.[305] Lord Nicholls noted that in appropriate circumstances it was legitimate for an English court to have regard to the content of international law in deciding whether to recognise a foreign law and it did not flow inevitably from the non-justiciability principle that the judiciary must ignore a breach of international law committed by one state against another 'where the breach is plain and, indeed, acknowledged'.[306] In such cases, the difficulty discussed by Lord Wilberforce in Buttes Gas and Oil concerning the lack of judicial or manageable standards by which to deal with a sovereignty dispute between two foreign states did not apply.[307] The acceptability of a provision of foreign law had to be judged by contemporary standards and the courts had to give effect to clearly established rules of international law.[308] Where foreign legislation [301] A distinction has recently been drawn between a narrower doctrine of act of state, which concerns the recognition of acts of a foreign state within its own territory, and a broader principle of non-justiciability in respect of 'certain sovereign acts' of a foreign state: see Mance J in Kuwait Airways Corporation v. Iraqi Airways Company 116 ILR, pp. 534, 568, basing himself upon Lord Wilberforce in Buttes Gas and Oil v. Hammer [1982] AC 888, 930–2; 64 ILR, p. 331. Mance J's analysis was approved by Lord Lloyd in Ex Parte Pinochet (No. 1) [2000] 1 AC 61, 102; 119 ILR, pp. 51, 91.

[302] See e.g. the decision of the Belgian Conseil d'État in T v. Belgium on 9 April 1998 that the process of declaring a foreign diplomat persona non grata was not justiciable both because the request from the receiving state was a matter between states and because it was the sending state that had to recall the person in question or terminate his functions and the Conseil d'État had no jurisdiction over an act emanating from a foreign state: 115 ILR, p. 442.

[303] See e.g. Ex parte Turkish Cypriot Association 112 ILR, p. 735.

[304] See Buck v. Attorney-General [1965] 1 Ch. 745; 42 ILR, p. 11.

[305] Decision of 16 May 2002, [2002] UKHL 19; 125 ILR, p. 677.

[306] Ibid., para. 26. [307] See above, p. 182.

[308] [2002] UKHL 19, para. 28. See also Blathwayt v. Baron Cawley [1976] AC 397, 426 and Oppenheimer v. Cattermole [1976] AC 249, 278.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

was adopted consequential upon a fundamental breach of international law (such as the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in 1990 and seizure of its assets), enforcement or recognition of such law by the courts would be 'manifestly contrary to the public policy of English law'. Further, it was emphasised that international law recognised that a national court may decline to give effect to legislative and other acts of foreign states which are in violation of international law.[309] Lord Steyn noted that the extension of the public policy exception to recognition of foreign laws from human rights violations to 'flagrant breaches of international law' was correct. Reference was made to the UN Charter, binding Security Council resolutions and international opinion in general.[310] Lord Hope emphasised that 'very narrow limits must be placed on any exception to the act of state rule', but there was no need for restraint on grounds of public policy 'where it is plain beyond dispute that a clearly established norm of international law has been violated'.[311] He concluded that 'a legislative act by a foreign state which is in flagrant breach of clearly established rules of international law ought not to be recognised by the courts of this country as forming part of the lex situs of that state'.[312]

The courts may also not feel constrained in expressing their views as to foreign sovereign activities where a breach of international law, particularly human rights, is involved[313] and may not feel constrained from investigating, in a dispute involving private rights, the legal validity of an act done by a citizen purporting to act on behalf of the sovereign or sovereign state.[314] It is clear that the courts will regard as non-justiciable policy decisions by the government concerning relationships with friendly foreign states, on the basis that foreign policy is pre-eminently an area for the government and not the courts.[315] In particular, a number of cases have laid down the proposition that decisions taken by the executive in its dealings with foreign states regarding the protection of British citizens abroad are non-justiciable.[316]

[309] [2002] UKHL 19, para. 29. See also Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 371 ff.
[310] [2002] UKHL 19, para. 114. [311] Ibid., paras. 138–40.
[312] Ibid., para. 148. See also Lord Scott, ibid., para. 192.
[313] See e.g. Abbasi v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2002] EWCA Civ. 1598, paras. 57 and 66 (per Lord Phillips MR); 126 ILR, pp. 710 and 713.
[314] See e.g. Dubai Bank v. Galadari, The Times, 14 July 1990.
[315] See Ex parte Everett [1989] 1 QB 811; 84 ILR, p. 713; Ex parte Ferhut Butt 116 ILR, pp. 607, 620–1, and Foday Saybana Sankoh 119 ILR, pp. 389, 396. See further above, p. 180.
[316] See e.g. Council of Civil Service Unions v. Minister for the Civil Service [1985] 1 AC 374, 411 (per Lord Diplock); Ex parte Pirbhai 107 ILR, pp. 462, 479; Ex parte Ferhut Butt 116 ILR, pp. 607, 615 and 622 and R (Suresh and Manickavasagam) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2001] EWHC Admin 1028, para. 19; 123 ILR, p. 598.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

This approach, however, is subject to some qualification.[317] This concerns in particular the evolving law of judicial review[318] both with regard to its scope concerning the executive and in terms of 'legitimate expectation',[319] or a reasonable expectation that a regular practice will continue. Where diplomatic protection of a national abroad is concerned, the Court of Appeal has noted that 'The Secretary of State must be free to give full weight to foreign policy considerations, which are not justiciable. However, this does not mean the whole process is immune from judicial scrutiny. The citizen's legitimate expectation is that his request will be "considered", and that in that consideration all relevant factors will be thrown into the balance.'[320] Taylor LJ referred, for example, in ex parte Everett to the 'normal expectation of every citizen' that, if he were subjected abroad to a violation of a fundamental right, the British government would not simply wash their hands of the matter and abandon him to his fate.[321] The Court in Abbasi concluded that judicial review would lie where the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, contrary to its stated policy, refused even to consider whether to make diplomatic representations on behalf of a subject whose fundamental rights were being violated. However, beyond this, no general proposition could be stated, being dependent upon the precise circumstances. In particular, there was no enforceable duty to protect the citizen, only a discretion.[322] In Al-Rawi v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the Court of Appeal denied that any such legitimate expectation as to the exercise of discretion would extend to the position of non-nationals.[323]

The approach in Abbasi was approved in Kaunda v. The President of the Republic of South Africa by the Constitutional Court of South Africa, [317] See Lord Phillips MR in Abbasi v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2002] EWCA Civ. 1598, paras. 80 ff; 126 ILR, p. 718.

[318] See e.g. S. A. De Smith, H. Woolf and J. Jowell, Judicial Review, 5th edn, London, 1998, pp. 419 ff.

[319] See Secretary of State for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office v. The Queen (on the application of Bancoult) [2007] EWCA Civ 498, paras. 72 ff.

[320] Per Lord Phillips MR in Abassi v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2002] EWCA Civ. 1598, para. 99.

[321] [1989] 1 QB 811, paras. 96–8.

[322] [2002] EWCA Civ 1598, paras. 104–7. The court concluded that this discretion was a very wide one but there was no reason why the decision or inaction of the Foreign Office should not be reviewable if it can be shown that the same is irrational or contrary to legitimate expectation. However, the court could not enter into the forbidden areas, including decisions affecting foreign policy, ibid., para. 106(iii). See also R v. Director of the Serious Fraud Office and BAE Systems [2008] EWHC 714 (Admin), para. 56.

[323] [2006] EWCA Civ 1279, para. 89.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

which noted that 'A decision as to whether, and if so, what protection should be given, is an aspect of foreign policy which is essentially the function of the executive.'[324] This did not mean that the South African courts had no jurisdiction to deal with issues concerned with diplomatic protection. Since the exercise of all public power was subject to constitutional control, this would also apply to an allegation that the government has failed to respond appropriately to a request for diplomatic protection. If, for instance, the decision were to be irrational or made in bad faith, the court could intervene to require the government to deal with the matter properly.[325]

Australian courts also have emphasised the importance of separation of powers and the need for courts to exercise considerable caution with regard to foreign policy, expressly citing the Buttes case.[326] The question of justiciability was one for the federal judicial branch.[327] It has been noted, for example, that any question of a dispute as to the assessment made by the executive and legislative branches of government of the 'terrorist threat' to the safety of the public would not be justiciable, but that this situation would change upon the adoption of relevant legislation.[328]

The US courts have similarly recognised the existence of areas of non-justiciability for sensitive political reasons. This is usually referred to as the political question doctrine and operates to prevent the courts from considering issues of political delicacy in the field of foreign affairs.[329] In [324] CCT 23/04, [2004] ZACC 5, para. 77 (per Chief Justice Chaskalson). See also Swissborough Diamond Mines v. South Africa, Supreme Court, Transvaal Provincial Division, 1997, 132 ILR, p. 454, and the decision of the German Federal Constitutional Court in Hess, where it was held that 'the Federal Government enjoys wide discretion in deciding the question of whether and in what manner to grant protection against foreign States', BVerfGE 55, 349; 90 ILR 386, 395.

[325] CCT 23/04, [2004] ZACC 5, paras. 78–80.

[326] See the decision of the High Court of Australia in Thorpe v. Commonwealth of Australia (No. 3) (1997) 144 ALR 677, 690–1; 118 ILR, p. 353; Re Ditfort (1988) 19 FCR 347, 369; 87 ILR, p. 170; Petrotimor Companhia de Petroleos SARL v. Commonwealth of Australia [2003] FCAFC 3, and Victoria Leasing Ltd v. United States (2005) 218 ALR 640. See also G. Lindell, 'The Justiciability of Political Questions: Recent Developments' in Australian Constitutional Perspectives (eds. H. P. Lee and G. Winterton), Sydney, 1992, p. 180, and R. Garnett, 'Foreign States in Australian Courts', Melbourne University Law Review, 2005, p. 704.

[327] Wilson v. Minister for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Affairs [1996] HCA 18; (1996) 189 CLR 1 at 11.

[328] Thomas v. Mowbray [2007] HCA 33, para. 107.

[329] See e.g. Underhill v. Hernandez 168 US 250 (1897), Baker v. Carr 369 US 181 (1962) and American Insurance Association v. Garamendi, US Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, 23 June 2003. See also Henkin et al., International Law: Cases and Materials, p. 178;

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the Greenham Women against Cruise Missiles v. Reagan case,[330] for example, the Court held that a suit to prevent the US deployment of cruise missiles at an air force base in the UK constituted a non-justiciable political question, not appropriate for judicial resolution.[331] Similarly, issues relating to rights of succession to the assets of a foreign state were non-justiciable.[332] Much will depend upon the particular circumstances of the case. In Linder v. Portocarrero,[333] for instance, concerning the murder of a US citizen working for the Nicaraguan government by rebel forces (the Contras), the US Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit held that the political question doctrine was not implicated since the complaint neither challenged the legitimacy of US policy on Nicaragua nor sought to require the Court to decide who was right and who was wrong in the civil war in that country. The complaint was rather narrowly focused on the lawfulness of the conduct of the defendants in a single incident. In Koohi v. United States,[334] the US Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held that the courts were not precluded from reviewing military decisions, whether taken during war or peacetime, which caused injury to US or enemy civilians. The Court in Baker v. Carr,[335] the leading case on the political question doctrine, while noting that not every case touching foreign relations was non-justiciable, provided a list of six factors that might render a case non-justiciable.[336] The Court of Appeals underlined

L. Henkin, 'Is There a "Political Question" Doctrine?', 85 Yale Law Journal, 1976, p. 597; J. Charney, 'Judicial Deference in Foreign Relations', 83 AJIL, 1989, p. 805, and T. M. Franck, Political Questions/Judicial Answers: Does the Rule of Law Apply to Foreign Affairs?, Princeton, 1992.

330 591 F.Supp. 1332 (1984); 99 ILR, p. 44.

331 But see Japan Whaling Association v. American Cetacean Society 478 US 221 (1986), where the Supreme Court held that the judicial interpretation of a US statute, even if it involved foreign relations, was not a political question precluding justiciability. See also Dellums v. Bush 752 F.Supp. 1141 (1990).

332 See e.g. Can and Others v. United States 14 F.3d 160 (1994); 107 ILR, p. 255.

333 963 F.2d 332, 337 (1992); 99 ILR, pp. 54, 79.

334 976 F.2d 1328, 1331–2 (1992); 99 ILR, pp. 80, 84–5.

335 369 US 186, 211 (1962).

336 That there should be (1) a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a co-ordinate political department; or (2) a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; or (3) the impossibility of deciding without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for non-judicial discretion; or (4) the impossibility of a court's undertaking independent resolution without expressing lack of respect due co-ordinate branches of government; or (5) an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political decision already made; or (6) the potentiality of embarrassment of multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question, Baker, 369 US at 217. See also Schneider v. Kissinger 412 F.3d 190 (DC Cir. 2005); Bancoult v. McNamara 445 F.3d 427 (DC Cir. 2006); Gonzalez-Vera v. Kissinger 449 F.3d 1260 (2006).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in Kadić v. Karadžić[337] that 'judges should not reflexively invoke these doctrines [political question and act of state doctrines] to avoid difficult and somewhat sensitive decisions in the context of human rights'. The fact that judicially discoverable and manageable standards exist would indicate that the issues involved were indeed justiciable.[338] In Corrie v. Caterpillar, the US Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reaffirmed that the political question doctrine was a jurisdictional issue and that the Baker v. Carr factors precluded justiciability, noting in particular that the provision of military assistance by the US to foreign states constituted such a political question.[339]

Also relevant in the context of non-justiciability is the doctrine of act of state. The Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law[340] provides that 'in the absence of a treaty or other unambiguous agreements regarding controlling legal principles, courts in the United States will generally refrain from examining the validity of a taking by a foreign state of property within its own territory, or from sitting in judgment on other acts of a governmental character done by a foreign state within its own territory and applicable there'.[341] In Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino,[342] the US Supreme Court held that the act of state concept was not a rule of public international law, but related instead to internal constitutional balances.[343] It was a rule of judicial self-restraint. The Court declared that the judicial branch would not examine the validity of a taking of property within its own territory by a foreign sovereign government,[344] irrespective of the legality in international law of that action.[345] This basic approach [337] 1995 US App. LEXIS 28826.

[338] See e.g. Klinghoffer v. SNC Achille Lauro 937 F.2d 44 (1991); Nixon v. United States 122 L.Ed.2d 1 (1993); Can v. United States 14 F.3d 160 (1994); Schneider v. Kissinger 310 F.Supp. 2d 251, 257–64 (DDC 2004).

[339] 503 F.3d 974 CA 9 (Wash.), 2007.

[340] 1987, para. 443, pp. 366–7.

[341] This doctrine is subject to modification by act of Congress, ibid., para. 444.

[342] 376 US 398 (1964); 35 ILR, p. 2.

[343] 376 US 398, 427–8 (1964); 35 ILR, p. 37. In United States v. Noriega 746 F.Supp. 1506, 1521–3 (1990); 99 ILR, pp. 143, 163–5, the US District Court noted that the act of state doctrine was a function of the separation of powers, since it precluded judicial examination of the acts of foreign governments which might otherwise hinder the executive's conduct of foreign relations.

[344] 376 US 398 (1964); 35 ILR, p. 2.

[345] This approach was reversed by Congress in the Hickenlooper Amendment to the Foreign Assistance Act of 1964, Pub. L No. 86–663, para. 301(d)(4), 78 Stat. 1013 (1964), 79 Stat. 653, 659, as amended 22 USC, para. 23470(e)(2), (1982). Note that in Williams & Humbert Ltd v. W & H Trade Marks (Jersey) Ltd [1986] 1 All ER 129; 75 ILR, p. 312, the House of Lords held that an English court would recognise a foreign law effecting

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

was supported in a subsequent case,[346] whereas in Alfred Dunhill of London Inc. v. Republic of Cuba[347] the Supreme Court employed sovereign immunity concepts as the reason for not recognising the repudiation of the commercial obligations of a state instrumentality as an act of state. However, it now appears that there is an exception to the strict act of state doctrine where a relevant treaty provision between the parties specifies the standard of compensation to be payable and thus provides 'controlling legal principles'.[348]

In an important case in 1990, the Supreme Court examined anew the extent of the act of state doctrine. Kirkpatrick v. Environmental Tectonics[349] concerned a claim brought by an unsuccessful bidder on a Nigerian government contract in circumstances where the successful rival had bribed Nigerian officials. The Court unanimously held that the act of state doctrine did not apply since the validity of a foreign sovereign act was not at issue. The Court also made the point that act of state issues only arose when a court 'must decide – that is, when the outcome of the case turns upon – the effect of official action by a foreign sovereign'.[350] While the doctrine clearly meant that a US court had to accept that the acts of foreign sovereigns taken within their jurisdictions were to be deemed valid, this did not extend to cases and controversies that might embarrass foreign governments in situations falling outside this. Act of state was not to be extended.[351]

Executive certificates

There is an established practice adopted by the British courts of applying to the executive branch of government for the conclusive ascertainment compulsory acquisition and any change of title to property which came under the control of the foreign state as a result and would accept and enforce the consequences of that compulsory acquisition without considering its merits.

346 First National City Bank v. Banco Nacional de Cuba 406 US 759 (1972); 66 ILR, p. 102.

347 96 S. Ct. 1854 (1976); 66 ILR, p. 212. See also M. Halberstam, 'Sabbatino Resurrected', 79 AJIL, 1985, p. 68.

348 See Kalamazoo Spice Extraction Co. v. Provisional Military Government of Socialist Ethiopia 729 F.2d 422 (1984). See also AIG v. Iran 493 F.Supp. 522 (1980) and Justice Harlan in the Sabbatino case, 376 US 398, 428 (1964); 35 ILR, pp. 25, 37.

349 110 S. Ct. 701 (1990); 88 ILR, p. 93. 350 110 S.Ct. 701, 705 (1990).

351 See also Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, pp. 366–89; Bandes v. Harlow & Jones 82 AJIL, 1988, p. 820, where the Court of Appeals held that the act of state doctrine was inapplicable to takings by a foreign state of property located outside its territory, and First American Corp. v. Al-Nahyan 948 F.Supp. 1107 (1996). Note that the party claiming the application of the doctrine bears the burden of proving its applicability: see Daventree Ltd v. Republic of Azerbaijan 349 F.Supp.2d 736, 754 (SDNY 2004).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of certain facts. Examples include the status of a foreign state or government, questions as to whether a state of war is in operation as regards a particular country or as between two foreign states, and whether or not a particular person is entitled to diplomatic status. This means that in such matters of state the courts will consult the government and regard the executive certificate (or Foreign Office certificate as it is sometimes called), which is issued following the request, as conclusive, irrespective of any relevant rules of international law.[352] This was firmly acknowledged in Duff Development Co. Ltd v. Kelantan,[353] which concerned the status of the state of Kelantan in the Malay Peninsula and whether it was able to claim immunity in the English courts. The government declared that it was regarded as an independent state and the House of Lords noted that 'where such a statement is forthcoming, no other evidence is admissible or needed', and that:

> it was not the business of the Court to inquire whether the Colonial Office rightly concluded that the Sultan [of Kelantan] was entitled to be recognised as a sovereign by international law.[354]

This basic position was reaffirmed in R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Trawnik,[355] in which it was held that certificates under section 40(3) of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 and section 21 of the State Immunity Act 1978 were reviewable in the courts only if they constituted a nullity in that they were not genuine certificates or if, on their face, they had been issued outside the scope of the relevant statutory power. The contents of such certificates were conclusive of the matters contained therein and, in so far as they related to recognition of foreign states, were matters within the realm of the royal prerogative and not subject to judicial review.

Problems have arisen in the context of the decision of the UK announced in 1980 not to accord recognition to governments, but rather to treat the question of an unconstitutional change of regimes as one [352] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 1046 ff.

[353] [1924] AC 797; 2 AD, p. 124. See also The Fagernes [1927] P. 311; 3 AD, p. 126 and Post Office v. Estuary Radio Ltd [1968] 2 QB 740; 43 ILR, p. 114. But cf. Hesperides Hotels v. Aegean Turkish Holidays [1978] 1 All ER 277; 73 ILR p. 9.

[354] Note that under s. 7, Diplomatic Privileges Act 1964 and s. 21, State Immunity Act 1978, such certificates are 'conclusive evidence' as to issues of diplomatic and state immunity. See also s. 8, International Organisations Act 1968, and see further below, chapter 13.

[355] The Times, 18 April 1985, p. 4. See also C. Warbrick, 'Executive Certificates in Foreign Affairs: Prospects for Review and Control', 35 ICLQ, 1986, p. 138, and E. Wilmshurst, 'Executive Certificates in Foreign Affairs: The United Kingdom', 35 ICLQ, 1986, p. 157.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

relating to diplomatic relations.[356] In Republic of Somalia v. Woodhouse Drake and Carey (Suisse) SA,[357] the court was faced with a confused situation concerning whether the interim government of Somalia was actually in effective control and the extent to which other factions controlled different areas of the country. The court noted that in reaching its decision as to whether the interim government was or was not the valid successor to the former legitimate government in the light of the degree of actual control exercised over the country, letters from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office became part of the evidence in the case. In so far as the three letters concerned statements as to what was happening in the country, 'such letters may not be the best evidence', but in so far as they dealt with the question as to whether and to what extent the UK government had dealings with the foreign government, such letters 'will almost certainly be the best and only conclusive evidence of that fact'.[358]

The United States State Department similarly offers 'suggestions' on such matters, although they tend to be more extensive than their British counterparts, and include comments upon the issues and occasionally the views of the executive.[359]

Suggestions for further reading

A. Cassese, 'Modern Constitutions and International Law', 192 HR, 1985 III, p. 335

S. Fatima, Using International Law in Domestic Courts, Oxford, 2005

D. Feldman, 'Monism, Dualism and Constitutional Legitimacy', 20 Australian YIL, 1999, p. 105

J. F. Murphy, The United States and the Rule of Law in International Affairs, Cambridge, 2004

J. J. Paust, International Law as Law of the United States, Durham, NC, 1996

Y. Shany, Regulating Jurisdictional Relations Between National and International Courts, Oxford, 2007

[356] See further below, chapter 9, p. 454.

[357] [1993] QB 54, 64–8; 94 ILR, pp. 608, 618–23.

[358] [1993] QB 54, 65; 94 ILR, pp. 608, 619. See also Sierra Leone Telecommunications Co. Ltd v. Barclays Bank [1998] 2 All ER 821; 114 ILR, p. 466 and North Cyprus Tourism Centre Ltd v. Transport for London [2005] EWHC 1698 (Admin).

[359] O'Connell, International Law, pp. 119–22. See The Pisaro 255 US 216 (1921); Anderson v. NV Transandine Handelmaatschappij 289 NY 9 (1942); 10 AD, p. 10; Mexico v. Hoffman 324 US 30 (1945); 12 AD, p. 143, and the Navemar 303 US 68 (1938); 9 AD, p. 176. See also M. Chorazak, 'Clarity and Confusion: Did Republic of Austria v. Altmann Revive State Department Suggestions of Foreign Sovereign Immunity?', 55 Duke Law Journal, 2005, p. 373.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

5

The subjects of international law

Legal personality – introduction

In any legal system, certain entities, whether they be individuals or companies, will be regarded as possessing rights and duties enforceable at law.[1] Thus an individual may prosecute or be prosecuted for assault and a company can sue for breach of contract. They are able to do this because the law recognises them as 'legal persons' possessing the capacity to have and to maintain certain rights, and being subject to perform specific duties. Just which persons will be entitled to what rights in what circumstances will depend upon the scope and character of the law. But it is the function of the law to apportion such rights and duties to such entities as it sees fit. Legal personality is crucial. Without it institutions and groups cannot operate, for they need to be able to maintain and enforce claims. In municipal law individuals, limited companies and public corporations are recognised as each possessing a distinct legal personality, the terms of which are circumscribed by the relevant legislation.[2] It is the law which [1] See e.g. I. Brownlie, Principles of Public International Law, 6th edn, Oxford, 2003, part II; J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2006; D. P. O'Connell, International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1970, vol. I; J. W. Verzijl, International Law in Historical Perspective, Leiden, 1969, vol. II; O. Lissitzyn, 'Territorial Entities other than Independent States in the Law of Treaties', 125 HR, 1968, p. 5; C. Berezowski, in Mélanges Offerts à Juraj Andrassy (ed. Ibler), 1968, p. 31; H. Lauterpacht, International Law: Collected Papers, Cambridge, 1975, vol. II, p. 487; C. Rousseau, Droit International Public, Paris, 1974, vol. II; N. Mugerwa, 'Subjects of International Law' in Manual of Public International Law (ed. M. Sørensen), London, 1968, p. 247; G. Schwarzenberger, International Law, 3rd edn, London, 1957, vol. I, p. 89; A. Cassese, International Law in a Divided World, Oxford, 1986, chapter 4, and Cassese, International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005, part II; International Law: Achievements and Prospects (ed. M. Bedjaoui), Paris, 1991, part 1, title 1; Oppenheim's International Law (eds. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992, chapter 2; R. Higgins, Problems and Process, Oxford, 1994, chapter 3; L. Henkin, R. Pugh, O. Schachter and H. Smit, International Law: Cases and Materials, 3rd edn, St Paul, 1993, chapters 4 and 5, and S. Rosenne, 'The Perplexities of Modern International Law', 291 HR, 2001, chapter VII.

[2] R. Dias, Jurisprudence, 5th edn, London, 1985, chapter 12.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

will determine the scope and nature of personality. Personality involves the examination of certain concepts within the law such as status, capacity, competence, as well as the nature and extent of particular rights and duties. The status of a particular entity may well be determinative of certain powers and obligations, while capacity will link together the status of a person with particular rights and duties. The whole process operates within the confines of the relevant legal system, which circumscribes personality, its nature and definition. This is especially true in international law. A particular view adopted of the system will invariably reflect upon the question of the identity and nature of international legal persons.[3]

Personality in international law necessitates the consideration of the interrelationship between rights and duties afforded under the international system and capacity to enforce claims. One needs to have close regard to the rules of international law in order to determine the precise nature of the capacity of the entity in question. Certain preliminary issues need to be faced. Does the personality of a particular claimant, for instance, depend upon its possession of the capacity to enforce rights? Indeed, is there any test of the nature of enforcement, or can even the most restrictive form of operation on the international scene be sufficient? One view suggests, for example, that while the quality of responsibility for violation of a rule usually co-exists with the quality of being able to enforce a complaint against a breach in any legal person, it would be useful to consider those possessing one of these qualities as indeed having juridical personality.[4] Other writers, on the other hand, emphasise the crucial role played by the element of enforceability of rights within the international system.[5]

However, a range of factors needs to be carefully examined before it can be determined whether an entity has international personality and, if so, what rights, duties and competences apply in the particular case. Personality is a relative phenomenon varying with the circumstances. One of the distinguishing characteristics of contemporary international law has been the wide range of participants. These include states, international organisations, regional organisations, non-governmental organisations, public companies, private companies and individuals. To these may be added groups engaging in international terrorism. Not all such entities

[3] See, for example, the Soviet view: G. I. Tunkin, Theory of International Law, London, 1974.

[4] See e.g. M. Sørensen, 'Principes de Droit International Public', 101 HR, 1960, pp. 5, 127. For a wider definition, see H. Mosler, The International Society as a Legal Community, Dordrecht, 1980, p. 32.

[5] See e.g. Verzijl, International Law, p. 3.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

will constitute legal persons, although they may act with some degree of influence upon the international plane. International personality is participation plus some form of community acceptance. The latter element will be dependent upon many different factors, including the type of personality under question. It may be manifested in many forms and may in certain cases be inferred from practice. It will also reflect a need. Particular branches of international law here are playing a crucial role. Human rights law, the law relating to armed conflicts and international economic law are especially important in generating and reflecting increased participation and personality in international law.

States

Despite the increasing range of actors and participants in the international legal system, states remain by far the most important legal persons and despite the rise of globalisation and all that this entails, states retain their attraction as the primary focus for the social activity of humankind and thus for international law.

Lauterpacht observed that: 'the orthodox positivist doctrine has been explicit in the affirmation that only states are subjects of international law'.[6] However, it is less clear that in practice this position was maintained. The Holy See (particularly from 1871 to 1929), insurgents and belligerents, international organisations, chartered companies and various territorial entities such as the League of Cities were all at one time or another treated as possessing the capacity to become international persons.[7]

Creation of statehood[8]

The relationship in this area between factual and legal criteria is a crucial shifting one. Whether the birth of a new state is primarily a question of [6] Lauterpacht, International Law, p. 489.

[7] See Verzijl, International Law, pp. 17–43, and Lauterpacht, International Law, pp. 494–500. See also the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 39; 59 ILR, pp. 30, 56, and Survey of International Law in Relation to the Work of Codification of the International Law Commission, Memorandum of the Secretary-General, 1949, A/CN.4/1/Rev.1, p. 24.

[8] See in particular Crawford, Creation of States, chapter 2; R. Higgins, The Development of International Law through the Political Organs of the United Nations, Oxford, 1963, pp. 11–57; K. Marek, Identity and Continuity of States in Public International Law, 2nd edn, Leiden, 1968; M. Whiteman, Digest of International Law, Washington, 1963, vol. I, pp. 221–33, 283–476, and Nguyen Quoc Dinh, P. Daillier and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 7th edn, Paris, 2002, p. 407. See also Société Française pour le Droit International, L'État Souverain, Paris, 1994; L. Henkin, International Law: Politics and Values, Dordrecht, 1995, chapter 1; R. H. Jackson, Quasi-States: Sovereignty, International Relations and the fact or law and how the interaction between the criteria of effectiveness and other relevant legal principles may be reconciled are questions of considerable complexity and significance. Since terrae nullius are no longer apparent,[9] the creation of new states in the future, once the decolonisation process is at an end, can only be accomplished as a result of the diminution or disappearance of existing states, and the need for careful regulation thus arises. Recent events such as the break-up of the Soviet Union, the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia underline this. In addition, the decolonisation movement has stimulated a re-examination of the traditional criteria. Article 1 of the Montevideo Convention on Rights and Duties of States, 1933[10] lays down the most widely accepted formulation of the criteria of statehood in international law. It notes that the state as an international person should possess the following qualifications: '(a) a permanent population; (b) a defined territory; (c) government; and (d) capacity to enter into relations with other states'.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Arbitration Commission of the European Conference on Yugoslavia[11] in Opinion No. 1 declared that 'the state is commonly defined as a community which consists of a territory and a population subject to an organised political authority' and that 'such a state is characterised by sovereignty'. It was also noted that the form of internal political organisation and constitutional provisions constituted 'mere facts', although it was necessary to take them into account in order to determine the government's sway over the population and the territory.[12]

Such provisions are neither exhaustive nor immutable. As will be seen below, other factors may be relevant, including self-determination and recognition, while the relative weight given to such criteria in particular Third World, Cambridge, 1990, and A. James, Sovereign Statehood: The Basis of International Society, London, 1986.

[9] See, as regards Antarctica, O'Connell, International Law, p. 451. See also below, chapter 10, p. 535.

[10] 165 LNTS 19. International law does not require the structure of a state to follow any particular pattern: Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 43–4; 59 ILR, pp. 30, 60–1.

[11] Established pursuant to the Declaration of 27 August 1991 of the European Community: see Bull. EC, 7/8 (1991). See generally, M. Craven, 'The EC Arbitration Commission on Yugoslavia', 65 BYIL, 1994, p. 333, and below, p. 210.

[12] 92 ILR, pp. 162, 165. Note that Oppenheim's International Law, p. 120, provides that 'a state proper is in existence when a people is settled in a territory under its own sovereign government'.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

situations may very well vary. What is clear, however, is that the relevant framework revolves essentially around territorial effectiveness.

The existence of a permanent population[13] is naturally required and there is no specification of a minimum number of inhabitants, as examples such as Nauru and Tuvalu[14] demonstrate. However, one of the issues raised by the Falkland Islands conflict does relate to the question of an acceptable minimum with regard to self-determination issues,[15] and it may be that the matter needs further clarification as there exists a number of small islands awaiting decolonisation.[16]

The need for a defined territory focuses upon the requirement for a particular territorial base upon which to operate. However, there is no necessity in international law for defined and settled boundaries. A state may be recognised as a legal person even though it is involved in a dispute with its neighbours as to the precise demarcation of its frontiers, so long as there is a consistent band of territory which is undeniably controlled by the government of the alleged state. For this reason at least, therefore, the 'State of Palestine' declared in November 1988 at a conference in Algiers cannot be regarded as a valid state. The Palestinian organisations did not control any part of the territory they claim.[17]

Albania prior to the First World War was recognised by many countries even though its borders were in dispute.[18] More recently, Israel has been accepted by the majority of nations as well as the United Nations as a valid state despite the fact that its frontiers have not been finally settled [13] A nomadic population might not thus count for the purposes of territorial sovereignty, although the International Court in the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 63–5; 59 ILR, pp. 30, 80–2, held that nomadic peoples did have certain rights with regard to the land they traversed.

[14] Populations of some 12,000 and 10,000 respectively: see Whitaker's Almanack, London, 2003, pp. 1010 and 1089.

[15] See below, p. 251.

[16] But see, as regards artificial islands, United States v. Ray 51 ILR, p. 225; Chierici and Rosa v. Ministry of the Merchant Navy and Harbour Office of Rimini 71 ILR, p. 283, and Re Duchy of Sealand 80 ILR, p. 683.

[17] See Keesing's Record of World Events, p. 36438 (1989). See also General Assembly resolution 43/77; R. Lapidoth and K. Calvo-Goller, 'Les Éléments Constitutifs de l'État et la Déclaration du Conseil National Palestinien du 15 Novembre 1988', AFDI, 1992, p. 777; J. Crawford, 'The Creation of the State of Palestine: Too Much Too Soon?', 1 EJIL, 1990, p. 307, and Crawford, 'Israel (1948–1949) and Palestine (1998–1999): Two Studies in the Creation of States' in The Reality of International Law (eds. G. Goodwin-Gill and S. Talmon), Oxford, 1999, p. 95. See below, p. 246, with regard to the evolution of Palestinian autonomy in the light of the Israel–Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) Declaration on Principles.

[18] See e.g. the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 32.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

and despite its involvement in hostilities with its Arab neighbours over its existence and territorial delineation.[19] What matters is the presence of a stable community within a certain area, even though its frontiers may be uncertain. Indeed, it is possible for the territory of the state to be split into distinct parts, for example Pakistan prior to the Bangladesh secession of 1971 or present-day Azerbaijan.

For a political society to function reasonably effectively it needs some form of government or central control. However, this is not a precondition for recognition as an independent country.[20] It should be regarded more as an indication of some sort of coherent political structure and society, than the necessity for a sophisticated apparatus of executive and legislative organs.[21] A relevant factor here might be the extent to which the area not under the control of the government is claimed by another state as a matter of international law as distinct from de facto control. The general requirement might be seen to relate to the nineteenth-century concern with 'civilisation' as an essential of independent statehood and ignores the modern tendency to regard sovereignty for non-independent peoples as the paramount consideration, irrespective of administrative conditions.[22]

As an example of the former tendency one may note the Aaland Islands case of 1920. The report of the International Committee of Jurists appointed to investigate the status of the islands remarked, with regard to the establishment of the Finnish Republic in the disordered days following the Russian revolution, that it was extremely difficult to name the date that Finland became a sovereign state. It was noted that:

[19] Brownlie, Principles, p. 71. In fact most of the new states emerging after the First World War were recognised de facto or de jure before their frontiers were determined by treaty: H. Lauterpacht, Recognition in International Law, Cambridge, 1948, p. 30. See Deutsche Continental Gas-Gesellschaft v. Polish State (1929), 5 AD, pp. 11, 15; the Mosul Boundary case, PCIJ, Series B, No. 12, p. 21; the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 32; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 62, and the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 22 and 26; 100 ILR, pp. 5, 21 and 25. See also Jessup speaking on behalf of the US regarding Israel's admission to the UN, SCOR, 3rd year, 383rd meeting, p. 41. The Minister of State of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in a statement on 5 February 1991, UKMIL, 62 BYIL, 1991, p. 557, noted that the UK 'recognises many states whose borders are not fully agreed with their neighbours'. See as to the doctrine of uti possidetis, the presumption that on independence entitites will retain existing boundaries, below, chapter 10, p. 525.

[20] See e.g. the Congo case, Higgins, Development, pp. 162–4, and C. Hoskyns, The Congo Since Independence, Oxford, 1965. See also Higgins, Problems and Process, p. 40, and Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, pp. 415 ff.

[21] See the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 43–4; 59 ILR, pp. 30, 60–1.

[22] See below, p. 251, on the right to self-determination.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> [t]his certainly did not take place until a stable political organisation had been created, and until the public authorities had become strong enough to assert themselves throughout the territories of the state without the assistance of the foreign troops.[23]

Recent practice with regard to the new states of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina emerging out of the former Yugoslavia suggests the modification of the criterion of effective exercise of control by a government throughout its territory. Both Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina were recognised as independent states by European Community member states[24] and admitted to membership of the United Nations (which is limited to 'states' by article 4 of the UN Charter[25])[26] at a time when both states were faced with a situation where non-governmental forces controlled substantial areas of the territories in question in civil war conditions. More recently, Kosovo declared independence on 17 February 2008 with certain Serb-inhabited areas apparently not under the control of the central government.[27] In such situations, lack of effective central control might be balanced by significant international recognition, culminating in membership of the UN. Nevertheless, a foundation of effective control is required for statehood. Conversely, however, a comprehensive breakdown in order and the loss of control by the central authorities in an independent state will not obviate statehood. Whatever the consequences in terms of possible humanitarian involvement, whether by the UN or otherwise depending upon the circumstances, the collapse of governance within a state (sometimes referred to as a 'failed state') has no necessary effect upon the status of that state as a state. Indeed the very [23] LNOJ Sp. Supp. No. 4 (1920), pp. 8–9. But cf. the view of the Commission of Rapporteurs in this case, LN Council Doc. B7 21/68/106 (1921), p. 22.

[24] On 15 January 1992 and 6 April 1992 respectively: see Keesing's Record of World Events, 1992, pp. 38703, 38704 and 38833. But see the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission's Opinion No. 5 of 11 January 1992 noting that Croatia had not met the requirements laid down in the Draft Convention on Yugoslavia of 4 November 1991 and in the Declaration on Yugoslavia and Guidelines on the Recognition of New States in Eastern Europe and in the Soviet Union of 16 December 1991: see 92 ILR, p. 178. Opinion No. 4 expressed reservations concerning the independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina pending the holding of a referendum. A referendum showing a majority for independence, however, was held prior to recognition by the EC member states and admission by the UN, ibid., p. 173. See also below, p. 209.

[25] See e.g. V. Gowland-Debbas, 'Collective Responses to the Unilateral Declarations of Independence of Southern Rhodesia and Palestine', 61 BYIL, 1990, p. 135.

[26] On 22 May 1992. See M. Weller, 'The International Response to the Dissolution of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia', 86 AJIL, 1992, p. 569.

[27] See further below, p. 204.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

designation of 'failed state' is controversial and, in terms of international law, misleading.[28]

The capacity to enter into relations with other states is an aspect of the existence of the entity in question as well as an indication of the importance attached to recognition by other countries. It is a capacity not limited to sovereign nations, since international organisations, non-independent states and other bodies can enter into legal relations with other entities under the rules of international law. But it is essential for a sovereign state to be able to create such legal relations with other units as it sees fit. Where this is not present, the entity cannot be an independent state. The concern here is not with political pressure by one country over another, but rather the lack of competence to enter into legal relations. The difference is the presence or absence of legal capacity, not the degree of influence that may affect decisions.

The essence of such capacity is independence. This is crucial to statehood and amounts to a conclusion of law in the light of particular circumstances. It is a formal statement that the state is subject to no other sovereignty and is unaffected either by factual dependence upon other states or by submission to the rules of international law.[29] It is arguable that a degree of actual as well as formal independence may also be necessary. This question was raised in relation to the grant of independence by South Africa to its Bantustans. In the case of the Transkei, for example, a considerable proportion, perhaps 90 per cent, of its budget at one time was contributed by South Africa, while Bophuthatswana was split into a series of areas divided by South African territory.[30] Both the Organisation of African Unity and the United Nations declared such 'independence' invalid and called upon all states not to recognise the new entities. These entities were, apart from South Africa, totally unrecognised.[31]

[28] See e.g. Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 719–22; S. Ratner, 'The Cambodia Settlement Agreements', 87 AJIL, 1993, p. 1, and T. M. Franck, 'The Democratic Entitlement', 29 University of Richmond Law Review, 1994, p. 1.

[29] See Austro-German Customs Union case, (1931) PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 41, pp. 41 (Court's Opinion) and 57–8 (Separate Opinion of Judge Anzilotti); 6 AD, pp. 26, 28. See also Marek, Identity, pp. 166–80; Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 62 ff., and Rousseau, Droit International Public, vol. II, pp. 53, 93.

[30] This was cited as one of the reasons for UK non-recognition, by the Minister of State, FCO: see UKMIL, 57 BYIL, 1986, pp. 507–8.

[31] The 1993 South African Constitution provided for the repeal of all laws concerning apartheid, including the four Status Acts which purported to create the 'independent states' of the four Bantustans, thus effectively reincorporating these areas into South Africa: see J. Dugard, International Law – A South African Perspective, Kenwyn, 1994, p. 346.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

However, many states are as dependent upon aid from other states, and economic success would not have altered the attitude of the international community. Since South Africa as a sovereign state was able to alienate parts of its own territory under international law, these entities would appear in the light of the formal criteria of statehood to have been formally independent. However, it is suggested that the answer as to their status lay elsewhere than in an elucidation of this category of the criteria of statehood. It lay rather in understanding that actions taken in order to pursue an illegal policy, such as apartheid, cannot be sustained.[32]

An example of the complexities that may attend such a process is provided by the unilateral declaration of independence by Lithuania, one of the Baltic states unlawfully annexed by the Soviet Union in 1940, on 11 March 1990.[33] The 1940 annexation was never recognised de jure by the Western states and thus the control exercised by the USSR was accepted only upon a de facto basis. The 1990 declaration of independence was politically very sensitive, coming at a time of increasing disintegration within the Soviet Union, but went unrecognised by any state. In view of the continuing constitutional crisis within the USSR and the possibility of a new confederal association freely accepted by the fifteen Soviet republics, it was at that time premature to talk of Lithuania as an independent state, not least because the Soviet authorities maintained substantial control within that territory.[34] The independence of Lithuania and the other Baltic States was recognised during 1991 by a wide variety of states, including crucially the Soviet Union.[35]

It is possible, however, for a state to be accepted as independent even though, exceptionally, certain functions of government are placed in the hands of an outside body. In the case of Bosnia and Herzegovina, for example, the Dayton Peace Agreement of 1995 provided for a High [32] See M. N. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa: International Legal Issues, Oxford, 1986, pp. 161–2. See also OAU Resolution CM.Res.493 (XXVII), General Assembly resolution 31/61A and Security Council statements on 21 September 1979 and 15 December 1981. Note that the Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office declared that 'the very existence of Bophuthatswana is a consequence of apartheid and I think that that is the principal reason why recognition has not been forthcoming', 126, HC Deb., cols. 760–1, 3 February 1988.

[33] See Keesing's Record of World Events, p. 37299 (1990).

[34] See e.g. the view of the UK government, 166 HC Deb., col. 697, Written Answers, 5 February 1990.

[35] See e.g. R. Müllerson, International Law, Rights and Politics, London, 1994, pp. 119 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Representative to be appointed as the 'final authority in theatre' with regard to the implementation of the agreement,[36] and the High Representative has, for example, removed a number of persons from public office. None of this has been understood by the international community to affect Bosnia's status as an independent state, but the arrangement did arise as an attempt to reach and implement a peace agreement in the context of a bitter civil war with third-party intervention. More controversially, after a period of international administration,[37] Kosovo declared its independence on 17 February 2008, noting specifically that it accepted the obligations for Kosovo under the Comprehensive Proposal for the Kosovo Status Settlement (the Ahtisaari Plan).[38] This Plan called for 'independence with international supervision' and the obligations for Kosovo included human rights and decentralisation guarantees together with an international presence to supervise implementation of the Settlement. The provisions of the Settlement were to take precedence over all other legal provisions in Kosovo. The international presence was to take the form of an International Civilian Representative (ICR), who would also be the European Union Special Representative, to be appointed by the International Steering Group.[39] The ICR would be the final authority in Kosovo regarding interpretation of the civilian aspects of the Settlement and, in particular, would have the ability to annul decisions or laws adopted by the Kosovo authorities and sanction and remove public officials whose actions were determined to be inconsistent with the Settlement terms.[40] In addition, an international military presence, led by NATO, would ensure a safe environment throughout Kosovo.[41]

[36] See Annex 10 of the Dayton Peace Agreement. See also R. Caplan, 'International Authority and State Building: The Case of Bosnia and Herzegovina', 10 Global Governance, 2004, p. 53, and International Crisis Group, Bosnia: Reshaping the International Machinery, November 2001. The High Representative is nominated by the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council, a group of fifty-five countries and international organisations that sponsor and direct the peace implementation process, and this nomination is then endorsed by the Security Council. See further below, p. 231.

[37] See, as to the international administration of Kosovo, below, p. 232 and, as to recognition, below, chapter 9, p. 452.

[38] See www.assembly-kosova.org/? krye=news&newsid=1635&lang=en.

[39] To consist of France, Germany, Italy, Russia, the UK, the US, the EU, the European Commission and NATO.

[40] See S/2007/168 and S/2007/168/Add.1. Annex IX of the latter document details the role of the ICR.

[41] See Annex XI. An EU Rule of Law Mission (EULEX) was established on 16 February 2008 to support the Kosovan authorities.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Self-determination and the criteria of statehood

It is the criterion of government which, as suggested above, has been most affected by the development of the legal right to self-determination. The traditional exposition of the criterion concentrated upon the stability and effectiveness needed for this factor to be satisfied,[42] while the representative and democratic nature of the government has also been put forward as a requirement. The evolution of self-determination has affected the standard necessary as far as the actual exercise of authority is concerned, so that it appears a lower level of effectiveness, at least in decolonisation situations, has been accepted.[43] This can be illustrated by reference to a couple of cases.

The former Belgian Congo became independent on 30 June 1960 in the midst of widespread tribal fighting which had spread to the capital. Within a few weeks the Force Publique had mutinied, Belgian troops had intervened and the province of Katanga announced its secession. Notwithstanding the virtual breakdown of government, the Congo was recognised by a large number of states after independence and was admitted to the UN as a member state without opposition. Indeed, at the time of the relevant General Assembly resolution in September 1960, two different factions of the Congo government sought to be accepted by the UN as the legitimate representatives of the state. In the event, the delegation authorised by the head of state was accepted and that of the Prime Minister rejected.[44] A rather different episode occurred with regard to the Portuguese colony of Guinea-Bissau. In 1972, a UN Special Mission was dispatched to the 'liberated areas' of the territory and concluded that the colonial power had lost effective administrative control of large areas of the territory. Foreign observers appeared to accept the claim of the PAIGC, the local liberation movement, to control between two-thirds and three-quarters of the area. The inhabitants of these areas, reported the Mission, supported the PAIGC which was exercising effective de facto administrative control.[45] On 24 September 1973, the PAIGC proclaimed the Republic of Guinea Bissau an independent state. The issue of the 'illegal occupation by Portuguese military forces of certain sections of the Republic of Guinea-Bissau' came before the General Assembly and a number of states [42] See Lauterpacht, Recognition, p. 28. [43] See e.g. Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 107 ff.

[44] Keesing's Contemporary Archives, pp. 17594–5 and 17639–40, and Hoskyns, Congo, pp. 96–9.
[45] Yearbook of the UN, 1971, pp. 566–7, and A/AC.109/L 804, p. 19. See also A/8723/Rev.1 and Assembly resolution 2918 (XXVII).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

affirmed the validity of the independence of the new state in international law. Western states denied that the criteria of statehood had been fulfilled. However, ninety-three states voted in favour of Assembly resolution 3061 (XXVIII) which mentioned 'the recent accession to independence of the people of Guinea-Bissau thereby creating the sovereign state of the Republic of Guinea-Bissau'. Many states argued in favour of this approach on the basis that a large proportion of the territory was being effectively controlled by the PAIGC, though it controlled neither a majority of the population nor the major towns.[46]

In addition to modifying the traditional principle with regard to the effectiveness of government in certain circumstances, the principle of self-determination may also be relevant as an additional criterion of statehood. In the case of Rhodesia, UN resolutions denied the legal validity of the unilateral declaration of independence on 11 November 1965 and called upon member states not to recognise it.[47] No state did recognise Rhodesia and a civil war ultimately resulted in its transformation into the recognised state of Zimbabwe. Rhodesia might have been regarded as a state by virtue of its satisfaction of the factual requirements of statehood, but this is a dubious proposition. The evidence of complete non-recognition, the strenuous denunciations of its purported independence by the international community and the developing civil war militate strongly against this. It could be argued on the other hand that, in the absence of recognition, no entity could become a state, but this constitutive theory of recognition is not acceptable.[48] The best approach is to accept the development of self-determination as an additional criterion of statehood, denial of which would obviate statehood. This can only be acknowledged in relation to self-determination situations and would not operate in cases, for example, of secessions from existing states.[49] In other words, in the case of an entity seeking to become a state and accepted by the international community as being entitled to exercise the right of self-determination, [46] See GAOR, 28th Session, General Committee, 213rd meeting, pp. 25–6, 28, 30 and 31; GAOR, 28th session, plenary, 2156th meeting, pp. 8, 12 and 16, and 2157th meeting, pp. 22–5 and 65–7. See also Yearbook of the UN, 1973, pp. 143–7, and CDDH/SR.4, pp. 33–7. See also the Western Sahara situation, below, p. 213, and the recognition of Angola in 1975 despite the continuing civil war between the three liberation movements nominally allied in a government of national unity: see Shaw, Title, pp. 155–6.

[47] E.g. General Assembly resolutions 2024 (XX) and 2151 (XXI) and Security Council resolutions 216 (1965) and 217 (1966). See R. Higgins, The World Today, 1967, p. 94, and Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 129 ff. See also Shaw, Title.

[48] Below, chapter 9, p. 445.

[49] See further below, pp. 237 and 257.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

it may well be necessary to demonstrate that the internal requirements of the principle have not been offended. One cannot define this condition too rigorously in view of state practice to date, but it would appear to be a sound proposition that systematic and institutionalised discrimination might invalidate a claim to statehood.

In particular, one may point to the practice of the international community concerning the successor states to the former Yugoslavia. The European Community adopted Guidelines on Recognition of New States in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union on 16 December 1991,[50] which constituted a common position on the process of recognition of such new states and referred specifically to the principle of self-determination. The Guidelines underlined the need to respect the rule of law, democracy and human rights and mentioned specifically the requirement for guarantees for the rights of minorities. Although these Guidelines deal with the issue of recognition and not as such the criteria for statehood, the two are interlinked and conditions required for recognition may in the circumstances, especially where expressed in general and not specific terms, often in practice be interpreted as additions to the criteria for statehood.

Recognition

Recognition is a method of accepting certain factual situations and endowing them with legal significance, but this relationship is a complicated one. In the context of the creation of statehood, recognition may be viewed as constitutive or declaratory, as will be noted in more detail in chapter 9. The former theory maintains that it is only through recognition that a state comes into being under international law, whereas the latter approach maintains that once the factual criteria of statehood have been satisfied, a new state exists as an international person, recognition becoming merely a political and not a legal act in this context. Various modifications have been made to these theories, but the role of recognition, at the least in providing strong evidential demonstration of satisfaction of the relevant criteria, must be acknowledged. In many situations, expressed requirements for recognition may be seen as impacting upon the question of statehood as the comments in the previous section on the EC Guidelines indicate. There is also an integral relationship between recognition and [50] For the text see 31 ILM, 1992, pp. 1486–7 and 92 ILR, p. 173.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the criteria for statehood in the sense that the more overwhelming the scale of international recognition is in any given situation, the less may be demanded in terms of the objective demonstration of adherence to the criteria. Conversely, the more sparse international recognition is, the more attention will be focused upon proof of actual adherence to the criteria concerned.

Extinction of statehood[51]

Extinction of statehood may take place as a consequence of merger, absorption or, historically, annexation. It may also occur as a result of the dismemberment of an existing state.[52] In general, caution needs to be exercised before the dissolution of a state is internationally accepted.[53] While the disappearance, like the existence, of a state is a matter of fact,[54] it is a matter of fact that is legally conditioned in that it is international law that will apportion particular legal consequences to particular factual situations and the appreciation of these facts will take place within a certain legal framework.

While it is not unusual for governments to disappear, it is rather rarer for states to become extinct. This will not happen in international law as a result of the illegal use of force, as the Kuwait crisis of August 1990 and the consequent United Nations response clearly demonstrates,[55] nor as a consequence of internal upheavals within a state,[56] but it may occur by consent. Three recent examples may be noted. On 22 May 1990, North and South Yemen united, or merged, to form one state, the Republic of Yemen,[57] while on 3 October 1990, the two German states reunified as a result of the constitutional accession of the Länder of the German [51] See e.g. Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 700 ff., and Oppenheim's International Law, p. 206. See also H. Ruiz-Fabri, 'Genèse et Disparition de l'État à l'Époque Contemporaine', AFDI, 1992, p. 153.

[52] Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 206–7. Extinction of statehood may also take place as a consequence of the geographical disappearance of the territory of the state: see e.g. with regard to the precarious situation of Tuvalu, Guardian, 29 October 2001, p. 17.

[53] See e.g. Yugoslav Arbitration Commission, Opinion No. 8, 92 ILR, pp. 199, 201.

[54] Ibid. [55] See further below, chapter 22, p. 941.

[56] Such as Somalia since the early 1990s: see e.g. Security Council resolutions 751 (1992); 767 (1992); 794 (1992); 814 (1993); 837 (1993); 865 (1993); 885 (1993) and 886 (1993). See also Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 412 ff.

[57] See Keesing's Record of World Events, p. 37470 (1990). See also 30 ILM, 1991, p. 820, and R. Goy, 'La Réunification du Yémen', AFDI, 1990, p. 249.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany.[58] The dissolution of Czechoslovakia[59] on 1 January 1993 and the establishment of the two new states of the Czech Republic and Slovakia constitutes a further example of the dismemberment, or disappearance, of a state.[60]

During 1991, the process of disintegration of the Soviet Union gathered force as the Baltic states reasserted their independence[61] and the other Republics of the USSR stated their intention to become sovereign. In December of that year, the Commonwealth of Independent States was proclaimed, and it was stated in the Alma Ata Declaration[62] that, with the establishment of the CIS, 'the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics ceases to exist'. The states of the CIS agreed to support 'Russia's continuance of the membership of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in the United Nations, including permanent membership of the Security Council, and other international organisations'.[63] It has been commonly accepted that Russia constitutes a continuation of the USSR, with consequential adjustments to take account of the independence of the other former Republics of the Soviet Union.[64] It is therefore a case of dismemberment basically consisting of the transformation of an existing state. The disappearance of the USSR was accompanied by the claim, internationally accepted, of the Russian Federation to be the continuation of that state. While the element of continuity is crucial in the framework of the rules of state succession,[65] it does constitute a complication in the context of extinction of states.

By way of contrast, not all the relevant parties accepted that the process of dissolution of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia during 1991–2 resulted in the dissolution of that state.[66] The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, comprising the former Republics of Serbia and Montenegro, saw itself as the continuation of the former state within reduced boundaries, while the other former Republics disputed this and maintained rather that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and

[58] See below, p. 227. See also C. Schrike, 'L'Unification Allemande', AFDI, 1990, p. 47, and W. Czaplinski, 'Quelques Aspects sur la Réunification de l'Allemagne', AFDI, 1990, p. 89.

[59] Termed at that stage the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic.

[60] See e.g. J. Malenovsky, 'Problèmes Juridiques Liés à la Partition de la Tchécoslovaquie', AFDI, 1993, p. 305.

[61] See L. Kherad, 'La Reconnaissance Internationale des États Baltes', RGDIP, 1992, p. 843.

[62] See 31 ILM, 1992, pp. 148–9.

[63] Ibid., p. 151.

[64] See further below, p. 960.

[65] See below, chapter 17.

[66] See also A. Pellet, 'La Commission d'Arbitrage de la Conférence Européenne pour la Paix en Yougaslavie', AFDI, 1991, p. 329; AFDI, 1992, p. 220, and AFDI, 1993, p. 286.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Montenegro) was a successor to the former Yugoslavia precisely on the same basis as the other former Republics such as Croatia, Slovenia and Bosnia and Herzegovina. The matter was discussed by the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission. In Opinion No. 1 of 29 November 1991, it was noted that at that stage the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was 'in the process of dissolution'.[67] However, in Opinion No. 8, adopted on 4 July 1992, the Arbitration Commission stated that the process of dissolution had been completed and that the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (SFRY) no longer existed. This conclusion was reached on the basis of the fact that Slovenia, Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina had been recognised as new states, the republics of Serbia and Montenegro had adopted a new constitution for the 'Federal Republic of Yugoslavia' and UN resolutions had been adopted referring to 'the former SFRY'.[68] The Commission also emphasised that the existence of federal states was seriously compromised when a majority of the constituent entities, embracing a majority of the territory and population of the federal state, constitute themselves as sovereign states with the result that federal authority could no longer be effectively exercised.[69] The UN Security Council in resolution 777 (1992) stated that 'the state formerly known as the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia has ceased to exist'. This was reiterated in resolution 1022 (1995) in which the Security Council, in welcoming the Dayton Peace Agreement (the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina) between the states of the former Yugoslavia and suspending the application of sanctions, stated that the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia 'has ceased to exist'. On 1 November 2000, Yugoslavia was admitted to the UN as a new member,[70] following its request sent to the Security Council on 27 October 2000.[71]

[67] 92 ILR, pp. 164–5. One should note the importance of the federal structure of the state in determining the factual situation regarding dissolution. The Arbitration Commission pointed out that in such cases 'the existence of the state implies that the federal organs represent the components of the Federation and wield effective power', ibid., p. 165.

[68] See e.g. Security Council resolutions 752 and 757 (1992). See also the resolution adopted by the European Community at the Lisbon Council on 27 June 1992, quoted in part in Opinion No. 9, 92 ILR, pp. 204–5.

[69] 92 ILR, p. 201. In Opinions Nos. 9 and 10, the Arbitration Commission noted that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) could not consider itself as the continuation of the SFRY, but was instead one of the successors to that state on the same basis as the recognised new states, ibid., pp. 205 and 208.

[70] General Assembly resolution 55/12.

[71] See the Application for Revision of the Judgment of 11 July 1996 (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia), ICJ Reports, 2003, p. 7.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The fundamental rights of states

The fundamental rights of states exist by virtue of the international legal order, which is able, as in the case of other legal orders, to define the characteristics of its subjects.[72]

Independence[73]

Perhaps the outstanding characteristic of a state is its independence, or sovereignty. This was defined in the Draft Declaration on the Rights and Duties of States prepared in 1949 by the International Law Commission as the capacity of a state to provide for its own well-being and development free from the domination of other states, providing it does not impair or violate their legitimate rights.[74] By independence, one is referring to a legal concept and it is no deviation from independence to be subject to the rules of international law. Any political or economic dependence that may in reality exist does not affect the legal independence of the state, unless that state is formally compelled to submit to the demands of a superior state, in which case dependent status is concerned.

A discussion on the meaning and nature of independence took place in the Austro-German Customs Union case before the Permanent Court of International Justice in 1931.[75] It concerned a proposal to create a free trade customs union between the two German-speaking states and whether this was incompatible with the 1919 Peace Treaties (coupled with a subsequent protocol of 1922) pledging Austria to take no action to compromise its independence. In the event, and in the circumstances of the case, the Court held that the proposed union would adversely affect Austria's sovereignty. Judge Anzilotti noted that restrictions upon a state's liberty, whether arising out of customary law or treaty obligations, do not as such affect its independence. As long as such restrictions do not place [72] See e.g. A. Kiss, Répertoire de la Pratique Française en Matière de Droit International Public, Paris, 1966, vol. II, pp. 21–50, and Survey of International Law, prepared by the UN Secretary-General, A/CN.4/245.

[73] Oppenheim's International Law, p. 382. See also N. Schrijver, 'The Changing Nature of State Sovereignty', 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 65; C. Rousseau, 'L'Indépendance de l'État dans l'Ordre International', 73 HR, 1948 II, p. 171; H. G. Gelber, Sovereignty Through Independence, The Hague, 1997; Brownlie, Principles, pp. 287 ff., and Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 422.

[74] Yearbook of the ILC, 1949, p. 286. Judge Huber noted in the Island of Palmas case that 'independence in regard to a portion of the globe is the right to exercise therein, to the exclusion of any other state, the functions of a state', 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 838 (1928); 4 AD, p. 3.

[75] PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 41, 1931; 6 AD, p. 26.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the state under the legal authority of another state, the former maintains its status as an independent country.[76]

The Permanent Court emphasised in the Lotus case[77] that '[r]estrictions upon the independence of states cannot therefore be presumed'. A similar point in different circumstances was made by the International Court of Justice in the Nicaragua case,[78] where it was stated that 'in international law there are no rules, other than such rules as may be accepted by the state concerned, by treaty or otherwise, whereby the level of armaments of a sovereign state can be limited, and this principle is valid for all states without exception'. The Court also underlined in the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons[79] that '[s]tate practice shows that the illegality of the use of certain weapons as such does not result from an absence of authorisation but, on the contrary, is formulated in terms of prohibition'. The starting point for the consideration of the rights and obligations of states within the international legal system remains that international law permits freedom of action for states, unless there is a rule constraining this. However, such freedom exists within and not outside the international legal system and it is therefore international law which dictates the scope and content of the independence of states and not the states themselves individually and unilaterally.

The notion of independence in international law implies a number of rights and duties: for example, the right of a state to exercise jurisdiction over its territory and permanent population, or the right to engage upon an act of self-defence in certain situations. It implies also the duty not to intervene in the internal affairs of other sovereign states. Precisely what constitutes the internal affairs of a state is open to dispute and is in any event a constantly changing standard. It was maintained by the Western powers for many years that any discussion or action by the United Nations[80] with regard to their colonial possessions was contrary to international law.

[76] PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 41, 1931, p. 77 (dissenting); 6 AD, p. 30 See also the North Atlantic Coast Fisheries case (1910), Scott, Hague Court Reports, p. 141 at p. 170, and the Wimbledon case, PCIJ, Series A, No.1, 1923, p. 25; 2 AD, p. 99.

[77] PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 18; 4 AD, pp. 153, 155.

[78] ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 135; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 469. See also the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 238–9; 110 ILR, p. 163.

[79] ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 247; 110 ILR, p. 163.

[80] Article 2(7) of the UN Charter provides that 'nothing in the present Charter shall authorise the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state'. On the relationship between this article and the general international law provision, see Brownlie, Principles, pp. 290 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

However, this argument by the European colonial powers did not succeed and the United Nations examined many colonial situations.[81] In addition, issues related to human rights and racial oppression do not now fall within the closed category of domestic jurisdiction. It was stated on behalf of the European Community, for example, that the 'protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms can in no way be considered an interference in a state's internal affairs'. Reference was also made to 'the moral right to intervene whenever human rights are violated'.[82]

This duty not to intervene in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of any state was included in the Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States adopted in October 1970 by the United Nations General Assembly. It was emphasised that > [n]o state or group of states has the right to intervene, directly or indirectly, for any reason whatever, in the internal or external affairs of any other state. Consequently, armed intervention and all other forms of interference or attempted threats against the personality of the state or against its political, economic and cultural elements, are in violation of international law.

The prohibition also covers any assistance or aid to subversive elements aiming at the violent overthrow of the government of a state. In particular, the use of force to deprive peoples of their national identity amounts to a violation of this principle of non-intervention.[83]

The principles surrounding sovereignty, such as non-intervention, are essential in the maintenance of a reasonably stable system of competing states. Setting limits on the powers of states vis-à-vis other states contributes to some extent to a degree of stability within the legal order. As the International Court of Justice pointed out in the Corfu Channel case [81] See Higgins, Development, pp. 58–130; M. Rajan, United Nations and Domestic Jurisdiction, 2nd edn, London, 1961, and H. Kelsen, Principles of International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1966.

[82] E/CN.4/1991/SR. 43, p. 8, quoted in UKMIL, 62 BYIL, 1991, p. 556. See also statement of the European Community in 1992 to the same effect, UKMIL, 63 BYIL, pp. 635–6. By way of contrast, the Iranian fatwa condemning the British writer Salman Rushdie to death was criticised by the UK government as calling into question Iran's commitment to honour its obligations not to interfere in the internal affairs of the UK, ibid., p. 635. See also M. Reisman, 'Sovereignty and Human Rights in Contemporary International Law', 84 AJIL, 1990, p. 866.

[83] See also the use of force, below, chapter 20.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in 1949, 'between independent states, respect for territorial sovereignty is an essential foundation of international relations'.[84]

By a similar token a state cannot purport to enforce its laws in the territory of another state without the consent of the state concerned. However, international law would seem to permit in some circumstances the state to continue to exercise its jurisdiction, notwithstanding the illegality of the apprehension.[85] It also follows that the presence of foreign troops on the territory of a sovereign state requires the consent of that state.[86]

Equality[87]

One other crucial principle is the legal equality of states, that is equality of legal rights and duties. States, irrespective of size or power, have the same juridical capacities and functions, and are likewise entitled to one vote in the United Nations General Assembly. The doctrine of the legal equality of states is an umbrella category for it includes within its scope the recognised rights and obligations which fall upon all states.

This was recognised in the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law. This provides that:

> All states enjoy sovereign equality. They have equal rights and duties and are equal members of the international community, notwithstanding differences of an economic, social, political or other nature.
>
> In particular, sovereign equality includes the following elements:
>
> (a) States are juridically equal;
> (b) Each state enjoys the rights inherent in full sovereignty;
> (c) Each state has the duty to respect the personality of other states;
> (d) The territorial integrity and political independence of the state are inviolable;
> (e) Each state has the right freely to choose and develop its political, social, economic and cultural systems;
> (f) Each state has the duty to comply fully and in good faith with its international obligations and to live in peace with other states.[88]

[84] ICJ Reports, 1949, pp. 4, 35; 16 AD, pp. 155, 167. See below, p. 575.

[85] See e.g. the Eichmann case, 36 ILR, p. 5. But see further below, p. 680.

[86] See the statement made on behalf of the European Community on 25 November 1992 with regard to the presence of Russian troops in the Baltic states, UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 724.

[87] Oppenheim's International Law, p. 339, and Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 428.

[88] See also Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, Helsinki, 1975, Cmnd 6198, pp. 2–3. See also O'Connell, International Law, pp. 322–4; P. Kooijmans,

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

In many respects this doctrine owes its origins to Natural Law thinking. Just as equality was regarded as the essence of man and thus contributed philosophically to the foundation of the state, so naturalist scholars treated equality as the natural condition of states. With the rise in positivism, the emphasis altered and, rather than postulating a general rule applicable to all and from which a series of rights and duties may be deduced, international lawyers concentrated upon the sovereignty of each and every state, and the necessity that international law be founded upon the consent of states.

The notion of equality before the law is accepted by states in the sense of equality of legal personality and capacity. However, it would not be strictly accurate to talk in terms of the equality of states in creating law. The major states will always have an influence commensurate with their status, if only because their concerns are much wider, their interests much deeper and their power more effective.[89]

Within the General Assembly of the United Nations, the doctrine of equality is maintained by the rule of one state, one vote.[90] However, one should not overlook the existence of the veto possessed by the USA, Russia, China, France and the United Kingdom in the Security Council.[91]

Peaceful co-existence

This concept has been formulated in different ways and with different views as to its legal nature by the USSR, China and the Third World. It was elaborated in 1954 as the Five Principles of Peaceful Co-existence by India and China, which concerned mutual respect for each other's territorial integrity and sovereignty, mutual non-aggression, non-interference in each other's affairs and the principle of equality.[92]

The idea was expanded in a number of international documents such as the final communiqué of the Bandung Conference in 1955 and in various resolutions of the United Nations.[93] Its recognised constituents also appear

The Doctrine of the Legal Equality of States, Leiden, 1964, and Marshall CJ, The Antelope, 10 Wheat., 1825, pp. 66, 122.

89 See Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, pp. 1062–3.

90 See e.g. L. Sohn, Cases on UN Law, 2nd edn, Brooklyn, 1967, pp. 232–90, and G. Clark and L. Sohn, World Peace Through World Law, 3rd edn, New York, 1966, pp. 399–402.

91 The doctrine of equality of states is also influential in areas of international law such as jurisdictional immunities, below, chapter 13, and act of state, above, chapter 4, p. 179.

92 See e.g. Tunkin, Theory, pp. 69–75. See also B. Ramondo, Peaceful Co-existence, Baltimore, 1967, and R. Higgins, Conflict of Interests, London, 1965, pp. 99–170.

93 See e.g. General Assembly resolutions 1236 (XII) and 1301 (XIII). See also Yearbook of the UN, 1957, pp. 105–9; ibid., 1961, p. 524 and ibid., 1962, p. 488.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in the list of Principles of the Charter of the Organisation of African Unity. Among the points enumerated are the concepts of sovereign equality, non-interference in the internal affairs of states, respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of states, as well as a condemnation of subversive activities carried out from one state and aimed against another. Other concepts that have been included in this category comprise such principles as non-aggression and the execution of international obligations in good faith. The Soviet Union had also expressed the view that peaceful co-existence constituted the guiding principle in contemporary international law.[94]

Protectorates and protected states[95]

A distinction is sometimes made between a protectorate and a protected state. In the former case, in general, the entity concerned enters into an arrangement with a state under which, while separate legal personality may be involved, separate statehood is not. In the case of a protected state, the entity concerned retains its status as a separate state but enters into a valid treaty relationship with another state affording the latter certain extensive functions possibly internally and externally. However, precisely which type of arrangement is made and the nature of the status, rights and duties in question will depend upon the circumstances and, in particular, the terms of the relevant agreement and third-party attitudes.[96] In the case of Morocco, the Treaty of Fez of 1912 with France gave the latter the power to exercise certain sovereign powers on behalf of the former, including all of its international relations. Nevertheless, the ICJ emphasised that Morocco had in the circumstances of the case remained a sovereign state.[97]

In the case of sub-Saharan Africa in the colonial period, treaties of protection were entered into with tribal entities that were not states. Such institutions were termed 'colonial protectorates' and constituted internal [94] Tunkin, Theory, pp. 35–48.

[95] See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 266; Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 286 ff.; O'Connell, International Law, pp. 341–4, and Verzijl, International Law, pp. 412–27.

[96] See the Tunis and Morocco Nationality Decrees case, (1923) PCIJ, Series B, No. 4, p. 27; 2 AD, p. 349. See also the question of the Ionian Islands, M. F. Lindley, The Acquisition and Government of Backward Territory in International Law, London, 1926, pp. 181–2.

[97] Rights of Nationals of the United States of America in Morocco, ICJ Reports, 1952, pp. 176, 188; 19 ILR, pp. 255, 263. See also to the same effect, Benaïm c. Procureur de la République de Bordeaux, AFDI, 1993, p. 971.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

colonial arrangements. They did not constitute international treaties with internationally recognised states.[98]

The extent of powers delegated to the protecting state in such circumstances may vary, as may the manner of the termination of the arrangement. In these cases, formal sovereignty remains unaffected and the entity in question retains its status as a state, and may act as such in the various international fora, regard being had of course to the terms of the arrangement. The obligation may be merely to take note of the advice of the protecting state, or it may extend to a form of diplomatic delegation subject to instruction, as in the case of Liechtenstein. Liechtenstein was refused admission to the League of Nations since it was held unable to discharge all the international obligations imposed by the Covenant in the light of its delegation of sovereign powers, such as diplomatic representation, administration of post, telegraph and telephone services and final decisions in certain judicial cases.[99] Liechtenstein, however, has been a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice and was a party to the Nottebohm[100] case before the Court, a facility only open to states. Liechtenstein joined the United Nations in 1990.

Federal states[101]

There are various forms of federation or confederation, according to the relative distribution of power between the central and local organs. In some states, the residue of power lies with the central government, in others with the local or provincial bodies. A confederation implies a more flexible arrangement, leaving a considerable degree of authority and competence with the component units to the detriment of the central organ.[102]

The Yugoslav Arbitration Commission noted in Opinion No. 1 that in the case of a federal state embracing communities possessing a degree of autonomy where such communities participate in the exercise of political [98] See Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 404–7. See also the Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, pp. 826, 858–9, and Shaw, Title, chapter 1.

[99] See Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 479 ff.; Report of the 5th Committee of the League, 6 December 1920, G. Hackworth, Digest of International Law, Washington, 1940, vol. I, pp. 48–9, and Higgins, Development, p. 34, note 30.

[100] ICJ Reports, 1955, p. 4; 22 ILR, p. 349.

[101] See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 245. See also I. Bernier, International Legal Aspects of Federalism, London, 1973, and 17 Revue Belge de Droit International, 1983, p. 1.

[102] See also below, p. 219.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

power within the framework of institutions common to the federation, the 'existence of the state implies that the federal organs represent the components of the federation and wield effective power'.[103] In addition, the existence of such a federal state would be seriously compromised 'when a majority of these entities, embracing the greater part of the territory and population, constitute themselves as sovereign states with the result that federal authority may no longer be effectively exercised'.[104]

The division of powers inherent in such arrangements often raises important questions for international law, particularly in the areas of personality, responsibility and immunity. Whether the federation dissolves into two or more states also brings into focus the doctrine of self-determination in the form of secession. Such dissolution may be the result of an amicable and constitutional agreement or may occur pursuant to a forceful exercise of secession. In the latter case, international legal rules may be pleaded in aid, but the position would seem to be that (apart from recognised colonial situations) there is no right of self-determination applicable to independent states that would justify the resort to secession. There is, of course, no international legal duty to refrain from secession attempts: the situation remains subject to the domestic law. However, should such a secession prove successful in fact, then the concepts of recognition and the appropriate criteria of statehood would prove relevant and determinative as to the new situation.[105]

The federal state will itself, of course, have personality, but the question of the personality and capability of the component units of the federation on the international plane can really only be determined in the light of the constitution of the state concerned and state practice. For instance, the then Soviet Republics of Byelorussia and the Ukraine were admitted as members of the United Nations in 1945 and to that extent possessed international personality.[106] Component states of a federation that have been provided with a certain restricted international competence may thus be accepted as having a degree of international personality. The issue has arisen especially with regard to treaties. Lauterpacht, in his Report on the Law of Treaties, for example, noted that treaties concluded by component units of federal states 'are treaties in the meaning of international law',[107] although Fitzmaurice adopted a different approach in his Report on the

[103] 92 ILR, p. 165. [104] Opinion No. 8, ibid., p. 201. [105] See below, p. 256.

[106] See e.g. Bernier, Federalism, pp. 64–6. These entities were also members of a number of international organisations and signed treaties.

[107] Yearbook of the ILC, 1953, vol. II, p. 139.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Law of Treaties by stating that such units act as agents for the federation which alone possesses international personality and which is the entity bound by the treaty and responsible for its implementation.[108] Article 5(2) of the International Law Commission's Draft Articles on the Law of Treaties provided that

> [s]tates members of a federal union may possess a capacity to conclude treaties if such capacity is admitted by the federal constitution and within the limits there laid down but this was ultimately rejected at the Vienna Conference on the Law of Treaties,[109] partly on the grounds that the rule was beyond the scope of the Convention itself. The major reasons for the rejection, however, were that the provision would enable third states to intervene in the internal affairs of federal states by seeking to interpret the constitutions of the latter and that, from another perspective, it would unduly enhance the power of domestic law to determine questions of international personality to the detriment of international law. This perhaps would indeed have swung the balance too far away from the international sphere of operation.

Different federations have evolved different systems with regard to the allocation of treaty-making powers. In some cases, component units may enter into such arrangements subject to varying conditions. The Constitution of Switzerland, for example, enables the cantons to conclude treaties with foreign states on issues concerning public economy, frontier relations and the police, subject to the provision that the Federal Council acts as the intermediary.[110] In the case of the United States, responsibility for the conduct of foreign relations rests exclusively with the Federal Government,[111] although American states have entered into certain compacts with foreign states or component units (such as Manitoba and Quebec, provinces of Canada) dealing with the construction and maintenance of highways and international bridges, following upon consultations with the foreign state conducted by the federal authorities. In any event, it is

[108] Yearbook of the ILC, 1958, vol. II, p. 24. Cf. Waldock, ibid., 1962, vol. II, p. 36.

[109] A/CONF.39/SR.8, 28 April 1969.

[110] See e.g. A. Looper, 'The Treaty Power in Switzerland', 7 American Journal of Comparative Law, 1958, p. 178.

[111] See e.g. Article I, Section 10 of the US Constitution; US v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp. 299 US 304 (1936); 8 AD, p. 48, and Zachevning v. Miller 389 US 429 (1968). See also generally, Brownlie, Principles, pp. 58–9; Whiteman, Digest, vol. 14, pp. 13–17, and Rousseau, Droit International Public, pp. 138–213 and 264–8.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

clear that the internal constitutional structure is crucial in endowing the unit concerned with capacity. What, however, turns this into international capacity is recognition.

An issue recently the subject of concern and discussion has been the question of the domestic implementation of treaty obligations in the case of federations, especially in the light of the fact that component units may possess legislative power relating to the subject-matter of the treaty concerned. Although this issue lies primarily within the field of domestic constitutional law, there are important implications for international law. In the US, for example, the approach adopted has been to insert 'federal' reservations to treaties in cases where the states of the Union have exercised jurisdiction over the subject-matter in question, providing that the Federal Government would take appropriate steps to enable the competent authorities of the component units to take appropriate measures to fulfil the obligations concerned.[112] In general, however, there have been few restrictions on entry into international agreements.[113]

The question as to divided competence in federations and international treaties has arisen in the past, particularly with regard to conventions of the International Labour Organisation, which typically encompass areas subject to the law-making competence of federal component units. In Canada, for example, early attempts by the central government to ratify ILO conventions were defeated by the decisions of the courts on constitutional grounds, supporting the views of the provinces,[114] while the US has a poor record of ratification of ILO conventions on similar grounds of local competence and federal treaty-making.[115] The issue that arises therefore is either the position of a state that refuses to ratify or sign a treaty on grounds of component unit competence in the area in question or alternatively the problem of implementation and thus responsibility where ratification does take place. In so far as the latter is concerned, the issue has been raised in the context of article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963, to which the US is a party, and which requires, among other things, that states parties inform a foreigner under arrest of his or her right to communicate with the relevant consulate. The International Court of Justice has twice held the US in violation of this [112] See e.g. the proposed reservations to four human rights treaties in 1978, US Ratification of the Human Rights Treaties (ed. R. B. Lillich), Charlottesville, 1981, pp. 83–103.

[113] See e.g. Missouri v. Holland 252 US 416 (1920); 1 AD, p. 4.

[114] See especially, Attorney-General for Canada v. Attorney-General for Ontario [1937] AC 326; 8 AD, p. 41.

[115] Bernier, Federalism, pp. 162–3, and A. Looper, 'Federal State Clauses in Multilateral Instruments', 32 BYIL, 1955–6, p. 162.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

requirement, noting that the domestic doctrine known as the procedural default rule, preventing a claimant from raising an issue on appeal or on review if it had not been raised at trial, could not excuse or justify that violation.[116] The US Supreme Court has held that while the International Court's decisions were entitled to 'respectful consideration', they were not binding.[117] This was so even though the US President in a memorandum dated 28 February 2005 had declared that the US would fulfil its obligations under the Avena decision by having states' courts give effect to it.[118] The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, however, held that neither the Avena decision of the ICJ nor the President's memorandum constituted binding federal law pre-empting Texas law, so that Medellin (the applicant) would not be provided with the review called for by the International Court and by the President.[119]

In Australia, the issue has turned on the interpretation of the constitutional grant of federal power to make laws 'with respect to . . . external affairs'.[120] Two recent cases have analysed this, in the light particularly of the established principle that the Federal Government could under this provision legislate on matters, not otherwise explicitly assigned to it, which possessed an intrinsic international aspect.[121]

In Koowarta v. Bjelke-Petersen[122] in 1982, the Australian High Court, in dealing with an action against the Premier of Queensland for breach of the Racial Discrimination Act 1975 (which incorporated parts of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial [116] The LaGrand case, ICJ Reports, 2001, p. 104 and the Avena case, ICJ Reports, 2004, p. 12; 134 ILR, p. 120.

[117] Medellin v. Dretke 118 S.Ct. 1352 (2005) and Sanchez-Llamas v. Oregon 126 S.Ct. 2669 (2006); 134 ILR, p. 719.

[118] 44 ILM, 2005, p. 964.

[119] Medellin v. Dretke, Application No. AP-75,207 (Tex. Crim. App. 15 November 2006). Note that the US Supreme Court held that a writ of certiorari to consider the effect of the International Court's decision had been 'improvidently granted' prior to the Texas appeal: see 44 ILM, 2005, p. 965. However, the Supreme Court did grant certiorari on 30 April 2007 (after the Texas decision) to consider two questions: '1. Did the President of the United States act within his constitutional and statutory foreign affairs authority when he determined that the states must comply with the United States' treaty obligation to give effect to the Avena judgment in the cases of the 51 Mexican nationals named in the judgment? [and] 2. Are state courts bound by the Constitution to honor the undisputed international obligation of the United States, under treaties duly ratified by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, to give effect to the Avena judgment in the cases that the judgment addressed?' See now Medellin v. Texas, 128 S.Ct. 1346 and above, p. 164, note 178.

[120] See e.g. L. R. Zines, The High Court and the Constitution, Sydney, 1981, and A. Byrnes and H. Charlesworth, 'Federalism and the International Legal Order: Recent Developments in Australia', 79 AJIL, 1985, p. 622.

[121] R v. Burgess, ex parte Henry 55 CLR 608 (1936); 8 AD, p. 54.

[122] 68 ILR, p. 181.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Discrimination adopted in 1965), held that the relevant legislation was valid with respect to the 'external affairs' provision under section 51(29) of the Constitution. In other words, the 'external affairs' power extended to permit the implementation of an international agreement, despite the fact that the subject-matter concerned was otherwise outside federal power. It was felt that if Australia accepted a treaty obligation with respect to an aspect of its own internal legal order, the subject of the obligation thus became an 'external affair' and legislation dealing with this fell within section 51(29), and was thereby valid constitutionally.[123] It was not necessary that a treaty obligation be assumed: the fact that the norm of non-discrimination was established in customary international law was itself sufficient in the view of Stephen J to treat the issue of racial discrimination as part of external affairs.[124]

In Commonwealth of Australia v. Tasmania,[125] the issue concerned the construction of a dam in an area placed on the World Heritage List established under the 1972 UNESCO Convention for the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage, to which Australia was a party. The Federal Government in 1983 wished to stop the scheme by reference inter alia to the 'external affairs' power as interpreted in Koowarta, since it possessed no specific legislative power over the environment. The majority of the Court held that the 'external affairs' power extended to the implementation of treaty obligations. It was not necessary that the subject-matter of the treaty be inherently international.

The effect of these cases seen, of course, in the context of the Australian Constitution, is to reduce the problems faced by federal states of implementing international obligations in the face of local jurisdiction.

The difficulties faced by federal states have also become evident with regard to issues of state responsibility.[126] As a matter of international law, states are responsible for their actions, including those of subordinate organs irrespective of domestic constitutional arrangements.[127] The [123] Ibid., pp. 223–4 (Stephen J); p. 235 (Mason J) and p. 255 (Brennan J).

[124] Ibid., pp. 223–4.

[125] Ibid., p. 266. The case similarly came before the High Court.

[126] See e.g. R. Higgins, 'The Concept of "the State": Variable Geometry and Dualist Perceptions' in The International Legal System in Quest of Equity and Universality (eds. L. Boisson de Chazournes and V. Gowland-Debas), The Hague, 2001, p. 547.

[127] Article 4(1) of the International Law Commission's Articles on State Responsibility, 2001, provides that: 'The conduct of any State organ shall be considered an act of that State under international law, whether the organ exercises legislative, executive, judicial or any other functions, whatever position it holds in the organisation of the State, and whatever its character as an organ of the central government or of a territorial unit of the State.'

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

International Court in the Immunity from Legal Process of a Special Rapporteur case stated that it was a well-established rule of customary international law that 'the conduct of any organ of a State must be regarded as an act of that State'[128] and this applies to component units of a federal state. As the Court noted in its Order of 3 March 1999 on provisional measures in the LaGrand case, 'the international responsibility of a State is engaged by the action of the competent organs and authorities acting in that State, whatever they may be'. In particular, the US was under an obligation to transmit the Order to the Governor of the State of Arizona, while the Governor was under an obligation to act in conformity with the international undertakings of the US.[129] Similarly, the Court noted in the Immunity from Legal Process of a Special Rapporteur case that the government of Malaysia was under an obligation to communicate the Court's Advisory Opinion to the Malaysian courts in order that Malaysia's international obligations be given effect.[130]

Thus, international responsibility of the state may co-exist with an internal lack of capacity to remedy the particular international wrong. In such circumstances, the central government is under a duty to seek to persuade the component unit to correct the violation of international law,[131] while the latter is, it seems, under an international obligation to act in accordance with the international obligations of the state.

Federal practice in regulating disputes between component units is often of considerable value in international law. This operates particularly in cases of boundary problems, where similar issues arise.[132] Conversely, international practice may often be relevant in the resolution of conflicts between component units.[133]

See also J. Crawford, The International Law Commission's Articles on State Responsibility, Cambridge, 2002, pp. 94 ff.

128 ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 62, 87; 121 ILR, p. 367.

129 ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 9, 16; 118 ILR, p. 37. See also e.g. the Pellat case, 5 RIAA, p. 534 (1929).

130 ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 62, 88; 121 ILR, p. 367.

131 Such issues arise from time to time with regard to human rights matters before international or regional human rights bodies: see e.g. Toonen v. Australia, Human Rights Committee, Communication No. 488/1992, 112 ILR, p. 328, and Tyrer v. UK, 2 European Human Rights Reports 1. See also Matthews v. UK, 28 European Human Rights Reports 361, and RMD v. Switzerland, ibid., 224.

132 See e.g. E. Lauterpacht, 'River Boundaries: Legal Aspects of the Shatt-Al-Arab Frontier', 9 ICLQ, 1960, pp. 208, 216, and A. O. Cukwurah, The Settlement of Boundary Disputes in International Law, Manchester, 1967.

133 See also below, chapters 13 and 14.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Sui generis territorial entities

Mandated and trust territories[134]

After the end of the First World War and the collapse of the Axis and Russian empires, the Allies established a system for dealing with the colonies of the defeated powers that did not involve annexation. These territories would be governed according to the principle that 'the well-being and development of such peoples form a sacred trust of civilisation'. The way in which this principle would be put into effect would be to entrust the tutelage of such people to 'advanced nations who by reason of their resources, their experience or their geographical position' could undertake the responsibility. The arrangement would be exercised by them as mandatories on behalf of the League.[135]

Upon the conclusion of the Second World War and the demise of the League, the mandate system was transmuted into the United Nations trusteeship system under Chapters XII and XIII of the UN Charter.[136] The strategic trust territory of the Pacific, taken from Japan, the mandatory power, was placed in a special category subject to Security Council rather than Trusteeship Council supervision for security reasons,[137] while South [134] See generally H. Duncan Hall, Mandates, Dependencies and Trusteeships, London, 1948; Whiteman, Digest, vol. I, pp. 598–911 and vol. XIII, pp. 679 ff.; C. E. Toussaint, The Trusteeship System of the United Nations, New York, 1957; Verzijl, International Law, vol. II, pp. 545–73; Q. Wright, Mandates Under the League of Nations, New York, 1930; J. Dugard, The South West Africa/Namibia Dispute, Berkeley, 1973, and S. Slonim, South West Africa and the United Nations, Leiden, 1973. See also Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 295 and 308, and Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 565 ff.

[135] See article 22 of the Covenant of the League of Nations. See also the International Status of South West Africa, ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 128, 132; 17 ILR, p. 47; the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 28–9; 49 ILR, pp. 2, 18–19; Certain Phosphate Lands in Nauru, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 240, 256; 97 ILR, pp. 1, 23 and Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, para. 212.

[136] See e.g. Certain Phosphate Lands in Nauru, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 240, 257; 97 ILR, pp. 1, 24. See also the discussion by Judge Shahabuddeen in his Separate Opinion, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 276 ff.; 97 ILR, p. 43. Note that the Court in this case stated that the arrangements whereby Nauru was to be administered under the trusteeship agreement by the governments of the UK, Australia and New Zealand together as 'the administering authority' did not constitute that authority an international legal person separate from the three states so designated: ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 258; 97 ILR, p. 25. See also Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, para. 212.

[137] See O. McHenry, Micronesia: Trust Betrayed, New York, 1975; Whiteman, Digest, vol. I, pp. 769–839; S. A. de Smith, Micro-States and Micronesia, New York, 1970; DUSPIL, 1973, pp. 59–67; ibid., 1974, pp. 54–64; ibid., 1975, pp. 94–104; ibid., 1976, pp. 56–61; ibid., 1977, pp. 71–98 and ibid., 1978, pp. 204–31.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Africa refused to place its mandated territory under the system. Quite who held sovereignty in such territories was the subject of extensive debates over many decades.[138]

As far as the trust territory of the Pacific was concerned, the US signed a Covenant with the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands and Compacts of Free Association with the Federated States of Micronesia and with the Republic of the Marshall Islands. Upon their entry into force in autumn 1986, it was determined that the trusteeship had been terminated. This procedure providing for political union with the US was accepted by the Trusteeship Council as a legitimate exercise of self-determination.[139] However, the proposed Compact of Free Association with the Republic of Palau (the final part of the former trust territory) did not enter into force as a result of disagreement over the transit of nuclear-powered or armed vessels and aircraft through Palauan waters and airspace and, therefore, the US continued to act as administering authority under the trusteeship agreement.[140] These difficulties were eventually resolved.[141]

South West Africa was administered after the end of the First World War as a mandate by South Africa, which refused after the Second World War to place the territory under the trusteeship system. Following this, the International Court of Justice in 1950 in its Advisory Opinion on the International Status of South West Africa[142] stated that, while there was no legal obligation imposed by the United Nations Charter to transfer a mandated territory into a trust territory, South Africa was still bound by the terms of the mandate agreement and the Covenant of the League of Nations, and the obligations that it had assumed at that time. The Court emphasised that South Africa alone did not have the capacity to modify the international status of the territory. This competence rested with South Africa acting with the consent of the United Nations, as successor to the League of Nations. Logically flowing from this decision was the ability of the United Nations to hear petitioners from the territory in consequence of South Africa's refusal to heed United Nations decisions and in pursuance of League of Nations practices.[143]

[138] See in particular Judge McNair, International Status of South West Africa, ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 128, 150 and the Court's view, ibid., p. 132; 17 ILR, pp. 47, 49.

[139] See Security Council resolution 683 (1990).

[140] See 'Contemporary Practice of the United States Relating to International Law', 81 AJIL, 1987, pp. 405–8. See also Bank of Hawaii v. Balos 701 F.Supp. 744 (1988).

[141] See Security Council resolution 956 (1994).

[142] ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 128, 143–4; 17 ILR, pp. 47, 57–60.

[143] ICJ Reports, 1955, p. 68; 22 ILR, p. 651 and ICJ Reports, 1956, p. 23; 23 ILR, p. 38.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

In 1962 the ICJ heard the case brought by Ethiopia and Liberia, the two African members of the League, that South Africa was in breach of the terms of the mandate and had thus violated international law. The Court initially affirmed that it had jurisdiction to hear the merits of the dispute.[144] However, by the Second Phase of the case, the Court (its composition having slightly altered in the meanwhile) decided that Ethiopia and Liberia did not have any legal interest in the subject-matter of the claim (the existence and supervision of the mandate over South West Africa) and accordingly their contentions were rejected.[145] Having thus declared on the lack of standing of the two African appellants, the Court did not discuss any of the substantive questions which stood before it.

This judgment aroused a great deal of feeling, particularly in the Third World, and occasioned a shift in emphasis in dealing with the problem of the territory in question.[146]

The General Assembly resolved in October 1966 that since South Africa had failed to fulfil its obligations, the mandate was therefore terminated. South West Africa (or Namibia as it was to be called) was to come under the direct responsibility of the United Nations.[147] Accordingly, a Council was established to oversee the territory and a High Commissioner appointed.[148] The Security Council in a number of resolutions upheld the action of the Assembly and called upon South Africa to withdraw its administration from the territory. It also requested other states to refrain from dealing with the South African government in so far as Namibia was concerned.[149]

The Security Council ultimately turned to the International Court and requested an Advisory Opinion as to the Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia.[150] The Court concluded that South Africa's presence in Namibia was indeed illegal in view of the series of events culminating in the United Nations resolutions on the grounds of a material breach of a treaty (the mandate agreement) by South Africa, and further that 'a binding determination made by a competent organ of the United Nations to the effect that a situation is illegal cannot remain without consequence'. South Africa was obligated to withdraw its [144] ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 141 and 143. [145] ICJ Reports, 1966, p. 6; 37 ILR, p. 243.

[146] See e.g. Dugard, South West Africa/Namibia, p. 378. [147] Resolution 2145 (XXI).
[148] See General Assembly resolutions 2145 (XXI) and 2248 (XXII).
[149] See e.g. Security Council resolutions 263 (1969), 269 (1969) and 276 (1970).
[150] ICJ Reports, 1971, p. 16; 49 ILR, p. 3.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com administration from the territory, and other states members of the United Nations were obliged to recognise the illegality and the invalidity of its acts with regard to that territory and aid the United Nations in its efforts concerning the problem.[151]

The opinion was approved by the Security Council in resolution 301 (1971), which also reaffirmed the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia. In 1978 South Africa announced its acceptance of proposals negotiated by the five Western contact powers (UK, USA, France, Canada and West Germany) for Namibian independence involving a UN supervised election and peace-keeping force.[152] After some difficulties,[153] Namibia finally obtained its independence on 23 April 1990.[154]

Germany 1945

With the defeat of Germany on 5 June 1945, the Allied Powers assumed 'supreme authority' with respect to that country, while expressly disclaiming any intention of annexation.[155] Germany was divided into four occupation zones with four-power control over Berlin. The Control Council established by the Allies acted on behalf of Germany and in such capacity entered into binding legal arrangements. The state of Germany continued, however, and the situation, as has been observed, was akin to legal representation or agency of necessity.[156] Under the 1952 Treaty between the three Western powers and the Federal Republic of Germany, full sovereign powers were granted to the latter subject to retained powers concerning the making of a peace treaty, and in 1972 the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic, established in 1954 by the Soviet Union in its zone, recognised each other as sovereign states.[157]

However, following a series of dramatic events during 1989 in Central and Eastern Europe, deriving in essence from the withdrawal of [151] ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 52–8.

[152] 17 ILM, 1978, pp. 762–9, and DUSPIL, 1978, pp. 38–54. See Security Council resolution 435 (1978). See also Africa Research Bulletin, April 1978, p. 4829 and July 1978, p. 4935.

[153] See S/14459; S/14460/Rev.1; S/14461 and S/14462.

[154] See 28 ILM, 1989, p. 944.

[155] See Whiteman, Digest, vol. I, pp. 325–6, and R. W. Piotrowicz, 'The Status of Germany in International Law', 38 ICLQ, 1989, p. 609. See also Crawford, Creation of States, p. 523.

[156] Brownlie, Principles, p. 107. See also Whiteman, Digest, p. 333, and I. D. Hendry and M. C. Wood, The Legal Status of Berlin, Cambridge, 1987.

[157] 12 AD, p. 16. Note also Kunstsammlungen zu Weimar v. Elicofon 94 ILR, p. 135. Both states became members of the UN the following year. See Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 523–6, and F. A. Mann, Studies in International Law, Oxford, 1973, pp. 634–59 and 660–706.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Soviet control, the drive for a reunified Germany in 1990 became unstoppable.[158] A State Treaty on German Economic, Monetary and Social Union was signed by the Finance Ministers of the two German states on 18 May and this took effect on 1 July.[159] A State Treaty on Unification was signed on 31 August, providing for unification on 3 October by the accession to the Federal Republic of Germany of the Länder of the German Democratic Republic under article 23 of the Basic Law of the Federal Republic, with Berlin as the capital.[160] The external obstacle to unity was removed by the signing on 12 September of the Treaty on the Final Settlement with Respect to Germany, between the two German states and the four wartime allies (UK, USA, USSR and France).[161] Under this treaty, a reunified Germany agreed to accept the current Oder–Neisse border with Poland and to limit its armed forces to 370,000 persons, while pledging not to acquire atomic, chemical or biological weapons. The Agreement on the Settlement of Certain Matters Relating to Berlin between the Federal Republic and the three Western powers on 25 September 1990 provided for the relinquishment of Allied rights with regard to Berlin.[162]

Condominium

In this instance two or more states equally exercise sovereignty with respect to a territory and its inhabitants. There are arguments as to the relationship between the states concerned, the identity of the sovereign for the purposes of the territory and the nature of the competences involved.[163] In the case of the New Hebrides, a series of Anglo-French agreements established a region of joint influence, with each power retaining sovereignty over its nationals and neither exercising separate authority [158] See e.g. J. Frowein, 'The Reunification of Germany', 86 AJIL, 1992, p. 152; Schrike, 'L'Unification Allemande', p. 47; Czaplinski, 'Quelques Aspects', p. 89, and R. W. Piotrowicz and S. Blay, The Unification of Germany in International and Domestic Law, Amsterdam, 1997.

[159] See Keesing's Record of World Events, p. 37466 (1990). See also 29 ILM, 1990, p. 1108.

[160] Keesing's, p. 37661. See also 30 ILM, 1991, pp. 457 and 498.

[161] See 29 ILM, 1990, p. 1186.

[162] See 30 ILM, 1991, p. 445. See also the Exchange of Notes of the same date concerning the presence of allied troops in Berlin, ibid., p. 450.

[163] Brownlie, Principles, pp. 113–14. See also O'Connell, International Law, pp. 327–8; A. Coret, Le Condominium, Paris, 1960; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 565, and V. P. Bantz, 'The International Legal Status of Condominia', 12 Florida Journal of International Law, 1998, p. 77.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

over the area.[164] A Protocol listed the functions of the condominial government and vested the power to issue joint regulations respecting them in a British and a French High Commissioner. This power was delegated to resident commissioners who dealt with their respective nationals. Three governmental systems accordingly co-existed, with something of a legal vacuum with regard to land tenure and the civil transactions of the indigenous population.[165] The process leading to the independence of the territory also reflected its unique status as a condominium.[166] It was noted that the usual independence Bill would not have been appropriate, since the New Hebrides was not a British colony. Its legal status as an Anglo-French condominium had been established by international agreement and could only be terminated in the same fashion. The nature of the condominium was such that it assumed that the two metropolitan powers would always act together and unilateral action was not provided for in the basic constitutional documents.[167] The territory became independent on 30 July 1980 as the state of Vanuatu. The entity involved prior to independence grew out of an international treaty and established an administrative entity arguably distinct from its metropolitan governments but more likely operating on the basis of a form of joint agency with a range of delegated powers.[168]

The Central American Court of Justice in 1917[169] held that a condominium existed with respect to the Gulf of Fonseca providing for rights of co-ownership of the three coastal states of Nicaragua, El Salvador and Honduras. The issue was raised in the El Salvador/Honduras case before [164] See e.g. 99 BFSP, p. 229 and 114 BFSP, p. 212.

[165] O'Connell, International Law, p. 328.

[166] Lord Trefgarne, the government spokesman, moving the second reading of the New Hebrides Bill in the House of Lords, 404 HL Deb., cols. 1091–2, 4 February 1980.

[167] See Mr Luce, Foreign Office Minister, 980 HC Deb., col. 682, 8 March 1980 and 985 HC Deb., col. 1250, 3 June 1980. See also D. P. O'Connell, 'The Condominium of the New Hebrides', 43 BYIL, p. 71.

[168] See also the joint Saudi Arabian–Kuwaiti administered Neutral Zone based on the treaty of 2 December 1922, 133 BFSP, 1930 Part II, pp. 726–7. See e.g. The Middle East (ed. P. Mansfield), 4th edn, London, 1973, p. 187. Both states enjoyed an equal right of undivided sovereignty over the whole area. However, on 7 July 1965, both states signed an agreement to partition the neutral zone, although the territory apparently retained its condominium status for exploration of resources purposes: see 4 ILM, 1965, p. 1134, and H. M. Albaharna, The Legal Status of the Arabian Gulf States, 2nd rev. edn, Beirut, 1975, pp. 264–77. See also F. Ali Taha, 'Some Legal Aspects of the Anglo-Egyptian Condominium over the Sudan: 1899–1954', 76 BYIL, 2005, p. 337.

[169] 11 AJIL, 1917, p. 674.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the International Court of Justice.[170] The Court noted that a condominium arrangement being 'a structured system for the joint exercise of sovereign governmental powers over a territory' was normally created by agreement between the states concerned, although it could be created as a juridical consequence of a succession of states (as in the Gulf of Fonseca situation itself), being one of the ways in which territorial sovereignty could pass from one state to another. The Court concluded that the waters of the Gulf of Fonseca beyond the three-mile territorial sea were historic waters and subject to a joint sovereignty of the three coastal states. It based its decision, apart from the 1917 judgment, upon the historic character of the Gulf waters, the consistent claims of the three coastal states and the absence of protest from other states.[171]

International administration of territories

In such cases a particular territory is placed under a form of international regime, but the conditions under which this has been done have varied widely, from autonomous areas within states to relatively independent entities.[172] The UN is able to assume the administration of territories in specific circumstances. The trusteeship system was founded upon the supervisory role of the UN,[173] while in the case of South West Africa, the General Assembly supported by the Security Council ended South Africa's mandate and asserted its competence to administer the territory pending independence.[174] Beyond this, UN organs exercising their powers may assume a variety of administrative functions over particular territories where issues of international concern have arisen. Attempts were made to create such a regime for Jerusalem under the General Assembly partition resolution for Palestine in 1947 as a 'corpus separatum under a special international regime . . . administered by the United Nations', but this never materialised for a number of reasons.[175] Further, the Security Council [170] ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 597 ff.; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 513 ff. El Salvador and Nicaragua were parties to the 1917 decision but differed over the condominium solution. Honduras was not a party to that case and opposed the condominium idea.

[171] ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 601; 97 ILR, p. 517.

[172] See e.g. R. Wilde, International Territorial Administration, Oxford, 2008; M. Ydit, Internationalised Territories, Leiden, 1961; Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 501 ff.; Brownlie, Principles, pp. 60 and 167, and Rousseau, Droit International Public, vol. II, pp. 413–48.

[173] See further above, p. 224. [174] See above, p. 225.

[175] Resolution 18(II). See e.g. E. Lauterpacht, Jerusalem and the Holy Places, London, 1968, and Ydit, Internationalised Territories, pp. 273–314.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in 1947 adopted a Permanent Statute for the Free Territory of Trieste, under which the Council was designated as the supreme administrative and legislative authority of the territory.[176]

More recently, the UN has become more involved in important administrative functions, authority being derived from a mixture of international agreements, domestic consent and the powers of the Security Council under Chapter VII to adopt binding decisions concerning international peace and security, as the case may be. For example, the 1991 Paris Peace Agreements between the four Cambodian factions authorised the UN to establish civil administrative functions in that country pending elections and the adoption of a new constitution. This was accomplished through the UN Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), to which were delegated 'all powers necessary to ensure the implementation' of the peace settlement and which also exercised competence in areas such as foreign affairs, defence, finance and so forth.[177]

Annex 10 of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Dayton Agreement)[178] established the post of High Representative with extensive powers with regard to the civilian implementation of the peace agreement and with the final authority to interpret the civilian aspects of the settlement.[179] This was endorsed and confirmed by the Security Council in binding resolution 1031 (1995). The relatively modest powers of the High Representative under Annex 10 were subsequently enlarged in practice by the Peace Implementation Council, a body [176] See Security Council resolution 16 (1947). Like the Jerusalem idea, this never came into being. See also the experiences of the League of Nations with regard to the Saar and Danzig, Ydit, Internationalised Territories, chapter 3.

[177] See Article 6 and Annex I of the Paris Peace Settlement. See also C. Stahn, 'International Territorial Administration in the Former Yugoslavia: Origins, Developments and Challenges Ahead', ZaöRV, 2001, p. 107. UNTAC lasted from March 1992 to September 1993 and involved some 22,000 military and civilian personnel: see www.un.org/Depts/dpko/dpko/co_mission/untac.htm. Note also e.g. the operations of the UN Transition Group in Namibia which, in the process leading to Namibian independence, exercised a degree of administrative power: see Report of the UN Secretary-General, A/45/1 (1991), and the UN Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia (UNTAES), which facilitated the transfer of the territory from Serb to Croat rule over a two-year period: see Security Council resolution 1037 (1996).

[178] Initialled at Dayton, Ohio, and signed in Paris, 1995.

[179] The final authority with regard to the military implementation of the agreement remains the commander of SFOR: see article 12 of the Agreement on the Military Aspects of the Dayton Peace Agreement. Note also the establishment of the Human Rights Chamber, the majority of whose members are from other states: see below, chapter 7, p. 379, and the Commission for Displaced Persons and Refugees: see Annexes 6 and 7 of the Peace Agreement.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

with fifty-five members established to review progress regarding the peace settlement, in the decisions it took at the Bonn Summit of December 1997 (the Bonn Conclusions).[180] These provided, for example, for measures to be taken against persons found by the High Representative to be in violation of legal commitments made under the Peace Agreement. This has included removal from public office, the competence to impose interim legislation where Bosnia's institutions had failed to do so[181] and 'other measures to ensure implementation of the Peace Agreement throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina and its Entities, as well as the smooth running of the common institutions'.[182] The High Representative has taken a wide-ranging number of decisions, from imposing the Law on Citizenship of Bosnia and Herzegovina in December 1997[183] and imposing the Law on the Flag of Bosnia and Herzegovina in February 1998[184] to enacting the Law on Changes and Amendments to the Election Law in January 2006 to mark the ongoing process of transferring High Representative powers to the domestic authorities in the light of the improving situation.[185] This unusual structure with regard to an independent state arises, therefore, from a mix of the consent of the parties and binding Chapter VII activity by the Security Council.

In resolution 1244 (1999), the Security Council authorised the Secretary-General to establish an interim international civil presence in Kosovo (UNMIK),[186] following the withdrawal of Yugoslav forces from [180] See e.g. the documentation available at www.ohr.int/pic/archive.asp?so=d&sa=on. See also Security Council resolutions 1144 (1997), 1256 (1999) and 1423 (2002).

[181] www.ohr.int/pic/default.asp?content_id=5182. The competence of the High Representative to adopt binding decisions with regard to interim measures when the parties are unable to reach agreement remains in force until the Presidency or Council of Ministers has adopted a decision consistent with the Peace Agreement on the issue concerned.

[182] Paragraph XI of the Bonn Conclusions. See also Security Council resolutions 1247 (1999), 1395 (2000), 1357 (2001), 1396 (2002) and 1491 (2003).

[183] www.ohr.int/statemattersdec/default.asp?content_id=343.

[184] www.ohr.int/statemattersdec/default.asp?content_id=344.

[185] www.ohr.int/statemattersdec/default.asp?content_id=36465.

[186] See Stahn, 'International Territorial Administration', p. 111; T. Garcia, 'La Mission d'Administration Intérimaire des Nations Unies au Kosovo', RGDIP, 2000, p. 61, and M. Ruffert, 'The Administration of Kosovo and East Timor by the International Community', 50 ICLQ, 2001, p. 613. See also Kosovo and the International Community: A Legal Assessment (ed. C. Tomuschat), The Hague, 2002; B. Knoll, 'From Benchmarking to Final Status? Kosovo and the Problem of an International Administration's Open-Ended Mandate', 16 European Journal of International Law, 2005, p. 637; Kosovo: KFOR and Reconstruction, House of Commons Research Paper 99/66, 1999; A. Yannis, 'The UN as Government in Kosovo', 10 Global Governance, 2004, p. 67; International Crisis Group (ICG), Kosovo: Towards Final Status, January 2005, ICG, Kosovo: The Challenge of Transition,

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

that part of the country consequent upon NATO action. Under this resolution, UNMIK performed a wide range of administrative functions, including health and education, banking and finance, post and telecommunications, and law and order. It was tasked inter alia to promote the establishment of substantial autonomy and self-government in Kosovo, to co-ordinate humanitarian and disaster relief, support the reconstruction of key infrastructure, maintain civil law and order, promote human rights and assure the return of refugees. Administrative structures were established and elections held. The first regulation adopted by the Special Representative of the UN Secretary-General appointed under resolution 1244 vested all legislative and executive authority in Kosovo in UNMIK as exercised by the Special Representative.[187] This regulation also established that the law in the territory was that in existence in so far as this did not conflict with the international standards referred to in section 2 of the regulation, the fulfilment of the mandate given to UNMIK under resolution 1244, or the present or any other regulation issued by UNMIK. A Constitutional Framework for Provisional Self-Government was promulgated by the Special Representative in May 2001.[188] This comprehensive administrative competence was founded upon the reaffirmation of Yugoslavia's sovereignty and territorial integrity (and thus continuing territorial title over the province) and the requirement for 'substantial autonomy and meaningful self-administration for Kosovo'.[189] Accordingly, this arrangement illustrated a complete division between title to the territory and the exercise of power and control over it. It flowed from a binding Security Council resolution, which referred to Yugoslavia's consent to the essential principles therein contained.[190]

The United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET) was established by Security Council resolution 1272 (1999) acting under Chapter VII. It was 'endowed with overall responsibility for the administration of East Timor' and 'empowered to exercise all legislative and executive authority, including the administration of justice'.[191]

February 2006, ICG, Kosovo: No Good Alternatives to the Ahtisaari Plan, 14 May 2007, and ICG, Kosovo Countdown: A Blueprint for Transition, 6 December 2007. Resolution 1244 also authorised an international military presence.

[187] Regulation 1 (1999). This was backdated to the date of adoption of resolution 1244.

[188] See UNMIK Regulation 9 (2001).

[189] Resolution 1244 (1999).

[190] See S/1999/649 and Annex 2 to the resolution. Kosovo declared independence on 17 February 2008: see below, p. 452 and above, p. 201.

[191] East Timor, a Portuguese non-self-governing territory, was occupied by Indonesia in 1974. These two states agreed with the UN on 5 May 1999 to a process of popular consultation

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Its widespread mandate included, in addition to public administration, humanitarian responsibilities and a military component and it was authorised to take all necessary measures to fulfil its mandate. UNTAET's mandate was extended to 20 May 2002, the date of East Timor's independence as the new state of Timor-Leste.[192] It was thereafter succeeded by the United Nations Mission of Support in East Timor (UNMISET).[193]

Taiwan[194]

This territory was ceded by China to Japan in 1895 by the treaty of Shimonoseki and remained in the latter's hands until 1945. Japan undertook on surrender not to retain sovereignty over Taiwan and this was reaffirmed under the Peace Treaty, 1951 between the Allied Powers (but not the USSR and China) and Japan, under which all rights to the island were renounced without specifying any recipient. After the Chinese Civil War, the Communist forces took over the mainland while the Nationalist regime installed itself on Taiwan (Formosa) and the Pescadores. Both the US and the UK took the view at that stage that sovereignty over Taiwan was uncertain or undetermined.[195] The key point affecting status has been that both governments have claimed to represent the whole of China. No claim of separate statehood for Taiwan has been made and in such a case it is difficult to maintain that such an unsought status exists. Total lack of recognition of Taiwan as a separate independent state merely reinforces this point. In 1979 the US recognised the People's Republic of China as the sole and legitimate government of China.[196] Accordingly, Taiwan would in the territory over its future. The inhabitants expressed a clear wish for a transitional process of UN authority leading to independence. Following the outbreak of violence, a multinational force was sent to East Timor pursuant to resolution 1264 (1999): see also the Report of the Secretary-General, S/1999/1024; www.un.org/peace/etimor/etimor.htm.

192 See resolutions 1388 (2001) and 1392 (2002).

193 See resolution 1410 (2002).

194 See e.g. Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 198 ff.; China and the Question of Taiwan (ed. H. Chiu), New York, 1979; W. M. Reisman, 'Who Owns Taiwan?', 81 Yale Law Journal, p. 599; F. P. Morello, The International Legal Status of Formosa, The Hague, 1966; V. H. Li, De-Recognising Taiwan, Washington, DC, 1977, and L. C. Chiu, 'The International Legal Status of the Republic of China', 8 Chinese Yearbook of International Law and Affairs, 1990, p. 1. See also The International Status of Taiwan in the New World Order (ed. J. M. Henckaerts), London, 1996; Let Taiwan be Taiwan (eds. M. J. Cohen and E. Teng), Washington, 1990, and J. I. Charney and J. R. V. Prescott, 'Resolving Cross-Strait Relations Between China and Taiwan', 94 AJIL, 2000, p. 453.

195 See Whiteman, Digest, vol. III, pp. 538, 564 and 565.

196 See Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 209 ff. Note that the 1972 USA–China communiqué accepted that Taiwan was part of China, 11 ILM, pp. 443, 445. As to the 1979 changes, see 73 AJIL, p. 227. See also 833 HC Deb., col. 32, 13 March 1972, for the new British

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

appear to be a non-state territorial entity which is capable of acting independently on the international scene, but is most probably de jure part of China. It is interesting to note that when in early 1990 Taiwan sought accession to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), it did so by requesting entry for the 'customs territory' of 'Taiwan, Penghu, Kinmen and Matsu', thus avoiding an assertion of statehood.[197] The accession of 'Chinese Taipei' to the World Trade Organisation was approved by the Ministerial Conference in November 2001.[198]

The 'Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus' (TRNC)[199]

In 1974, following a coup in Cyprus backed by the military regime in Greece, Turkish forces invaded the island. The Security Council in resolution 353 (1974) called upon all states to respect the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Cyprus and demanded an immediate end to foreign military intervention in the island that was contrary to such respect. On 13 February 1975 the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus was proclaimed in the area occupied by Turkish forces. A resolution adopted at the same meeting of the Council of Ministers and the Legislative Assembly of the Autonomous Turkish Cypriot Administration at which the proclamation was made, emphasised the determination 'to oppose resolutely all attempts against the independence of Cyprus and its partition or union with any other state' and resolved to establish a separate administration until such time as the 1960 Cyprus Constitution was amended to provide for a federal republic.[200] approach, i.e. that it recognised the Government of the People's Republic of China as the sole legal Government of China and acknowledged the position of that government that Taiwan was a province of China, and see e.g. UKMIL, 71 BYIL, 2000, p. 537. See also Reel v. Holder [1981] 1 WLR 1226.

197 See Keesing's Record of World Events, p. 37671 (1990). This failed, however, to prevent a vigorous protest by China: ibid. Note also the Agreements Concerning Cross-Straits Activities between unofficial organisations established in China and Taiwan in order to reach functional, non-political agreements, 32 ILM, 1993, p. 1217. A degree of evolution in Taiwan's approach was evident in the Additional Articles of the Constitution adopted in 1997.

198 See www.wto.org/english/news_e/pres01_e/pr253_e.htm. As to Rhodesia (1965–79) and the Bantustans, see above, pp. 206 and 202.

199 See Z. M. Necatigil, The Cyprus Question and the Turkish Position in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford 1993; G. White, The World Today, April 1981, p. 135, and Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 143 ff.

200 Resolution No. 2 in Supplement IV, Official Gazette of the TFSC, cited in Nadjatigil, Cyprus Conflict, p. 123.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

On 15 November 1983, the Turkish Cypriots proclaimed their independence as the 'Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus'.[201] This was declared illegal by the Security Council in resolution 541 (1983) and its withdrawal called for. All states were requested not to recognise the 'purported state' or assist it in any way. This was reiterated in Security Council resolution 550 (1984). The Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe decided that it continued to regard the government of the Republic of Cyprus as the sole legitimate government of Cyprus and called for respect for the independence and territorial integrity of Cyprus.[202] The European Court of Human Rights in its judgment of 10 May 2001 in Cyprus v. Turkey concluded that, 'it is evident from international practice . . . that the international community does not recognise the "TRNC" as a state under international law' and declared that 'the Republic of Cyprus has remained the sole legitimate government of Cyprus'.[203] In the light of this and the very heavy dependence of the territory upon Turkey, it cannot be regarded as a sovereign state, but remains as a de facto administered entity within the recognised confines of the Republic of Cyprus and dependent upon Turkish assistance.[204]

The Saharan Arab Democratic Republic[205]

In February 1976, the Polisario liberation movement conducting a war to free the Western Saharan territory from Moroccan control declared the independent sovereign Saharan Arab Democratic Republic (SADR).[206] Over the succeeding years, many states recognised the new entity, including a majority of Organisation of African Unity members. In February 1982, the OAU Secretary-General sought to seat a delegation from SADR on that basis, but this provoked a boycott by some nineteen states and a major crisis. However, in November 1984 the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the OAU did agree to seat a delegation from SADR, [201] See The Times, 16 November 1983, p. 12, and 21(4) UN Chronicle, 1984, p. 17.

[202] Resolution (83)13 adopted on 24 November 1983.

[203] Application No. 25781/94; 120 ILR, p. 10. See Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary Objections), Series A, No. 310, 1995; 103 ILR, p. 622, and Loizidou v. Turkey (Merits), Reports 1996-VI, p. 2216; 108 ILR, p. 443. See also to the same effect, Autocephalous Church of Cyprus v. Goldberg 917 F.2d 278 (1990); 108 ILR, p. 488, and Caglar v. Billingham [1996] STC (SCD) 150; 108 ILR, p. 510.

[204] See also Foreign Affairs Committee, Third Report, Session 1986–7, Cyprus: HCP 23 (1986–7).

[205] See Shaw, Title, chapter 3.

[206] Africa Research Bulletin, June 1976, p. 4047 and July 1976, pp. 4078 and 4081.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

despite Morocco's threat of withdrawal from the organisation.[207] This, therefore, can be taken as OAU recognition of statehood and, as such, of evidential significance. However, although in view of the reduced importance of the effectiveness of control criterion in such self-determination situations a credible argument can now be made regarding SADR's statehood, the issue is still controversial in view of the continuing hostilities and what appears to be effective Moroccan control. It is to be noted that the legal counsel to the UN gave an opinion in 2002 to the effect that Western Sahara continued as a non-self-governing territory and that this status was unaffected by the transfer of administrative authority to Morocco and Mauritania in 1975. The view was also taken that exploration and exploitation activities undertaken in disregard of the interests and wishes of the people of Western Sahara would violate international law.[208]

Various secessionist claimants

A number of secessionist claims from recognised independent states exist. The former territory of British Somaliland, being the northern part of the new state of Somalia after its independence in 1960, asserted its own independence on 17 May 1991.[209] A constitution was adopted in 2001, but the Organisation of African Unity refused to support any action that would affect the unity and sovereignty of Somalia.[210] 'Somaliland' is unrecognised by any state or international organisation, although a number of dealings with the authorities of that entity have taken place.[211] Following an armed conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan in the early 1990s, Armenian forces captured and occupied the area of Nagorno-Karabakh (and seven surrounding districts) from Azerbaijan. Nagorno-Karabakh, an area with [207] See Keesing's Contemporary Archives, pp. 33324–45.

[208] S/2002/161. The UK has stated that it regards the 'the sovereignty of Western Sahara as undetermined pending United Nations efforts to find a solution to the dispute over the territory', UKMIL, 76 BYIL, 2005, p. 720.

[209] See e.g. Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 412 ff., and Somalia: A Country Study (ed. H. C. Metz), 4th edn, Washington, 1993. See generally P. Kolsto, 'The Sustainability and Future of Unrecognized Quasi-States', 43 Journal of Peace Research, 2006, p. 723.

[210] See Report of the UN Secretary-General on the Situation in Somalia, S/2001/963, paras. 16 ff. (2001).

[211] See e.g. the provision of assistance to the authorities of the area by the UK and the visit to the UK and meetings with UK government officials by the 'president of Somaliland' in July 2006: see FCO Press Release, 16 August 2006. See also UKMIL, 76 BYIL, 2005, p. 715.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

a majority ethnic Armenian population, declared its independence from Azerbaijan. However, it has not been recognised by any state (including Armenia) and the UN Security Council adopted resolutions 822, 853, 874 and 884 reaffirming the sovereign and territorial integrity of Azerbaijan and calling for withdrawal from the occupied territories of Azerbaijan.[212] The former USSR republic of Moldova became independent on 23 June 1990 as the USSR dissolved. On 2 September 1990 the 'Moldavian Republic of Transdniestria' was proclaimed as an independent state in an area of Moldova bordering Ukraine. This entity has been able to maintain itself as a result of Russian assistance. However, it has not been recognised by any state.[213] Similarly, the areas of South Ossetia and Abkhazia in Georgia have sought to establish separate de facto governments and independence respectively with Russian support and have similarly not been recognised by any state.[214]

Associations of states

There are a number of ways in which states have become formally associated with one another. Such associations do not constitute states but have a certain effect upon international law. Confederations, for example, are probably the closest form of co-operation and they generally involve several countries acting together by virtue of an international agreement, with some kind of central institutions with limited functions.[215] This is to be contrasted with federations. A federal unit is a state with strong [212] See e.g. the Reports of the International Crisis Group on Nagorno-Karabakh of 14 September 2005, 11 October 2005 and 14 November 2007. See also resolution 1416 of the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly, 2005.

[213] See the Reports of the International Crisis Group on Moldova of 12 August 2003, 17 June 2004 and 17 August 2006. See also Ilascu v. Moldova and Russia, European Court of Human Rights, judgment of 8 July 2004, pp. 8–40.

[214] See the Reports of the International Crisis Group on South Ossetia of 26 November 2004, 19 April 2005 and 7 June 2007, and the Reports on Abkhazia of 15 September 2006 and 18 January 2007.

[215] Note, for example, the Preliminary Agreement Concerning the Establishment of a Confederation between the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republic of Croatia, 1994, 33 ILM, 1994, p. 605. This Agreement 'anticipated' the creation of a Confederation, but provides that its 'establishment shall not change the international identity or legal personality of Croatia or of the Federation'. The Agreement provided for co-operation between the parties in a variety of areas and for Croatia to grant the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina free access to the Adriatic through its territory. This Confederation did not come about.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

centralised organs and usually a fairly widespread bureaucracy with extensive powers over the citizens of the state, even though the powers of the state are divided between the different units.[216] However, a state may comprise component units with extensive powers.[217]

There are in addition certain 'associated states' which by virtue of their smallness and lack of development have a close relationship with another state. One instance is the connection between the Cook Islands and New Zealand, where internal self-government is allied to external dependence.[218] Another example was the group of islands which constituted the Associated States of the West Indies. These were tied to the United Kingdom by the terms of the West Indies Act 1967, which provided for the latter to exercise control with regard to foreign and defence issues. Nevertheless, such states were able to and did attain their independence.[219]

The status of such entities in an association relationship with a state will depend upon the constitutional nature of the arrangement and may in certain circumstances involve international personality distinct from the metropolitan state depending also upon international acceptance. It must, however, be noted that such status is one of the methods accepted by the UN of exercising the right to self-determination.[220] Provided that an acceptable level of powers, including those dealing with domestic affairs, remain with the associated state, and that the latter may without undue difficulty revoke the arrangement, some degree of personality would appear desirable and acceptable.

The Commonwealth of Nations (the former British Commonwealth) is perhaps the most well known of the loose associations which group together sovereign states on the basis usually of common interests and historical ties. Its members are all fully independent states who cooperate through the assistance of the Commonwealth Secretariat and periodic conferences of Heads of Government. Regular meetings of particular ministers also take place. The Commonwealth does not constitute [216] See Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 479 ff., and above, p. 217. See also with regard to the proposed arrangement between Gambia and Senegal, 21 ILM, 1982, pp. 44–7.

[217] See e.g. the Dayton Peace Agreement 1995, Annex 4 laying down the constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina as an independent state consisting of two Entities, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republika Srpska. The boundary between the two Entities was laid down in Annex 2.

[218] Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 625 ff. See also as regards Puerto Rico and Niue, ibid.

[219] See e.g. J. E. S. Fawcett, Annual Survey of Commonwealth Law, London, 1967, pp. 709–11.

[220] See, with regard to the successors of the trust territory of the Pacific, above, p. 224.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

a legally binding relationship, but operates as a useful forum for discussions. Relations between Commonwealth members display certain special characteristics, for example, ambassadors are usually referred to as High Commissioners. It would appear unlikely in the circumstances that it possesses separate international personality.[221] However, the more that the Commonwealth develops distinctive institutions and establishes common policies with the capacity to take binding decisions, the more the argument may be made for international legal personality.

Following the dissolution of the Soviet Union and the coming to independence of the constituent Republics, with the Russian Federation being deemed the continuation of the Soviet Union, it was decided to establish the Commonwealth of Independent States.[222] Originally formed by Russia, Belarus and Ukraine on 8 December 1991, it was enlarged on 21 December 1991 to include eleven former Republics of the USSR. Georgia joined the CIS on 8 October 1993. Thus all the former Soviet Republics, excluding the three Baltic states, are now members of that organisation.[223] The agreement establishing the CIS provided for respect for human rights and other principles and called for co-ordination between the member states. The Charter of the CIS was adopted on 22 June 1993 as a binding international treaty[224] and laid down a series of principles ranging from respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of states, self-determination of peoples, prohibition of the use or threat of force and settlement of disputes by peaceful means. It was noted that the CIS was neither a state nor 'supranational' (article 1) and a number of common co-ordinating institutions were established. In particular, the Council of Heads of State is the 'highest body of the Commonwealth' and it may 'take decisions on the principal issues relating to the activity of the member states in the field of their mutual interests' (article 21), while the Council of the Heads of Government has the function of co-ordinating co-operation among executive organs of member states (article 22). Both Councils may [221] See J. E. S. Fawcett, The British Commonwealth in International Law, London, 1963; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 256; O'Connell, International Law, pp. 346–56; Whiteman, Digest, vol. I, pp. 476–544; Rousseau, Droit International Public, vol. II, pp. 214–64, and Sale, The Modern Commonwealth, 1983. See also, as regards the French Community, Whiteman, Digest, pp. 544–82, and O'Connell, International Law, pp. 356–9.

[222] See e.g. J. Lippott, 'The Commonwealth of Independent States as an Economic and Legal Community', 39 German YIL, 1996, p. 334.

[223] See 31 ILM, 1992, pp. 138 and 147, and 34 ILM, 1995, p. 1298.

[224] See 34 ILM, 1995, p. 1279.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

take decisions on the basis of consensus (article 23). A Council of Foreign Ministers was also established together with a Co-ordination and Consultative Committee, as a permanent executive and co-ordinating body of the Commonwealth.[225] The CIS has adopted in addition a Treaty on Economic Union[226] and a Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.[227] The increasing development of the CIS as a directing international institution suggests its possession of international legal personality.

The European Union[228] is an association, of twenty-seven states, which has established a variety of common institutions and which has the competence to adopt not only legal acts binding upon member states but also acts having direct effect within domestic legal systems. The Union consists essentially of the European Community (itself an amalgam of the European Coal and Steel Community, EURATOM and the European Economic Community) and two additional pillars, viz. the Common Foreign and Security Policy, and Justice and Home Affairs. Only the European Coal and Steel Community Treaty provided explicitly for international legal personality (article 6), but the case-law of the European Court of Justice demonstrates its belief that the other two communities also possess such personality.[229] It is also established that Community law has superiority over domestic law. The European Court of Justice early in the history of the Community declared that the Community constituted 'a new legal order of international law'.[230] In the circumstances, it seems hard to deny that the Community possesses international legal personality, but [225] Note also the creation of the Council of Defence Ministers, the Council of Frontier Troops Chief Commanders, an Economic Court, a Commission on Human Rights, an Organ of Branch Co-operation and an Interparliamentary Assembly (articles 30–5).

[226] 24 September 1993, 34 ILM, 1995, p. 1298.

[227] 26 May 1995, see Council of Europe Information Sheet No. 36, 1995, p. 195.

[228] Established as such by article A, Title I of the Treaty on European Union (Maastricht) signed in February 1992 and in force as from 1 January 1993. See also the Treaty of Amsterdam, 1997, the Treaty of Nice, 2001 and the Treaty of Lisbon, 2007.

[229] See e.g. Costa v. ENEL [1964] ECR 585, 593; Commission v. Council [1971] ECR 263, 274; Kramer [1976] ECR 1279, 1308 and Protection of Nuclear Materials [1978] ECR 2151, 2179; The Oxford Encyclopaedia of European Community Law (ed. A. Toth), Oxford, 1991, p. 351; D. Lasok and J. Bridge, Law and Institutions of the European Union (ed. P. Lasok), 6th edn, London, 1994, chapter 2, and S. Weatherill and P. Beaumont, EU Law, 3rd edn, London, 1999. See also A. Peters, 'The Position of International Law Within the European Community Legal Order', 40 German YIL, 1997, p. 9, and D. Chalmers and A. Tomkins, European Union Public Law, Cambridge, 2007.

[230] Van Gend en Loos v. Nederlandse Administratie des Belastingen [1963] ECR 1.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

unlikely that the co-operative processes involved in the additional two pillars are so endowed.[231] The European Community has the power to conclude and negotiate agreements in line with its external powers, to become a member of an international organisation and to have delegations in non-member countries. However, the Treaty on European Union contained no provision on the legal personality of the Union. The Union does not have institutionalised treaty-making powers, but is able to conclude agreements through the Council of the European Union or by asserting its position on the international stage, especially in connection with the Common Foreign and Security Policy. However, article 55 of the Treaty of Lisbon, 2007 provides for the insertion into the Treaty on European Union of a new article 46A, which expressly asserts that the European Union has legal personality.[232]

Conclusions

Whether or not the entities discussed above constitute international persons or indeed states or merely part of some other international person is a matter for careful consideration in the light of the circumstances of the case, in particular the claims made by the entity in question, the facts on the ground, especially with regard to third-party control and the degree of administrative effectiveness manifested, and the reaction of other international persons. The importance here of recognition, acquiescence and estoppel is self-evident. Acceptance of some international personality need not be objective so as to bind non-consenting states nor unlimited as to time and content factors. These elements will be considered below. It should, however, be noted here that the international community itself also has needs and interests that bear upon this question as to international status. This is particularly so with regard to matters of responsibility and the protection of persons via the rules governing the recourse to and conduct of armed conflicts.[233]

[231] See e.g. the Second Legal Adviser of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 660. But see also Oppenheim's International Law, p. 20. Note also the European Court of Justice's Opinion No. 1/94, Community Competence to Conclude Certain International Agreements [1994] ECR I-5276; 108 ILR, p. 225.

[232] The Treaty of Lisbon, 2007 is not yet in force.

[233] As to the specific regime established in the Antarctica Treaty, 1959, see below, p. 535. See also below, p. 628, with regard to the International Seabed Authority under the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Special cases

The Sovereign Order of Malta

This Order, established during the Crusades as a military and medical association, ruled Rhodes from 1309 to 1522 and was given Malta by treaty with Charles V in 1530 as a fief of the Kingdom of Sicily. This sovereignty was lost in 1798, and in 1834 the Order established its headquarters in Rome as a humanitarian organisation.[234] The Order already had international personality at the time of its taking control of Malta and even when it had to leave the island it continued to exchange diplomatic legations with most European countries. The Italian Court of Cassation in 1935 recognised the international personality of the Order, noting that 'the modern theory of the subjects of international law recognises a number of collective units whose composition is independent of the nationality of their constituent members and whose scope transcends by virtue of their universal character the territorial confines of any single state'.[235] This is predicated upon the functional needs of the entity as accepted by third parties. It is to be noted, for example, that the Order maintains diplomatic relations with or is recognised by over eighty states and has observer status in the UN General Assembly.[236] It is not a state and it is questionable whether it has general international personality beyond those states and organisations expressly recognising it.[237]

The Holy See and the Vatican City[238]

In 1870, the conquest of the Papal states by Italian forces ended their existence as sovereign states. The question therefore arose as to the status [234] Oppenheim's International Law, p. 329, note 7; O'Connell, International Law, pp. 85–6, and Whiteman, Digest, vol. I, pp. 584–7. See also Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 231 ff., and B. J. Theutenberg, The Holy See, the Order of Malta and International Law, Skara, 2003.

[235] Nanni v. Pace and the Sovereign Order of Malta 8 AD, p. 2. See also Scarfò v. Sovereign Order of Malta 24 ILR, p. 1; Sovereign Order of Malta v. Soc. An. Commerciale 22 ILR, p. 1, and Cassese, International Law, pp. 132–3.

[236] Crawford, Creation of States, p. 231.

[237] Ibid., p. 233.

[238] See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 325; Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 221 ff.; J. Duursma, Fragmentation and the International Relations of Microstates: Self-determination and Statehood, Cambridge, 1996, pp. 374 ff.; Rousseau, Droit International Public, vol. II, pp. 353–77; Le Saint-Siège dans les Relations Internationales (ed. J. P. D'Onorio), Aix-en-Provence, 1989, and R. Graham, Vatican Diplomacy: A Study of Church and State on the International Plane, Princeton, 1959. See also Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 455.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in international law of the Holy See, deprived, as it then was, of normal territorial sovereignty. In 1929 the Lateran Treaty was signed with Italy which recognised the state of the Vatican City and 'the sovereignty of the Holy See in the field of international relations as an attribute that pertains to the very nature of the Holy See, in conformity with its traditions and with the demands of its mission in the world'.[239] The question thus interrelates with the problem of the status today of the Vatican City. The latter has no permanent population apart from Church functionaries and exists only to support the work of the Holy See. Italy carries out a substantial number of administrative functions with regard to the City. Some writers accordingly have concluded that it cannot be regarded as a state.[240] Nevertheless, it is a party to many international treaties and is a member of the Universal Postal Union and the International Telecommunications Union. It would appear that by virtue of recognition and acquiescence in the context of its claims, it does exist as a state. The Vatican City is closely linked with the Holy See and they are essentially part of the same construct.

The Holy See, the central organisational authority of the Catholic Church, continued after 1870 to engage in diplomatic relations and enter into international agreements and concordats.[241] Accordingly its status as an international person was accepted by such partners. In its joint eleventh and twelfth report submitted to the UN Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination in 1993,[242] the Holy See reminded the Committee of its 'exceptional nature within the community of nations; as a sovereign subject of international law, it has a mission of an essentially religious and moral order, universal in scope, which is based on minimal territorial dimensions guaranteeing a basis of autonomy for the pastoral ministry of the Sovereign Pontiff'.[243] Crawford has concluded that the Holy See is both an international legal person in its own right and the government of a state (the Vatican City).[244]

[239] 130 BFSP, p. 791. See also O'Connell, International Law, p. 289, and Re Marcinkus, Mennini and De Strobel 87 ILR, p. 48.

[240] See M. Mendelson, 'The Diminutive States in the United Nations', 21 ICLQ, 1972, p. 609. See also Brownlie, Principles, p. 64.

[241] See e.g. the Fundamental Agreement between the Holy See and the State of Israel of 30 December 1993, 33 ILM, 1994, p. 153.

[242] CERD/C/226/Add. 6 (15 February 1993).

[243] See also the decision of the Philippines Supreme Court (en banc) in The Holy See v. Starbright Sales Enterprises Inc. 102 ILR, p. 163.

[244] Crawford, Creation of States, p. 230. The International Committee of the Red Cross also appears on the basis of state practice, particularly its participation in international

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Insurgents and belligerents

International law has recognised that such entities may in certain circumstances, primarily dependent upon the de facto administration of specific territory, enter into valid arrangements.[245] In addition they will be bound by the rules of international law with respect to the conduct of hostilities and may in due course be recognised as governments. The traditional law is in process of modification as a result of the right to self-determination, and other legal principles such as territorial integrity, sovereign equality and non-intervention in addition to recognition will need to be taken into account.[246]

National liberation movements (NLMs)

The question of whether or not NLMs constitute subjects of international law and, if so, to what extent, is bound up with the development of the law relating to non-self-governing territories and the principle of self-determination. What is noticeable is not only the increasing status of NLMs during the decolonisation period, but also the fact that in many cases the international community turned to bodies other than the NLMs in controversial situations.

The UN trusteeship system permitted the hearing of individual petitioners and this was extended to all colonial territories. In 1977, the General Assembly Fourth Committee voted to permit representatives of certain NLMs from Portugal's African territories to participate in its work dealing with such territories.[247] The General Assembly endorsed the concept of observer status for liberation movements recognised by the Organisation of African Unity in resolution 2918 (XVII). In resolution 3247 (XXIX), the Assembly accepted that NLMs recognised by the OAU or agreements, to be an international legal person to a limited extent: see Cassese, International Law, pp. 133–4.

245 See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 165; Lauterpacht, Recognition, pp. 494–5; Brownlie, Principles, p. 63, and T. C. Chen, Recognition, London, 1951. See also Cassese, International Law, pp. 124 ff.; S. C. Neff, 'The Prerogatives of Violence – In Search of the Conceptual Foundations of Belligerents' Rights', 38 German YIL, 1995, p. 41, and Neff, The Rights and Duties of Neutrals, Manchester, 2000, pp. 200 ff.

246 See below, p. 251.

247 See M. N. Shaw, 'The International Status of National Liberation Movements', 5 Liverpool Law Review, 1983, p. 19, and R. Ranjeva, 'Peoples and National Liberation Movements' in International Law: Achievements and Prospects (ed. M. Bedjaoui), Paris, 1991, p. 101. See also Cassese, International Law, pp. 140 ff., and H. Wilson, International Law and the Use of Force by National Liberation Movements, Oxford, 1988.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the Arab League could participate in Assembly sessions, in conferences arranged under the auspices of the Assembly and in meetings of the UN specialised agencies and the various Assembly organs.[248]

The inclusion of the regional recognition requirement was intended both to require a minimum level of effectiveness with regard to the organisation concerned before UN acceptance and to exclude in practice secessionist movements. The Economic and Social Committee of the UN has also adopted a similar approach and under its procedural rules it may invite any NLM recognised by or in accordance with General Assembly resolutions to take part in relevant debates without a vote.[249]

The UN Security Council also permitted the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) to participate in its debates with the same rights of participation as conferred upon a member state not a member of the Security Council, although this did raise serious constitutional questions.[250] Thus the possibility of observer status in the UN and related organs for NLMs appears to have been affirmatively settled in international practice. The question of international personality, however, is more complex and more significant, and recourse must be made to state practice.[251] Whether extensive state recognition of a liberation movement is of itself sufficient to confer such status is still a controversial issue.

The position of the PLO, however, began to evolve considerably with the Israel–PLO Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements signed in Washington on 13 September 1993.[252] By virtue of [248] While the leader of the PAIGC was not permitted to speak at the Assembly in 1973, the leader of the PLO was able to address the body in 1974: see A/C.4/SR.1978 p. 23 and resolution 3237 (XXIX).

[249] ECOSOC resolution 1949 (LVII), 8 May 1975, rule 73. See also, as regards the Human Rights Commission, CHR/Res.19 (XXIX). The General Assembly and ECOSOC have also called upon the specialised agencies and other UN-related organisations to assist the peoples and NLMs of colonial territories: see e.g. Assembly resolutions 33/41 and 35/29.

[250] See Yearbook of the UN, 1972, p. 70 and 1978, p. 297; S/PV 1859 (1975); S/PV 1870 (1976); UN Chronicle, April 1982, p. 16, and DUSPIL, 1975, pp. 73–5. See also Shaw, 'International Status'.

[251] See the UN Headquarters Agreement case, ICJ Reports, 1988, p. 12; 82 ILR, p. 225.

[252] 32 ILM, 1993, p. 1525. Note that letters of mutual recognition and commitment to the peace process were exchanged between the Prime Minister of Israel and the Chairman of the PLO on 9 September 1993. See e.g. K. Calvo-Goller, 'L'Accord du 13 Séptembre 1993 entre L'Israël et l'OLP: Le Régime d'Autonomie Prévu par la Déclaration Israël/OLP', AFDI, 1993, p. 435. See also Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 442 ff.; New Political Entities in Public and Private International Law (eds. A. Shapira and M. Tabory), The Hague, 1999; E. Benvenisti, 'The Status of the Palestinian Authority' in Arab–Israeli Accords: Legal Perspectives (eds. E. Cotrain and C. Mallat), The Hague, 1996, p. 47, and Benvenisti,

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

this Declaration, the PLO team in the Jordanian–Palestinian delegation to the Middle East Peace Conference was accepted as representing the Palestinian people. It was agreed to establish a Palestinian Interim Self-Government Authority as an elected Council for the Palestinian people in the West Bank and Gaza (occupied by Israel since 1967) for a transitional period of up to five years leading to a permanent solution. Its jurisdiction was to cover the territory of the West Bank and Gaza, save for issues to be negotiated in the permanent status negotiations. Upon the entry into force of the Declaration, a transfer of authority was to commence from the Israel military government and its civil administration. The Cairo Agreement of 4 May 1994[253] provided for the immediate withdrawal of Israeli forces from Jericho and the Gaza Strip and transfer of authority to a separately established Palestinian Authority. This Authority, distinct from the PLO it should be emphasised, was to have certain specified legislative, executive and judicial powers. The process continued with a transfer of further powers and responsibilities in a Protocol of 27 August 1995 and with the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and Gaza of 28 September 1995, under which an additional range of powers and responsibilities was transferred to the Palestinian Authority pending the election of the Council and arrangements were made for Israeli withdrawal from a number of cities and villages on the West Bank.[254] An accord concerning Hebron followed in 1997[255] and the Wye River agreement in 1998, both marking further Israeli redeployments, while the Sharm el Sheikh memorandum and a later Protocol of 1999 concerned safe-passage arrangements between the Palestinian Authority areas in Gaza and the West Bank.[256] The increase in the territorial and jurisdictional competence of the Palestinian Authority established as a consequence of these arrangements raised the question of legal personality. While Palestinian statehood has clearly not been accepted by the international community, the Palestinian Authority can be regarded as possessing some form of limited international

'The Israeli–Palestinian Declaration of Principles: A Framework for Future Settlement', 4 EJIL, 1993, p. 542, and P. Malanczuk, 'Some Basic Aspects of the Agreements Between Israel and the PLO from the Perspective of International Law', 7 EJIL, 1996, p. 485.

253 33 ILM, 1994, p. 622.

254 See e.g. M. Benchikh, 'L'Accord Intérimaire Israélo-Palestinien sur la Cisjordanie et la bande de Gaza du 28 September 1995', AFDI, 1995, p. 7, and The Arab–Israeli Accords: Legal Perspectives (eds. E. Cotran and C. Mallat), The Hague, 1996.

255 See e.g. A. Bockel, 'L'Accord d'Hebron (17 janvier 1997) et la Tentative de Relance du Processus de Paix Israélo-Palestinien', AFDI, 1997, p. 184.

256 See A. Bockel, 'L'Issue du Processus de Paix Israélo-Palestinien en Vue?', AFDI, 1999, p. 165.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

personality.[257] Such personality, however, derives from the agreements between Israel and the PLO and exists separately from the personality of the PLO as an NLM, which relies upon the recognition of third parties.[258]

As far as Namibia was concerned, the territory was regarded as having an international status[259] and there existed an NLM recognised as the authentic representative of the people[260] but it was, theoretically, administered by the UN Council for Namibia. This body was established in 1967 by the General Assembly in order to administer the territory and to prepare it for independence; it was disbanded in 1990. There were thirty-one UN member states on the Council, which was responsible to the General Assembly.[261] The Council sought to represent Namibian interests in international organisations and in conferences, and issued travel and identity documents to Namibians which were recognised by most states.[262] In 1974, the Council issued Decree No. 1 which sought to forbid the exploitation under South African auspices of the territory's resources, but little was in practice achieved by this Decree, which was not drafted in the clearest possible manner.[263] The status of the Council was unclear, but it was clearly recognised as having a role within the UN context and may thus have possessed some form of qualified personality. It was, of course, distinct from SWAPO, the recognised NLM.

International public companies

This type of entity, which may be known by a variety of names, for example multinational public enterprises or international bodies

[257] See e.g. K. Reece Thomas, 'Non-Recognition, Personality and Capacity: The Palestine Liberation Organisation and the Palestinian Authority in English Law', 29 Anglo-American Law Review, 2000, p. 228; New Political Entities in Public and Private International Law With Special Reference to the Palestinian Entity (eds. A. Shapiro and M. Tabory), The Hague, 1999, and C. Wasserstein Fassberg, 'Israel and the Palestinian Authority', 28 Israel Law Review, 1994, p. 319.

[258] See e.g. M. Tabory, 'The Legal Personality of the Palestinian Autonomy' in Shapira and Tabory, New Political Entities, p. 139.

[259] The Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, p. 16; 49 ILR, p. 3.

[260] Assembly resolution 3295 (XXIX), recognising the South-West Africa People's Organisation (SWAPO) as the authentic representative of the Namibian people.

[261] The UK did not recognise the Council: see 408 HL Deb., col. 758, 23 April 1980.

[262] See e.g. J. F. Engers, 'The UN Travel and Identity Documents for Namibia', 65 AJIL, 1971, p. 571.

[263] See Decolonisation, No. 9, December 1977.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

corporate, is characterised in general by an international agreement providing for co-operation between governmental and private enterprises.[264] One writer, for example, defined such entities as corporations which > have not been constituted by the exclusive application of one national law; whose members and directors represent several national sovereignties; whose legal personality is not based, or at any rate not entirely, on the decision of a national authority or the application of a national law; whose operations, finally, are governed, at least partially, by rules that do not stem from a single or even from several national laws.[265]

Such enterprises may vary widely in constitutional nature and in competences. Examples of such companies would include INTELSAT, established in 1973 as an intergovernmental structure for a global commercial telecommunications satellite system; Eurofima, established in 1955 by fourteen European states in order to lease equipment to the railway administrations of those states, and the Bank of International Settlement, created in 1930 by virtue of a treaty between five states, and the host country, Switzerland. The personality question will depend upon the differences between municipal and international personality. If the entity is given a range of powers and is distanced sufficiently from municipal law, an international person may be involved, but it will require careful consideration of the circumstances.

Transnational corporations

Another possible candidate for international personality is the transnational or multinational enterprise. Various definitions exist of this important phenomenon in international relations.[266] They in essence constitute [264] See e.g. D. Fligler, Multinational Public Corporations, Washington, DC, 1967; Brownlie, Principles, pp. 65–6, and D. A. Ijalaye, The Extension of Corporate Personality in International Law, Leiden, 1978, pp. 57–146. See also P. Muchlinski, Multinational Enterprises and the Law, updated edn, Oxford, 1999.

[265] Cited in Ijalaye, Corporate Personality, p. 69.

[266] See e.g. C. W. Jenks, in Transnational Law in a Changing Society (eds. W. Friedman, L. Henkin and O. Lissitzyn), New York, 1972, p. 70; H. Baade, in Legal Problems of a Code of Conduct for Multinational Enterprises (ed. N. Horn), Boston, 1980; J. Charney, 'Transnational Corporations and Developing Public International Law', Duke Law Journal, 1983, p. 748; F. Rigaux, 'Transnational Corporations' in Bedjaoui, International Law: Achievements and Prospects, p. 121, and Henkin et al., International Law: Cases

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

private business organisations comprising several legal entities linked together by parent corporations and are distinguished by size and multinational spread. In the years following the Barcelona Traction case,[267] an increasing amount of practice has been evident on the international plane dealing with such corporations. What has been sought is a set of guidelines governing the major elements of the international conduct of these entities.[268] However, progress has been slow and several crucial issues remain to be resolved, including the legal effect, if any, of such guidelines.[269] The question of the international personality of transnational corporations remains an open one.[270] and Materials, p. 368. See also Muchlinski, Multinational Enterprises; C. M. Vazquez, 'Direct vs Indirect Obligations of Corporations under International Law', 43 Columbia Journal of Transnational Law, 2005, p. 927; F. Johns, 'The Invisibility of the Transnational Corporation: An Analysis of International Law and Legal Theory', 19 Melbourne University Law Review, 1993–4, p. 893; D. Eshanov, 'The Role of Multinational Corporations from the Neoinstitutionalist and International Law Perspectives', 16 New York University Environmental Law Journal, 2008, p. 110, and S. R. Ratner, 'Corporations and Human Rights: A Theory of Legal Responsibility', 111 Yale Law Journal, 2001, p. 443.

267 ICJ Reports, 1970, pp. 3, 46–7; 46 ILR, pp. 178, 220–1.

268 See e.g. OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises, 75 US Dept. State Bull., p. 83 (1976), and ILO Tripartite Declaration of Principles concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy, 17 ILM, pp. 423–30. See also Baade, Legal Problems, pp. 416–40. Note the OECD Principles of Corporate Governance, 1998 and the ILO Tripartite Declaration of Principles concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy, 2000. See also the Draft Norms on Responsibilities for Transnational Corporations and Other Business Enterprises with Regard to Human Rights produced by the UN Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights' Sessional Working Group on the working methods and activities of transnational corporations, E/CN.4/Sub.2/2002/13, August 2002, and Human Rights Standards and the Responsibilities of Transnational Corporations (ed. M. Addo), The Hague, 1999.

269 See the Draft Code of Conduct produced by the UN Commission on Transnational Corporations, 22 ILM, pp. 177–206; 23 ILM, p. 627 and ibid., p. 602 (Secretariat report on outstanding issues); E/1990/94 (1990) and the World Bank Guidelines on the Treatment of Foreign Direct Investment, 31 ILM, 1992, p. 1366. The Commission ceased work in 1993. The Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights adopted 'Norms on the Responsibilities of Transnational Corporations and Other Business Enterprises with Regard to Human Rights' in 2003: see E/CN.4/Sub.2/2003/12/Rev.2. Note the Andean Group commission decision 292 on a uniform code on Andean multinational enterprises, 30 ILM, 1991, p. 1295, and the Eastern and Southern African states charter on a regime of multinational industrial enterprises, ibid., p. 696. See also the previous footnote.

270 The Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, St Paul, 1987, p. 126 notes that the transnational corporation, while an established feature of international life, 'has not yet achieved independent status in international law'.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The right of all peoples to self-determination[271]

The establishment of the legal right

This principle, which traces its origin to the concepts of nationality and democracy as evolved primarily in Europe, first appeared in major form after the First World War. Despite President Wilson's efforts, it was not included in the League of Nations Covenant and it was clearly not regarded as a legal principle.[272] However, its influence can be detected in the various provisions for minority protection[273] and in the establishment of the mandates system based as it was upon the sacred trust concept. In the ten years before the Second World War, there was relatively little practice regarding self-determination in international law. A number of treaties concluded by the USSR in this period noted the principle,[274] but in the Aaland Islands case it was clearly accepted by both the International Commission of Jurists and the Committee of Rapporteurs dealing with the situation that the principle of self-determination was not a legal rule of international law, but purely a political concept.[275] The situation, [271] See in general e.g. A. Cassese, Self-Determination of Peoples, Cambridge, 1995; K. Knop, Diversity and Self-Determination in International Law, Cambridge, 2002; U. O. Umozurike, Self-Determination in International Law, Hamden, 1972; A. Rigo-Sureda, The Evolution of the Right of Self-Determination, Leiden, 1973; M. Pomerance, Self-Determination in Law and Practice, Leiden, 1982; Shaw, Title to Territory, pp. 59–144; A. E. Buchanan, Justice, Legitimacy and Self-Determination, Oxford, 2004; D. Raic, Statehood and the Law of Self-Determination, The Hague, 2002; Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 107 ff., and Crawford, 'The General Assembly, the International Court and Self-Determination' in Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice (eds. A. V. Lowe and M. Fitzmaurice), Cambridge, 1996, p. 585; Rousseau, Droit International Public, vol. II, pp. 17–35; Wilson, International Law; Tunkin, Theory, pp. 60–9; and Tomuschat, Modern Law of Self-Determination. See also M. Koskenniemi, 'National Self-Determination Today: Problems of Legal Theory and Practice', 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 241; H. Quane, 'The UN and the Evolving Right to Self-Determination', 47 ICLQ, 1998, p. 537, and W. Ofuatey-Kodjoe, 'Self Determination' in United Nations Legal Order (eds. O. Schachter and C. Joyner), Cambridge, 1995, vol. I, p. 349.

[272] See A. Cobban, The Nation-State and National Self-Determination, London, 1969; D. H. Miller, The Drafting of the Covenant, New York, 1928, vol. II, pp. 12–13; S. Wambaugh, Plebiscites since the World War, Washington, 1933, vol. I, p. 42, and Pomerance, Self-Determination.

[273] See e.g. I. Claude, National Minorities, Cambridge, 1955, and J. Lador-Lederer, International Group Protection, Leiden, 1968.

[274] See e.g. the Baltic States' treaties, Martens, Recueil Général de Traités, 3rd Series, XI, pp. 864, 877 and 888, and Cobban, Nation-State, pp. 187–218. See also Whiteman, Digest, vol. IV, p. 56.

[275] LNOJ Supp. No. 3, 1920, pp. 5–6 and Doc. B7/21/68/106[VII], pp. 22–3. See also J. Barros, The Aaland Islands Question, New Haven, 1968, and Verzijl, International Law, pp. 328–32.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

which concerned the Swedish inhabitants of an island alleged to be part of Finland, was resolved by the League's recognition of Finnish sovereignty coupled with minority guarantees.

The Second World War stimulated further consideration of the idea and the principle was included in the UN Charter. Article 1(2) noted as one of the organisation's purposes the development of friendly relations among nations based upon respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination, and article 55 reiterated the phraseology. It is disputed whether the reference to the principle in these very general terms was sufficient to entail its recognition as a binding right, but the majority view is against this. Not every statement of a political aim in the Charter can be regarded as automatically creative of legal obligations. On the other hand, its inclusion in the Charter, particularly within the context of the statement of purposes of the UN, provided the opportunity for the subsequent interpretation of the principle both in terms of its legal effect and consequences and with regard to its definition. It is also to be noted that Chapters XI and XII of the Charter deal with non-self-governing and trust territories and may be seen as relevant within the context of the development and definition of the right to self-determination, although the term is not expressly used.[276]

Practice since 1945 within the UN, both generally as regards the elucidation and standing of the principle and more particularly as regards its perceived application in specific instances, can be seen as having ultimately established the legal standing of the right in international law. This may be achieved either by treaty or by custom or indeed, more controversially, by virtue of constituting a general principle of law. All these routes are relevant, as will be seen. The UN Charter is a multilateral treaty which can be interpreted by subsequent practice, while the range of state and organisation practice evident within the UN system can lead to the formation of customary law. The amount of material dealing with self-determination in the UN testifies to the importance of the concept and some of the more significant of this material will be briefly noted.

Resolution 1514 (XV), the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, adopted in 1960 by eighty-nine votes to none, with nine abstentions, stressed that:

[276] See e.g. O'Connell, International Law, p. 312; N. Bentwich and A. Martin, Commentary on the Charter of the UN, New York, 1950, p. 7; D. Nincic, The Problem of Sovereignty in the Charter and the Practice of States, The Hague, 1970, p. 221; H. Kelsen, Law of the United Nations, London, 1950, pp. 51–3, and H. Lauterpacht, International Law and Human Rights, The Hague, 1950, pp. 147–9. See also Judge Tanaka, South-West Africa cases, ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 288–9; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 451–2.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> all peoples have the right to self-determination; by virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development.

Inadequacy of political, social, economic or educational preparedness was not to serve as a protest for delaying independence, while attempts aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a country were deemed incompatible with the UN Charter. The Colonial Declaration set the terms for the self-determination debate in its emphasis upon the colonial context and its opposition to secession, and has been regarded by some as constituting a binding interpretation of the Charter.[277] The Declaration was reinforced by the establishment of a Special Committee on Decolonisation, which now deals with all dependent territories and has proved extremely active, and by the fact that virtually all UN resolutions dealing with self-determination expressly refer to it. Indeed, the International Court has specifically referred to the Colonial Declaration as an 'important stage' in the development of international law regarding non-self-governing territories and as the 'basis for the process of decolonisation'.[278]

In 1966, the General Assembly adopted the International Covenants on Human Rights. Both these Covenants have an identical first article, declaring inter alia that '[a]ll peoples have the right to self-determination. By virtue of that right they freely determine their political status', while states parties to the instruments 'shall promote the realisation of the right of self-determination and shall respect that right in conformity with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations'. The Covenants came into force in 1976 and thus constitute binding provisions as between the parties, but in addition they also may be regarded as authoritative interpretations of several human rights provisions in the Charter, including self-determination. The 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations can be regarded as constituting an authoritative interpretation of the seven Charter provisions it expounds. The Declaration states inter alia that 'by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all people have the right freely to determine . . . their political status' while all states are under the duty to respect this right in accordance with the Charter. The Declaration was specifically intended [277] See e.g. O. Asamoah, The Legal Significance of the Declarations of the General Assembly of the United Nations, The Hague, 1966, pp. 177–85, and Shaw, Title, chapter 2.

[278] The Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 31 and 32; 59 ILR, pp. 14, 49.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

to act as an elucidation of certain important Charter provisions and was indeed adopted without opposition by the General Assembly.[279]

In addition to this general, abstract approach, the UN organs have dealt with self-determination in a series of specific resolutions with regard to particular situations and this practice may be adduced as reinforcing the conclusions that the principle has become a right in international law by virtue of a process of Charter interpretation. Numerous resolutions have been adopted in the General Assembly and also the Security Council.[280] It is also possible that a rule of customary law has been created since practice in the UN system is still state practice, but the identification of the opinio juris element is not easy and will depend upon careful assessment and judgment.

Judicial discussion of the principle of self-determination has been relatively rare and centres on the Namibia[281] and Western Sahara[282] advisory opinions by the International Court. In the former case, the Court emphasised that 'the subsequent development of international law in regard to non-self-governing territories as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations made the principle of self-determination applicable to all of them'.[283] The Western Sahara case reaffirmed this point.[284] This case arose out of the decolonisation of that territory, controlled by Spain as the colonial power but subject to irredentist claims by Morocco and Mauritania. The Court was asked for an opinion with regard to the legal ties between the territory at that time and Morocco and the Mauritanian entity. The Court stressed that the request for an opinion arose out of the consideration by the General Assembly of the decolonisation of Western Sahara and that the right of the people of the territory to self-determination constituted a basic assumption of the questions put to the Court.[285] After [279] Adopted in resolution 2625 (XXV) without a vote. See e.g. R. Rosenstock, 'The Declaration of Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations', 65 AJIL, 1971, pp. 16, 111 and 115.

[280] See e.g. Assembly resolutions 1755 (XVII); 2138 (XXI); 2151 (XXI); 2379 (XXIII); 2383 (XXIII) and Security Council resolutions 183 (1963); 301 (1971); 377 (1975) and 384 (1975).

[281] ICJ Reports, 1971, p. 16; 49 ILR, p. 3.

[282] ICJ Reports, 1975, p. 12; 59 ILR, p. 30. See also M. N. Shaw, 'The Western Sahara Case', 49 BYIL, p. 119.

[283] ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 31; 49 ILR, pp. 3, 21.

[284] ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 31; 59 ILR, pp. 30, 48.

[285] ICJ Reports, 1975, p. 68; 59 ILR, p. 85. See in particular the views of Judge Dillard that 'a norm of international law has emerged applicable to the decolonisation of those non-self-governing territories which are under the aegis of the United Nations', ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 121–2; 59 ILR, p. 138. See also Judge Petren, ICJ Reports, 1975, p. 110; 59 ILR, p. 127.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

analysing the Charter provisions and Assembly resolutions noted above, the Court concluded that the ties which had existed between the claimants and the territory during the relevant period of the 1880s were not such as to affect the application of resolution 1514 (XV), the Colonial Declaration, in the decolonisation of the territory and in particular the right to self-determination. In other words, it is clear that the Court regarded the principle of self-determination as a legal one in the context of such territories.

The Court moved one step further in the East Timor (Portugal v. Australia) case[286] when it declared that 'Portugal's assertion that the right of peoples to self-determination, as it evolved from the Charter and from United Nations practice, has an erga omnes character, is irreproachable.' The Court emphasised that the right of peoples to self-determination was 'one of the essential principles of contemporary international law'.[287] However, in that case, the Court, while noting that for both Portugal and Australia, East Timor (under Indonesian military occupation since the invasion of 1975) constituted a non-self-governing territory and pointing out that the people of East Timor had the right to self-determination, held that the absence of Indonesia from the litigation meant that the Court was unable to exercise its jurisdiction.[288] These propositions were all reaffirmed by the International Court in the Construction of a Wall advisory opinion.[289]

The issue of self-determination came before the Supreme Court of Canada in Reference Re Secession of Quebec in 1998 in the form of three questions posed. The second question asked whether there existed in international law a right to self-determination which would give Quebec the right unilaterally to secede.[290] The Court declared that the principle of self-determination 'has acquired a status beyond "convention" and is considered a general principle of international law'.[291]

[286] ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 90, 102; 105 ILR, p. 226. [287] Ibid.

[288] ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 105–6. The reason related to the principle that the Court is unable to exercise jurisdiction over a state without the consent of that state. The Court took the view that Portugal's claims against Australia could not be decided upon without an examination of the position of Indonesia, which had not consented to the jurisdiction of the Court. See further below, chapter 19, p. 1078.

[289] ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 136, 171–2; 129 ILR, pp. 37, 89–91.

[290] (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385; 115 ILR, p. 536. The first question concerned the existence or not in Canadian constitutional law of a right to secede, and the third question asked whether in the event of a conflict constitutional or international law would have priority. See further below, chapter 10, p. 522, on the question of secession and self-determination.

[291] (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 434–5.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The definition of self-determination

If the principle exists as a legal one, and it is believed that such is the case, the question arises then of its scope and application. As noted above, UN formulations of the principle from the 1960 Colonial Declaration to the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law and the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights stress that it is the right of 'all peoples'. If this is so, then all peoples would become thereby to some extent subjects of international law as the direct repositories of international rights, and if the definition of 'people' used was the normal political–sociological one,[292] a major rearrangement of international law perceptions would have been created. In fact, that has not occurred and an international law concept of what constitutes a people for these purposes has been evolved, so that the 'self' in question must be determined within the accepted colonial territorial framework. Attempts to broaden this have not been successful and the UN has always strenuously opposed any attempt at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a country.[293] The UN has based its policy on the proposition that 'the territory of a colony or other non-self-governing territory has under the Charter a status separate and distinct from the territory of the state administering it' and that such status was to exist until the people of that territory had exercised the right to self-determination.[294] Self-determination has also been used in conjunction with the principle of territorial integrity so as to protect the territorial framework of the colonial period in the decolonisation process and to prevent a rule permitting secession from independent states from arising.[295] The Canadian Supreme Court noted in the Quebec case that 'international law expects that the right to self-determination will be exercised by peoples within the framework of existing sovereign states and consistently with the maintenance of the territorial integrity of [292] See e.g. Cobban, Nation-State, p. 107, and K. Deutsche, Nationalism and Social Communications, New York, 1952. See also the Greco-Bulgarian Communities case, PCIJ, Series B, No. 17; 5 AD, p. 4.

[293] See e.g. the Colonial Declaration 1960; the 1970 Declaration on Principles and article III [3] of the OAU Charter.

[294] 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law. Note also that resolution 1541 (XV) declared that there is an obligation to transmit information regarding a territory 'which is geographically separate and is distinct ethnically and/or culturally from the country administering it'.

[295] See e.g. T. M. Franck, The Power of Legitimacy Among Nations, Oxford, 1990, pp. 153 ff.; Franck, 'Fairness in the International Legal and Institutional System', 240 HR, 1993 III, pp. 13, 127–49; Higgins, Problems and Process, chapter 11, and Shaw, Title, chapters 3 and 4.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

those states'.[296] Self-determination as a concept is capable of developing further so as to include the right to secession from existing states,[297] but that has not as yet convincingly happened.[298] It clearly applies within the context, however, of decolonisation of the European empires and thus provides the peoples of such territories with a degree of international personality.

The principle of self-determination provides that the people of the colonially defined territorial unit in question may freely determine their own political status. Such determination may result in independence, integration with a neighbouring state, free association with an independent state or any other political status freely decided upon by the people concerned.[299] Self-determination also has a role within the context of creation of statehood, preserving the sovereignty and independence of states, in providing criteria for the resolution of disputes, and in the area of the permanent sovereignty of states over natural resources.[300]

Individuals[301]

The question of the status in international law of individuals is closely bound up with the rise in the international protection of human rights.

[296] (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385, 436; 115 ILR, p. 536.

[297] Note that the Canadian Supreme Court did refer to 'exceptional circumstances' in which a right of secession 'may' arise: see further below, chapter 10, p. 289.

[298] But see further below, chapter 6, p. 522, with regard to the evolution of self-determination as a principle of human rights operating within independent states.

[299] Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 33 and 68. See also Judge Dillard, ibid., p. 122; 59 ILR, pp. 30, 50, 85, 138. See Assembly resolution 1541 (XV) and the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law.

[300] See the East Timor case, ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 90, 102; 105 ILR, p. 226, where Portugal claimed inter alia that Australia's agreement with Indonesia dealing with the exploration and exploitation of the continental shelf in the 'Timor Gap' violated the right of the people of East Timor to self-determination.

[301] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, chapter 8; Higgins, Problems and Process, pp. 48–55; Brownlie, Principles, chapter 25; O'Connell, International Law, pp. 106–12; C. Norgaard, Position of the Individual in International Law, Leiden, 1962; Cassese, International Law, pp. 142 ff.; Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 643; R. Müllerson, 'Human Rights and the Individual as a Subject of International Law: A Soviet View', 1 EJIL, 1990, p. 33; P. M. Dupuy, 'L'individu et le Droit International', 32 Archives de Philosophie du Droit, 1987, p. 119; H. Lauterpacht, Human Rights in International Law, London, 1951, and International Law: Collected Papers, vol. II, p. 487, and The Individual's Duties to the Community and the Limitations on Human Rights and Freedoms under Article 29 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, study prepared by Daes, 1983, E/CN.4/Sub.2/432/Rev.2. See also below, chapter 6.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

This section will be confined to some general comments about the former. The object theory in this regard maintains that individuals constitute only the subject-matter of intended legal regulation as such. Only states, and possibly international organisations, are subjects of the law.[302] This has been a theory of limited value. The essence of international law has always been its ultimate concern for the human being and this was clearly manifest in the Natural Law origins of classical international law.[303] The growth of positivist theories, particularly in the nineteenth century, obscured this and emphasised the centrality and even exclusivity of the state in this regard. Nevertheless, modern practice does demonstrate that individuals have become increasingly recognised as participants and subjects of international law. This has occurred primarily but not exclusively through human rights law.

The link between the state and the individual for international law purposes has historically been the concept of nationality. This was and remains crucial, particularly in the spheres of jurisdiction and the international protection of the individual by the state. It is often noted that the claim of an individual against a foreign state, for example, becomes subsumed under that of his national state.[304] Each state has the capacity to determine who are to be its nationals and this is to be recognised by other states in so far as it is consistent with international law, although in order for other states to accept this nationality there has to be a genuine connection between the state and the individual in question.[305]

Individuals as a general rule lack standing to assert violations of international treaties in the absence of a protest by the state of nationality,[306] although states may agree to confer particular rights on individuals which will be enforceable under international law, independently of municipal law. Under article 304(b) of the Treaty of Versailles, 1919, for example, nationals of the Allied and Associated Powers could bring cases against Germany before the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal in their own names for [302] See e.g. O'Connell, International Law, pp. 106–7.

[303] See e.g. Grotius, De Jure Praedae Commentarius, 1604, cited in Daes, Individual's Duties, p. 44, and Lauterpacht, Human Rights, pp. 9, 70 and 74.

[304] See the Panevezys–Saldutiskis case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 76; 9 AD, p. 308. See also the Mavrommatis Palestine Concessions case (Jurisdiction), PCIJ, Series A, No. 2 (1924); 2 AD, p. 27. See also below, chapter 14, p. 808.

[305] See the Nottebohm case, ICJ Reports, 1955, pp. 4, 22–3; 22 ILR, p. 349, and below, chapter 14, p. 808.

[306] See e.g. US v. Noriega 746 F.Supp. 1506, 1533 (1990); 99 ILR, pp. 143, 175.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

compensation, while the Treaty of 1907 between five Central American states establishing the Central American Court of Justice provided for individuals to bring cases directly before the Court.[307]

This proposition was reiterated in the Danzig Railway Officials case[308] by the Permanent Court of International Justice, which emphasised that under international law treaties did not as such create direct rights and obligations for private individuals, although particular treaties could provide for the adoption of individual rights and obligations enforceable by the national courts where this was the intention of the contracting parties. Under the provisions concerned with minority protection in the 1919 Peace Treaties, it was possible for individuals to apply directly to an international court in particular instances. Similarly the Tribunal created under the Upper Silesia Convention of 1922 decided that it was competent to hear cases by the nationals of a state against that state.[309]

Since then a wide range of other treaties have provided for individuals to have rights directly and have enabled individuals to have direct access to international courts and tribunals. One may mention as examples the European Convention on Human Rights, 1950; the European Communities treaties, 1957; the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights, 1969; the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 1966; the International Convention for the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, 1965 and the Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes, 1965.

However, the question of the legal personality of individuals under international law extends to questions of direct criminal responsibility also. It is now established that international law proscribes certain heinous conduct in a manner that imports direct individual criminal responsibility. This is dealt with in chapter 8.

International organisations

International organisations have played a crucial role in the sphere of international personality. Since the nineteenth century a growing number of such organisations have appeared and thus raised the issue of international legal personality. In principle it is now well established that international organisations may indeed possess objective international legal [307] See Whiteman, Digest, vol. I, p. 39. [308] PCIJ, Series B, No. 15 (1928); 4 AD, p. 287.

[309] See e.g. Steiner and Gross v. Polish State 4 AD, p. 291.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

personality.[310] Whether that will be so in any particular instance will depend upon the particular circumstances of that case. Whether an organisation possesses personality in international law will hinge upon its constitutional status, its actual powers and practice. Significant factors in this context will include the capacity to enter into relations with states and other organisations and conclude treaties with them, and the status it has been given under municipal law. Such elements are known in international law as the indicia of personality. International organisations will be dealt with in chapter 23.

The acquisition, nature and consequences of legal personality – some conclusions

The above survey of existing and possible subjects of international law demonstrates both the range of interaction upon the international scene by entities of all types and the pressures upon international law to come to terms with the contemporary structure of international relations. The International Court clearly recognised the multiplicity of models of personality in stressing that 'the subjects of law in any legal system are not necessarily identical in their nature or in the extent of their rights'.[311] There are, however, two basic categories – objective and qualified personality. In the former case, the entity is subject to a wide range of international rights and duties and it will be entitled to be accepted as an international person by any other international person with which it is conducting relations. In other words, it will operate erga omnes. The creation of objective international personality will of necessity be harder to achieve and will require the action in essence of the international community as a whole or a substantial element of it. The Court noted in the Reparation case that:

> fifty states, representing the vast majority of the members of the international community, have the power, in conformity with international law, to bring into being an entity possessing objective international personality and not merely personality recognised by them alone, together with capacity to bring international claims.[312]

[310] See the Reparation for Injuries case, ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 174; 16 AD, p. 318. See also the Interpretation of the Agreement of 25 March 1951 between the WHO and Egypt case, ICJ Reports, 1980, pp. 73, 89–90; 62 ILR, pp. 450, 473–4.

[311] ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 178; 16 AD, p. 321.

[312] ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 185; 16 AD, p. 330. H. Lauterpacht wrote that, '[I]n each particular case the question whether . . . a body is a subject of international law must be answered in a pragmatic manner by reference to actual experience and to the reason of the law as

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The attainment of qualified personality, on the other hand, binding only the consenting subject, may arise more easily and it is clear that in this respect at least theory ought to recognise existing practice. Any legal person may accept that another entity possesses personality in relation to itself and that determination will operate only in personam.

States are the original and major subjects of international law. Their personality derives from the very nature and structure of the international system. Statehood will arise as a result of the factual satisfaction of the stipulated legal criteria. The constitutive theory of recognition is not really acceptable, although recognition, of course, contributes valuable evidence of adherence to the required criteria. All states, by virtue of the principle of sovereign equality, will enjoy the same degree of international legal personality. It has been argued that some international organisations, rather than being derivative subjects of international law, will as sovereign or self-governing legal communities possess an inherent personality directly from the system and will thus constitute general and even objective subjects of international law. Non-sovereign persons, including non-governmental organisations and individuals, would be derived subjects possessing only such international powers as conferred exceptionally upon them by the necessary subjects of international law.[313] This view may be questioned, but it is true that the importance of practice via the larger international organisations cannot be underestimated.

Similarly the role of the Holy See (particularly prior to 1929) as well as the UN experience demonstrates that the derivative denomination is unsatisfactory. The significance of this relates to their ability to extend their international rights and duties on the basis of both constituent instruments and subsequent practice and to their capacity to affect the creation of further international persons and to play a role in the norm-creating process.

Recognition, acquiescence and estoppel are important principles in the context of international personality, not only with regard to states and international organisations but throughout the range of subjects. They will affect not only the creation of new subjects but also the definition of their nature and rights and duties.

Personality may be acquired by a combination of treaty provisions and recognition or acquiescence by other international persons. For distinguished from a preconceived notion as to who can be subjects of international law', International Law and Human Rights, p. 12.

313 See e.g. F. Seyersted, 'International Personality of Intergovernmental Organisations', 4 IJIL, 1964, p. 19.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

instance, the International Committee of the Red Cross, a private non-governmental organisation subject to Swiss law, was granted special functions under the 1949 Geneva Red Cross Conventions and has been accepted as being able to enter into international agreements under international law with international persons, such as with the EEC under the World Food Programme.[314] Another possible method of acquiring international personality is by subjecting an agreement between a recognised international person and a private party directly to the rules of international law. This would have the effect of rendering the latter an international person in the context of the arrangement in question so as to enable it to invoke in the field of international law the rights it derives from that arrangement.[315] While this currently may not be entirely acceptable to Third World states, this is probably because of a perception of the relevant rules of international law which may very well alter.[316] Personality may also be acquired by virtue of being directly subjected to international duties. This would apply to individuals in specific cases such as war crimes, piracy and genocide, and might in the future constitute the method by which transnational corporations may be accepted as international persons.

Community needs with regard to the necessity to preserve international stability and life may well be of relevance in certain exceptional circumstances. In the case of non-state territorial entities that are not totally dominated by a state, there would appear to be a community need to ensure that at least the rules relating to the resort to force and the laws of war operate. Not to accept some form of qualified personality in this area might be to free such entities from having to comply with such rules and that clearly would affect community requirements.[317] The determining point here, it is suggested, must be the degree of effective control maintained by the entity in its territorial confines. However, even so, recognition may overcome this hurdle, as the recognition of Byelorussia [314] See e.g. Whiteman, Digest, vol. I, p. 48, and Yearbook of the ILC, 1981, vol. II, p. 12.

[315] See in particular the Texaco v. Libya case, 53 ILR, pp. 389, 457–62.

[316] Note the intriguing suggestion raised in the study prepared for the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, that an agreement between autonomous public entities (not being subjects of international law) might create an international person: UNJYB, 1971, pp. 215–18. The study was very cautious about this possibility.

[317] See the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 56, 134 and 149; 49 ILR, pp. 3, 46, 124, 139. See also Security Council resolutions 326 (1973), 328 (1973), 403 (1977), 406 (1977), 411 (1977) and 424 (1978) in which the Council condemned Rhodesian attacks against neighbouring states and recognised that the entity was subject to the norms relating to the use of force.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

and the Ukraine as non-sovereign state entities prior to the demise of the Soviet Union and the emergence of these entities as the independent states of Belarus and Ukraine demonstrated.[318]

All these entities may be easily contained within the category of qualified personality, possessing a limited range of rights and duties valid as against those accepting their personality. There are no preset rules governing the extent of rights and duties of international persons. This will depend upon the type of entity concerned, its claims and expectations, functions and attitude adopted by the international community. The exception here would be states which enter upon life with an equal range of rights and obligations. Those entities with objective personality will, it is suggested, benefit from a more elastic perception of the extent of their rights and duties in the form of a wider interpretation of implied powers through practice. However, in the case of qualified subjects implied powers will be more difficult to demonstrate and accept and the range of their rights and duties will be much more limited. The presumption, thus, will operate the other way.

The precise catalogue of rights and duties is accordingly impossible to list in advance; it will vary from case to case. The capacity to function on the international scene in legal proceedings of some description will not be too uncommon, while the power to make treaties will be less widespread. As to this the International Law Commission noted that 'agreements concluded between entities other than states or than international organisations seem too heterogeneous a group to constitute a general category, and the relevant body of international practice is as yet too exiguous for the characteristics of such a general category to be inferred from it'.[319] The extent to which subjects may be internationally responsible is also unclear, although in general such an entity will possess responsibility to the extent of its rights and duties; but many problem areas remain. Similarly controversial is the norm-creating role of such diverse entities, but the practice of all international persons is certainly relevant material upon which to draw in an elucidation of the rules and principles of international law, particularly in the context of the entity in question.

International personality thus centres, not so much upon the capacity of the entity as such to possess international rights and duties, as upon [318] See e.g. UKMIL, 49 BYIL, 1978, p. 340. Byelorussia and the Ukraine were separate members of the UN and parties to a number of conventions: ibid.

[319] Yearbook of the ILC, 1981, vol. II, pp. 125–6.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the actual attribution of rights and/or duties on the international plane as determined by a variety of factors ranging from claims made to prescribed functions. Procedural capacity with regard to enforcement is important but not essential,[320] but in the case of non-individual entities the claimant will have to be in 'such a position that it possesses, in regard to its members, rights which it is entitled to ask them to respect'.[321] This, noted the International Court, expressed 'the essential test where a group, whether composed of states, of tribes or of individuals, is claimed to be a legal entity distinct from its members'.[322]

A wide variety of non-subjects exist and contribute to the evolution of the international system. Participation and personality are two concepts, but the general role played in the development of international relations and international law by individuals and entities of various kinds that are not international legal subjects as such needs to be appreciated.

Suggestions for further reading

A. Cassese, Self-Determination of Peoples, Cambridge, 1995
J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2006
R. Higgins, Problems and Process, Oxford, 1994
N. Schrijver, 'The Changing Nature of State Sovereignty', 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 65

[320] See e.g. Norgaard, Position of the Individual, p. 35. See also the Peter Pázmány University case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 61 (1933); 7 AD, p. 490.
[321] Reparation for Injuries case, ICJ Reports, 1949, pp. 174, 178; 16 AD, pp. 318, 321.
[322] Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 63; 59 ILR, pp. 14, 80.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

6

The international protection of human rights

The nature of human rights[1]

The preamble to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted on 10 December 1948 emphasises that 'recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world'. While there is widespread acceptance of the importance of human rights in the international structure, there is considerable confusion as to their precise nature and role in international law.[2] The question of what is meant by a 'right' is itself controversial and the subject of intense jurisprudential debate.[3] Some 'rights', for example, are intended as immediately enforceable

[1] See e.g. H. Lauterpacht, International Law and Human Rights, London, 1950; D. Weissbrodt, J. Fitzpatrick and F. Newman, International Human Rights, 3rd edn, Cincinnati, 2001; J. Rehman, International Human Rights Law, London, 2002; Nguyen Quoc Dinh, P. Daillier and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 7th edn, Paris, 2002, p. 656; F. Sudre, Droit International et Européen des Droits de l'Homme, 3rd edn, Paris, 1997; M. S. McDougal, H. Lasswell and L. C. Chen, Human Rights and World Public Order, New Haven, 1980; L. Sohn and T. Buergenthal, International Protection of Human Rights, Indianapolis, 1973; Human Rights in International Law (ed. T. Meron), Oxford, 2 vols., 1984; A. H. Robertson and J. Merrills, Human Rights in the World, 4th edn, Manchester, 1996; A. Cassese, International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005, chapter 19; Guide to International Human Rights Practice (ed. H. Hannum), 4th edn, Ardsley, 2004; J. Donnelly, International Human Rights, Boulder, 1993; D. R. Forsythe, Human Rights in International Relations, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2006; R. Higgins, Problems and Process, Oxford, 1994, chapter 6; Human Rights: An Agenda for the Next Century (eds. L. Henkin and L. Hargrove), Washington, 1994; T. Meron, The Humanization of International Law, The Hague, 2006; C. Tomuschat, Human Rights, Oxford, 2003; R. K. M. Smith, Text and Materials on International Human Rights, London, 2007, and H. Steiner, P. Alston and R. Goodman, International Human Rights in Context, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2008.

[2] See e.g. M. Moskowitz, The Policies and Dynamics of Human Rights, London, 1968, pp. 98–9, and McDougal et al., Human Rights, pp. 63–8.

[3] See e.g. W. N. Hohfeld, 'Fundamental Legal Conceptions as Applied to Judicial Reasoning', 23 Yale Law Journal, 1913, p. 16, and R. Dworkin, Taking Rights Seriously, London, 1977. See also J. Shestack, 'The Jurisprudence of Human Rights' in Meron, Human Rights in International Law, vol. I, p. 69, and M. Cranston, What Are Human Rights?, London, 1973.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

binding commitments, others merely as specifying a possible future pattern of behaviour.[4] The problem of enforcement and sanctions with regard to human rights in international law is another issue which can affect the characterisation of the phenomenon. There are writers who regard the high incidence of non-compliance with human rights norms as evidence of state practice that argues against the existence of a structure of human rights principles in international law.[5] Although sight must not be lost of violations of human rights laws, such an approach is not only academically incorrect but also profoundly negative.[6] The concept of human rights is closely allied with ethics and morality. Those rights that reflect the values of a community will be those with the most chance of successful implementation. Positive rights may be taken to include those rights enshrined within a legal system, whether or not reflective of moral considerations, whereas a moral right is not necessarily enforceable by law. One may easily discover positive rights. Deducing or inferring moral rights is another matter entirely and will depend upon the perception of the person seeking the existence of a particular right.[7]

Rights may be seen as emanating from various sources, whether religion or the nature of man or the nature of society. The Natural Law view, as expressed in the traditional formulations of that approach or by virtue of the natural rights movement, is that certain rights exist as a result of a higher law than positive or man-made law. Such a higher law constitutes a universal and absolute set of principles governing all human beings in time and space. The natural rights approach of the seventeenth century, associated primarily with John Locke, founded the existence of such inalienable rights as the rights to life, liberty and property upon a social contract marking the end of the difficult conditions of the state of nature. This theory enabled recourse to be had to a superior type of law and thus [4] Compare, for example, article 2 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 1966 with article 2 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 1966.

[5] See e.g. J. S. Watson, 'Legal Theory, Efficacy and Validity in the Development of Human Rights Norms in International Law', University of Illinois Law Forum, 1979, p. 609; Watson, 'Autointerpretation, Competence and the Continuing Validity of Article 2(7) of the UN Charter', 71 AJIL, 1977, p. 60, and Watson, Theory and Reality in the International Protection of Human Rights, Ardsley, 1999.

[6] See e.g. R. Higgins, 'Reality and Hope and International Human Rights: A Critique', 9 Hofstra Law Review, 1981, p. 1485.

[7] See M. Cranston, 'What are Human Rights?' in Laquer and Rubin, Human Rights Reader, pp. 17, 19.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

was able to provide a powerful method of restraining arbitrary power.[8] Although this approach fell out of favour in the nineteenth century due to the problems of its non-empirical and diffuse methodology, it proved of immense value in the last century in the establishment of human rights within the international community as universal principles. Positivism as a theory emphasised the authority of the state and as such left little place for rights in the legal system other than specific rights emanating from the constitutional structure of that system,[9] while the Marxist doctrine, although based upon the existence of certain immutable historical laws governing the development of society, nevertheless denied the existence of rights outside the framework of the legal order.[10] Modern rights theories cover a wide range of approaches, and this clearly emphasises the need to come to terms with the requirements of an evolving legal system that cannot be totally comprehended in terms of that system itself.[11]

Of particular interest is the work of the policy-oriented movement that seeks to identify, characterise and order a wide variety of relevant factors in the process of human rights creation and equipment. Eight interdependent values are noted (viz. demands relating to respect, power, enlightenment, well-being, health, skill, affection and rectitude) and various environmental influences stressed. Human dignity is seen as the key concept in relation to these values and to the ultimate goal of a world community in which a democratic distribution of values is sought.[12]

All these theories emphasise the complexity of the nature of the concept of human rights in the context of general legal and political processes, but also the importance and centrality of such notions. The broad issues are similarly raised within the framework of international law.

[8] See e.g. Lauterpacht, International Law; R. Tuck, Natural Rights Theories, Cambridge, 1979; J. Finnis, Natural Law and Natural Rights, Oxford, 1980, and McDougal et al., Human Rights, pp. 68–71. See also Tomuschat, Human Rights, chapter 2, and above, chapter 1.

[9] See e.g. D. Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, 4th edn, London, 1979, chapter 4. See also H. Hart, The Concept of Law, Oxford, 1961; McDougal et al., Human Rights, pp. 73–5, and above, chapters 1 and 2.

[10] See e.g. Lloyd, Jurisprudence, chapter 10, and McDougal et al., Human Rights, pp. 76–9. See also below, p. 268.

[11] See e.g. J. Rawls, A Theory of Justice, Oxford, 1971; E. Cahn, The Sense of Injustice, Bloomington, 1949; R. Nozick, Anarchy, State and Utopia, Oxford, 1974, and Dworkin, Taking Rights Seriously. See also S. Davidson, Human Rights, Buckingham, 1993, chapter 3.

[12] See McDougal et al., Human Rights, especially pp. 82–93.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Ideological approaches to human rights in international law

The view adopted by the Western world with regard to international human rights law in general terms has tended to emphasise the basic civil and political rights of individuals, that is to say those rights that take the form of claims limiting the power of government over the governed. Such rights would include due process, freedom of expression, assembly and religion, and political participation in the process of government. The consent of the governed is seen as crucial in this process.[13] The approach of the Soviet Union was to note the importance of basic rights and freedoms for international peace and security, but to emphasise the role of the state. Indeed, the source of human rights principles was seen as the state. Tunkin wrote that the content of the principle of respect for human rights in international law may be expressed in three propositions:

> (1) all states have a duty to respect the fundamental rights and freedoms of all persons within their territories; (2) states have a duty not to permit discrimination by reason of sex, race, religion or language, and (3) states have a duty to promote universal respect for human rights and to co-operate with each other to achieve this objective.[14]

In other words, the focus was not upon the individual (as in Western conceptions of human rights) but solely upon the state. Human rights were not directly regulated by international law and individuals were not subjects of international law. Indeed, human rights were implemented by the state and matters basically and crucially within the domestic affairs of the state. As Tunkin emphasised, 'conventions on human rights do not grant rights directly to individuals'.[15] Having stressed the central function of the state, the point was also made that the context of the international human rights obligations themselves was defined solely by the state in the light of the socio-economic advancement of that state. Accordingly, the nature and context of those rights would vary from state to state, depending upon the social system of the state in question. It was the particular [13] See e.g. R. Hauser, 'A First World View', in Human Rights and American Foreign Policy (eds. D. P. Kommers and G. Loescher), Notre Dame, 1979, p. 85.

[14] G. Tunkin, Theory of International Law, London, 1974, p. 81. See also K. Tedin, 'The Development of the Soviet Attitude Towards Implementing Human Rights under the UN Charter', 5 HRJ, 1972, p. 399; R. N. Dean, 'Beyond Helsinki: The Soviet View of Human Rights in International Law', 21 Va. JIL, 1980, p. 55; P. Reddaway, 'Theory and Practice of Human Rights in the Soviet Union' in Kommers and Loescher, Human Rights and American Foreign Policy, p. 115, and Tomuschat, Human Rights, chapter 3.

[15] Tunkin, Theory, p. 83.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

socio-economic system of a state that would determine the concrete expression of an international human rights provision.[16] In other words, the Soviet Union was able and willing to enter into many international agreements on human rights, on the basis that only a state obligation was incurred, with no direct link to the individual, and that such an obligation was one that the country might interpret in the light of its own socio-economic system. The supremacy or centrality of the state was the key in this approach. As far as the different kinds of human rights were concerned, the Soviet approach was to stress those dealing with economic and social matters and thus to minimise the importance of the traditional civil and political rights. However, a new approach to the question of international human rights began to emerge by the end of the 1980s, reflecting the changes taking place politically.[17] In particular, the USSR began to take a different approach with regard to human rights treaties.[18]

The general approach of the Third World states has combined elements of both the previous perceptions.[19] Concern with the equality and sovereignty of states, together with a recognition of the importance of social and economic rights, has characterised the Third World view. Such countries, in fact constituting a wide range of nations with differing interests and needs, and at different stages of development, have been much influenced by decolonisation and the struggle to obtain it and by the phenomenon of apartheid in South Africa. In addition, economic problems have played a large role in focusing their attention upon general developmental issues. Accordingly, the traditional civil and political rights have tended to lose their priority in the concerns of Third World states.[20] Of particular interest is the tension between the universalism of human rights and the relativism of cultural traditions. This has led to arguments by [16] Ibid., pp. 82–3.

[17] See e.g. V. Vereshchetin and R. Müllerson, 'International Law in an Interdependent World', 28 Columbia Journal of Transnational Law, 1990, pp. 291, 300.

[18] Ibid. Note that on 10 February 1989, the USSR recognised the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice with regard to six human rights treaties, including the Genocide Convention, 1948; the Racial Discrimination Convention, 1965; the Convention on Discrimination against Women, 1979, and the Torture Convention, 1984.

[19] See e.g. R. Emerson, 'The Fate of Human Rights in the Third World', 27 World Politics, 1975, p. 201; G. Mower, 'Human Rights in Black Africa', 9 HRJ, 1976, p. 33; R. Zvobgo, 'A Third World View' in Kommers and Loescher, Human Rights and American Foreign Policy, p. 90, and M. Nawaz, 'The Concept of Human Rights in Islamic Law' in Symposium on International Law of Human Rights, 11 Howard Law Journal, 1965, p. 257.

[20] See generally T. Van Boven, 'Some Remarks on Special Problems Relating to Human Rights in Developing Countries', 3 Revue des Droits de l'Homme, 1970, p. 383. See further below, p. 391, on the Banjul Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

some adherents of the latter tendency that human rights can only be approached within the context of particular cultural or religious traditions, thus criticising the view that human rights are universal or transcultural. The danger, of course, is that states violating human rights that they have accepted by becoming parties to human rights treaties, as well as being bound by relevant customary international law, might seek to justify their actions by pleading cultural differences.[21]

The development of international human rights law[22]

In the nineteenth century, the positivist doctrines of state sovereignty and domestic jurisdiction reigned supreme. Virtually all matters that today would be classified as human rights issues were at that stage universally regarded as within the internal sphere of national jurisdiction. The major exceptions to this were related to piracy jure gentium and slavery. In the latter case a number of treaties were entered into to bring about its abolition.[23] Concern also with the treatment of sick and wounded soldiers and with prisoners of war developed as from 1864 in terms of international instruments,[24] while states were required to observe certain minimum standards in the treatment of aliens.[25] In addition, certain agreements of a general welfare nature were beginning to be adopted by the turn of the century.[26] The nineteenth century also appeared to accept a right of humanitarian intervention, although its range and extent were unclear.[27]

An important change occurred with the establishment of the League of Nations in 1919.[28] Article 22 of the Covenant of the League set up [21] See e.g. Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, pp. 517 ff.; E. Brems, Human Rights: Universality and Diversity, The Hague, 2001, and A. D. Renteln, International Human Rights: Universalism versus Relativism, Newbury Park, 1990.

[22] See e.g. The International Protection of Human Rights (ed. E. Luard), London, 1967; Sohn and Buergenthal, International Protection; Lauterpacht, International Law; M. Moscowitz, International Concern with Human Rights, London, 1968, and M. Ganji, The International Protection of Human Rights, London, 1962.

[23] See e.g. C. Greenidge, Slavery, London, 1958, and V. Nanda and M. C. Bassiouni, 'Slavery and the Slave Trade: Steps towards Eradication', 12 Santa Clara Law Review, 1972, p. 424. See also ST/SOA/4.

[24] See generally G. Best, War and Law Since 1945, Oxford, 1994, and Studies and Essays on International Humanitarian Law and Red Cross Principles (ed. C. Swinarski), The Hague, 1984.

[25] See below, chapter 14.

[26] E.g. regarding the Prohibition of Night Work for Women in Industrial Employment and regarding the Prohibition of the Use of White Phosphorus in the Manufacture of Matches.

[27] See below, chapter 20, p. 1155.

[28] See below, chapter 23.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the mandates system for peoples in ex-enemy colonies 'not yet able to stand by themselves in the strenuous conditions of the modern world'. The mandatory power was obliged to guarantee freedom of conscience and religion and a Permanent Mandates Commission was created to examine the reports the mandatory authorities had undertaken to make. The arrangement was termed 'a sacred trust of civilisation'. Article 23 of the Covenant provided for just treatment of the native populations of the territories in question.[29] The 1919 peace agreements with Eastern European and Balkan states included provisions relating to the protection of minorities,[30] providing essentially for equality of treatment and opportunities for collective activity.[31] These provisions were supervised by the League of Nations, to whom there was a right of petition.[32]

Part XIII of the Treaty of Versailles provided for the creation of the International Labour Organisation, among the purposes of which were the promotion of better standards of working conditions and support for the right of association.[33] The impact of the Second World War upon the development of human rights law was immense as the horrors of the war and the need for an adequate international system to maintain international peace and protect human rights became apparent to all. In addition, the rise of non-governmental organisations, particularly in the sphere of human rights, has had an immense effect.[34] While the post-Second World War world witnessed the rise of intergovernmental committees and organs and courts to deal with human rights violations, whether by public debate, states' reports, comments, inter-state or individual petition procedures, recent years have seen the interposition of domestic amnesty laws and this

[29] See above, chapter 5, p. 224.

[30] See generally P. Thornberry, 'Is There a Phoenix in the Ashes? – International Law and Minority Rights', 15 Texas International Law Journal, 1980, p. 421; C. A. Macartney, National States and National Minorities, London, 1934, and I. Claude, National Minorities: An International Problem, Cambridge, 1955. See also M. N. Shaw, 'The Definition of Minorities in International Law' in Protection of Minorities and Human Rights (eds. Y. Dinstein and M. Tabory), Dordrecht, 1992, p. 1.

[31] See e.g. the Minority Schools in Albania case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 64, 1935, p. 17.

[32] See Thornberry, 'Phoenix', pp. 433–54, and M. Jones, 'National Minorities: A Case Study in International Protection', 14 Law and Contemporary Problems, 1949, pp. 599, 610–24. See further below, p. 293.

[33] See further below, p. 338.

[34] See e.g. Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, pp. 1420 ff., and C. Chinkin, 'The Role of Non-Governmental Organisations in Standard Setting, Monitoring and Implementation of Human Rights' in The Changing World of International Law in the 21st Century (eds. J. J. Norton, M. Andendas and M. Footer), The Hague, 1998.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

has given rise to the question of the acceptability of impunity.[35] Further developments have included the establishments of truth and reconciliation commissions[36] and various other alternative justice systems such as the Rwandan Gaccaca court system,[37] while the extent to which participants in the international legal system apart from states have become involved both in the process of formulating and seeking the implementation of human rights and in being the subjects of human rights concern and regulation is marked.[38]

Some basic principles

Domestic jurisdiction[39]

The basic rule of international law providing that states have no right to encroach upon the preserve of other states' internal affairs is a consequence of the equality and sovereignty of states and is mirrored in article 2(7) of the UN Charter. It has, however, been subject to a process of reinterpretation in the human rights field[40] as this and the two succeeding [35] See e.g. J. Gavron, 'Amnesties in the Light of Developments in International Law and the Establishment of the International Criminal Court', 51 ICLQ, 2002, p. 91. See also C. Jenkins, 'Amnesty for Gross Violations of Human Rights: A Better Way of Dealing with the Past?' in Comparative Law in a Global Perspective (ed. I. Edge), London, 2000, p. 345, and J. Dugard, 'Dealing with Crimes of a Past Regime: Is Amnesty Still an Option?', 16 Leiden JIL, 2000, p. 1. Note the Final Report of the Special Rapporteur on the Right to Restitution, Compensation and Rehabilitation for Victims of Gross Violations of Human Rights, E/CN.4/2000/62, January 2000, and Chumbipuma Aguirre v. Peru, the Barrios Altos case, where the Inter-American Court of Human Rights held that Peruvian amnesty laws were incompatible with the Inter-American Convention and thus void of any legal effect, judgment of 14 March 2001, 41 ILM, 2002, p. 93. Peru accepted this and altered its legislation, ibid.

[36] See e.g. Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, pp. 1344 ff.; the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act of South Africa 1995; R. G. Teitel, Transitional Justice, Oxford, 2001, and J. Dugard, 'Possible Conflicts of Jurisdiction with Truth Commissions' in The Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court: A Commentary (eds. A. Cassese, P. Gaeta and J. R. W. D. Jones), Oxford, 2002.

[37] See e.g. Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, pp. 1319 ff. See also below, chapter 8, p. 407.

[38] See e.g. Non-State Actors and Human Rights (ed. Philip Alston), Oxford, 2005, and A. Clapham, Human Rights Obligations of Non-State Actors, Oxford, 2006.

[39] See e.g. R. Higgins, The Development of International Law Through the Political Organs of the United Nations, Oxford, 1963; M. Rajan, United Nations and Domestic Jurisdiction, 2nd edn, London, 1961, and A. Cançado Trindade, 'The Domestic Jurisprudence of States in the Practice of the United Nations and Regional Organisations', 25 ICLQ, 1976, p. 715.

[40] Note that the question of the extent and content of domestic jurisdiction is a matter for international law: see Nationality Decrees in Tunis and Morocco cases, PCIJ, Series B, No. 4, 1923; 2 AD, p. 349. See also below, chapter 12.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

chapters will make apparent, so that states may no longer plead this rule as a bar to international concern and consideration of internal human rights situations.[41] It is, of course, obvious that where a state accepts the right of individual petition under an international procedure, it cannot thereafter claim that the exercise of such a right constitutes interference with its domestic affairs.[42]

The exhaustion of domestic or local remedies rule[43]

This rule flows from the above principle. It is a method of permitting states to solve their own internal problems in accordance with their own constitutional procedures before accepted international mechanisms can be invoked, and is well established in general international law.[44] However, where such internal remedies are non-existent or unduly and unreasonably prolonged or unlikely to bring effective relief, the resort to international measures will not be required.[45] The existence of such a remedy must be certain not only in theory but also in practice.[46] A provision regarding the need to exhaust domestic remedies before the various international mechanisms may be resorted to appears in all the international and regional human rights instruments[47] and has been the subject of much consideration by the Human Rights Committee under the Optional Protocol

[41] See also the resolution of the Institut de Droit International, 1989, H/Inf (90) 1, p. 131.

[42] See e.g. Miha v. Equatorial Guinea, CCPR/C/51/D/414/1990, 10 August 1994, Human Rights Committee, para. 63.

[43] See e.g. A. Cançado Trindade, The Application of the Rule of Exhaustion of Local Remedies in International Law, Cambridge, 1983; C. Law, The Local Remedies Rule in International Law, Geneva, 1961, and C. F. Amerasinghe, Local Remedies in International Law, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2004. See also C. F. Amerasinghe, 'The Rule of Exhaustion of Local Remedies and the International Protection of Human Rights', 17 Indian Yearbook of International Affairs, 1974, p. 3. and below, chapter 14, p. 819.

[44] See e.g. the Ambatielos case, 23 ILR, p. 306; the Finnish Ships case, 3 RIAA, p. 1479; 7 AD, p. 231, and the Interhandel case, ICJ Reports, 1959, pp. 26–7; 27 ILR, pp. 475, 490.

[45] See e.g. the Robert E. Brown case, 6 RIAA, p. 120; 2 AD, p. 66. See also the Salem case, 2 RIAA, p. 1161; 6 AD, p. 188; the Nielsen case, 2 Yearbook of the ECHR, p. 413; 28 ILR, p. 210, and the Second Cyprus case (Greece v. UK), 2 Yearbook of the ECHR, p. 186. See also the cases cited in the succeeding footnotes.

[46] See e.g. Johnston v. Ireland, European Court of Human Rights, Series A, No. 112 (1986); 89 ILR, p. 154, and Open Door and Dublin Well Woman v. Ireland, European Court of Human Rights, Series A, No. 246 (1992).

[47] See e.g. article 41(c), Civil and Political Rights Covenant and article 2, Optional Protocol; article 11(3), Racial Discrimination Convention; article 26, European Convention; article 50, Inter-American Convention, and article 50, Banjul Charter. See also ECOSOC resolution 1503 and UNESCO decision 104 EX/3.3, 1978, para. 14(IX).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

procedure of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,[48] and within the European Convention[49] and Inter-American Convention human rights systems.[50]

Priorities of rights

Certain rights may not be derogated from in the various human rights instruments even in times of war or other public emergency threatening the nation. In the case of the European Convention[51] these are the rights to life (except in cases resulting from lawful acts of war), the prohibition on torture and slavery, and non-retroactivity of criminal offences.[52] In the case of the Inter-American Convention,[53] the following rights are non-derogable: the rights to juridical personality, life and humane treatment, freedom from slavery, freedom from ex post facto laws, freedom

[48] See e.g. S. Joseph, J. Schultz and M. Castan, The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005, chapter 6; the Weinberger case, Reports of the Human Rights Committee, A/36/40, p. 114 and A/44/40, p. 142 and the Sara case, A/49/40, annex X, Section C, para. 8.3. States are required to provide evidence that there would be a reasonable prospect that available remedies would be effective, Torres Ramírez v. Uruguay, Selected Decisions under the Optional Protocol, CCPR/C/OP/1, 1985, p. 3. See also e.g. Baboeram-Adhin v. Suriname, A/40/40, p. 187; 94 ILR, p. 377; Muhonen v. Finland, A/40/40, p. 164; 94 ILR, p. 389; Solórzano v. Venezuela, A/41/40, p. 134; 94 ILR, p. 400; Holland v. Ireland 115 ILR, p. 277 and Faurisson v. France 115 ILR, p. 355. See also, with regard to the UN Convention against Torture, AE v. Switzerland, CAT/C/14/D/24/1995.

[49] See, as to the position under the European Convention on Human Rights, e.g. the Nielsen case, 2 Yearbook of the ECHR, p. 413; the Second Cyprus case (Greece v. UK), 2 Yearbook of the ECHR, p. 186; the Donnelly case, 16 Yearbook of the ECHR, p. 212; Kjeldsen v. Denmark, 15 Yearbook of the ECHR, p. 428; 58 ILR, p. 117; Drozd and Janousek v. France and Spain 64 DR 97 (1989) and Akdivar v. Turkey 23 EHRR, 1997, p. 143. See also D. J. Harris, M. O'Boyle and C. Warbrick, Law of the European Convention on Human Rights, London, 1995, p. 608, and Jacobs and White: European Convention on Human Rights (eds. C. Ovey and R. C. A. White), 4th edn, Oxford, 2006, p. 485. The rule of exhaustion of domestic remedies applies also in inter-state cases: see Cyprus v. Turkey 2 DR 125 at 137–8 (first and second applications) and 13 DR 85, 150–3 (third application), although not with regard to legislative measures nor with regard to administrative actions in certain circumstances: see e.g. the Greek case, 12 European Yearbook of Human Rights, p. 196.

[50] See e.g. article 46(1)a of the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights, 1969 and article 37 of the Regulations of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights. See also Exceptions to the Exhaustion of Domestic Remedies in Cases of Indigency, Advisory Opinion of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, 1990, 12 HRLJ, 1991, p. 20, and Annual Report of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights 1993, Washington, 1994, pp. 148, 185 and 266.

[51] Article 15. See generally, R. Higgins, 'Derogations Under Human Rights Treaties', 48 BYIL, 1976–7, p. 281.

[52] Articles 2, 3, 4(1) and 7. [53] Article 27.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of conscience and religion, rights of the family, to a name, of the child, nationality and participation in government.[54] By article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the rights to life and recognition as a person before the law, the freedoms of thought, conscience and religion and the prohibition on torture, slavery, retroactivity of criminal legislation and imprisonment on grounds solely of inability to fulfil a contractual obligation are non-derogable.[55]

Such non-derogable rights clearly are regarded as possessing a special place in the hierarchy of rights.[56] In addition, it must be noted, many rights are subject to a limitation or clawback clause, whereby the absolute right provided for will not operate in certain situations.[57] Those rights therefore that are not so limited may be regarded as of particular value.[58]

Customary international law and human rights

In addition to the many international and regional treaty provisions concerning human rights to be noted in this and the next two chapters,[59] certain human rights may now be regarded as having entered into the category of customary international law in the light of state practice. These would certainly include the prohibition of torture, genocide and slavery and the principle of non-discrimination.[60] In addition, human rights established under treaty may constitute obligations erga omnes for the states parties.[61]

[54] Articles 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 12, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 23.

[55] Articles 6, 7, 8(1) and (2), 11, 15, 16 and 18. Note that the Banjul Charter contains no specific derogations clause.

[56] The fact that a right may not be derogated from may constitute evidence that the right concerned is part of jus cogens.

[57] See e.g. articles 8–11 of the European Convention, articles 12–14, 15–16 and 21–2 of the Inter-American Convention and articles 12, 18, 19, 21 and 22 of the Civil and Political Rights Covenant. See also Higgins, 'Derogations'.

[58] See e.g. the due process rights.

[59] Note that questions relating to the interpretation of and reservations to human rights treaties will be noted below in chapter 16, pp. 932 and 913, while the issue of succession to human rights treaties will be noted below in chapter 17, p. 981.

[60] See e.g. Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, St Paul, 1987, vol. II, pp. 161 ff. and Filartiga v. Pena-Irala 630 F.2d 876; 77 ILR, p. 169. See also T. Meron, Human Rights and Humanitarian Norms as Customary Law, Oxford, 1989 and the articles published in the Special Issue on Customary International Human Rights Law, 25 Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law, 1995–6.

[61] See below, chapter 14, p. 807.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Evolving principles

Certain areas of international human rights law are rapidly evolving. First, for example, the increasing extraterritoriality of human rights is becoming evident in the case-law of the European Convention on Human Rights,[62] the approach of the Human Rights Committee under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights[63] and the case-law of the International Court of Justice.[64] Secondly, the responsibility of states to prevent human rights abuses is beginning to be seriously considered, particularly with regard to genocide[65] and torture,[66] while more generally the obligation upon states and, for example, international organisations positively to protect human rights is becoming part of the agenda of international human rights law. Thirdly, increasing interest is being manifested in national human rights institutions.[67]

The United Nations system – general[68]

There are a number of human rights provisions in the Charter.[69] Article 1 includes in the purposes of the organisation the promotion and

[62] See below, chapter 7, p. 349.

[63] See Extraterritorial Application of Human Rights Treaties (eds. F. Coomans and M. Kamminga), Antwerp, 2004. See also below, p. 315.

[64] See the Construction of a Wall case, ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 136, 177 ff; 129 ILR. pp. 37, 96 ff.; and the Genocide Convention (Bosnia v. Serbia) case, ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 183.

[65] See e.g. the Genocide Convention (Bosnia v. Serbia) case, ICJ Reports, 2007, paras. 428 ff.

[66] See articles 2 and 16 of the Convention against Torture: see further below, p. 326. See also the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, 1973 (art. 4); the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, 1994 (art. 11), and the International Convention on the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings, 1997 (art. 15).

[67] See e.g. the Vienna Declaration on Human Rights adopted by the UN in 1993, para. 36; General Assembly resolution 48/134, adopting the Paris Principles Relating to the Status and Functioning of National Institutions for Protection and Promotion of Human Rights, 1993; General Comment No. 10 of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, E/C.12/1998/25, and the Optional Protocol to the UN Convention against Torture, 2002, article 3.

[68] See generally Bowett's Law of International Institutions (eds. P. Sands and P. Klein), 5th edn, Manchester, 2001; Lauterpacht, International Law, pp. 145–220; UN Action in the Field of Human Rights, New York, 1981, and Human Rights: Thirty Years after the Universal Declaration (ed. B. Ramcharan), Dordrecht, 1979.

[69] Largely as a result of lobbying by non-governmental organisations at the San Francisco Conference: see J. Humphrey, 'The United Nations Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights' in Luard, International Protection, chapter 3.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

encouragement of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion. Article 13(1) notes that the General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations regarding the realisation of human rights for all, while article 55 provides that the United Nations shall promote universal respect for and observance of human rights. In a significant provision, article 56 states that:

> all members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the organisation for the achievement of the purposes set forth in article 55.[70]

The mandate system was replaced by the trusteeship system, one of the basic objectives of which was, by article 76, the encouragement of respect for human rights, while, with regard to non-self-governing territories, the administering powers under article 73 of the Charter recognised the principle that the interests of the inhabitants were paramount, and accepted as a sacred trust the obligation to promote the well-being of the inhabitants. It can thus be seen that the Charter provisions on human rights were very general and vague. No enforcement procedures were laid down. Some have argued that the term 'pledge' in article 56 had the effect of converting the enumerated purposes of article 55 into legal obligations,[71] but this has been disputed.[72] Certainly, as of 1946, this would have been a difficult proposition to sustain, particularly in view of the hortatory language used in the provisions and the fact that the respect for human rights stipulation does not identify precise legal rights.[73] However, in the Namibia case of 1971, the Court noted that under the UN Charter:

> the former Mandatory had pledged itself to observe and respect, in a territory having international status, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race. To establish instead and to enforce,

[70] Under article 62, the Economic and Social Council has the power to make recommendations for the purpose of promoting respect for and observance of human rights.

[71] See e.g. Lauterpacht, International Law, pp. 47–9; Q. Wright, 'National Courts and Human Rights – the Fujii case', 45 AJIL, 1951, p. 73, and B. Sloan, 'Human Rights, the United Nations and International Law', 20 Nordisk Tidsskrift for International Ret, 1950, pp. 30–1. See also Judge Tanaka, South West Africa cases, ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 6, 288–9; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 451–2.

[72] See M. O. Hudson, 'Integrity of International Instruments', 42 AJIL, 1948, pp. 105–8 and Yearbook of the ILC, 1949, p. 178. See also H. Kelsen, The Law of the United Nations, London, 1950, p. 29.

[73] See D. Driscoll, 'The Development of Human Rights in International Law' in Laquer and Rubin, Human Rights Reader, pp. 41, 43.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> distinctions, exclusions, restrictions and limitations, exclusively based on grounds of race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin which constitute a denial of fundamental human rights is a flagrant violation of the purposes and principles of the Charter.[74]

It may be that this provision can only be understood in the light of the special, international status of that territory, but in the light of extensive practice since the 1940s in the general area of non-discrimination and human rights, the broader interpretation is to be preferred.

The Charter does contain a domestic jurisdiction provision. Article 2(7) provides that:

> nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorise the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state but as noted later[75] this has over the years been flexibly interpreted, so that human rights issues are no longer recognised as being solely within the domestic jurisdiction of states.

The elucidation, development and protection of human rights through the UN has proved to be a seminal event. A range of declarations and treaties has emerged, coupled with the establishment of a variety of advisory services and implementation and enforcement mechanisms. Large numbers of studies and reports of various kinds have appeared, while the whole process has been accompanied by extensive debate and consideration in a variety of UN organs and committees. Notwithstanding a certain degree of cynicism, it can be concluded that the acceptance of the centrality of human rights concerns within the international community has been due in no small measure to the unceasing consideration of human rights issues within the framework of the United Nations.

The cornerstone of UN activity has been without doubt the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted by the UN General Assembly on 10 December 1948.[76] The Declaration was approved without a dissenting vote

[74] ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 57; 49 ILR, pp. 3, 47. See also I. Brownlie, Principles of Public International Law, 6th edn, Oxford, 2003, pp. 546 ff.; E. Schwelb, 'The International Court of Justice and the Human Rights Clauses of the Charter', 66 AJIL, 1972, p. 337, and O. Schachter, 'The Charter and the Constitution', 4 Vanderbilt Law Review, 1951, p. 443.

[75] See below, p. 647.

[76] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law (eds. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992, p. 1001; M. Whiteman, Digest of International Law, Washington, 1965, vol. V, p. 237; J. Humphrey, 'The Universal Declaration on Human Rights' in Ramcharan, Human Rights, p. 21; J. Kunz, 'The United Nations Declaration of Human Rights', 43

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

(the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Yugoslavia and Saudi Arabia abstained). It was intended not as a legally binding document as such but, as its preamble proclaims, 'a common standard of achievement for all peoples and nations'. Its thirty articles cover a wide range of rights, from liberty and security of the person (article 3), equality before the law (article 7), effective remedies (article 8), due process (articles 9 and 10), prohibitions on torture (article 5) and arbitrary interference with privacy (article 12) to rights protecting freedom of movement (article 13), asylum (article 14), expression (article 19), conscience and religion (article 18) and assembly (article 20). One should also note that included in the Declaration are social and economic rights such as the right to work and equal pay (article 23), the right to social security (article 25) and the right to education (article 26).

Although clearly not a legally enforceable instrument as such, the question arises as to whether the Declaration has subsequently become binding either by way of custom[77] or general principles of law, or indeed by virtue of interpretation of the UN Charter itself by subsequent practice.[78] The Declaration has had a marked influence upon the constitutions of many states and upon the formulation of subsequent human rights treaties and resolutions.[79] It is also to be noted that in 1968, the Proclamation of Tehran at the conclusion of the UN-sponsored International Conference on Human Rights stressed that the Declaration constituted 'an obligation for members of the international community'.[80] The Declaration has also AJIL, 1949, p. 316; E. Schwelb, 'The Influence of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights on International and National Law', PASIL, 1959, p. 217; A. Verdoodt, Naissance et Signification de la Déclaration Universelle de Droits de l'Homme, Paris, 1964; The Universal Declaration of Human Rights: A Commentary (eds. A. Eide, G. Alfredsson, G. Melander, L. A. Rehof and A. Rosas), Dordrecht, 1992; The Universal Declaration of Human Rights: A Common Standard of Achievement (eds. G. Alfredsson and A. Eide), The Hague, 1999, and P. R. Ghandi, 'The Universal Declaration of Human Rights at 50 Years', 41 German YIL, 1998, p. 206.

77 Note that the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in a document issued in January 1991 on 'Human Rights in Foreign Policy' took the view that, although the Declaration was 'not in itself legally binding, much of its content can now be said to form part of customary international law', UKMIL, 62 BYIL, 1991, p. 592.

78 See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 1002.

79 See e.g. Schwelb, 'Influence'; J. Humphrey, 'The International Bill of Rights: Scope and Implementation', 17 William and Mary Law Review, 1975, p. 527; Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 1002–5; Judge Tanaka, South-West Africa cases, ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 6, 288 and 293; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 451, 454, and the European Convention on Human Rights, 1950, below, chapter 7, p. 347.

80 23 GAOR, A/Conf. 32/41. See also the non-governmental Montreal Statement, 9 Review of the International Commission of Jurists, 1968, p. 94.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

been referred to in many cases,[81] and its importance within the context of United Nations human rights law should not be disregarded.[82] The intention had been that the Declaration would be followed immediately by a binding universal convention on human rights, but this process took considerably longer than anticipated. In the meantime, a number of important international conventions dealing with selective human rights issues were adopted, including the Genocide Convention[83] and the Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.[84]

The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted in 1993, emphasised that all human rights were universal, indivisible and interdependent and interrelated. The protection of human rights was seen as a priority objective of the UN and the interrelationship of democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms underlined. Additional facilities for the UN Centre for Human Rights were called for as well as the establishment of a UN High Commissioner for Human Rights. The Declaration made particular reference inter alia to the problems of racial discrimination, minorities, indigenous peoples, migrant workers, the rights of women, the rights of the child, freedom from torture, the rights of disabled persons and human rights education.[85] The post of UN High Commissioner for Human Rights was indeed established several months later[86] and filled in April 1994. In General Assembly resolution 48/141, it is provided that the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights would be the UN official with principal responsibility for UN human rights activities. The High Commissioner is responsible [81] See e.g. In re Flesche 16 AD, pp. 266, 269; The State (Duggan) v. Tapley 18 ILR, pp. 336, 342; Robinson v. Secretary-General of the UN 19 ILR, pp. 494, 496; Extradition of Greek National case, 22 ILR, pp. 520, 524 and Beth El Mission v. Minister of Social Welfare 47 ILR, pp. 205, 207. See also Corfu Channel case, ICJ Reports, 1949, pp. 4, 22; 16 AD, pp. 155, 158 and Filartiga v. Pena-Irala 630 F.2d 876 (1980).

[82] The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted on 25 June 1993 at the UN Conference on Human Rights referred to the Declaration as the 'source of inspiration' and the 'basis for the United Nations in making advances in standard setting as contained in the existing international human rights instruments', 32 ILM, 1993, pp. 1661, 1663. The private International Law Association adopted a resolution in 1994 in which it noted that 'the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is universally regarded as an authoritative elaboration of the human rights provisions of the United Nations Charter' and that 'many if not all of the rights elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights are widely recognised as constituting rules of customary international law', Report of the Sixty-sixth Conference, Buenos Aires, 1994, p. 29.

[83] See below, p. 282. [84] See further below, p. 311. [85] See 32 ILM, 1993, pp. 1661 ff.

[86] See General Assembly resolution 48/141, 20 December 1993. See also A. Clapham, 'Creating the High Commissioner for Human Rights: The Outside Story', 5 EJIL, 1994, p. 556.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

for promoting and protecting the effective enjoyment by all of all civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights, providing through the UN Centre for Human Rights and other appropriate institutions, advisory services and other assistance including education and engaging in dialogue with all governments with a view to securing respect for human rights. The High Commissioner may also make recommendations to competent bodies of the UN system with a view to improving the promotion and protection of all human rights,[87] has engaged in a series of visits to member states of the UN and become involved in co-ordination activities.[88]

The protection of the collective rights of groups and individuals[89]

International law since 1945 has focused primarily upon the protection of individual human rights, as can be seen from the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. In recent years, however, more attention has been given to various expressions of the concept of collective rights, although it is often difficult to maintain a strict differentiation between individual and collective rights. Some rights are purely individual, such as the right to life or freedom of expression, others are individual rights that are necessarily expressed collectively, such as freedom of assembly or the right to manifest one's own religion. Some rights are purely collective, such as the right to self-determination or the physical protection of the group as such through the prohibition of genocide, others constitute collective manifestations of individual rights, such as the right of persons belonging to minorities to enjoy their own culture and practise their own religion or use their own language. In addition, the question of the balancing of the legitimate rights of the state, groups and individuals is in practice crucial and sometimes not sufficiently considered. States, groups and individuals have legitimate rights and interests that should not be ignored. All within a state have an interest in ensuring the efficient functioning of that state in a manner consistent with respect for the rights of groups and individuals, while the balancing of the rights of groups and individuals may itself prove difficult and complex.

[87] See the first Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, 1995, A/49/36, p. 2.

[88] Ibid., pp. 3 ff. Further details as to activities may be found on the website, www.ohchr.org.

[89] See e.g. D. Sanders, 'Collective Rights', 13 HRQ, 1991, p. 368, and N. Lerner, Group Rights and Discrimination in International Law, 2nd edn, The Hague, 2003.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Prohibition of genocide

The physical protection of the group as a distinct identity is clearly the first and paramount factor. The Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide signed in 1948[90] reaffirmed that genocide, whether committed in time of war or peace, was a crime under international law. Genocide was defined as any of the following acts committed 'with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group as such':

> (a) killing members of the group; (b) causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group; (c) deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part; (d) imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group; (e) forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.

The Convention, which does not have an implementational system,[91] provides that persons charged with genocide shall be tried by a competent tribunal of the state in the territory of which the act was committed or by an international penal tribunal. Several points should be noted. First, the question of intent is such that states may deny genocidal activity by noting that the relevant intent to destroy in whole or in part was in fact absent.[92] Secondly, the groups protected do not include political groups.[93]

[90] See e.g. W. Schabas, Genocide in International Law, Cambridge, 2000; N. Robinson, The Genocide Convention, London, 1960; R. Lemkin, Axis Rule in Occupied Europe, London, 1944; L. Kuper, Genocide, Harmondsworth, 1981, and International Action Against Genocide, Minority Rights Group Report No. 53, 1984; Genocide and Human Rights (ed. J. Porter), Washington 1982, and I. Horowitz, Taking Lives: Genocide and State Power, New Brunswick, 1980. See also N. Ruhashyankiko, Study on the Question of the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, 1978, E/CN.4/Sub.2/416; B. Whittaker, Revised and Updated Report on the Question of the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, 1985, E/CN.4/Sub.2/1985/6; 'Contemporary Practice of the United States Relating to International Law', 79 AJIL, 1985, pp. 116 ff.; M. Shaw, War and Genocide, Oxford, 2003; C. Fournet, The Crime of Destruction and the Law of Genocide, Ashgate, 2007; M. N. Shaw, 'Genocide and International Law' in International Law at a Time of Perplexity (ed. Y. Dinstein), Dordrecht, 1989, p. 797, and G. Verdirame, 'The Genocide Definition in the Jurisprudence of the Ad Hoc Tribunals', 49 ICLQ, 2000, p. 578.

[91] But see Sub-Commission resolution 1994/11.

[92] See Kuper, Genocide, pp. 32–5, and N. Lewis, 'The Camp at Cecilio Baez', in Genocide in Paraguay (ed. R. Arens), Philadelphia, 1976, p. 58. See also Ruhashyankiko, Study, p. 25.

[93] See e.g. Kuper, Genocide, pp. 25–30, and Ruhashyankiko, Study, p. 21. See also Robinson, Genocide Convention, p. 59.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Thirdly, the concept of cultural genocide is not included,[94] and fourthly there is virtually no mention of means to prevent the crime (although the obligation is stated).

In the 1990s, the issue of genocide unfortunately ceased to be an item of primarily historical concern. Events in the former Yugoslavia and in Rwanda stimulated increasing anxiety in this context. The Statutes of both the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda provide for the prosecution of individuals for the crime of genocide and a significant case-law has now developed through these tribunals.[95] In addition, the question of state responsibility for the crime of genocide has been raised.[96] The International Court of Justice in the Case Concerning Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)) was faced with Bosnian claims that Yugoslavia had violated the Genocide Convention.[97] The Court in its Order of 8 April 1993 on the Request for the Indication of Provisional Measures[98] held that article IX of the Convention[99] provided a valid jurisdictional basis,[100] while reaffirming[101] the view expressed in the Advisory Opinion on Reservations to the Genocide Convention that the crime of genocide 'shocks the conscience of mankind, results in great losses to humanity . . . and is contrary to moral law and to the spirit and aims of the United Nations'.[102] The Court called upon both parties not to take any action that might aggravate or extend the dispute over the prevention or punishment of the crime of genocide. The government of [94] See e.g. Kuper, Genocide, p. 31; Robinson, Genocide Convention, p. 64, and Ruhashyankiko, Study, pp. 21 ff.

[95] See further below, chapter 8, pp. 430 ff. [96] See further generally below, chapter 14.

[97] ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 3 and 325; 95 ILR, pp. 1 and 43.

[98] ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 3, 16; 95 ILR, pp. 1, 31. See also R. Maison, 'Les Ordonnances de la CIJ dans l'Affaire Relative à l'Application de la Convention sur la Prévention et la Répression du Crime du Génocide', 5 EJIL, 1994, p. 381.

[99] This provides that 'disputes between the Contracting Parties relating to the interpretation, application or fulfilment of the present Convention, including those relating to the responsibility of a state for genocide or for any of the other acts enumerated in article III, shall be submitted to the International Court of Justice at the request of any of the parties to the dispute'.

[100] The Court dismissed other suggested grounds for its jurisdiction in the case, ICJ Reports, 1993, p. 18; 95 ILR, p. 33.

[101] ICJ Reports, 1993, p. 23; 95 ILR, p. 38.

[102] ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 15, 23; 18 ILR, pp. 364, 370, quoting the terms of General Assembly resolution 96 (I) of 11 December 1946.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was requested to take all measures within its power to prevent commission of the crime of genocide, and was specifically called upon to ensure that 'any military, paramilitary or irregular armed units which may be directed or supported by it, as well as any organisations and persons which may be subject to its control, direction or influence, do not commit any acts of genocide'.[103] These provisional measures were reaffirmed by the Court in its Order on Provisional Measures of 13 September 1993 as measures which should be 'immediately and effectively implemented'.[104]

On 11 July 1996, the Court rejected the Preliminary Objections raised by Yugoslavia.[105] In particular, the Court emphasised that it followed from the object and purpose of the Genocide Convention that the rights and obligations contained therein were rights and obligations erga omnes and that the obligation upon each state to prevent and punish the crime of genocide was not dependent upon the type of conflict involved in the particular situation (whether international or domestic) and was not territorially limited by the Convention.[106] The type of state responsibility envisaged under article IX of the Convention did not exclude any form of state responsibility.[107] In addition, the Court observed that the Convention did not contain any clause the object or effect of which was to limit the scope of its jurisdiction ratione temporis so as to exclude events prior to a particular date.[108] Yugoslavia subsequently withdrew the counterclaims it had introduced against Bosnia,[109] while introducing an application in April 2001 for revision of the 1996 judgment on the basis that a 'new fact' had appeared since that state had become a new member of the UN during 2000. This was rejected by the Court.[110] On 26 February 2007, the Court rendered its judgment on the merits. The Court affirmed that the effect of the categorisation of genocide as a 'crime under international law', coupled with the obligation to prevent genocide contained in the Genocide Convention, is to prohibit states from committing

[103] ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 3, 24; 95 ILR, pp. 1, 39.

[104] ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 325, 350; 95 ILR, pp. 43, 68. See also the Separate Opinion of Judge Lauterpacht, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 407, 431–2; 95 ILR, pp. 125, 149–50.

[105] Now so called, rather than the former Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), as from, and in consequence of, the Dayton Peace Agreement initialled at Dayton, USA, on 11 November 1995 and signed in Paris on 14 December 1995.

[106] ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 595, 615; 115 ILR, p. 1.

[107] ICJ Reports, 1996, p. 616.

[108] Ibid., p. 617. See also the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 240; 110 ILR, p. 163.

[109] ICJ, Order of 10 September 2001.

[110] ICJ Reports, 2003, p. 7. See further below, chapter 19, p. 1106.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

genocide through the actions of their organs or persons or groups whose acts are attributable to them.[111] The Court also held that state responsibility could arise under the Convention for genocide and complicity, without an individual being convicted of the crime or an associated one,[112] and that such responsibility for genocide applied to a state wherever it may be acting.[113] It was noted that the essence of the intent, at the heart of the definition of genocide, is to destroy the protected group, in whole or in part, as such. It is a group which must have particular positive characteristics – national, ethnical, racial or religious – and not the lack of them. The intent must also relate to the group 'as such'. That means that the crime requires an intent to destroy a collection of people who have a particular group identity[114] and such intent refers to the intent to destroy at least a substantial part of the particular group and this may apply to a geographically limited area (such as Srebrenica).[115] The Court emphasised that claims against a state involving charges of exceptional gravity, such as genocide, must be proved by evidence that is fully conclusive.[116] However, the Court emphasised that the Convention established a separate and distinct duty to prevent genocide, which was both 'normative and compelling'[117] and an obligation of conduct, not of result,[118] provided that the offence was actually committed.[119] Such obligation arose at the instant that the state learned of, or should normally have learned of, the existence of a serious risk that genocide would be committed.[120] It was also held that Serbia was in violation of its duty to punish genocide.[121]

[111] ICJ Reports, 2007, paras. 161–7. See also Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Rwanda, ICJ Reports, 2006, pp. 6, 31–2, where the Court noted that the rights and obligations in the Genocide Convention were rights and obligations erga omnes and stated that the prohibition of genocide was 'assuredly' a norm of jus cogens.

[112] ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 182. [113] Ibid., para. 183. [114] Ibid., para. 193.

[115] Ibid., paras. 198–9.

[116] Ibid., para. 209 and see also para. 319. The Court, however, was not convinced, on the basis of the evidence before it, that it had been conclusively established that the massive killings of members of the protected group were committed with the specific intent (dolus specialis) on the part of the perpetrators to destroy, in whole or in part, the group as such, ibid., para. 277, nor that deportations and expulsions of the protected group amounted to genocide for the same reason, ibid., para. 334, nor indeed the imposition of terrible conditions on camp detainees and other allegations, ibid., paras. 354, 370 and 376. The exception to this was with regard to Srebrenica, where the Court found that the necessary intent had been established to the required standard of proof, paras. 278–97.

[117] Ibid., para. 427. [118] Ibid., para. 430. [119] Ibid., para. 431. [120] Ibid.

[121] Ibid., para. 450.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Prohibition of discrimination

Apart from the overwhelming requirement of protection from physical attack upon their very existence as a group, groups need protection from discriminatory treatment as such.[122] The norm of non-discrimination thus constitutes a principle relevant both to groups and to individual members of groups.

The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination[123] was signed in 1965 and entered into force in 1969. It builds on the non-discrimination provisions in the UN Charter. Racial discrimination is defined as:

> any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise, on an equal footing, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural or any other field of public life.

States parties undertake to prohibit racial discrimination and guarantee equality for all in the enjoyment of a series of rights and to assure to all within their jurisdiction effective protection and remedies regarding such human rights.[124] It is also fair to conclude that in addition to the existence of this Convention, the prohibition of discrimination on racial grounds is contrary to customary international law.[125] This conclusion may be reached on the basis inter alia of articles 55 and 56 of the UN Charter, articles 2 and 7 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights,[126] regional instruments on human [122] See e.g. Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 10; W. Vandenhole, Non-discrimination and Equality in the View of the UN Human Rights Treaty Bodies, Antwerp, 2005; Joseph et al., International Covenant, chapter 23; A. Bayefsky, 'The Principle of Equality or Non-discrimination in International Law', 11 HRLJ, 1990, p. 1; J. Greenberg, 'Race, Sex and Religious Discrimination' in Meron, Human Rights in International Law, p. 307; W. McKean, Equality and Discrimination under International Law, Oxford, 1983, and T. Meron, Human Rights Law-Making in the United Nations, Oxford, 1986, chapters 1–3.

[123] See e.g. N. Lerner, The UN Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, 2nd edn, Dordrecht, 1980.

[124] See further below, p. 311, with regard to the establishment of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. Note also the Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, 1973.

[125] See e.g. the Dissenting Opinion of Judge Tanaka in the South-West Africa cases, ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 3, 293; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 455.

[126] See below, p. 314.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

rights protection[127] and general state practice. Discrimination on other grounds, such as religion[128] and gender,[129] may also be contrary to customary international law. The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights provides in article 2(1) that all states parties undertake to respect and ensure to all individuals within their territories and within their jurisdictions the rights recognised in the Covenant 'without distinction of any kind such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other [127] See below, pp. 347 ff.

[128] See e.g. the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, 1981, General Assembly resolution 36/55 and the appointment of a Special Rapporteur to examine situations inconsistent with the Declaration by the UN Commission on Human Rights, resolution 1986/20 of 10 March 1986. See also Odio Benito, Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, New York, 1989, and Report on the Implementation of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, E/CN.4/1995/91, 1994. In 2000, the Commission on Human Rights changed the mandate title to 'Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief': see ECOSOC decision 2000/261 and General Assembly resolution 55/97. On 14 December 2007, the Human Rights Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a further period of three years. The UN Human Rights Committee has produced a General Comment on article 18 concerning freedom of thought, conscience and religion: see General Comment 22, 1993, HRI/GEN/1/Rev.1, 1994, and Joseph et al., International Covenant, chapter 17. Note also S. Neff, 'An Evolving International Legal Norm of Religious Freedom: Problems and Prospects', 7 California Western International Law Journal, 1975, p. 543; A. Krishnaswami, Study of Discrimination in the Matter of Religious Rights and Practices, New York, 1960, E/CN.4/Sub.2/200/Rev.1; N. Lerner, 'Towards a Draft Declaration against Religious Intolerance and Discrimination', 11 Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, 1981, p. 82; B. Tahzib, Freedom of Religion or Belief: Ensuring Effective International Legal Protection, Dordrecht, 1995, and B. Dickson, 'The United Nations and Freedom of Religion', 44 ICLQ, 1995, p. 327.

[129] See the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women 1979, below, p. 322. Article 1 of the Convention provides that discrimination against women means any distinction, exclusion or restriction made on the basis of sex which has the effect or purpose of impairing or nullifying the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by women, irrespective of their marital status, on a basis of equality with men and women, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural, civil or any other field. See e.g. McKean, Equality, chapter 10; Bayefsky, 'Equality', and Meron, Human Rights Law-Making, chapter 2. See also J. Morsink, 'Women's Rights in the Universal Declaration', 13 HRQ, 1991, p. 229; R. Cook, 'Women's International Human Rights Law', 15 HRQ, 1993, p. 230; Human Rights of Women (ed. R. Cook), Philadelphia, 1994, and M. A. Freeman and A. S. Fraser, 'Women's Human Rights' in Herkin and Hargrove, Human Rights: An Agenda for the Next Century, p. 103. Note also the UN General Assembly Declaration on Elimination of Violence against Women, 33 ILM, 1994, p. 1049. See also the London Declaration of International Law Principles on Internally Displaced Persons adopted by the International Law Association, Report of the Sixty-Ninth Conference, London, 2000, p. 794.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status'.[130] Article 26 stipulates that all persons are equal before the law and thus, 'the law shall prohibit any discrimination and guarantee to all persons equal and effective protection against discrimination on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status'.[131] The UN Human Rights Committee established under this Covenant[132] has noted in its General Comment 18 on Non-Discrimination[133] that non-discrimination 'constitutes a basic and general principle relating to the protection of human rights'. The Committee, while adopting the definition of the term 'discrimination' as used in the Racial Discrimination and Women's Discrimination Conventions, concludes that it should be understood to imply any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference which is based on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status and which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by all persons, on an equal footing, of all rights and freedoms.

The principle of non-discrimination requires the establishment of equality in fact as well as formal equality in law. As the Permanent Court of International Justice noted in the Minority Schools in Albania case,[134] 'equality in law precludes discrimination of any kind; whereas equality in fact may involve the necessity of different treatment in order to attain a result which establishes an equilibrium between different situations'.[135] The appropriate test of acceptable differentiation in such circumstances will centre upon what is just or reasonable[136] or objectively and reasonably justified.[137] The application of equality in fact may also require the [130] See also, for example, articles 2(2) and 3 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 1966. See M. C. Craven, The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, Oxford, 1995, chapter 4, and see further below, p. 308.

[131] Note that this provision constitutes an autonomous or free-standing principle, whereas article 2(1) of that Covenant and articles 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights and 2(1) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child prohibit discrimination in the context of specific rights and freedoms laid down in the instrument in question: see Bayefsky, 'Equality', pp. 3–4, and the Human Rights Committee's General Comment on Non-Discrimination, paragraph 12.

[132] See further below, p. 314. [133] Adopted on 9 November 1989, CCPR/C/Rev.1/Add.1.

[134] PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 64, p. 19 (1935); 8 AD, pp. 386, 389–90.

[135] See also the Human Rights Committee's General Comment on Non-Discrimination, paragraph 8.

[136] See Judge Tanaka's Dissenting Opinion in the South-West Africa cases, ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 3, 306; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 464.

[137] See e.g. the Belgian Linguistics case, European Court of Human Rights, Series A, No. 6, 1986, para. 10; 45 ILR, pp. 114, 165. See also the Amendments to the Naturalisation

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

introduction of affirmative action measures in order to diminish or eliminate conditions perpetuating discrimination. Such measures would need to be specifically targeted and neither absolute nor of infinite duration.[138]

The principle of self-determination as a human right[139]

The right to self-determination has already been examined in so far as it relates to the context of decolonisation.[140] The question arises whether this right, which has been widely proclaimed, has an application beyond the colonial context. Article 1 of both International Covenants on Human Rights provides that 'all peoples have the right to self-determination. By virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development', while the Helsinki Final Act of 1975[141] refers to 'the principle of equal rights and self-determination . . . all peoples have the right, in full freedom, to determine, when and as they wish, their internal and external political status, without external interference, and to pursue as they wish their Provisions of the Constitution of Costa Rica case, Inter-American Court of Human Rights, 1984, para. 56; 5 HRLJ, 1984, p. 172, and the Human Rights Committee's General Comment on Non-Discrimination, paragraph 13, which notes that 'not every differentiation of treatment will constitute discrimination, if the criteria for such differentiation are reasonable and objective and if the aim is to achieve a purpose which is legitimate under the Covenant'.

[138] See the Human Rights Committee's General Comment on Non-Discrimination, paragraph 10. See also article 1(4) of the Racial Discrimination Convention, article 4(1) of the Women's Discrimination Convention and article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

[139] See e.g. A. Buchanan, Justice, Legitimacy and Self-Determination, Oxford, 2004; J. Summers, Peoples and International Law, The Hague, 2007; K. Knop, Diversity and Self-Determination in International Law, Cambridge, 2002; T. D. Musgrave, Self-Determination and National Minorities, Oxford, 1997; W. Ofuatey-Kodjoe, 'Self Determination' in United Nations Legal Order (eds. O. Schachter and C. C. Joyner), Cambridge, 1995, vol. I, p. 349; A. Cassese, Self-Determination of Peoples, Cambridge, 1995; Modern Law of Self-Determination (ed. C. Tomuschat), Dordrecht, 1993; Higgins, Problems and Process, chapter 7; T. Franck, The Power of Legitimacy Among Nations, Oxford, 1990, pp. 153 ff.; Franck, 'Fairness in the International and Institutional System', 240 HR, 1993 III, pp. 13, 125 ff.; The Rights of Peoples (ed. J. Crawford), Oxford, 1988; Peoples and Minorities in International Law (eds. C. Brölmann, R. Lefeber and M. Zieck), Dordrecht, 1993, and P. Thornberry, 'Self-Determination, Minorities, Human Rights: A Review of International Instruments', 38 ICLQ, 1989, p. 867. See also M. Koskenniemi, 'National Self-Determination Today: Problems of Legal Theory and Practice', 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 241; G. Simpson, 'The Diffusion of Sovereignty: Self-Determination in the Post-Colonial Age', 32 Stanford Journal of International Law, 1996, p. 255, and R. McCorquodale, 'Self-Determination: A Human Rights Approach', 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 857.

[140] See above, chapter 5, p. 251. [141] See further below, p. 372.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

political, economic, social and cultural development'. Article 20 of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, 1981[142] stipulates that 'all peoples shall have the right to existence. They shall have the unquestionable and inalienable right to self-determination. They shall freely determine their political status and shall pursue their economic and social development according to the policy they have chosen.' The 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations[143] referred to the colonial situation and noted that subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constituted a violation of the principle. A number of UN resolutions have discussed the relevance of self-determination also to situations of alien occupation where the use of force has been involved.[144] The International Law Commission in 1988 expressed its view that the principle of self-determination was of universal application,[145] while the practice of the UN Human Rights Committee has been of particular significance.

Before this is briefly noted, reference must be made to the crucial importance of the principle of territorial integrity.[146] This norm protects the territorial framework of independent states and is part of the overall concept of the sovereignty of states. In terms of the concept of the freezing of territorial boundaries as at the moment of independence (save by mutual consent), the norm is referred to as uti possidetis juris.[147] This posits that boundaries established and existing at the moment of independence cannot be altered unless the relevant parties consent to change. It is supported by international instruments[148] and by judicial pronouncement. In the Burkina Faso/Mali case,[149] the Chamber of the International Court of Justice emphasised that uti possidetis constituted a general principle, whose purpose was to prevent the independence and stability of [142] See further below, p. 391. [143] General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV).

[144] See, for an examination of state practice, e.g. Cassese, Self-Determination, pp. 90–9.

[145] Yearbook of the ILC, 1988, vol. II, Part 2, p. 64.

[146] General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV) 1960 (the Colonial Declaration) underlines that 'any attempt at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and the territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the UN', while resolution 2625 (XXV) 1970 (the Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations) emphasises that 'nothing in the foregoing paragraphs shall be construed as authorising or encouraging any action which would dismember or impair, totally or in part, the territorial integrity or political unity of sovereign or independent states'. See further below, chapter 10, p. 522.

[147] See further below, chapter 10, p. 525.

[148] See e.g. General Assembly resolutions 1514 (XV) and 1541 (XV) and Organisation of African Unity resolution 16 (I) 1964.

[149] ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 566–7; 80 ILR, pp. 440, 470–1.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

new states from being endangered by fratricidal struggles provoked by the challenging of frontiers. This essential requirement of stability had induced newly independent states to consent to the respecting of colonial borders 'and to take account of it in the interpretation of the principle of self-determination of peoples'. The Arbitration Commission of the European Conference on Yugoslavia emphasised in Opinion No. 2[150] that 'it is well established that, whatever the circumstances, the right to self-determination must not involve changes to existing frontiers at the time of independence (uti possidetis juris) except where the states concerned agree otherwise'.

The principle of self-determination, therefore, applies beyond the colonial context, within the territorial framework of independent states. It cannot be utilised as a legal tool for the dismantling of sovereign states.[151] Its use, however, as a crucial principle of collective human rights[152] has been analysed by the Human Rights Committee in interpreting article 1 of the Civil and Political Rights Covenant.[153] In its General Comment on [150] 92 ILR, pp. 167, 168. See further above, chapter 5, p. 256.

[151] The clause in the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations (repeated in the UN Vienna Declaration on Human Rights, 1993), stating that nothing in the section on self-determination shall be construed as authorising or encouraging the dismembering or impairing of the territorial integrity of states conducting themselves in compliance with the principle of self-determination 'as described above and thus possessed of a government representing the whole people belonging to the territory without distinction as to race, creed or colour', may be seen, first, as establishing the primacy of the principle of territorial integrity and, secondly, as indicating the content of self-determination within the territory. Whether it also can be seen as offering legitimacy to secession from an independent state in exceptional circumstances is the subject of much debate. Cassese, for example, concludes that 'a racial or religious group may attempt secession, a form of external self-determination, when it is apparent that internal self-determination is absolutely beyond reach. Extreme and unremitting persecution and the lack of any reasonable prospect for peaceful challenge may make secession legitimate', Self-Determination, p. 120. See also R. Rosenstock, 'The Declaration on Principles of International Law', 65 AJIL, 1971, pp. 713, 732, and J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2006, pp. 118 ff. The Canadian Supreme Court in the Quebec Secession case discussed the question without reaching a conclusion, (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385, 437 ff.; 115 ILR, pp. 536, 582–7. It would appear that practice demonstrating the successful application of even this modest proposition is lacking.

[152] Note Brownlie's view that the principle of self-determination has a core of reasonable certainty and this consists in 'the right of a community which has a distinct character to have this character reflected in the institutions of government under which it lives', 'The Rights of Peoples in International Law' in Crawford, Rights of Peoples, pp. 1, 5.

[153] See in particular D. McGoldrick, The Human Rights Committee, Oxford, 1994, chapter 5; Cassese, Self-Determination, pp. 59 ff., and M. Nowak, UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, CCPR Commentary, 2nd edn, Kehl, 2005, part 1.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Self-Determination adopted in 1984,[154] the Committee emphasised that the realisation of the right was 'an essential condition for the effective guarantee and observance of individual human rights'. Nevertheless, the principle is seen as a collective one and not one that individuals could seek to enforce through the individual petition procedures provided in the First Optional Protocol to the Covenant.[155] The Committee takes the view, as Professor Higgins[156] noted,[157] that 'external self-determination requires a state to take action in its foreign policy consistent with the attainment of self-determination in the remaining areas of colonial or racist occupation. But internal self-determination is directed to their own peoples.' In the context of the significance of the principle of self-determination within independent states, the Committee has encouraged states parties to provide in their reports details about participation in social and political structures,[158] and in engaging in dialogue with representatives of states parties, questions are regularly posed as to how political institutions operate and how the people of the state concerned participate in the governance of their state.[159] This necessarily links in with consideration of other articles of the Covenant concerning, for example, freedom of expression (article 19), freedom of assembly (article 21), freedom of association (article 22) and the right to take part in the conduct of public affairs and to vote

[154] General Comment 12: see HRI/GEN/1/Rev.1, p. 12, 1994.

[155] See the Kitok case, Report of the Human Rights Committee, A/43/40, pp. 221, 228; 96 ILR, pp. 637, 645; the Lubicon Lake Band case, A/45/40, vol. II, pp. 1, 27; 96 ILR, pp. 667, 702; EP v. Colombia, A/45/40, vol. II, pp. 184, 187, and RL v. Canada, A/47/40, pp. 358, 365; 96 ILR, p. 706. However, in Mahuika et al. v. New Zealand, the Committee took the view that the provisions of article 1 may be relevant in the interpretation of other rights protected by the Covenant, in particular article 27 on the rights of persons belonging to minorities, A/56/40, vol. II, annex X, A. See also Diergaardt et al. v. Namibia, A/55/40, vol. II, annex IX, sect. M, para. 10.3.

[156] A member of the Committee from 1985 to 1995.

[157] Higgins, 'Postmodern Tribalism and the Right to Secession' in Brölmann et al., Peoples and Minorities in International Law, p. 31.

[158] See e.g. the report of Colombia, CCPR/C/64/Add.3, pp. 9 ff., 1991. In the third periodic report of Peru, it was noted that the first paragraph of article 1 of the Covenant 'lays down the right of every people to self-determination. Under that right any people is able to decide freely on its political and economic condition or regime and hence establish a form of government suitable for the purposes in view. To this effect Peru adopted as its form of government the republican system which was embodied in the constitution of 1979, which stated that Peru was a democratic and social independent and sovereign republic based on work with a unitary representative and decentralised government', CCPR/C/83/Add.1, 1995, p. 4.

[159] See e.g. with regard to Canada, A/46/40, p. 12. See also A/45/40, pp. 120–1, with regard to Zaire.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

(article 25). The right of self-determination, therefore, provides the overall framework for the consideration of the principles relating to democratic governance.[160] The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination adopted General Recommendation 21 in 1996 in which it similarly divided self-determination into an external and an internal aspect and noted that the latter referred to the 'right of every citizen to take part in the conduct of public affairs at any level'.[161] The Canadian Supreme Court has noted that self-determination 'is normally fulfilled through internal self-determination – a people's pursuit of its political, economic, social and cultural development within the framework of an existing state'.[162]

The protection of minorities[163]

Various attempts were made in the post-First World War settlements, following the collapse of the German, Ottoman, Russian and Austro-Hungarian Empires and the rise of a number of independent nation-based states in Eastern and Central Europe, to protect those groups to whom sovereignty and statehood could not be granted.[164] Persons [160] See T. Franck, 'The Emerging Right to Democratic Governance', 86 AJIL, 1992, p. 46. See also P. Thornberry, 'The Democratic or Internal Aspect of Self-Determination' in Tomuschat, Modern Law of Self-Determination, p. 101.

[161] A/51/18.

[162] The Quebec Secession case, (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385, 437–8; 115 ILR, p. 536.

[163] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 972 ff.; Nowak, UN Covenant, pp. 480 ff.; M. Weller, Universal Minority Rights: A Commentary on the Jurisprudence of International Courts and Treaty Bodies, Oxford, 2007; R. Higgins, 'Minority Rights: Discrepancies and Divergencies Between the International Covenant and the Council of Europe System' in Liber Amicorum for Henry Schermers, Dordrecht, 1994, p. 193; Shaw, 'Definition of Minorities'; P. Thornberry, International Law and Minorities, Oxford, 1991, and Thornberry, 'Phoenix', and 'Self-Determination', p. 867; G. Alfredsson, 'Minority Rights and a New World Order' in Broadening the Frontiers of Human Rights: Essays in Honour of A. Eide (ed. D. Gomien), Oslo, 1993; G. Alfredsson and A. M. de Zayas, 'Minority Rights: Protection by the UN', 14 HRLJ, 1993, p. 1; Brölmann et al., Peoples and Minorities in International Law; The Protection of Ethnic and Linguistic Minorities in Europe (eds. J. Packer and K. Myntti), Turku, 1993; Documents on Autonomy and Minority Rights (ed. H. Hannum), Dordrecht, 1993; N. Rodley, 'Conceptual Problems in the Protection of Minorities: International Legal Developments', 17 HRQ, 1995, p. 48; A. Fenet et al., Le Droit et les Minorités, Brussels, 1995; J. Rehman, The Weakness in the International Protection of Minority Rights, The Hague, 2000, and International Human Rights Law, chapters 11 and 12; Musgrave, Self-Determination, and Minority and Group Rights in the New Millennium (eds. D. Fottrell and B. Bowring), The Hague, 1999. See also the Capotorti Study on the Rights of Persons Belonging to Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, E/CN.4/Sub.2/384/Rev.1, 1979.

[164] The minorities regime of the League consisted of five special minorities treaties binding Poland, the Serbo-Croat-Slovene state, Romania, Greece and Czechoslovakia; special

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

belonging to racial, religious or linguistic minorities were to be given the same treatment and the same civil and political rights and security as other nationals in the state in question. Such provisions constituted obligations of international concern and could not be altered without the assent of a majority of the League of Nations Council. The Council was to take action in the event of any infraction of minorities' obligations. There also existed a petition procedure by minorities to the League, although they had no standing as such before the Council or the Permanent Court of International Justice.[165] However, the schemes of protection did not work well, ultimately for a variety of reasons ranging from the sensitivities of newly independent states to international supervision of minority issues to overt exploitation of minority issues by Nazi Germany in order to subvert neighbouring countries. After the Second World War, the focus shifted to the international protection of universal individual human rights, although several instruments dealing with specific situations incorporated provisions concerning the protection of minorities,[166] and in 1947 the Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities was established.[167] It was not, however, until the adoption of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in 1966 that the question of minority rights came back onto the international agenda. Article 27 of this Covenant provides that 'in those states in which ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities exist, persons belonging to such minorities shall not be denied the right, in community with the other members of their group, to enjoy their own culture, to profess and practise their own religion, or to use their own language'.

This modest and rather negative provision as formulated centres upon 'persons belonging' to minorities rather than upon minorities as such minorities clauses in the treaties of peace with Austria, Bulgaria, Hungary and Turkey; five general declarations made on admission to the League by Albania, Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia and Iraq; a special declaration by Finland regarding the Aaland Islands, and treaties relating to Danzig, Upper Silesia and Memel: see generally Thornberry, International Law and Minorities, pp. 38 ff.

[165] In the early 1930s several hundred petitions were received but this dropped to virtually nil by 1939: see Thornberry, International Law and Minorities, pp. 434–6, and the Capotorti Report on the Rights of Persons belonging to Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, 1979, E/CN.4/Sub.2/384/Rev.1, pp. 20–2. See also Macartney, National States, pp. 370 ff.; J. Stone, International Guarantees of Minority Rights, London, 1932, and Richard, Le Droit de Petition, Paris, 1932.

[166] See e.g. Annex IV of the Treaty of Peace with Italy, 1947; the Indian–Pakistan Treaty, 1950, and article 7 of the Austrian State Treaty, 1955. See also the provisions in the documents concerning the independence of Cyprus, Cmnd 1093, 1960.

[167] See further below, p. 307.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

and does not define the concept of minorities.[168] Nevertheless, the UN Human Rights Committee has taken the opportunity to consider the issue in discussing states' reports, individual petitions and in a General Comment. In commenting upon states' reports made pursuant to the International Covenant, the Committee has made clear, for example, that the rights under article 27 apply to all members of minorities within a state party's territory and not just nationals,[169] and it has expressed concern with regard to the treatment of minorities within particular states.[170]

In the Lovelace case,[171] the Committee decided that there had been a violation of article 27 with regard to an Indian woman who, by having married a non-Indian, had lost her rights by Canadian law to reside on the Tobique Reserve, something which she wished to do upon the collapse of her marriage. The Committee noted that statutory restrictions affecting the right to residence on a reserve of a person belonging to the minority concerned had to have both a reasonable and objective justification and be consistent with the other provisions of the Covenant read as a whole. This had not been the case. There was no place outside the reserve where her right to access to her native culture and language could be conducted in community with other members of the minority in question.

In the Kitok case,[172] the Committee took the view with regard to a petition by a member of the Sami community in Sweden that where the regulation of economic activity was an essential element in the culture [168] Attempts to define minorities have invariably focused upon the numerically inferior numbers of minorities and their non-dominant position, the existence of certain objective features differentiating them from the majority population (e.g. ethnic, religious or linguistic) coupled with the subjective wish of the minority concerned to preserve those characteristics. See e.g. Shaw, 'Definition of Minorities', and the Capotorti Report, p. 96. See also Council of Europe Assembly Recommendation 1255 (1955), H/Inf (95) 3, p. 88. Note that the Human Rights Committee in the Ballantyne case held that English-speaking citizens in Quebec did not constitute a minority since the term 'minority' applied to the whole state and not a part of it, 14 HRLJ, 1993, pp. 171, 176.

[169] See e.g. comments upon Norway's third periodic report, A/49/40, p. 23 and Japan's third periodic report, ibid., p. 25. See also Joseph et al., International Covenant, chapter 24.

[170] See e.g. with regard to the third periodic report of Romania, A/49/40, p. 29 and that of Mexico, ibid., p. 35, and the fourth periodic report of Russia, CCPR/C/79/Add.54, p. 5 and that of Ukraine, CCPR/C/79/Add.52, p. 4. Note also the criticism of the Democratic Republic of the Congo for its marginalisation, discrimination and, at times, persecution of some of the country's minorities, including pygmies, see CCPR/C/SR.2358, 2006, and of the situation in Kosovo, CCPR/C/SR.2394, 2006.

[171] I Selected Decisions of the Human Rights Committee, 1985, p. 83; 68 ILR, p. 17.

[172] A/43/40, p. 221; 96 ILR, p. 637.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of an economic community, its application to an individual could fall within article 27. It was emphasised that a restriction upon an individual member of a minority must be shown to have a reasonable and objective justification and to be necessary for the continued viability and welfare of the minority as a whole.

In the Lubicon Lake Band case,[173] the Committee upheld the complaint that the Canadian Government, in allowing the Provincial Government of Alberta to expropriate the Band's territory for the benefit of private corporate interests, violated article 27. It was held that the rights protected under article 27 included the right of persons in community with others to engage in economic and social activities which were part of the culture of the community to which they belonged. However, measures with only a limited impact on the way of life and livelihood of persons belonging to a minority would not necessarily violate article 27.[174]

The Committee adopted a General Comment on article 27 in 1994 after much discussion and hesitation due to fears that such a comment might be perceived to constitute an encouragement to secession.[175] The General Comment pointed to the distinction between the rights of persons belonging to minorities on the one hand, and the right to self-determination and the right to equality and non-discrimination on the other. It was emphasised that the rights under article 27 did not prejudice the sovereignty and territorial integrity of states, although certain minority rights, in particular those pertaining to indigenous communities, might consist of a way of life closely associated with territory and the use of its resources, such as fishing, hunting and the right to live in reserves protected by law. The Committee, in an important part of the General Comment, underlined that persons belonging to a minority need not be nationals or permanent residents of the state concerned so that migrant workers or even visitors might be protected under article 27. Whether an ethnic, religious or linguistic minority exists was an objective question, not dependent upon a decision of the state party. Although article 27 is negatively formulated, the Committee pointed out that positive measures of protection were required not only against the acts of the state party itself, but also against the acts of other persons within the state party. Positive measures may also be necessary to protect the identity of the minority concerned and legitimate [173] A/45/40, vol. II, p. 1; 96 ILR, p. 667.

[174] See the Länsmann cases against Finland, 511/92 and 671/95, 115 ILR, p. 300, and Report of the Human Rights Committee 2005, volume II, A/60/40, pp. 90 ff.

[175] General Comment No. 23, HRI/GEN/1/Rev.1, p. 38.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com differentiation was permitted so long as it was based on reasonable and objective criteria.

The UN General Assembly adopted a Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities in December 1992.[176] Article 1 provides that states 'shall protect the existence and the national or ethnic, cultural, religious and linguistic identity of minorities within their respective territories' and shall adopt appropriate legislative and other measures to achieve these ends. The Declaration states that persons belonging to minorities have the right to enjoy their own culture, practise and profess their own religion and to use their own language in private and in public without hindrance. Such persons also have the right to participate effectively in cultural, social, economic and public life. The UN Sub-Commission has been considering the question of minorities for many years and in 1994 agreed to establish a five-person inter-sessional working group[177] to examine peaceful and constructive solutions to situations involving minorities and, in particular, to review the practical application of the Declaration, to provide recommendations to inter alia the Sub-Commission and the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights to protect minorities where there is a risk of violence and generally to promote dialogue between minority groups in society and between those groups and governments. In 2005, the Commission on Human Rights appointed an Independent Expert on Minorities with the mandate to promote the implementation of the Declaration; to identify best practices and possibilities for technical co-operation by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights at the request of Governments; and to co-operate closely with existing relevant UN bodies, while taking into account the views of non-governmental organisations and applying a gender perspective.[178]

The issue of minority rights has also been taken up recently particularly by European states, primarily as a consequence of the demise of the Soviet Union and its empire in Eastern Europe and the reintegration of Eastern and Central European states within the political system of [176] Resolution 47/135. See e.g. The UN Minority Rights Declaration (eds. A. Phillips and A. Rosas), London, 1993.

[177] E/CN.4/Sub.2/1994/56. This was authorised by the Commission on Human Rights on 3 March 1995: see resolution 1995/24. See also E/CN.4/Sub.2/1995/51.

[178] Resolution 2005/79. The Independent Expert has, for example, drawn attention to the rights of women facing multiple forms of discrimination, exclusion and violence, such as women from minority communities, Press Release of 7 March 2006, and to problems faced by the Roma in Hungary, Press Release of 4 July 2006.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Western Europe. The specific response to questions of minority rights within the Council of Europe and the Conference (as from 1995 Organisation) on Security and Co-operation in Europe are addressed below.[179]

As has been noted, the UN Human Rights Committee has pointed to the special position of indigenous peoples as minorities with a particular relationship to their traditional territory. It has been accepted that such communities form a specific category of minorities with special needs.[180] The International Labour Organisation adopted Convention No. 107 on Indigenous and Tribal Populations in 1957, an instrument with a predominantly assimilationist approach to the question of indigenous peoples. It was partially revised in Convention No. 169 on Indigenous and Tribal Peoples in Independent Countries, 1989. The change in terminology from 'populations' to 'peoples' is instructive[181] and the latter Convention focuses far more upon the protection of the social, cultural, religious and spiritual values and practices of indigenous peoples. Unlike the prevailing approach to the definition of minorities generally, which intermingles objective and subjective criteria, this Convention stipulates in article 1(2) that 'self-identification as indigenous or tribal shall be regarded as a fundamental criterion' for determining the groups to which the Convention applies. The Sub-Commission recommended that a study of discrimination against indigenous populations should be made and this was completed in 1984.[182] A definition of indigenous populations was suggested and [179] See below, pp. 365 and 376.

[180] See e.g. P. Thornberry, Indigenous Peoples and Human Rights, Manchester, 2002; S. Marquardt, 'International Law and Indigenous Peoples', 3 International Journal on Group Rights, 1995, p. 47; J. Berger and P. Hunt, 'Towards the International Protection of Indigenous Peoples' Rights', 12 NQHR, 1994, p. 405; C. Tennant, 'Indigenous Peoples, International Institutions, and the International Legal Literature from 1945–1993', 16 HRQ, 1994, p. 1; E. Stamatopoulou, 'Indigenous Peoples and the United Nations: Human Rights as a Developing Dynamic', 16 HRQ, 1994, p. 58; Crawford, Rights of Peoples; R. Barsh, 'Indigenous Peoples: An Emerging Object of International Law', 80 AJIL, 1986, p. 369; J. Anaya, Indigenous Peoples in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2004, and G. Bennett, Aboriginal Rights in International Law, London, 1978. See also Justice Pending: Indigenous Peoples and Other Good Causes (eds. G. Alfredsson and M. Stavropoulou), The Hague, 2002. Note in particular the cases of Delgamuukw v. British Columbia (1998) 153 DLR (4th) 193; 115 ILR, p. 446, Canadian Supreme Court, and Mabo v. State of Queensland (No. 1) (1988) 83 ALR 14; 112 ILR, p. 412 and (No. 2) (1992) 107 ALR 1; 112 ILR, p. 457. See also The Richtersveld Community case, 24 March 2003, Supreme Court of South Africa, 127 ILR, p. 507.

[181] But note that the Convention provides that the use of the term 'peoples' is not to be construed as having any implication as regards the rights that may attach to the term under international law (article 1(3)).

[182] The Martinez Cobo Report, E/CN.4/Sub.2/1986/7 and Adds. 1–4.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

various suggestions made as to future action. In 1982, the Sub-Commission established a Working Group on Indigenous Populations[183] and a Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples was finally adopted in 2007.[184] The Declaration notes that indigenous peoples have the right to the full enjoyment, as a collective or as individuals, of all human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognised in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and international human rights law (article 1). They have the right to self-determination (article 3) and, in exercising their right to self-determination, have the right to autonomy or self-government in matters relating to their internal and local affairs, as well as ways and means for financing their autonomous functions (article 4). They further have the right to maintain and strengthen their distinctive political, economic, social and cultural characteristics, as well as their legal systems, while retaining the right to participate fully in the life of the state (article 5), the right to a nationality (article 6) and the collective right to live in freedom and security as distinct peoples free from any act of genocide or violence (article 7(2)). They also have the right not to be subjected to forced assimilation or destruction of their culture, while states are to provide effective mechanisms for prevention of, and redress for, inter alia any action which has the aim or effect of depriving them of their integrity as distinct peoples, or of their cultural values or ethnic identities (article 8). The Declaration also lists their rights to practise their cultural traditions, and to education, access to media and health practices, together with a range of rights concerning their distinctive relationship to the land (articles 9–37). The United Nations, its bodies, including the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, and specialised agencies, including at the country level, and states are called upon to promote respect for and full application of the Declaration (article 42). A special rapporteur on indigenous peoples was appointed in 2001 and a Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations established in 1985.[185] A Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues was set up in 2000[186] and UN Development Group Guidelines on Indigenous [183] See E/CN.4/Sub.2/1982/33.

[184] A Draft Declaration was adopted in 1994: see resolution 1994/45, E/CN.4/Sub.2/1994/56, p. 103. See also R. T. Coulter, 'The Draft UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples: What Is It? What Does It Mean?', 13 NQHR, 1995, p. 123.

[185] See General Assembly resolution 40/131.

[186] See ECOSOC resolution 2000/22. Note that 1993 was designated International Year of the World's Indigenous Peoples, see E/CN.4/1994/AC.4/TN.4/2, while the International Decade of the World's Indigenous Peoples was declared by the General Assembly on

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Peoples' Issues were produced in 2008.[187] An expert mechanism, consisting of five independent experts, on the rights of indigenous peoples was called for in Human Rights Council resolution 6/36, 2007, in order to provide the Council with thematic expertise.

The question of an American Declaration on Indigenous Peoples has also been under discussion within the Organisation of American States.[188] The Inter-American Court of Human Rights discussed the issue of the rights of indigenous peoples to ancestral lands and resources in The Mayagna (Sumo) Awas Tingni Community v. Nicaragua in 2001.[189] The Court emphasised the communitarian tradition regarding a communal form of collective property of the land and consequential close ties of indigenous people with that land,[190] and noted that the customary law of such people had especially to be taken into account so that 'possession of the land should suffice for indigenous communities lacking real title'.[191] In Sawhoyamaxa Indigenous Community v. Paraguay, the Court emphasised that the close ties of members of the indigenous communities with their traditional lands and the natural resources associated with their culture had to be secured under article 21 of the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights concerning the right to the use and enjoyment of property. The Court, in interpreting this provision, also took account of Convention No. 169 of the ILO, which required inter alia respect for the special importance for the cultural and spiritual values of the communities concerned of their relationship with their lands. The collecture nature of property ownership was also noted. In addition, the Court found a violation of the right to recognition as a person before the law under article 3 of the Convention as there had been no registration or official documentation

10 December 1994. See also the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination's General Recommendation 23 on Indigenous Peoples, 1997, A/52/18, annex V.

187 www.2.ohchr.org/english/issues/indigenous/docs/guidelines.pdf.

188 See the Draft Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples adopted in 1995, OEA/Ser.L/V/II/90; Doc. 9, rev. 1. For further discussions on the Draft Declaration, see e.g. GT/DADIN/doc.1/99 rev.2, 2000; Report of the Rapporteur of the Working Group, GT/DADIN/doc.83/02, 2002 and OEA/Ser.K/XVI, GT/DADIN/doc.301/07, 2007. See also, for example, resolutions AG/RES.1780 (XXI-0/01), 2001 and AG/RES. 2073 (XXXV-0/05), 2007.

189 Series C, No. 79. 190 Ibid., para. 149.

191 Ibid., para. 151. Nicaragua was held to be obliged to create 'an effective mechanism for delimitation, demarcation and titling of the property of indigenous communities, in accordance with their customary law, values, customs and mores', ibid., para. 164. See also the cases of the Moiwana Community v. Suriname, Judgment of 15 June 2005, Series C, No. 124 and the Indigenous Community Yakye Axa v. Paraguay, Judgment of 17 June 2005, Series C, No. 125.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

for the existence of several members of the indigenous community. The Court ordered the state to adopt all legislative, administrative and other measures to guarantee the members of the community ownership rights over their traditional lands.[192]

Other suggested collective rights

The subject of much concern in recent years has been the question of a right to development.[193] In 1986, the UN General Assembly adopted the Declaration on the Right to Development.[194] This instrument reaffirms the interdependence and indivisibility of all human rights and seeks to provide a framework for a range of issues (article 9). The right to development is deemed to be an inalienable human right of all human beings and peoples to participate in and enjoy economic, social, cultural and political development (article 1), while states have the primary responsibility to create conditions favourable to its realisation (article 3), including the duty to formulate international development policies (article 4). States are particularly called upon to ensure inter alia equal opportunity for all in their access to basic resources, education, health services, food, housing, employment and the fair distribution of income. Effective measures are to be undertaken to ensure that women participate in the development process and appropriate economic and social reforms are to be carried out with a view to eradicating all social injustices (article 8). The question of encouraging the implementation of this Declaration was the subject of continuing UN attention,[195] with the reaffirmation of the right to [192] Judgment of 29 March 2006, Series C, No. 146, paras. 17 ff., 187 ff. and 210 ff.

[193] See e.g. Le Droit au Développement au Plan International (ed. R. J. Dupuy), Paris, 1980; A. Pellet, Le Droit International du Développement, 2nd edn, Paris, 1987; K. Mbaye, 'Le Droit du Developpement comme un Droit de l'Homme', 5 Revue des Droits de l'Homme, 1972, p. 503; Report of the UN Secretary-General on the International Dimensions of the Right to Development as a Human Right, E/CN.4/1334, 1979; O. Schachter, 'The Emerging International Law of Development', 15 Columbia Journal of Transnational Law, 1976, p. 1; R. Rich, 'The Right to Development as an Emerging Human Right', 23 Va. JIL, 1983, p. 287; K. de Vey Mestdagh, 'The Right to Development', 28 NILR, 1981, p. 31; I. Brownlie, The Human Right to Development, Commonwealth Secretariat Human Rights Unit Occasional Paper, 1989; C. Weeramantry, 'The Right to Development', 25 IJIL, 1985, p. 482; P. Alston, 'Revitalising United Nations Work on Human Rights and Development', 18 Melbourne University Law Review, 1991, p. 216, and T. Kunanayakam, Historical Analysis of the Principles Contained in the Declaration on the Right to Development, HR/RD/1990/CONF.1, 1990.

[194] General Assembly resolution 41/128.

[195] Note e.g. the Global Consultation carried out in 1990, E/CN.4/1990/9/Rev.1, 1990: see R. Barsh, 'The Right to Development as a Human Right: Results of the Global Consultation',

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

development by the UN Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, 1993[196] and the establishment by the UN Commission on Human Rights of a Working Group on the Right to Development in the same year.[197] It should also be noted that Principle 3 of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, 1992 stipulated that 'the right to development must be fulfilled so as to equitably meet developmental and environmental needs of present and future generations'.[198] While the general issue of development is clearly on the international agenda in the context of economic issues and broad human rights concerns, it is premature to talk in terms of a legal right in international law of groups or peoples or states to development.[199] Other suggested collective rights have included the right to a healthy environment[200] and the right to peace.[201]

The United Nations system – implementation[202]

The United Nations system has successfully generated a wide-ranging series of international instruments dealing with the establishment of 13 HRQ, 1991, p. 322; the Report of the UN Secretary-General, E/CN.4/1992/10, 1991 and the Concrete Proposals of the UN Secretary-General, E/CN.4/1993/16, 1993.

196 See 32 ILM, 1993, p. 1661.

197 Resolution 1993/22. The first report of this Working Group was at the end of 1993, E/CN.4/1994/21. The most recent mechanism has been the creation of an open-ended Working Group on the Right to Development in 1998, resolution 1998/72. A high-level task force on the implementation of the right to development was established by the Working Group in 2004: see e.g. A/HRC/8/WG.2/TF/2, 2008.

198 31 ILM, 1992, p. 876. See also below, chapter 15.

199 Note that the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has adopted a General Comment in which it is stated that international co-operation for development and thus the realisation of economic, social and cultural rights is an obligation for all states, General Comment 3 (1991), HRI/GEN/1/Rev.1, pp. 48, 52.

200 See e.g. S. Prakash, 'The Right to the Environment. Emerging Implications in Theory and Praxis', 13 NQHR, 1995, p. 403. See further below, chapter 15 on international environmental law.

201 See e.g. General Assembly resolutions 33/73 and 39/11. See also R. Bilder, 'The Individual and the Right to Peace', 11 Bulletin of Peace Proposals, 1982, p. 387, and J. Fried, 'The United Nations' Report to Establish a Right of the Peoples to Peace', 2 Pace Yearbook of International Law, 1990, p. 21.

202 See The Future of UN Human Rights Treaty Monitoring (eds. P. Alston and J. Crawford), Cambridge, 2000; Human Rights: International Protection, Monitoring and Enforcement (ed. J. Symonides), Aldershot, 2003; Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapters 2–5; Tomuschat, Human Rights, chapters 6–8; United Nations Action in the Field of Human Rights, New York, 1994; The United Nations and Human Rights (ed. P. Alston), Oxford, 1992; Guide to International Human Rights Practice (ed. H. Hannum), 4th edn, Ardsley, 2004; Ramcharan, Human Rights: Thirty Years After the Universal Declaration, and UN Law/Fundamental standards and norms in the human rights field.[203] The question of implementation will now be addressed.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Political bodies – general

The General Assembly has power under article 13 of the Charter to initiate studies and make recommendations regarding inter alia human rights. Human rights items on its agenda may originate in Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) reports or decisions taken by the Assembly at earlier sessions to consider particular matters, or are proposed for inclusion by the UN organs, the Secretary-General or member states. Most items on human rights go to the Assembly's Third Committee (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural Committee), but others may be referred to other committees such as the Sixth Committee (Legal) or the First Committee (Political and Security) or the Special Political Committee. The Assembly has also established subsidiary organs under Rule 161, several of which deal with human rights issues, such as the Special Committee on Decolonisation, the UN Council for Namibia, the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices in the Occupied Territories and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestine People.[204] ECOSOC may, under article 62 of the Charter, make recommendations on human rights, draft conventions for the Assembly and call international conferences on human rights matters. It consists of fifty-four members of the UN elected by the General Assembly and hears annually the reports of a wide range of bodies including the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, the UN Children's Fund, the UN Conference on Trade and Development, the UN Environment Programme and the World Food Council. Of its subsidiary bodies, the Commission on Rights (ed. A. Cassese), Alphen aan den Rijn, 1979. See also Lauterpacht, International Law, chapter 11; F. Ermacora, 'Procedure to Deal with Human Rights Violations', 7 Revue des Droits de l'Homme, 1974, p. 670; Robertson and Merrills, Human Rights, and A. A. Cançado Trindade, 'Co-existence and Co-ordination of Mechanisms of International Protection of Human Rights', 202 HR, 1987, p. 9.

[203] See also e.g. the Slavery Convention, 1926 and Protocol, 1953; the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery, 1956; the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others, 1949; the Convention on the Status of Refugees, 1951 and Protocol, 1967; the Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons, 1954 and the Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness 1961.

[204] See UN Action, chapter 1. Note also the relevant roles of the other organs of the UN, the Security Council, Trusteeship Council, International Court and Secretariat, ibid.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Human Rights and the Commission on the Status of Women have the most direct connection with human rights issues.[205] The Commission on Human Rights was replaced by the Human Rights Council in 2006.

The Commission on Human Rights (1946–2006)[206]

This was established in 1946 as a subsidiary organ of ECOSOC with extensive terms of reference, including making studies, preparing recommendations and drafting international instruments on human rights. Originally consisting of forty-three representatives of member states of the UN selected by ECOSOC on the basis of equitable geographic distribution,[207] that number was increased to fifty-three by resolution 1990/48 in May 1990. For its first twenty years, it took the view that it had no power to take any action with regard to complaints concerning human rights violations, despite receiving many via the Secretary-General.[208] However, in 1967, ECOSOC resolution 1235 (XLII) authorised the Commission and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to examine information relevant to gross violations of human rights contained in communications, and to study such situations as revealed a consistent pattern of violations with a view to making recommendations to ECOSOC.[209] This constituted the public debate function of the Commission relating to specific situations. The situations in question referred at first primarily to Southern Africa. In 1967, also, the Commission set up an ad hoc working group of experts on South Africa and has since established working groups on Chile; Situations revealing a Consistent Pattern of Gross Violations of Human Rights; Disappearances; the Right to Development and structural adjustment programmes and economic, social and cultural rights. Special rapporteurs were appointed by the Commission to deal with situations in specific countries, such as, for [205] Ibid., pp. 13 ff. See also Assembly resolutions 1991B (XVIII) and 2847 (XXVI).

[206] See e.g. N. Rodley and D. Weissbrodt, 'United Nations Non-Treaty Procedures for Dealing with Human Rights Violations' in Hannum, Guide to International Human Rights Practice, p. 65; Lauterpacht, International Law, chapter 11; Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, chapter 9, and T. Buergenthal and J. V. Torney, International Human Rights and International Education, Washington, DC, 1976, pp. 75 ff. See also UN Action, p. 20, and H. Tolley, 'The Concealed Crack in the Citadel', 6 HRQ, 1984, p. 420. A Commission on the Status of Women was also created: see UN Action, p. 15, and below, p. 322.

[207] See ECOSOC resolutions 6 (I), 1946; 9 (II), 1946; 845 (XXXII), 1961; 1147 (XLI), 1966 and 1979/36, 1979.

[208] See e.g. Report of the First Session of the Commission, E/259, para. 22.

[209] See Tolley, 'Concealed Crack', pp. 421 ff., and ECOSOC resolution 728F.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

example, Afghanistan, Cuba, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Guatemala, Iran, Sudan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Iraq. Special Rapporteurs were also appointed to deal with particular thematic concerns such as summary executions, torture, mercenaries, religious intolerance and the sale of children. In an attempt to provide some co-ordination, the first meeting of special rapporteurs and other mechanisms of the special procedures of the Commission took place in 1994.[210]

A series of informal working groups were created to prepare drafts of international instruments, such as the Declaration on Religious Intolerance, the Convention against Torture and instruments on minority rights and the rights of the child.[211] The Commission also established a Group of Three pursuant to article IX of the Apartheid Convention to consider states' reports under that Convention. In 1970 a new procedure for dealing with human rights complaints was introduced in ECOSOC resolution 1503 (XLVIII).[212] By virtue of this resolution as modified in 2000,[213] the Sub-Commission appointed annually a Working Group on Communications to meet to consider communications received and to pass on to the Sub-Commission those that appeared to reveal 'a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested violations of human rights'. These were examined by the Working Group on Situations of the Sub-Commission which then determined whether or not to refer particular situations to the Commission.[214] Those so transmitted were examined in two separate closed meetings by the Commission, which then decided whether or not to take further action, such as appointing an independent expert or discussing the matter under the resolution 1235 public procedure. The procedure, which was confidential until the final stage, did not fulfil initial high expectations. The confidentiality requirement and the highly political nature of the Commission itself combined to frustrate hopes that had been raised.[215]

[210] See E/CN.4/1995/5. See also the report of the meeting of special rapporteurs/representatives/experts and chairpersons of working groups of the special procedures of the Commission on Human Rights and of the advisory services programme, May 1995, E/CN.4/1996/50.

[211] See e.g. UN Action, pp. 20–3.

[212] See e.g. P. Alston, 'The Commission on Human Rights' in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, pp. 126, 145 ff., and M. Bossuyt, 'The Development of Special Procedures of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights', 6 HRLJ, 1985, p. 179.

[213] ECOSOC resolution 2000/3.

[214] See also Sub-Committee resolution 1 (XXIV), 1971.

[215] See e.g. T. Van Boven, 'Human Rights Fora at the United Nations' in International Human Rights Law and Practice (ed. J. C. Tuttle), Philadelphia, 1978, p. 83; H. Möller, 'Petitioning the United Nations', 1 Universal Human Rights, 1979, p. 57; N. Rodley, 'Monitoring

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Despite good work in the field of standard-setting and in drawing attention to abuses of human rights, albeit on rather less than a universalist basis, the Commission began to attract an increasing level of criticism, mainly concerning political selectivity and the failure to review objectively the situation in particular countries.[216] The High Level Panel on Threats, Challenge and Change convened by the United Nations Secretary-General concluded in its Report of 2004 that, 'In recent years, the Commission's capacity to perform these tasks has been undermined by eroding credibility and professionalism.'[217] As a result, the Human Rights Council was created to replace the Commission by General Assembly resolution 60/251 on 3 April 2006.

The Human Rights Council

The Council was established with a higher status in the UN hierarchy as a subsidiary organ of the General Assembly with forty-seven members,[218] elected by a majority of members of the Assembly for three years for up to two consecutive terms. The Commission's special procedures function was retained, although all functions and responsibilities of the Commission assumed by the Council are subject to a review aimed at their rationalisation and improvement. A new universal periodic review mechanism by which the human rights record of all countries is to be examined was also established. This was intended as a partial response to the criticisms of Human Rights by the UN System and Non-governmental Organisations' in Kommers and Loescher, Human Rights and American Foreign Policy, p. 157, and Tolley, 'Concealed Crack', pp. 429 ff. Note that the Commission chairman began the practice of announcing the names of the countries subject to complaints under resolution 1503, although no further details were disclosed: see e.g. E/CN.4/1984/77, p. 151, naming Albania, Argentina, Benin, Haiti, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan, Paraguay, the Philippines, Turkey and Uruguay.

[216] See e.g. the Amnesty International Report, 'Meeting the Challenge', AI Index, IOR 40/008/2005.

[217] www.un.org/secureworld/report3.pdf, at para. 283. See also the Secretary-General's Report, 'In Larger Freedom: Towards Development, Security and Human Rights for All', A/59/2005, at para. 182. It was noted that the Commission had been 'undermined by the politicisation of its sessions and the selectivity of its work', A/59/2005/Add.1, para. 2. Note also, for example, the inability of the Commission in 1990 even to discuss draft resolutions relating to China and Iraq: E. Zoller, '46th Session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights', 8(2) NQHR, 1990, pp. 140, 142. Note also the election of Libya to chair the Commission in 2003.

[218] Distributed regionally with thirteen seats for the African group; thirteen seats for the Asian group; six seats for the Eastern European group; eight seats for the Latin American and Caribbean group and seven seats for the Western European and Other group.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the Commission's selectivity.[219] The Council adopted resolution 5/1 on 18 June 2007 entitled 'United Nations Human Rights Council: Institution-Building', which ranged over a wide area and established the details of the universal periodic review mechanism. The principles laid down for this mechanism include the universality of human rights, universal coverage and equal treatment of all states and the conduct of the review in an objective, transparent, non-selective, constructive, non-confrontational and non-politicised manner. This resolution also laid down details for the conduct and review of the special procedures, provided for the creation of the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee, composed of eighteen experts serving in their personal capacity, intended to function as a think-tank for the Council and work at its direction, and provided for the establishment of a confidential complaints procedure based upon the mechanism created by ECOSOC resolution 1503 (1970).[220]

Expert bodies established by UN organs

The Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights[221]

The Sub-Commission, initially entitled the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, was established by the Commission in 1947 with wide terms of reference.[222] It came to an end in 2006 as a consequence of General Assembly resolution 60/251, which established the Human Rights Council. The Sub-Commission was composed of twenty-six members elected by the Commission on the basis of nominations of experts made by the UN member states and it [219] See e.g. F. J. Hampson, 'An Overview of the Reform of the UN Human Rights Machinery', 7 Human Rights Law Review, 2007, p. 7.

[220] The Council also adopted at its first session in June 2006 the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearances and the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. A Code of Conduct for Special Procedures Mandate-holders was adopted at the fifth session of the Council.

[221] See e.g. A. Eide, 'The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities' in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 211; Tolley, 'Concealed Crack', pp. 437 ff.; J. Gardeniers, H. Hannum and C. Kruger, 'The UN Sub-Committee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities: Recent Developments', 4 HRQ, 1982, p. 353, and L. Garber and C. O'Conner, 'The 1984 UN Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities', 79 AJIL, 1985, p. 168. See also UN Action, pp. 23–4.

[222] See e.g. UN Action, p. 23. See also resolutions E/259, 1947; E/1371, 1949, and 17 (XXXVII), 1981.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

was renamed the Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in 1999.[223] Members served in their individual capacity for four-year terms[224] and the composition reflected an agreed geographical pattern.[225] The Sub-Commission produced a variety of studies by rapporteurs[226] and established a number of subsidiary bodies. The Working Group on Communications functioned within the framework of the resolution 1503 procedure, while the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery[227] and the Working Group on the Rights of Indigenous Populations[228] prepared material within the areas of their concern.[229] The Sub-Commission from 1987 produced an annual report listing all states that had proclaimed, extended or ended a state of emergency.[230]

The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights[231]

The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights was adopted in 1966 and entered into force in 1976. Article 2 provides that each state party undertakes to take steps to the maximum of its available resources 'with a view to achieving progressively the full realisation of the rights recognised in the present Covenant'. In other words, an evolving programme is envisaged depending upon the goodwill and resources of states rather than an immediate binding legal obligation with regard to the rights in question. The rights included range from self-determination (article 1), the right to work (articles 6 and 7), the right to social security (article 9), adequate standard of living (article 11) and education [223] See E/1999/INF/2/Add.2.

[224] See ECOSOC resolution 1986/35 with effect from 1988. Before this, the term was for three years and originally for two years.

[225] See ECOSOC resolution 1334 (XLIV), 1968, and decision 1978/21, 1978.

[226] See e.g. the Capotorti Study, above, footnote 165, and the Ruhashyankiko Study, above, footnote 90. See also the Daes Study on the Individual's Duties to the Community, E/CN.4/Sub.2/432/Rev.2, 1983 and the Questiaux Study on States of Emergency, E/CN.4/Sub.2/1982/15, 1982.

[227] Resolution 11 (XXVII), 1974, established the Working Group on Slavery. Its name was changed in 1988: see resolution 1988/42. See K. Zoglin, 'United Nations Action Against Slavery: A Critical Evaluation', 8 HRQ, 1986, p. 306.

[228] See resolution 2 (XXXIV), 1981. See also E/CN.4/Sub.2/1982/33, and above, p. 298.

[229] See e.g. the S. Chernichenko and W. Treat Study on The Administration of Justice and the Human Rights of Detainees: The Right to a Fair Trial, E/CN.4/Sub.2/1994/24, 1994.

[230] See e.g. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1987/19/Rev.1; E/CN.4/Sub.2/1991/28 and E/CN.4/Sub.2/1995/20 and Corr. 1.

[231] See e.g. Craven, Covenant.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

(article 13) to the right to take part in cultural life and enjoy the benefits of scientific progress and its applications (article 15).

Under the Covenant itself, states parties were obliged to send periodic reports to ECOSOC.[232] In 1978, a Sessional Working Group was set up, consisting of fifteen members elected by ECOSOC from amongst states parties for three-year renewable terms. The Group met annually and reported to the Council. It was not a success, however, and in 1985 it was decided to establish a new committee of eighteen members, this time composed of independent experts.[233] Accordingly in 1987 the new Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights commenced operation.[234] But it is to be especially noted that unlike, for example, the Racial Discrimination Committee, the Human Rights Committee and the Torture Committee, the Economic Committee is not autonomous and it is responsible not to the states parties but to a main organ of the United Nations. As will be seen by comparison with the other bodies, the Economic Committee has at its disposal only relatively weak means of implementation.

The implementation of this Covenant faces particular difficulties in view of the perceived vagueness of many of the principles contained therein, the relative lack of legal texts and judicial decisions, and the ambivalence of many states in dealing with economic, social and cultural rights. In addition, problems of obtaining relevant and precise information have loomed large, not least in the light of the fact that comparatively few non-governmental organisations focus upon this area.[235]

The Committee initially met annually in Geneva for three-week sessions, though it now meets twice per year. Its primary task lies in [232] See articles 16–22 of the Covenant, and UN Chronicle, July 1982, pp. 68–70. See generally on implementation B. S. Ramcharan, 'Implementing the International Covenants on Human Rights' in Ramcharan, Human Rights: Thirty Years After the Universal Declaration, p. 159; P. Alston, 'Out of the Abyss: The Challenge Confronting the New UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights', 9 HRQ, 1987, p. 332; P. Alston and G. Quinn, 'The Nature and Scope of States Parties' Obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights', 9 HRQ, 1987, p. 156; P. Alston, 'The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights' in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 473; B. Simma, 'The Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights' in The Implementation of Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ed. F. Matscher), Kehl am Rhein, 1991, p. 75, and S. Leckie, 'The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights' in Alston and Crawford, Future, chapter 6.

[233] See ECOSOC resolution 1985/17.

[234] See P. Alston and B. Simma, 'First Session of the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights', 81 AJIL, 1987, p. 747, and 'Second Session of the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights', 82 AJIL, 1988, p. 603.

[235] See Alston, 'The Economic Rights Committee', p. 474.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

examining states' reports, drawing upon a list of questions prepared by its pre-sessional working group. The problem of overdue reports from states parties applies here as it does with regard to other human rights implementation committees. The Economic Rights Committee adopted a decision at its sixth session, whereby it established a procedure allowing for the consideration of the situation of particular states where those states had not produced reports for a long time, thus creating a rather valuable means of exerting pressure upon recalcitrant states parties.[236] Additional information may also be requested from states parties where this is felt necessary.[237] The Committee also prepares 'General Comments', the second of which on international technical assistance measures was adopted at its fourth session in 1990.[238] The third general comment, adopted in 1991, is of particular interest and underlines that although the Covenant itself appears promotional and aspirational, nevertheless certain obligations of immediate effect are imposed upon states parties. These include the non-discrimination provisions and the undertaking to take steps which should be taken within a reasonably short time after the Covenant has entered into force for the state concerned and which should be 'deliberate, concrete and targeted as clearly as possible towards meeting the obligations recognised in the Covenant'. The Committee also emphasised that international co-operation for development, and thus for the realisation of economic, social and cultural rights, was an obligation for all states.[239] General Comment 4, adopted in 1991, discussed the right to adequate housing,[240] while General Comment 5, adopted in 1994, dealt with the rights of persons with disabilities.[241] General Comment 6, adopted in 1995, concerned the economic, social and cultural rights of older persons,[242] General Comment 16, adopted in 2005, concerned the equal treatment of men and women with regard to the enjoyment of all economic, social and cultural rights,[243] while General Comments 18 and 19, adopted in 2005 and 2007 respectively, concerned the right to work and the right to social security. The Committee also holds general discussions on particular [236] See e.g. E/C.12/1994/20, p. 18. [237] Ibid., pp. 16–18.

[238] See HRI/GEN/Rev.1, p. 45. [239] Ibid., p. 48. [240] Ibid., p. 53.
[241] E/1995/22, p. 99. On disabilities and human rights, see also the final report of Leandro Despouy, Special Rapporteur on Human Rights and Disability, of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, E/CN.4/Sub.2/1991/31; General Assembly resolution 3447 (XXX) of 9 December 1975 adopting the Declaration of the Rights of Disabled Persons, and General Assembly resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982 adopting the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, A/37/351/Add.1 and Corr. 1, chapter VIII.
[242] E/C.12/1995/16, adapted in 1995. [243] E/C.12/2005/4.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

rights in the form of a 'day of general discussion'.[244] It cannot hear individual petitions, nor has it an inter-state complaints competence.[245]

Expert bodies established under particular treaties[246]

A number of expert committees have been established under particular treaties. They are not subsidiary organs of the UN, but autonomous, although in practice they are closely connected with it, being serviced, for example, by the UN Secretariat through the UN Centre for Human Rights in Geneva.[247] These committees are termed 'UN Treaty Organs'.

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination[248]

Under Part II of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, 1965, a Committee of eighteen experts was established [244] At the ninth session, for example, in the autumn of 1993, the Committee discussed the right to health, E/1994/23, p. 56, while at the tenth session in May 1994 the role of social safety-nets as a means of protecting economic, social and cultural rights was discussed: see E/1995/22, p. 70. See also generally C. Dommen, 'Building from a Solid Basis: The Fourth Session of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights', 8 NQHR, 1990, p. 199, and C. Dommen and M. C. Craven, 'Making Way for Substance: The Fifth Session of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights', 9 NQHR, 1991, p. 93.

[245] Note, however, that at its seventh session in 1992, the Committee formally proposed that an optional protocol providing for some kind of petition procedure be drafted and adopted: see E/1993/22, pp. 87 ff., and Craven, Covenant, pp. 98 ff. See also E/C.12/1994/12 and E/C.12/1995/SR.50, December 1995. A working group was established in 2003 to achieve this and the matter is still under consideration: see e.g. A/HRC/8/WG.4/3, 2008.

[246] See e.g. Alston and Crawford, Future, and S. Lewis-Anthony and M. Scheinin, 'Treaty-Based Procedures for Making Human Rights Complaints Within the UN System' in Hannum, Guide to International Human Rights Practice, p. 43. See also M. O'Flaherty, Human Rights and the UN: Practice Before the Treaty Bodies, 2nd edn, The Hague, 2002.

[247] This link with the Secretariat has been termed ambiguous, particularly in the light of the difficulties in performing the two functions carried out by the Secretariat (Charter-based political activities and expert activities): see e.g. T. Opsahl, 'The Human Rights Committee' in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, pp. 367, 388.

[248] See e.g. M. Banton, 'Decision-Taking in the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination' in Alston and Crawford, Future, p. 55; K. J. Partsch, 'The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination' in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 339; T. Meron, Human Rights Law-Making in the United Nations, Oxford, 1986, chapter 1; K. Das, 'The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination' in The International Dimension of Human Rights (eds. K. Vasak and P. Alston), Paris, 1982, p. 307; Lerner, UN Convention and 'Curbing Racial Discrimination – Fifteen Years CERD', 13 Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, 1983, p. 170; M. R. Burrowes, 'Implementing the UN Racial Convention – Some Procedural Aspects', 7 Australian YIL, p. 236, and T. Buergenthal, 'Implementing the UN Racial Convention', 12 Texas International Law Journal, 1977, p. 187.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

consisting of persons serving in their personal capacity and elected by the states parties to the Convention.[249] States parties undertook to submit reports every two years regarding measures adopted to give effect to the provisions of the Convention to the Committee, which itself would report annually through the UN Secretary-General to the General Assembly. The Committee may make suggestions and general recommendations based on the examination of the reports and information received from the states parties, which are reported to the General Assembly together with any comments from states parties.[250] The Committee is also able to operate early warning measures and urgent procedures. Early warning measures are directed at preventing existing problems from escalating into conflicts, while urgent procedures are to respond to problems requiring immediate attention to prevent or limit the scale or number of serious violations of the Convention. Decisions, statements or resolutions may be adopted. Such action has been taken in relation to more than twenty states parties. The Committee has, for example, conducted two field visits in connection with the procedure and has drawn the attention of the Secretary-General, the Security Council or other relevant bodies to issues in relation to six states parties. For example, in 1993, the Committee, concerned at events in the former Yugoslavia, sought additional information on the implementation of the Convention as a matter of urgency.[251] This information was provided during the autumn of 1994 and the spring of 1995.[252]

The Committee has also established a procedure to deal with states whose reports are most overdue. Under this procedure, the Committee proceeds to examine the situation in the state party concerned on the basis of the last report submitted.[253] At its forty-ninth session, the Committee further decided that states parties whose initial reports were excessively overdue by five years or more would also be scheduled for a review of implementation of the provisions of the Convention. In the absence of an initial report, the Committee considers all information submitted by the state party to other organs of the United Nations or, in the absence of such material, reports and information prepared by organs of the United [249] Rules of Procedure have been adopted, see CERD/C/35/Rev. 3 (1986), and are revised from time to time: see, for example, A/48/18, p. 137.

[250] Articles 8 and 9 of the Convention.

[251] A/48/18, paras. 496–506.

[252] See e.g. CERD/C/248/Add.1 (Federal Republic of Yugoslavia); CERD/C/249/Add.1 (Croatia) and CERD/C/247/Add.1 (Bosnia and Herzegovina). See also CERD/C/65/DEC.1 (Darfur, 2004); CERD/C/66/DAR/Dec.2 (Darfur, 2005); CERD/C/DEC/1 (USA, 2006); and CERD/C/DEC/SUR/5 (Suriname, 2006).

[253] See e.g. A/48/18, p. 20.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Nations. In practice the Committee also considers relevant information from other sources, including from non-governmental organisations, whether it is an initial or a periodic report that is seriously overdue.[254]

Under article 11, one state party may bring a complaint against another state party and the Committee will seek to resolve the complaint. Should the matter not be so settled, either party may refer it back to the Committee and by article 12 an ad hoc Conciliation Commission may be established, which will report back to the Committee with any recommendation thought proper for the amicable solution of the dispute.[255] In addition to hearing states' reports and inter-state complaints, the Committee may also hear individual petitions under the article 14 procedure. This, however, is subject to the state complained of having made a declaration recognising the competence of the Committee to receive and consider such communications. If such a declaration has not been notified by a state, therefore, the Committee has no authority to hear a petition against the state.[256] Under this procedure, consideration of communications is confidential and the Committee may be assisted by a five-person working group making recommendations to the full Committee. The Committee began hearing individual communications in 1984 and a number of important cases have now been completed.[257]

The Committee regularly meets twice a year and has interpreted articles of the Convention, discussed reports submitted to it, adopted decisions[258] and general recommendations,[259] obtained further information from states parties and co-operated closely with the International Labour Organisation and UNESCO. Many states have enacted legislation as a consequence of the work of the Committee and its record of impartiality is very good.[260] The Committee also receives copies of petitions and [254] See e.g. A/57/18, p. 99. [255] Article 13.

[256] The provision entered into force on 31 December 1982 upon the tenth declaration.

[257] See e.g. the Report of the Committee for its forty-eighth session, A/48/18, 1994, pp. 105 and 130, and for the sixtieth and sixty-first sessions, A/57/18, p. 128. Note, for example, the case of Durmic v. Serbia and Montenegro concerning discrimination against Roma in Serbia, CERD/C/68/D/29/2003, 2006.

[258] For example, the decision adopted on 19 March 1993 requesting the governments of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and Croatia to submit further information concerning implementation of the Convention: see A/48/18, p. 112.

[259] See, for example, General Recommendation XII (42) encouraging successor states to declare that 'they continue to be bound' by the obligations of the Convention if predecessor states were parties to it; General Recommendation XIV (42) concerning non-discrimination, A/48/18, pp. 113 ff. and General Recommendation XXIX concerning discrimination based upon descent, A/57/18, p. 111.

[260] See e.g. Lerner, UN Convention.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

reports sent to UN bodies dealing with trust and non-self-governing territories in the general area of Convention matters and may make comments upon them.[261] The general article 9 reporting system appears to work well, with large numbers of reports submitted and examined, but some states have proved tardy in fulfilling their obligations.[262] The Committee has published guidelines for states parties as to the structure of their reports.[263]

The Committee, in order to speed up consideration of states' reports, has instituted the practice of appointing country rapporteurs, whose function it is to prepare analyses of reports of states parties.[264] The Committee has also called for additional technical assistance to be provided by the UN to help in the reporting process, while it has expressed serious concern that financial difficulties are beginning to affect its functioning.[265]

The Human Rights Committee[266]

The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights was adopted in 1966 and entered into force in 1976.[267] By article 2, all states parties undertake to respect and to ensure to all individuals within their territory and subject to their jurisdiction the rights recognised in the Covenant. These rights are clearly intended as binding obligations. They include the right of peoples to self-determination (article 1), the right to life (article 6), [261] Article 15. See e.g. A/48/18, p. 107.

[262] See e.g. A/38/18, pp. 14–24. Note, for example, that by late 1983 fifteen reminders had been sent to Swaziland requesting it to submit its fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh overdue periodic reports, ibid., p. 21. See also A/44/18, pp. 10–16.

[263] See CERD/C/70/Rev.1, 6 December 1983.

[264] See e.g. A/44/18, 1990, p. 7 and A/48/18, 1994, p. 149.

[265] A/44/18, p. 91.

[266] See e.g. Joseph et al., International Covenant; Nowak, UN Covenant; Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, pp. 844 ff.; McGoldrick, Human Rights Committee; Opsahl, 'Human Rights Committee', p. 367; D. Fischer, 'Reporting under the Convention on Civil and Political Rights: The First Five Years of the Human Rights Committee', 76 AJIL, 1982, p. 142; Ramcharan, 'Implementing the International Covenants'; E. Schwelb, 'The International Measures of Implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and of the Optional Protocol', 12 Texas International Law Review, 1977, p. 141; M. Nowak, 'The Effectiveness of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights – Stock-taking after the First Eleven Sessions of the UN Human Rights Committee', 2 HRLJ, 1981, p. 168 and 5 HRLJ, 1984, p. 199. See also M. Bossuyt, Guide to the Travaux Préparatoires of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, The Hague, 1987; F. Jhabvala, 'The Practice of the Covenant's Human Rights Committee, 1976–82: Review of State Party Reports', 6 HRQ, 1984, p. 81, and P. R. Ghandhi, 'The Human Rights Committee and the Right of Individual Communication', 57 BYIL, 1986, p. 201.

[267] See Rehman, International Human Rights Law, p. 83.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

prohibitions on torture and slavery (articles 7 and 8), the right to liberty and security of the person (article 9), due process (article 14), freedom of thought, conscience and religion (article 18), freedom of association (article 22) and the rights of persons belonging to minorities to enjoy their own culture (article 27).

A Human Rights Committee was established under Part IV of the Covenant. It consists of eighteen independent and expert members, elected by the states parties to the Covenant for four-year terms, with consideration given to the need for equitable geographical distribution and representation of the different forms of civilisation and of the principal legal systems.[268] The Committee meets three times a year (in Geneva and New York) and operates by way of consensus.[269] The Covenant is primarily implemented by means of a reporting system, whereby states parties provide information on the measures adopted to give effect to the rights recognised in the Covenant. Initial reports are made within one year of the entry into force of the Covenant for the state in question and general guidelines have been issued.[270] The Committee has decided that subsequent reports would be required every five years,[271] and the first of the second periodic reports became due in 1983. The reports are discussed by the Committee with representatives of the state concerned (following upon the precedent established by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination).[272] The practice used to be that Committee members would informally receive information from sources other than the reporting state provided the source is not publicly identified. This enabled the Committee to be more effective than would otherwise have been the case.[273] However, no doubt due to the ending of Soviet control in Eastern Europe and the demise of the Soviet Union, there appears to be no [268] See articles 28–32 of the Covenant.

[269] See e.g. Nowak, 'Effectiveness', p. 169, 1981 3 HRLJ, 1982, p. 209 and 1984, p. 202. See also A/36/40, annex VII, Introduction; CCPR/C/21/Rev.1 and A/44/40, p. 173.

[270] See article 40 and CCPR/C/5. Supplementary reports may be requested: see Rule 70(2) of the provisional rules of procedure, CCPR/C/3/Rev.1. See now the Rules of Procedure 2001, CCPR/C/3/Rev.6 and the revised consolidated guidelines 2001, CCPR/C/66/GUI/Rev.2.

[271] See CCPR/C/18; CCPR/C/19 and CCPR/C/19/Rev.1. See also CCPR/C/20 regarding guidelines. Several states have been lax about producing reports, e.g. Zaire and the Dominican Republic, while the initial report of Guinea was so short as to be held by the Committee as not providing sufficient information: see Nowak, 'Effectiveness', 1984, p. 200.

[272] See Buergenthal, 'Implementing', pp. 199–201, and Fischer, 'Reporting', p. 145.

[273] Fischer, 'Reporting', pp. 146–7.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

problem now about acknowledging publicly the receipt of information from named non-governmental organisations.[274] The Committee may also seek additional information from the state concerned. For example, in October 1992, the Committee adopted a decision requesting the governments of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina to submit a short report concerning measures to prevent inter alia ethnic cleansing and arbitrary killings.[275] Such reports were forthcoming and were discussed with the state representatives concerned and comments adopted. The Committee thereafter adopted an amendment to its rules of procedure permitting it to call for reports at any time deemed appropriate.[276] The Committee has also noted that the peoples within a territory of a former state party to the Covenant remain entitled to the guarantees of the Covenant.[277] Where states parties have failed to report over several reporting cycles, or request a postponement of their scheduled appearance before the Committee at short notice, the Committee may continue to examine the situation in the particular state on the basis of material available to it.[278]

Under article 40(4), the Committee is empowered to make such 'general comments as it may deem appropriate'. After some discussion, a consensus was adopted in 1980, which permitted such comments provided that they promoted co-operation between states in the implementation of the Covenant, summarised the experience of the Committee in examining states' reports and drew the attention of states parties to matters relating to the improvement of the reporting procedure and the implementation of the Covenant. The aim of the Committee was to engage in a constructive dialogue with each reporting state, and the comments would be non-country-specific.[279] However, in 1992, the Committee decided that at the end of the consideration of each state party's report, specific comments would be adopted referring to the country in question and such comments [274] Such documents may now be officially distributed, rather than being informally made available to Committee members individually: see McGoldrick, Human Rights Committee, p. liii.

[275] CCPR/C/SR/1178/Add.1.

[276] New Rule 66(2), see CCPR/C/SR/1205/Add.1. See also S. Joseph, 'New Procedures Concerning the Human Rights Committee's Examination of State Reports', 13 NQHR, 1995, p. 5.

[277] See, with regard to former Yugoslavia, CCPR/C/SR.1178/Add.1, pp. 2–3 and CCPR/C/79/Add.14–16. See, with regard to the successor states of the USSR, CCPR/C/79/Add.38 (Azerbaijan). See also I. Boerefijn, 'Towards a Strong System of Supervision', 17 HRQ, 1995, p. 766.

[278] See e.g. A/56/40, vol. I, p. 25.

[279] CCPR/C/18.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

would express both the satisfaction and the concerns of the Committee as appropriate.[280] These specific comments are in a common format and refer to 'positive aspects' of the report and 'principal subjects for concern', as well as 'suggestions and recommendations'.[281] The Committee has also adopted the practice, where a due report has not been forthcoming, of considering the measures taken by the state party in question to give effect to rights in the Covenant in the absence of a report but in the presence of representatives of the state and of adopting provisional concluding observations.[282]

The Committee has also adopted a variety of General Comments.[283] These comments are generally non-controversial. One interesting comment on article 6 (the right to life), however, emphasised the Committee's view that 'the designing, testing, manufacture, possession and development of nuclear weapons are among the greatest threats to the right to life', and that the 'production, testing, possession and deployment and use of nuclear weapons should be prohibited and recognised as crimes against humanity'.[284]

In April 1989, the Committee adopted a General Comment on the rights of the child, as the process of adopting the Convention on the Rights of the Child neared its climax. It noted the importance of economic, social and cultural measures, such as the need to reduce infant mortality and prevent exploitation. Freedom of expression was referred to, as was [280] See A/47/40, p. 4.

[281] See, for example, the comments concerning Colombia in September 1992, CCPR/C/79/Add.2; Guinea in April 1993, CCPR/C/79/Add.20; Norway in November 1993, CCPR/C/79/Add.27; Morocco in November 1994, CCPR/C/79/Add.44; the Russian Federation in July 1995, CCPR/C/79/Add.54; Estonia in November 1995, CCPR/C/79/Add.59 and the United Kingdom in July 1995, CCPR/C/79/Add.55 and, relating to Hong Kong, in November 1995, CCPR/C/79/Add.57. Note that in September 1995, Mexico responded to the Committee's Concluding Comments upon its report by issuing Observations, CCPR/C/108.

[282] See Rule 70 of its Rules of Procedure 2005. The procedures are described, for example, in the 2005–6 Report of the Committee, A/61/40, paras. 49 ff. (2006)

[283] See e.g. T. Opsahl, 'The General Comments of the Human Rights Committee' in Festschrift für Karl Josef Partsch zum 75, Berlin, 1989, p. 273.

[284] CCPR/C/21/Add.4, 14 November 1984. Note that the International Court of Justice gave an Advisory Opinion on 8 July 1996 at the request of the General Assembly of the UN concerning the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, in which it was noted that the right not to be arbitrarily deprived of one's life applied also in hostilities. Whether a particular loss of life was arbitrary within the terms of article 6 would depend on the situation and would be decided by reference to the law applicable in armed conflict and not deduced from the terms of the Covenant itself, ICJ Reports, 1996, para. 25; 110 ILR, pp. 163, 190.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the requirement that children be protected against discrimination on grounds such as race, sex, religion, national or social origin, property or birth. Responsibility for guaranteeing the necessary protection lies, it was stressed, with the family, society and the state, although it is primarily incumbent upon the family. Special attention needed to be paid to the right of every child to acquire a nationality.[285]

In November 1989, an important General Comment was adopted on non-discrimination. Discrimination was to be understood to imply for the purposes of the Covenant:

> any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference which is based on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status, and which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by all persons, on an equal footing, of all rights and freedoms.[286]

Identical treatment in every instance was not, however, demanded. The death sentence could not, under article 6(5) of the Covenant, be imposed on persons under the age of eighteen or upon pregnant women. It was also noted that the principle of equality sometimes requires states parties to take affirmative action in order to diminish or eliminate conditions which cause or help to perpetuate discrimination prohibited by the Covenant. In addition, it was pointed out that not every differentiation constituted discrimination, if the criteria for such differentiation were reasonable and objective and if the aim was to achieve a purpose which was legitimate under the Covenant.[287]

Important General Comments on Minorities[288] and Reservations[289] were adopted in 1994. In 1997, the Committee noted in General Comment 26 that the rights in the Covenant belonged to the people living in the territory of the state party concerned and that international law did not permit a state which had ratified or acceded or succeeded to the Covenant to denounce it or withdraw from it,[290] while in General Comment 28 the Committee pointed out that the rights which persons belonging to minorities enjoyed under article 27 of the Covenant in respect of their language, culture and religion did not authorise any state, group or person [285] A/44/40, pp. 173–5. [286] CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.1, p. 3.

[287] Ibid., p. 4. See also above, p. 286.
[288] HRI/GEN/1/Rev.1, 1995. See further above, p. 293
[289] CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.6. See further below, p. 913. [290] A/53/40, annex VII.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

to violate the right to the equal enjoyment by women of any Covenant rights, including the right to equal protection of the law.[291]

Under article 41 of the Covenant, states parties may recognise the competence of the Committee to hear inter-state complaints. Both the complainant and the object state must have made such declarations. The Committee will seek to resolve the issue and, if it is not successful, it may under article 42 appoint, with the consent of the parties, an ad hoc Conciliation Commission.[292]

The powers of the Human Rights Committee were extended by Optional Protocol I to the Civil and Political Rights Covenant with regard to ratifying states to include the competence to receive and consider individual communications alleging violations of the Covenant by a state party to the Protocol.[293] The individual must have exhausted all available domestic remedies (unless unreasonably prolonged) and the same matter must not be in the process of examination under another international procedure.[294] The procedure under the Optional Protocol is divided into several stages. The gathering of basic information is done by the Secretary-General and laid before the Working Group on Communications of the Committee, which recommends whether, for example, further information is required from the applicant or the relevant state party and whether the communication should be declared inadmissible. The procedure before the Committee itself is divided into an admissibility and a merits stage. Interim decisions may be made by the Committee and ultimately a 'final view' communicated to the parties.[295]

[291] CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.10, 2000. General Comment 29 adopted in 2001 dealt with the question of non-derogable provisions, see CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.11. Note also General Comment 32 concerning the right to equality before courts and tribunals and to a fair trial, CCPR/C/GC/32, 2007.

[292] The inter-state procedure has not been used to date.

[293] Signed in 1966 and in force as from 23 March 1976. See e.g. H. Steiner, 'Individual Claims in a World of Massive Violations: What Role for the Human Rights Committee?' in Alston and Crawford, Future, p. 15; P. R. Ghandi, The Human Rights Committee and the Right of Individual Communication: Law and Practice, Aldershot, 1998; A. de Zayas, H. Möller and T. Opsahl, 'Application of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights under the Optional Protocol by the Human Rights Committee', 28 German YIL, 1985, p. 9, and Selected Decisions of the Human Rights Committee under the Optional Protocol, New York, vol. I, 1985 and vol. II, 1990. Two states (Jamaica and Trinidad and Tobago) have denounced the Protocol.

[294] Article 5, Optional Protocol.

[295] See Nowak, 'Effectiveness', 1980, pp. 153 ff., and 1981 Report of Human Rights Committee, A/36/40, pp. 85–91.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

An increasing workload, however, began to cause difficulties as the number of parties to the Optional Protocol increased. By mid-2006, 1,490 communications had been registered. Of these, 547 had been the subject of a final view (of which 429 concluded that a violation had occurred), 449 were declared inadmissible and 218 were discontinued or withdrawn, leaving 276 yet to be concluded.[296] In order to deal with the growth in applications, the Committee decided at its thirty-fifth session to appoint a Special Rapporteur to process new communications as they were received (i.e. between sessions of the Committee), and this included requesting the state or individual concerned to provide additional written information or observations relevant to the question of the admissibility of the communication.[297] The Committee has also authorised its five-member Working Group on Communications to adopt a decision declaring a communication admissible, providing there is unanimity.[298] The Committee may also adopt interim measures of protection under Rule 92 of its Rules of Procedure 2005. This has been used primarily in connection with cases submitted by or on behalf of persons sentenced to death and awaiting execution.[299] Such a request was made, for example, to Trinidad and Tobago in the Ashby case pending examination of the communication, but to no avail. After the individual was executed, the Committee adopted a decision expressing its indignation at the failure of the state party to comply with the request for interim measures and deciding to continue consideration of the case.[300] Where the state concerned has disregarded the Committee's decisions under Rule 92, the Committee has found that the state party has violated its obligations under the Optional Protocol.[301]

The Committee, however, is not a court with the power of binding decision on the merits of cases. Indeed, in instances of non-compliance with its final views, the Optional Protocol does not provide for an enforcement mechanism, nor indeed for sanctions, although follow-up techniques are being developed in order to address such problems.[302]

[296] Report of the Committee for 2005–6, A/61/40, para. 89 (2006).

[297] A/44/40, pp. 139–40. See also Rule 91 of the amended Rules of Procedure, ibid., p. 180.

[298] Ibid., p. 140.

[299] See, in particular, Canepa v. Canada, A/52/40, vol. II, annex VI, sect. K. See also Ruzmetov v. Uzbekistan, A/61/40, vol. II, p. 31 (2006) and Boucherf v. Algeria, ibid., p. 312.

[300] A/49/40, pp. 70–1.

[301] See Piandiong et al. v. The Philippines, A/54/40, para. 420(b).

[302] Note that in October 1990, the Committee appointed a Special Rapporteur to follow up cases, CCPR/C/SR.1002, p. 8. See Rule 101 of the Rules of Procedure 2005. In 1994, the Committee decided that every form of publicity would be given to follow-up activities, including separate sections in annual reports, the issuing of annual press communiqués and the institution of such practices in a new rule of procedure (Rule 99)

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

A variety of interesting decisions have so far been rendered. The first group of cases concerned complaints against Uruguay, in which the Committee found violations by that state of rights recognised in the Covenant.[303] In the Lovelace case,[304] the Committee found Canada in breach of article 27 of the Covenant protecting the rights of minorities since its law provided that an Indian woman, whose marriage to a non-Indian had broken down, was not permitted to return to her home on an Indian reservation. In the Mauritian Women case[305] a breach of Covenant rights was upheld where the foreign husbands of Mauritian women were liable to deportation whereas the foreign wives of Mauritian men would not have been.

The Committee has also held that the Covenant's obligations cover the decisions of diplomatic authorities of a state party regarding citizens living abroad.[306] In the Robinson case,[307] the Committee considered whether a state was under an obligation itself to make provision for effective representation by counsel in a case concerning a capital offence, in circumstances where the counsel appointed by the author of the communication declines to appear. The Committee emphasised that it was axiomatic that legal assistance be available in capital cases and decided that the absence of counsel constituted unfair trial.

The Committee has dealt with the death penalty issue in several cases[308] and has noted, for example, that such a sentence may only be imposed in accordance with due process rights.[309] The Committee has also taken the view that where the extradition of a person facing the death penalty may expose the person to violation of due process rights in the receiving state, the extraditing state may be in violation of the Covenant.[310] emphasising that follow-up activities were not confidential, A/49/40, pp. 84–6. See also A/56/40, vol. I, p. 131.

303 These cases are reported in 1 HRLJ, 1980, pp. 209 ff. See, for other cases, 2 HRLJ, 1981, pp. 130 ff.; ibid., pp. 340 ff.; 3 HRLJ, 1982, p. 188; 4 HRLJ, 1983, pp. 185 ff. and 5 HRLJ, 1984, pp. 191 ff. See also Annual Reports of the Human Rights Committee, 1981 to date.

304 1981 Report of the Human Rights Committee, A/36/40, p. 166.

305 Ibid., p. 134.

306 See e.g. the Waksman case, 1 HRLJ, 1980, p. 220 and the Lichtensztejn case, 5 HRLJ, 1984, p. 207.

307 A/44/40, p. 241 (1989).

308 See e.g. Thompson v. St Vincent and the Grenadines, A/56/40, vol. II, annex X, sect. H, para. 8.2.

309 See e.g. the Berry, Hamilton, Grant, Currie and Champagnie cases against Jamaica, A/49/40, vol. II, pp. 20, 37, 50, 73 and 136.

310 See the Ng case, concerning extradition from Canada to the US. The Committee found that there was no evidence of such a risk, A/49/40, vol. II, p. 189.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Committee has also noted that execution by gas asphyxiation would violate the prohibition in article 7 of cruel and inhuman treatment.[311] The issue faced in the Vuolanne case[312] was whether the procedural safeguards in article 9(4) of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, whereby a person deprived of his liberty is to be allowed recourse to the courts, applied to military disciplinary detention. The Committee was very clear that it did. One issue of growing importance concerns the question of the extraterritorial application of human rights treaties, that is whether a state party to a particular human rights treaty is obliged to apply it outside of its own territory where it is acting abroad either by way of its state agents or organs or because it is in control of an area beyond its border. The Committee has consistently taken the view that the Covenant does apply in such circumstances, whether it be with regard to state agents acting abroad[313] or with regard to the obligations of Israel within the occupied territories.[314]

It is already apparent that the Committee has proved a success and is performing a very important role in the field of human rights protection.[315]

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women

The Commission on the Status of Women was established in 1946 as one of the functional commissions of ECOSOC and has played a role both in standard-setting and in the elaboration of further relevant instruments.[316] The Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of [311] Ibid. [312] Ibid., p. 249.

[313] See e.g. López Burgos v. Uruguay, case no. 52/79, 68 ILR, p. 29, or Lilian Celiberti de Casariego v. Uruguay, case no. 56/79, 68 ILR, p. 41, concerning the activities of Uruguayan agents in Brazil and Argentina respectively.

[314] See e.g. CCPR/C/79/Add.93, para. 10 and CCPR/C0/78/1SR, para. 11 (concluding observations on Israel's reports). This approach was affirmed by the International Court of Justice in the Construction of a Wall case, ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 136, 178–9; 129, ILR, pp. 37, 97–8.

[315] The second optional protocol aimed at the abolition of the death penalty was adopted in 1990, while the desirability of a third optional protocol to the Covenant, concerning the right to a fair trial and a remedy, has been considered by the Commission on Human Rights: see E/CN.4/Sub.2.1994/24, Sub-Commission resolution 1994/35 and Commission resolution 1994/107.

[316] See ECOSOC resolutions 1/5 (1946), 2/11 (1946) and 48 (IV) (1947). See also L. Reanda, 'The Commission on the Status of Women' in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 265. The mandate of the Commission was revised by ECOSOC resolutions 1987/22 and

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Discrimination Against Women was established under article 22 of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination Against Women.[317] This Convention is implemented by means of states' reports. It is composed of twenty-three experts serving in individual capacities for four-year terms. It held its first regular session in October 1982 and at its second session examined the reports of seven states parties regarding measures taken to comply with the terms of the Convention. It reports annually to the UN General Assembly through ECOSOC.[318] The Committee has provided guidelines to states parties on reporting, whereby initial reports are intended to be detailed and comprehensive with subsequent reports being of an updating nature.[319] Since 1990, subsequent reports are examined first by a pre-sessional working group. Following discussion of a report, the Committee provides concluding comments. The Committee, in addition to hearing states' reports, may make suggestions and general recommendations, which are included in the report.[320] Since 1997 the process of adopting a general recommendation is preceded by an open dialogue between the Committee, non-governmental organisations and others regarding the topic of the general recommendation 1996/6. There is also an individual petition procedure by which complaints are considered by a Working Group on Communications which then reports to the Commission. The Commission in turn reports to ECOSOC.

317 This came into force in 1981. See R. Jacobson, 'The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women' in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 444; A. Byrnes, 'The "Other" Human Rights Body: The Work of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women', 14 Yale Journal of International Law, 1989, p. 1; M. Galey, 'International Enforcement of Women's Rights', 6 HRQ, 1984, p. 463, and M. Wadstein, 'Implementation of the UN Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women', 6 NQHR, 1988, p. 5. See also R. Cook, 'Women's International Human Rights Law', 15 HRQ, 1993, p. 230; Human Rights of Women (ed. R. Cook), Philadelphia, 1994; M. Freeman and A. Fraser, 'Women's Human Rights' in Herlin and Hargrove, Human Rights: An Agenda for the Next Century, p. 103; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 13; Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, pp. 175 and 541; J. Morsink, 'Women's Rights in the Universal Declaration', 13 HRQ, 1991, p. 229; H. Charlesworth and C. Chinkin, The Boundaries of International Law: A Feminist Analysis, Manchester, 2000, and M. Bustelo, 'The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women at the Crossroads' in Alston and Crawford, Future, p. 79.

318 See articles 17–21 of the Convention and the first Report of the Committee, A/38/45, and UN Chronicle, November 1983, pp. 65–86.

319 See CEDAW/C/7Rev.3 and with regard to reports submitted from 1 January 2003, www.un.org/womenwatch/daw/cedaw/guidelines.PDF.

320 Article 21.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

and a discussion of a draft prepared by a Committee member. General Recommendation No. 5 called upon states parties to make more use of 'temporary special measures such as positive action, preferential treatment or quota systems to advance women's integration into education, the economy, politics and employment', while General Recommendation No. 8 provided that states parties should take further measures to ensure to women, on equal terms with men and without discrimination, the opportunity to represent their government at the international level.[321] General Recommendation No. 12 called upon states parties to include in their reports information on measures taken to deal with violence against women, while General Recommendation No. 14 called for measures to be taken to eradicate the practice of female circumcision. General Recommendation No. 19 (1992) dealt at some length with the problem of violence against women in general and specific terms, and General Recommendation No. 21 is concerned with equality in marriage and family relations.[322] In 1999, the Committee adopted a General Recommendation No. 24 on women and health. General Recommendation No. 25 was adopted in 2004 and concerned temporary special measures.[323]

The Committee, however, met only for one session of two weeks a year, which was clearly inadequate. This was increased to two sessions a year from 1997.[324] An Optional Protocol adopted in 1999 and in force as from December 2000 allows for the right of individual petition provided a number of conditions are met, including the requirement for the exhaustion of domestic remedies. In addition, the Protocol creates an inquiry procedure enabling the Committee to initiate inquiries into situations of grave or systematic violations of women's rights where it has received reliable information of grave or systematic violations by a state party of rights established in the Convention.[325] In recent years, the importance of women's rights has received greater recognition. The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted in 1993 emphasised that the human rights of women should be brought into the [321] A/43/38 (1988). [322] HRI/GEN/1/Rev.1, 1994, pp. 72 ff.

[323] HRI/GEN/1/Rev.7, 2004, p. 282.

[324] Although the Committee met exceptionally for three sessions during 2002 to deal with backlog reports. However, see General Assembly resolution 60/230 concering the extension of meeting time in 2005 and 2006.

[325] See, for example, for an earlier view, R. Cook, 'The Elimination of Sexual Apartheid: Prospects for the Fourth World Conference on Women', ASIL Issue Papers on World Conferences, Washington, 1995, pp. 48 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

mainstream of UN system-wide activity and that women's rights should be regularly and systematically addressed throughout the UN bodies and mechanisms.[326] In the light of this, the fifth meeting of Chairpersons of Human Rights Treaty Bodies in 1994 agreed that the enjoyment of the human rights of women by each treaty body within the competence of its mandate should be closely monitored. Each of the treaty bodies took steps to examine its guidelines with this in mind.[327] It should also be noted, for example, that the Special Rapporteur on Torture was called upon by the Commission on Human Rights in 1994 to examine questions concerning torture directed disproportionately or primarily against women.[328] In addition, the General Assembly adopted a Declaration on the Elimination of Violence Against Women in February 1994,[329] and a Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences was appointed in 1994.[330] The International Labour Organisation established the promotion of equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women in employment as a priority item in its programme and budget for 1994/5.[331] The Committee on the Rights of the Child has also discussed the issue of the 'girl-child' and the question of child prostitution.[332]

[326] See Part II, Section 3, 32 ILM, 1993, p. 1678. See also the Beijing Conference 1995, Cook, 'Elimination of Sexual Apartheid'; the Beijing plus 5 process, see General Assembly resolution 55/71. In 2000, the General Assembly adopted resolution S-23/3 containing a Political Declaration and a statement on further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action.

[327] See HRI/MC/1995/2. See also the Report of the Expert Group Meeting on the Development of Guidelines for the Integration of Gender Perspectives into Human Rights Activities and Programmes, E/CN.4/1996/105, 1995. This called inter alia for the use of gender-inclusive language in human rights instruments and standards, the identification, collection and use of gender-disaggregated data, gender-sensitive interpretation of human rights mechanisms and education and the promotion of a system-wide co-ordination and collaboration on the human rights of women within the UN.

[328] See resolution 1994/37. See also the Report of the Special Rapporteur of January 1995, E/CN.4/1995/34, p. 8.

[329] Resolution 48/104, see 33 ILM, 1994, p. 1049. Note also the adoption of the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence Against Women in June 1994, ibid., p. 1534 and the March 2002 Joint Declaration by the Special Rapporteur on women's rights of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur on Violence Against Women, its Causes and its Consequences of the UN Commission on Human Rights, and the Special Rapporteur on the Rights of Women in Africa of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights which called for the elimination of violence and discrimination against women: see www.cidh.org/declaration.women.htm.

[330] See E/CN.4/2003/75.

[331] E/CN.4/Sub.2/1994/5, p. 6.

[332] See further below, p. 331.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Committee Against Torture[333]

The prohibition of torture is contained in a wide variety of human rights[334] and humanitarian law treaties,[335] and has become part of customary international law. Indeed it is now established as a norm of jus cogens.[336] Issues concerning torture have come before a number of human rights organs, such as the Human Rights Committee,[337] the European Court of Human Rights[338] and the International Criminal Tribunal on the Former Yugoslavia.[339]

The Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment was signed on 10 December 1984 and entered into force in 1987. It built particularly upon the [333] See e.g. M. Nowak and E. McArther, The UN Convention Against Torture: A Commentary, Oxford, 2008; A. Byrnes, 'The Committee Against Torture' in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 509; R. Bank, 'Country-Oriented Procedures under the Convention against Torture: Towards a New Dynamism' in Alston and Crawford, Future, p. 145; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 15; N. Rodley, The Treatment of Prisoners under International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 1999; A. Boulesbaa, The UN Convention on Torture and Prospects for Enforcement, The Hague, 1999; M. Evans, 'Getting to Grips with Torture', 51 ICLQ, 2002, p. 365; J. Burgers and H. Danelius, The United Nations Convention against Torture, Boston, 1988; Meron, Human Rights in International Law, pp. 126–30, 165–6, 511–15; S. Ackerman, 'Torture and Other Forms of Cruel and Unusual Punishment in International Law', 11 Vanderbilt Journal of Transnational Law, 1978, p. 653; Amnesty International, Torture in the Eighties, London, 1984; A. Dormenval, 'UN Committee Against Torture: Practice and Perspectives', 8 NQHR, 1990, p. 26; Z. Haquani, 'La Convention des Nations Unies Contre la Torture', 90 RGDIP, 1986, p. 127; N. Lerner, 'The UN Convention on Torture', 16 Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, 1986, p. 126, and R. St J. Macdonald, 'International Prohibitions against Torture and other Forms of Similar Treatment or Punishment' in International Law at a Time of Perplexity (ed. Y. Dinstein), Dordrecht, 1987, p. 385.

[334] See e.g. article 5 of the Universal Declaration; article 7 of the Civil and Political Rights Covenant; article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights; article 5 of the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights; article 5 of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights; the UN Convention against Torture, 1984; the European Convention on the Prevention of Torture, 1987 and the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture, 1985.

[335] See e.g. the four Geneva Red Cross Conventions, 1949 and the two Additional Protocols of 1977.

[336] See e.g. Ex parte Pinochet (No. 3) [2000] 1 AC 147, 198; 119 ILR, p. 135 and the Furundžija case, 121 ILR, pp. 213, 260–2. See also Al-Adsani v. UK, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 21 November 2001, para. 61; 123 ILR, pp. 24, 41–2.

[337] See e.g. Vuolanne v. Finland, 265/87, 96 ILR, p. 649, and generally Joseph et al., International Covenant, chapter 9.

[338] See e.g. Selmouni v. France, Judgment of 28 July 1999.

[339] See e.g. the Delalić case, IT-96-21, Judgment of 16 November 1998.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from being subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment adopted by the General Assembly in 1975.[340] Other relevant instruments preceding the Convention were the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, 1955, the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officers, 1979 (article 5) and the Principles of Medical Ethics, 1982 (Principles 1 and 2).[341]

Torture is defined in article 1 of the Convention against Torture to mean:

> [a]ny act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or a confession, punishing him for an act he or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating or coercing him or a third person, or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind, when such pain or suffering is inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or the acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity. It does not include pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in or incidental to lawful sanctions.

The states parties to the Convention are under duties inter alia to take measures to prevent such activities in territories under their jurisdiction (article 2), not to return a person to a country where he may be subjected to torture (article 3), to make torture a criminal offence and establish jurisdiction over it (articles 4 and 5),[342] to prosecute or extradite persons charged with torture (article 7) and to provide a remedy for persons tortured (article 14).

The Committee against Torture was established under Part II of the Convention against Torture, 1984 and commenced work in 1987. It consists of ten independent experts. In an interesting comment on the proliferation of international human rights committees and the dangers of inconsistencies developing, article 17(2) provides that in nominating experts, states parties should 'bear in mind the usefulness of nominating persons who are also members of the Human Rights Committee'.

[340] General Assembly resolution 3452 (XXX).

[341] Note also the Principles on the Protection of Persons under Detention or Imprisonment adopted by the General Assembly in 1989. See generally Human Rights: A Compilation of International Instruments, United Nations, New York, vol. I (First Part), 1993, Section H.

[342] See, as far as the UK is concerned, sections 134 and 135 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Committee receives states' reports (article 19), has an inter-state complaint competence (article 21) and may hear individual communications (article 22). In both the latter cases, it is necessary that the state or states concerned should have made a declaration accepting the competence of the Committee.[343] Article 20 of the Convention provides that if the Committee receives 'reliable evidence' that torture is being systematically practised in the territory of a state party, it may invite the state in question to co-operate in examining the evidence. The Committee may designate one or more of its members to make a confidential inquiry. In doing so, it shall seek the co-operation of the state concerned and, with the latter's agreement, such an inquiry may include a visit to its territory. The Committee will transmit the findings of the inquiry to the state, together with appropriate comments or suggestions. The proceedings up to this point are to be confidential, but the Committee may, after consulting the state, decide to include a summary account of the results in its annual report. This additional, if cautiously phrased, power may provide the Committee with a significant role.[344] It should be noted that states parties have the ability to 'opt out' of this procedure if they so wish at the time of signature or ratification, or accession.[345]

The conduct of the reporting procedure bears much resemblance to the practice of the UN Human Rights Committee.[346] Guidelines have been issued for states parties and the discussions with state representatives are held with a view to establishing a constructive dialogue. Many problems facing other treaty bodies also appear with regard to the Committee against Torture, for example, overdue reports and problems relating to implementation of the Convention generally. The Committee may also make comments on states' reports in the form of concluding observations[347] and may issue general comments.[348] Interim measures of protection may also [343] See e.g. the Committee's report of Spring 2002, A/57/44, p. 82.

[344] Note e.g. the report of the Committee on Sri Lanka in this context, A/57/44, p. 59 (2002). See also E. Zoller, 'Second Session of the UN Commission against Torture', 7 NQHR, 1989, p. 250.

[345] Article 28(1). See e.g. A/57/44, p. 81.

[346] As at May 2006, the Committee had received a total of 194 reports, with 192 overdue: see A/61/44, p. 5 (2006).

[347] See e.g. A/61/44, pp. 6 ff. (2006).

[348] To date only one has been issued on the implementation of article 3 concerning deportation to states where there is substantial reason to fear torture: see A/53/44, annex IX.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

be granted under Rule 108(1) and this is monitored by the rapporteurs for new complaints and interim measures.[349]

The first three cases before the Committee under article 22 were admissibility decisions concerning Argentinian legislation exempting junior military officers from liability for acts of torture committed during the 1976–83 period and its compatibility with the Torture Convention.[350] The Committee noted that there existed a general rule of international law obliging all states to take effective measures to prevent and punish acts of torture. However, the Convention took effect only from its date of entry (26 June 1987) and could not be applied retroactively to cover the enactment of legislation prior to that date. Therefore, the communications were inadmissible. However, the Committee did criticise the Argentinian legislation and stated that Argentina was morally bound to provide a remedy to the victims of torture.[351] In May 2002, the Committee revised its rules of procedure and established the function of a Rapporteur for follow-up of decisions on complaints submitted under article 22.[352] The Committee has held that where substantial grounds exist for believing that the applicant would be in danger of being subjected to torture, the expulsion or return of the applicant by the state party concerned to the state in which he might be tortured would constitute a violation of article 3 of the Convention.[353] The Committee has also emphasised that the risk of torture must be assessed on grounds that go beyond mere theory or suspicion. The risk need not be highly probable, but it must be personal and present. While the Committee does give considerable weight to findings of fact made by the organs of the state party concerned, it is not bound by these and has the power of free assessment of the facts arising in the circumstances of each case. It has been particularly underlined that the prohibition enshrined in article 3 of the Convention was an absolute one.[354] It has also been noted that where complaints of torture are made during court [349] Ibid., pp. 82–3. See also A/57/44, p. 219.

[350] OR, MM and MS v. Argentina, communications nos. 1–3/1988. Decisions of 23 November 1989. See 5 Interights Bulletin, 1990, p. 12.

[351] The Committee has, however, held that where the effect of the violations continues after the date that the Convention comes into force for the state concerned and where those effects constitute a breach of the Convention, then the matter can be considered: see e.g. AA v. Azerbaijan, A/61/44, pp. 255, 259 (2006).

[352] See e.g. A/61/44, p. 86 (2006).

[353] Khan v. Canada, CAT/C/13/D/15/1994.

[354] See Dadar v. Canada, A/61/44, pp. 233 ff. (2006).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

proceedings, it is desirable that they be elucidated by means of independent proceedings.[355] A complaint must be submitted by the alleged victim, or by a close relative or a duly authorised representative, and must first be declared admissible. Requirements include that the matter must not be before another tribunal, that domestic remedies have been exhausted and that the complaint must reach a 'basic level of substantiation'.[356]

An Optional Protocol to the Convention to enable the Committee through a new Subcommittee on Prevention to conduct regular visits to places of detention and make recommendations to states parties was adopted by the General Assembly in December 2002 and came into force in 2006. Under the Protocol, states parties must establish a 'national preventive mechanism' for the prevention of torture at the domestic level. Visits by the Subcommittee and the national preventive mechanism to any place under the state party's jurisdiction and control where persons are, or may be, deprived of their liberty must be permitted by the state concerned.[357]

In 1985, the United Nations Commission on Human Rights appointed a Special Rapporteur on Torture to examine questions relevant to torture and to seek and receive credible and reliable information on such questions and to respond to that information without delay.[358] The work of the rapporteur includes the sending of urgent appeals and an increasing number of country visits. He is directed to co-operate closely with the Committee against Torture.[359] The rapporteur also works with other UN officials. In 1994, for example, the rapporteur accompanied the Special Rapporteur on Rwanda on a visit to that country, while later that year the rapporteur accompanied the Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions on a visit to Colombia.[360] The rapporteur produces an annual report.[361]

[355] Parot v. Spain, CAT/C/14/D/6/1990.

[356] RT v. Switzerland, A/61/44, pp. 249, 253 (2006). See also article 22 of the Convention and Rule 107(b) of the Rules of Procedure.

[357] See General Assembly resolution 57/199.

[358] Resolution 1985/33.

[359] See e.g. E. Zoller, '46th Session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights', 8(2) NQHR, 1990, pp. 140, 166.

[360] See E/CN.4/1995/34, pp. 6–7. See also the European Convention on the Prevention of Torture, below, p. 362, and the African guidelines on torture adopted in 2002, www.achpr.org/english/communiques/communique32_en.html and www.apt.ch/africa/rig/Robben20Island%20Guidelines.pdf.

[361] See e.g. A/62/221 (2007).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Committee on the Rights of the Child[362]

The Convention on the Rights of the Child was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 November 1989.[363] It provides that in all actions concerning children, the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration. A variety of rights are stipulated, including the inherent right to life (article 6); the right to a name and to acquire a nationality (article 7); the right to freedom of expression (article 13); the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion (article 14); the right not to be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with privacy, family, home or correspondence and the right to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health (article 24).

States parties agree to take all appropriate measures to protect the child from all forms of physical and mental violence (article 19) and from economic exploitation (article 32) and the illicit use of drugs (article 33), and there are specific provisions relating to refugees and disabled children. In addition, states parties agree to respect the rules of international humanitarian law applicable to armed conflicts relevant to children (article 38). This provision was one response to the use of children in the Iran–Iraq war.

Article 43 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child provides for the establishment of a Committee. This Committee, which was elected in 1991, was originally composed of ten independent experts[364] and has the competence to hear states' reports (article 44). The Committee itself submits reports every two years to the General Assembly through ECOSOC. The Committee can recommend to the General Assembly that the Secretary-General be requested to undertake on its behalf studies on [362] See e.g. T. Buck, International Child Law, London, 2005; G. Lansdown, 'The Reporting Procedures under the Convention on the Rights of the Child' in Alston and Crawford, Future, p. 113; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 14; Revisiting Children's Rights: 10 Years of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (ed. D. Fottrell), The Hague, 2000; D. McGoldrick, 'The UN Convention on the Rights of the Child', 5 International Journal of Law and the Family, 1991, p. 132; M. Santos Pais, 'The Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Work of the Committee', 26 Israel Law Review, 1992, p. 16, and Santos Pais, 'Rights of Children and the Family' in Herkin and Hargrove, Human Rights: An Agenda for the Next Century, p. 183. See also G. Van Bueren, The International Law on the Rights of the Child, Dordrecht, 1995, and The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (ed. S. Detrick), Dordrecht, 1992.

[363] The Convention came into force on 2 September 1990. Note also the Declaration on the Rights of the Child adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 1386 (XIV), 1959 and the proclamation of 1979 as the International Year of the Child in resolution 31/169.

[364] The membership has increased to eighteen.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

specific issues relating to the rights of the child, an innovation in the functions of such treaty bodies, and it can make suggestions and general recommendations (article 45). The Committee (like the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights) sets aside time for general discussions on particular topics in accordance with Rule 75 of its provisional rules of procedure. For example, at its second session in 1992, the Committee discussed the question of children in armed conflicts,[365] while at its fourth session, the problem of the economic exploitation of children was discussed.[366] A general discussion on the 'girl-child' was held at the eighth session of the Committee in 1995,[367] and one on the administration of juvenile justice at the ninth session.[368]

As part of the general reporting process, the Committee adopted an urgent action procedure at its second session. Provided that the state concerned has ratified the Convention, that the situation is serious and there is a risk of further violations, the Committee may send a communication to the state 'in a spirit of dialogue' and may request the provision of additional information or suggest a visit.[369] At its fourth session, the Committee established a working group to study ways and means whereby the urgent action procedure could be pursued effectively.[370] The Committee has produced a set of guidelines concerning states' reports[371] and a pre-sessional working group considers these reports and draws up a list of issues needing further clarification which is sent to the state concerned.[372] As is the case with other reporting mechanisms, the state whose report is being considered by the Committee is invited to send representatives to the appropriate meetings. After the process is completed, the Committee issues Concluding Observations in which both the positive aspects of the report considered and the problems identified are noted, together [365] A/49/41, pp. 94 ff. This led to a recommendation to the General Assembly to request the Secretary-General to undertake a special study on the means to protect children in armed conflicts: see CRC/C/SR.72, p. 2 and resolution 48/157. This led to the adoption of the Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict, General Assembly resolution 54/263, 25 May 2000, which entered into force on 12 February 2002. Note that the question of the protection of children in armed conflicts was referred to in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, 1993, Part II, B, 4: see 32 ILM, 1993, p. 1680. See also G. Van Bueren, 'The International Legal Protection of Children in Armed Conflicts', 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 809, and M. Happold, Child Soldiers in International Law, Manchester, 2005.

[366] A/49/41, pp. 99 ff.

[367] See CRC/C/38, p. 47. This led to the adoption of the Optional Protocol on the Question of the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography: see General Assembly resolution 54/263 of 25 May 2000 which entered into force on 18 January 2002.

[368] See CRC/C/43, p. 64. [369] See CRC/C/SR.42, p. 2 and A/49/41, pp. 69–71.

[370] Ibid. [371] See CRC/C/5. [372] See e.g. CRC/C/121, 2002.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

with suggestions and recommendations.[373] Various follow-up measures to the consideration of reports exist, but usually they consist of the request for the provision of further information.[374] The Committee also holds 'days of discussion' to examine relevant issues[375] and issues General Comments.[376]

The Committee on the Protection of Migrant Workers[377]

The International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families was adopted by the General Assembly and opened for signature in December 1990.[378] The Convention defines a migrant worker as 'a person who is to be engaged, is engaged, or has been engaged in a remunerated activity in a state of which he or she is not a national' (article 2). This includes, for example, frontier and seasonal workers, workers on offshore installations and specified-employment workers, but excludes employees of international organisations or official state employees abroad, refugees, stateless persons, students and workers on offshore installations who have not been admitted to take up residence and engage in a remunerated activity in the state of employment (article 3).

Migrant workers are entitled to equality of treatment with nationals in areas such as matters before courts and tribunals (article 18), terms of employment (article 25), freedom to join trades unions (article 26), medical treatment (article 28), access to education for their children (article 30) and respect for cultural identity (article 31). Migrant workers are protected from collective expulsion (article 22). Further provisions deal with additional rights for migrant workers and members of their families in a documented or regular situation (Part IV).

[373] See e.g. A/49/41, pp. 20 ff.; CRC/C/38, pp. 10 ff. and CRC/C/43, pp. 10 ff. See also CRC/C/121, 2002, pp. 8 ff.

[374] See e.g. CRC/C/27/Rev.3, 1995 detailing such measures up to mid-1995.

[375] See e.g. the day of discussion on 'The private sector as service provider and its role in implementing child rights' held in September 2002, CRC/C/121, p. 145.

[376] Ibid., p. 159 (on 'The role of national human rights institutions in promoting and protecting children's rights'). In 2007, the Committee adopted General Comment No. 10 on the rights of children in juvenile justice.

[377] See e.g. K. Samson, 'Human Rights Co-ordination within the UN System' in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, pp. 620, 641 ff.; S. Hune and J. Niessen, 'Ratifying the UN Migrant Workers Convention: Current Difficulties and Prospects', 12 NQHR, 1994, p. 393, and S. Hune and J. Niessen, 'The First UN Convention on Migrant Workers', 9 NQHR, 1991, p. 133.

[378] The necessary twenty ratifications were achieved on 10 December 2002. The Convention came into force on 1 April 2003.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Convention provided for the creation of a Committee of fourteen independent experts (Part VII). States parties are required to provide reports on measures taken to give effect to the provisions of the Convention (article 73). An inter-state complaints procedure is provided for in article 76, on the condition that the states concerned have made a declaration expressly recognising the competence of the Committee to hear such complaints, while under article 77 an individual complaints procedure can be used with regard to states that have made a declaration recognising the competence of the Committee in this regard.[379]

The Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities

The Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities was adopted in December 2006 and is not yet in force. The Convention provides for the prohibition of discrimination against persons with disability and for equality of opportunity and accessibility. States parties are to undertake immediate, effective and appropriate measures to raise awareness and combat prejudices and harmful practices (articles 5–9). A twelve-person Committee is provided for to examine states' reports on measures taken to give effect to the obligations under the Convention (articles 34–6). States parties to the Optional Protocol recognise the competence of the Committee to hear individual communications alleging a violation of the Convention against them. Further, where the Committee receives reliable information indicating grave or systematic violations by a state party of Convention rights, the Committee may invite the state to co-operate in the examination of the information and submit observations. The Committee may proceed to conduct an inquiry confidentially. A state party may, however, on signature or ratification of the Optional Protocol, declare that it does not accept the inquiry competence of the Committee.

The Committee on Enforced Disappearances

The Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance was adopted in December 2006 and is not yet in force. It requires states parties to make enforced disappearance, defined as the deprivation of liberty by agents of the state or persons acting with the support or acquisition of the state coupled with the refusal to acknowledge the deprivation of liberty or concealment of the fate of the person in question (article 2), a criminal law offence (article 4). It is stated to be a crime against humanity (article 5). A ten-person Committee on Enforced Disappearances is [379] See the Report of the Committee for 2006–7, A/62/48 (2007).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

provided for to examine states' reports on measures taken to give effect to the obligations under the Convention (article 29), to hear inter-state complaints (article 32) and to hear individual communications (article 31). The Committee may also, upon receiving a request for urgent action, transmit a request to the state party concerned to take interim measures to locate and protect the person in question (article 30). Where the Committee receives reliable information indicating a serious violation, it may seek, in consultation with the state party concerned, to organise a visit (article 33). Further, where the Committee receives information appearing to contain well-founded indications that enforced disappearance is being practised on a widespread or systematic basis in the territory under the jurisdiction of a state party, it may, after seeking information from the state, urgently bring the matter to the attention of the General Assembly through the Secretary-General (article 34).

Conclusions

Most international human rights conventions obligate states parties to take certain measures with regard to the provisions contained therein, whether by domestic legislation or otherwise.[380] In addition, all nine of the treaty bodies discussed above require states parties to make periodic reports.[381] Seven have the competence to consider individual communications,[382] five may consider inter-state complaints,[383] while three may inquire into allegations of grave or systematic violations.[384]

[380] See e.g. article 2 of the Civil and Political Rights Covenant, 1966; article 1 of the European Convention on Human Rights, 1950; articles 1 and 2 of the American Convention on Human Rights, 1969; article 5 of the Genocide Convention, 1948; article 4 of the Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, 1973 and article 3 of the Slavery Convention, 1926.

[381] Note that the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Convention on Enforced Disappearance are not yet in force. See also article 7 of the Apartheid Convention, 1973. Several conventions provide for the communication of information to the UN Secretary-General: see e.g. article 33 of the Convention Relating to the Status of Stateless Persons, 1954 and articles 35 and 36 of the Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees, 1951.

[382] The Economic and Social Committee and the Committee on the Rights of the Child do not.

[383] The Human Rights Committee, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on Migrant Workers, the Committee against Torture and the Committee on Enforced Disappearances.

[384] The Committee against Torture, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. Note the competence to visit under the Convention on Enforced Disappearance.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The proliferation of committees raises problems concerned both with resources and with consistency.[385] The question of resources is a serious and ongoing difficulty. The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, 1993 emphasised the necessity for a substantial increase in the resources for the human rights programme of the UN and particularly called for sufficient funding to be made available to the UN Centre for Human Rights, which inter alia provides the administrative support for the human rights organs and committees discussed in this chapter.[386] The various human rights committees themselves have pointed to the resource problem.[387] The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Committee against Torture changed their financing system so that, since January 1994, they have been financed under the regular budget of the United Nations.[388] The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights sought additional resources from the Economic and Social Council.[389] Nevertheless, the fact remains that human rights activity within the UN system is seriously underfunded.

The question of consistency in view of the increasing number of human rights bodies within the UN system has been partially addressed by the establishment of an annual system of meetings between the chairpersons of the treaty bodies.[390] Issues of concern have been discussed, ranging from the need to encourage states to ratify all human rights treaties, concern about reservations made to human rights treaties,[391] attempts to establish that successor states are automatically bound by obligations under [385] See e.g. E. Tistounet, 'The Problem of Overlapping among Different Treaty Bodies' in Alston and Crawford, Future, p. 383.

[386] See Part II, Section A of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, 32 ILM, 1993, pp. 1674–5.

[387] See e.g. the Human Rights Committee, A/49/44, and the Committee Against Torture, A/50/44. See also the Report of the Secretary-General to the sixth meeting of chairpersons of treaty bodies, HRI/MC/1995/2, p. 13.

[388] See General Assembly resolution 47/111 and HRI/MC/1995/2, p. 14.

[389] Ibid., p. 15.

[390] See General Assembly resolution 49/178, 1994, which endorsed the recommendation of the chairpersons that the meetings be held annually. The first meeting of the chairpersons of treaty bodies was held in 1984, A/39/484 and the second in 1988, A/44/98. See also e.g. A/62/224 (2007). A working group on the harmonisation of working methods of the treaty bodies has been established, see e.g. HRI/MC/2006/3 and HRI/MC/2007/2. Note also that the first inter-committee meeting of the human rights treaty bodies took place in September 2002, HRI/ICM/2002/3.

[391] See further below, chapter 16, p. 912.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

international human rights treaties from the date of independence irrespective of confirmation,[392] the formulation of new norms and instruments and the promotion of human rights education, to consideration of the continuing problem of overdue reports[393] and the role of non-governmental organisations.[394] The development of early warning and preventive procedures by the committees is to be particularly noted.[395] The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, for example, under its urgent procedures may, since 1994, review the human rights situation in states parties that give rise for especial concern,[396] while the Human Rights Committee is able to request states parties to submit special urgent reports.[397]

The UN Secretary-General in his report entitled 'In Larger Freedom' emphasised the need for streamlining procedures and called for the implementation of harmonised guidelines on reporting.[398] The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, noting that the treaty bodies system had developed ad hoc and does not function as an integrated and indivisible framework for human rights protection, has called for a unified standing treaty body and proposed a series of models.[399] While greater harmonisation and integration is to be encouraged, as is increased training and logistical assistance for states, there may be disadvantages in one human rights body, not only in terms of locating the necessary expertise, but also in political terms by having such authority concentrated in one organ and thus being particularly susceptible to political pressure.

[392] See further below, chapter 17, p. 981.

[393] For example, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights have established procedures enabling them to examine the situation in the state concerned: see above, pp. 311 and 308. Other Committees have sought to hold meetings with the officials of the states concerned in order to encourage submission of overdue reports, HRI/MC/1995/2, p. 7.

[394] See e.g. HRI/MC/1995.

[395] The role of the treaty bodies in seeking to prevent human rights violations has been emphasised: see e.g. A/47/628, para. 44.

[396] See above, p. 311.

[397] See above, p. 314. See also above, p. 331, with regard to the procedures of the Committee on the Rights of the Child.

[398] A/59/2005 and A/59/2005/Add.3.

[399] Concept Paper on the Proposal for a Unified Standing Treaty Body, HRI/MC/2006/2, 2006.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The specialised agencies

The International Labour Organisation[400]

The ILO was created in 1919 and expanded in 1946.[401] The Declaration of Philadelphia of 1944 (which was incorporated in the ILO constitution in 1946) reaffirmed the basic principles of the organisation. These are (a) that labour is not a commodity, (b) that freedom of expression and of association are essential to sustained progress and (c) that poverty anywhere constitutes a danger to prosperity everywhere. The ILO is composed of a unique tripartite structure involving governments, workers and employers and consists of three organs: a General Conference of representatives of member states (the International Labour Conference), the Governing Body and the International Labour Office.[402] The ILO constitution enables the organisation to examine and elaborate international labour standards, whether Conventions or Recommendations. The former are the more [400] See e.g. Weissbrodt, Fitzpatrick and Newman, International Human Rights, chapter 16; L. Betten, 'At its 75th Anniversary, the International Labour Organisation Prepares Itself for an Active Future', 12 NQHR, 1994, p. 425; L. Swepston, 'Human Rights Complaints Procedures of the International Labour Organisation' in Hannum, Guide to International Human Rights Practice, p. 89; V. Leary, 'Lessons from the Experience of the International Labour Organisation' in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 580; C. W. Jenks, 'Human Rights, Social Justice and Peace' in The International Protection of Human Rights (eds. A. Schou and A. Eide), Stockholm, 1968, p. 227, and Social Justice in the Law of Nations, Oxford, 1970; E. A. Landy, The Effectiveness of International Supervision: Thirty Years of ILO Experience, New York, 1966, and 'The Implementation Procedures of the International Labour Organisation', 20 Santa Clara Law Review, 1980, p. 633; N. Valticos, 'The Role of the ILO: Present Action and Future Perspectives' in Ramcharan, Human Rights: Thirty Years After the Universal Declaration, p. 211, Le Droit International du Travail, Paris, 1980, and 'The International Labour Organisation' in The International Dimensions of Human Rights (eds. K. Vasak and P. Alston), Paris, 1982, vol. I, p. 363; F. Wolf, 'ILO Experience in Implementation of Human Rights', 10 Journal of International Law and Economics, 1975, p. 599; J. M. Servais, 'ILO Standards on Freedom of Association and Their Implementation', 123 International Labour Review, 1984, p. 765, and Robertson and Merrills, Human Rights, p. 282. See also H. K. Nielsen, 'The Concept of Discrimination in ILO Convention No. 111', 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 827.

[401] An agreement bringing the ILO into relationship with the UN as a specialised agency under article 63 of the UN Charter came into force on 14 December 1946: see General Assembly resolution 50 (I).

[402] See UN Action, p. 28. The tripartite structure means that the delegation of each member state to the International Labour Conference includes two representatives of the government, one representative of workers and one representative of the employers. There are fifty-six members of the Governing Body, with twenty-eight government representatives and fourteen each from employers' and workers' organisations.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

formal method of dealing with important matters, while the latter consist basically of guidelines for legislation. Between 1919 and 1994, 175 Conventions and 182 Recommendations were adopted by the ILO, all dealing basically with issues of social justice.[403] Under article 19 of the ILO constitution, all members must submit Conventions and Recommendations to their competent national authorities within twelve to eighteen months of adoption. Under article 22, states which have ratified Conventions are obligated to make annual reports on measures taken to give effect to them to the International Labour Office.[404] Under article 19, members must also submit reports regarding both unratified Conventions and Recommendations to the Director-General of the International Labour Office at appropriate intervals as requested by the Governing Body, concerning the position of their law and practice in regard to the matters dealt with in the Convention or Recommendation and showing the extent to which effect has been given or is proposed to be given to the provisions of the Convention or Recommendation, including a statement of the difficulties which prevent or delay ratification of the Convention concerned.[405] In 1926–7, a Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations was established to consider reports submitted by member states. The comments of the twenty-member Committee, appointed by the Governing Body on the suggestion of the Director-General of the International Labour Office, on ratified Conventions take the form of 'observations' included in the printed report of the Committee in the case of more important issues, or 'requests' to the government concerned for information, which are not published in the report of the Committee. In the case of unratified Conventions and Recommendations, a 'general survey' of the application of the particular instrument in question is carried out.[406] A Committee on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations of the International Labour Conference is appointed at each of [403] See Valticos, 'International Labour Organisation', p. 365, and Swepston, 'Human Rights Complaints Procedures of the International Labour Organisation', p. 100. See also E/CN.4/Sub.2/1994/5, p. 3.

[404] However, in practice the annual rule is relaxed: see Valticos, 'International Labour Organisation', p. 368. Governments are obliged by article 23(2) to communicate copies of the reports to employers' and workers' organisations.

[405] The latter provision does not, of course, apply in the case of Recommendations.

[406] Valticos, 'International Labour Organisation', pp. 369–70, and Wolf, 'ILO Experience', pp. 608–10. See e.g. Freedom of Association and Collective Bargaining: General Survey, Geneva, 1983.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

its annual sessions, composed of tripartite representatives to discuss relevant issues based primarily upon the general report of the Committee of Experts.[407] It may also draw up a 'Special List' of cases to be drawn to the attention of the Conference.

Two types of procedure exist. Under articles 24 and 25, a representation may be made by employers' or workers' organisations to the Office to the effect that any of the members have failed to secure the effective observation of any Convention to which it is a party. If deemed receivable by the Governing Body, the matter is examined first by a committee of three of the Governing Body then by the Governing Body itself. States are invited to reply and both the original representation and the reply (if any) may be publicised by the Governing Body. There have not been many representations of this kind.[408] Under articles 26–9 and 31–3 any member may file a complaint against another member state that the effective observance of a ratified Convention has not been secured. The Governing Body may call for a reply by the object state or establish a commission of inquiry. Such a commission is normally composed of three experts and the procedure adopted is of a judicial nature. Recourse may be had by the parties to the International Court of Justice. Ultimately the Governing Body may recommend to the Conference such action as it considers wise and expedient. The complaints procedure was first used by Ghana against Portugal regarding the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 in its African territories.[409]

A special procedure regarding freedom of association was established in 1951, with a Committee on Freedom of Association which examines a wide range of complaints. It consists of nine members (three from each of the tripartite elements in the ILO). The Committee submits detailed reports to the Governing Body with proposed conclusions and suggested recommendations to be made to the state concerned, and a considerable case-law has been built up.[410] A Fact-finding and [407] The Committee usually consists of 200 members.

[408] But see e.g. Official Bulletin of the ILO, 1956, p. 120 (Netherlands Antilles); ibid., 1967, p. 267 (Brazil) and ibid., 1972, p. 125 (Italy). See also ibid., 1978 (Czechoslovakia).

[409] See Official Bulletin of the ILO, 1962; ibid., 1963 (Liberia) and ibid., 1971 (Greece).

[410] See e.g. G. Von Potobsky, 'Protection of Trade Union Rights: Twenty Years Work of the Committee on Freedom of Association', 105 International Labour Review, 1972, p. 69. See also Servais, 'ILO Standards', and Freedom of Association: Digest of Decisions of the Freedom of Association Committee of the Governing Body of the ILO, 3rd edn, Geneva, 1985. By the end of 1991, over 1,600 cases had been considered by the Committee: see Swepston, 'Human Rights Complaints Procedures of the International Labour Organisation', p. 109.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Conciliation Commission has been created for more serious and politically delicate cases which operates with the consent of the state concerned. Accordingly, few questions have been dealt with,[411] although in 1992 a visit was made to South Africa and recommendations made to the ILO and ECOSOC. The government of that country sent a response to the Director-General of the ILO and, at the request of ECOSOC, the ILO Committee on Freedom of Association examined South Africa's report in 1994. The Committee's report, noting changes taking place in that country, was approved by the Governing Body and transmitted to ECOSOC.[412] In addition, a system of 'direct contacts' has been instituted, consisting of personal visits by ILO officials, or independent persons named by the Director-General, in order to assist in overcoming particular difficulties. These have included, for example, questions regarding freedom of association in Argentina in 1990 and the situation of Haitian workers on sugar plantations in the Dominican Republic in 1991.[413]

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation[414]

UNESCO came into being in November 1946 and was brought into relationship with the UN on 14 December that year.[415] The aim of the organisation, proclaimed in article 1 of its constitution, is to contribute to peace and security by promoting collaboration through education, science and culture 'in order to further universal respect for justice, for the rule of law and for the human rights and fundamental freedoms which are affirmed for the peoples of the world'. The organisation consists of a General [411] See Valticos, 'International Labour Organisation', pp. 384 ff. See also Official Bulletin of the ILO, 1966 (Japan), and N. Valticos, 'Un Double Type d'Enquête de l'OIT au Chili', AFDI, 1975, p. 483.

[412] E/CN.4/Sub.2/1994/5, p. 4.

[413] See N. Valticos, 'Une Nouvelle Forme d'Action Internationale: Les "Contacts Directs"', 27 AFDI, 1981, p. 481, and V. Leary, 'Lessons from the Experience of the International Labour Organisation' in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 611.

[414] See e.g. S. Marks, 'The Complaints Procedure of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation' in Hannum, Guide to International Human Rights Practice, p. 107; D. Weissbrodt and R. Farley, 'The UNESCO Human Rights Procedure: An Evaluation', 16 HRQ, 1994, p. 391; P. Alston, 'UNESCO's Procedures for Dealing with Human Rights Violations', 20 Santa Clara Law Review, 1980, p. 665; H. S. Saba, 'UNESCO and Human Rights' in Vasak and Alston, International Dimensions of Human Rights, vol. II, p. 401; Robertson and Merrills, Human Rights, p. 288, and UN Action, pp. 308 and 321.

[415] See General Assembly resolution 50 (I).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Conference which meets every two years and in which all member states are represented, an Executive Board, elected by the conference, and a secretariat headed by a Director-General. Under article 4(4), member states undertake to submit Conventions and Resolutions to the competent national authorities within a year of adoption and may be required to submit reports on action taken.[416] Unlike the ILO, UNESCO has no constitution provision for reviewing complaints concerning the implementation of conventions procedure. However, in 1962 a Protocol instituting a Conciliation and Good Offices Commission was adopted to help resolve disputes arising between states parties to the 1960 Convention against Discrimination in Education. It entered into force in 1968 and the first meeting of the eleven-member Commission was in 1971. It aims to make available its good offices in order to reach a friendly settlement between the states parties to the convention in question. In 1978 the Executive Board of UNESCO adopted decision 104 EX/3.3, by which it established a procedure to handle individual communications alleging violations of human rights. Ten conditions for admissibility are laid down, including the requirement that the human rights violated must fall within UNESCO's competence in the fields of education, science, culture and information, and the need for the communication to be compatible with international human rights interests. The condition with regard to domestic remedies is rather different than is the case with other human rights organs, in that all the communication needs to do is to 'indicate whether an attempt has been made to exhaust domestic remedies . . . and the result of such an attempt, if any'. The investigating body is the Executive Board's Committee on Conventions and Recommendations, which is composed of twenty-four members and normally meets twice a year in private session.[417] The examination of communications is confidential. The Committee decides whether a communication is admissible and then makes a decision on the merits. The task of the Committee is to reach a 'friendly solution designed to advance the promotion of the human rights falling within UNESCO's fields of competence'.[418] Confidential reports are submitted to the Executive Board each session, which contain appropriate information [416] See, for example, the obligation to submit reports under article 7 of the 1960 Convention against Discrimination in Education. See also UN Action, p. 163.

[417] Formerly the Committee on Conventions and Recommendations in Education, ibid., pp. 321–2. See also A/CONF.157/PC/61/Add.6, 1993.

[418] Decision 104.EX/3.3, para. 14(k).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

plus recommendations.[419] It is also to be noted that under this procedure the Director-General generally has a role in seeking to strengthen the action of UNESCO in promoting human rights and initiating consultations in confidence to help reach solutions to particular human rights problems.[420] UNESCO published a report in 1993 concerning the operations of the procedure, noting that the Committee had examined 414 cases between 1978 and 1993, of which it settled 241 individual cases.[421] It is unclear how successful the procedure has been, in view of the strict confidentiality which binds it,[422] the length of time taken to produce results and the high proportion of cases declared inadmissible.[423]

A special procedure to deal with disappeared persons has been established by the Committee. Communications dealing with such persons are placed on a Special List, if insufficient information is forthcoming from the government in question, and examined by the Committee.[424] In addition to cases concerning violations of human rights which are individual and specific, UNESCO may also examine questions of massive, systematic or flagrant violations of human rights resulting either from a policy contrary to human rights applied by a state or from an accumulation of individual cases forming a consistent pattern.[425] In the instance of such questions, the issue is to be discussed by the Executive Board of the General Conference in public.[426]

[419] In the April 1980 session, for example, forty-five communications were examined as to admissibility, of which five were declared inadmissible, thirteen admissible, twenty suspended and seven deleted from the agenda. Ten communications were examined on the merits, UNESCO Doc. 21 C/13, para. 65. Between 1978 and September 2003 508 communications were examined: see Marks, 'UNESCO Complaints Procedure', p. 120.

[420] Ibid., paras. 8 and 9.

[421] See UNESCO Doc. 141/EX/6 and Weissbrodt and Farley, 'UNESCO Human Rights Procedure', p. 391. It was noted that during this period, 129 individuals were either released or acquitted, 20 authorised to leave and 34 to return to the state concerned, 24 were able to resume banned employment or activity, and 11 were able to resume a banned publication or broadcast, ibid.

[422] See G. H. Dumont, 'UNESCO's Practical Action on Human Rights', 122 International Social Sciences Journal, 1989, p. 585, and K. Partsch, 'La Mise en Oeuvre des Droit de l'Homme par l'UNESCO', 36 AFDI, 1990, p. 482.

[423] Weissbrodt and Farley note that of sixty-four cases studied only five were declared admissible, 'UNESCO Human Rights Procedure', p. 399. Of these, three concerned one particular country in Latin America. One case was considered over a nine-and-a-half-year period and another was considered over eight-and-a-half years.

[424] UNESCO Doc. 108 EX/CR/HR/PROC/2 Rev. (1979).

[425] Decision 104. EX/3.3, para. 10.

[426] Ibid., para. 18.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Suggestions for further reading

The Future of UN Human Rights Treaty Monitoring (eds. P. Alston and J. Crawford), Cambridge, 2000

Guide to International Human Rights Practice (ed. H. Hannum), 4th edn, Ardsley, 2004

T. Meron, The Humanization of International Law, The Hague, 2006

J. Rehman, International Human Rights Law, London, 2002

A. H. Robertson and J. Merrills, Human Rights in the World, 4th edn, Manchester, 1996

H. Steiner, P. Alston and R. Goodman, International Human Rights in Context, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2008

C. Tomuschat, Human Rights, Oxford, 2003

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

7

The regional protection of human rights

Europe[1]

The Council of Europe

The Council of Europe was founded in 1949 as a European organisation for encouraging and developing intergovernmental and interparliamentary co-operation. Its aim as laid down in article 1 of the Statute is to achieve a greater unity between member states for the purpose of safeguarding and realising the ideals and principles which are their common heritage and facilitating their economic and social progress. The principles of the Council of Europe as established in article 3 of the Statute include pluralist democracy, respect for human rights and the rule of law. A Committee of Ministers, consisting of the Foreign Ministers of member states, and a Parliamentary Assembly, consisting of delegations of members of national parliaments, constitute the principal organs of the Council of Europe, together with a Secretary-General and supporting secretariat. There also exists a Standing Conference of Local and Regional Authorities of Europe, consisting of national delegations of local and regional elected representatives. The Council of Europe also maintains a number of support and assistance programmes.[2]

The demise of the Soviet Empire in Eastern and Central Europe has been the primary reason for the great increase in member states over the last few years.[3] The process of joining the Council of Europe has provided the Council with some influence over prospective members and this has led both to expert advice and assistance being proffered and to commitments being entered into in the field of human rights by applicants. For [1] See generally Monitoring Human Rights in Europe (eds. A. Bloed, L. Leicht, M. Nowak and A. Rosas), Dordrecht, 1993.

[2] See e.g. A/CONF.157/PC/66/Add.2, 1993.

[3] With the entry of Montenegro in May 2007, the number of member states reached forty-seven.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

example, Parliamentary Assembly Opinion No. 191 on the Application for Membership by the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia[4] notes that the applicant entered into commitments relating to revision and establishment of new laws (for example, with respect to the organisation and functioning of the criminal justice system), amendment of the constitution in order to include the right to a fair trial, and agreement to sign a variety of international instruments including the European Convention on Human Rights, the European Convention on the Prevention of Torture and the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities. In addition, the applicant agreed to co-operate fully in the monitoring process for implementation of Assembly Order No. 508 (1995) on the honouring of obligations and commitments by member states of the Council of Europe as well as in monitoring processes established by virtue of the Committee of Ministers Declaration of 10 November 1994. The Council of Europe has also moved beyond agreeing or noting commitments made at the time of application for membership and approval thereof to consideration of how those commitments have been honoured once an applicant has become a member state. The Committee of Ministers Declaration of 10 November 1994 provides a mechanism for examining state practice in this area and one may expect further developments in this context.[5] In 1999, the Council of Europe established the office of the Commissioner for Human Rights within the General Secretariat to promote education and awareness in the field of human rights.[6] The [4] 16 HRLJ, 1995, p. 372. See also Parliamentary Assembly Opinion No. 190 on the Application of Ukraine for Membership, ibid., p. 373, and Opinion Nos. 183 (1995) on the Application of Latvia for Membership, 188 (1995) on the Application of Moldova for Membership and 189 (1995) on the Application of Albania for Membership, H/INF (95) 3 pp. 77 ff. Note that under Recommendation 1055 (1995), the Assembly decided to suspend the procedure concerning its statutory opinion on Russia's request for membership in the light of the situation in Chechnya. However, Russia joined the Council of Europe in early 1996.

[5] See further below, p. 359. Note also Assembly Order 508 (1995). The Committee on the Honouring of Obligations and Commitments by Member States of the Council of Europe (known as the Monitoring Committee) commenced operations in April 1997 under the authorisation of Assembly resolution 1115 (1997). This Committee is responsible for verifying the fulfilment of the obligations assumed by the member states under the terms of the Council of Europe Statute, the European Convention on Human Rights and all other Council of Europe conventions to which they are parties, as well as the honouring of the commitments entered into by the authorities of member states upon their accession to the Council of Europe. It reports directly to the Assembly.

[6] Committee of Ministers resolution (99) 50. The Commissioner cannot consider individual petitions and exercises functions other than those of the supervisory bodies of Council of Europe human rights instruments. No general reporting system exists in this framework.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Commissioner may also issue opinions[7] and make recommendations[8] and undertake visits.[9]

Although a large number of treaties between member states have been signed under the auspices of the Council of Europe, undoubtedly the most important has been the European Convention on Human Rights.

The European Convention on Human Rights[10]

The Convention was signed on 4 November 1950 and entered into force in September 1953.[11] Together with thirteen Protocols, it covers a wide variety of primarily civil and political rights.[12] The preamble notes that the European states are like-minded and have a common heritage of political tradition, ideals, freedoms and the rule of law. The rights covered [7] See e.g. CommDH(2002)7, Opinion 1/2002 on certain aspects of the United Kingdom 2001 derogation from article 5(1) of the European Convention on Human Rights.

[8] See e.g. Recommendations CommDH/Rec(2001)1 concerning the rights of aliens wishing to enter a Council of Europe member state and the enforcement of expulsion orders, and CommDH/Rec(2002)1 concerning certain rights that must be guaranteed during the arrest and detention of persons following 'cleansing' operations in the Chechen Republic of the Russian Federation.

[9] See e.g. the visit to Russia including Chechnya, Press Release 072a (2003).

[10] See e.g. Jacobs and White: The European Convention on Human Rights (eds. C. Ovey and R. C. A. White), 4th edn, Oxford, 2006; D. J. Harris, M. O'Boyle and C. Warbrick, Law of the European Convention on Human Rights, London, 1995; M. W. Janis, R. S. Kay and A. W. Bradley, European Human Rights Law: Text and Materials, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2008; S. Greer, The European Convention on Human Rights: Achievements, Problems and Prospects, Cambridge, 2006; G. Letsas, A Theory of Interpretation of the European Convention on Human Rights, Oxford, 2007; La Convention Européenne des Droits de l'Homme (eds. P. Imbert and L. Pettiti), Paris, 1995; L. J. Clements, N. Mole and A. Simmons, European Human Rights: Taking a Case under the Convention, 2nd edn, London, 1999; The European System for the Protection of Human Rights (eds. R. St J. Macdonald, F. Matscher and H. Petzold), Dordrecht, 1993; A. H. Robertson and J. G. Merrills, Human Rights in Europe, 4th edn, Manchester, 2001; P. Van Dijk, G. J. H. Van Hoof, A. Van Rijn and L. Zwaak, Theory and Practice of the European Convention on Human Rights, 4th edn, Antwerp, 2006; P. J. Velu and R. Ergel, La Convention Européenne des Droits de l'Homme, Brussels, 1990; G. Cohen-Jonathan, La Convention Européenne des Droits de l'Homme, Paris, 1989; E. Lambert, Les Effets des Arrêts de la Cour Européenne des Droits de l'Homme, Brussels, 1999, and K. Starmer, European Human Rights Law, London, 1999. See also L. G. Loucaides, Essays on the Developing Law of Human Rights, Dordrecht, 1995; J. G. Merrills, The Development of International Law by the European Court of Human Rights, 2nd edn, Manchester, 1993, and A. Drzemczewski, The European Human Rights Convention in Domestic Law, Oxford, 1983.

[11] All forty-seven member states of the Council of Europe have ratified the Convention.

[12] Protocol No. 14, dealing with procedural issues, is not yet in force: see below, p. 360. Economic and social rights are covered in the European Social Charter, 1961. See below, p. 360.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in the Convention itself include the right to life (article 2), prohibition of torture and slavery (articles 3 and 4), right to liberty and security of person (article 5), right to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal established by law (article 6), prohibition of retroactive criminal legislation (article 7), right to respect for private and family life (article 8), freedom of thought, conscience and religion (article 9), freedom of expression (article 10), freedom of assembly and association (article 11), the right to marry and found a family (article 12), the right to an effective remedy before a national authority if one of the Convention rights or freedoms is violated (article 13) and a non-discrimination provision regarding the enjoyment of rights and freedoms under the Convention (article 14). In addition, several protocols have been added to the substantive rights protected under the Convention. Protocol No. 1 protects the rights of property, education and free elections by secret ballots, Protocol No. 4 prohibits imprisonment for civil debt and protects inter alia the rights of free movement and choice of residence and the right to enter one's own country, Protocol No. 6 provides for the abolition of the death penalty, while Protocol No. 7 provides inter alia that an alien lawfully resident in a state shall not be expelled therefrom except in pursuance of a decision reached in accordance with the law, that a person convicted of a criminal offence shall have the right to have that conviction or sentence reviewed by a higher tribunal and that no one may be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings for an offence for which he has already been finally acquitted or convicted. Protocol No. 12 prohibits discrimination, while Protocol No. 13 abolishes the death penalty. Like other international treaties, the European Convention imposes obligations upon states parties to respect a variety of provisions. In this instance the Convention has also been incorporated into the domestic legislation of all current states parties[13] although the Convention does not provide as to how exactly the states parties are to implement internally the relevant obligations.[14] It has been emphasised that:

> unlike international treaties of the classic kind, the Convention comprises more than mere reciprocal engagements between contracting states. It

[13] The UK incorporated the Convention in the Human Rights Act 1998. See e.g. J. Polakiewicz and V. Jacob-Foltzer, 'The European Human Rights Convention in Domestic Law', 12 HRLJ, 1991, pp. 65 and 125, and Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, p. 24, note 2.

[14] See e.g. the Swedish Engine Drivers' Union case, Series A, vol. 20, 1976, p. 18; 58 ILR, pp. 19, 36. See also the Belgian Linguistics case, Series A, vol. 6, 1968, p. 35; 45 ILR, pp. 136, 165.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> creates, over and above a network of mutual and bilateral undertakings, objective obligations, which in the words of the preamble, benefit from a 'collective enforcement'.[15]

In addition, a more teleological and flexible approach to the interpretation of the Convention has been adopted.[16] The European Court of Human Rights has emphasised that the Convention is a living instrument to be interpreted in the light of present-day conditions and this approach applies not only to the substantive rights protected under the Convention, but also to those provisions which govern the operation of the Convention's enforcement machinery.[17] In addition, the Court has noted that the object and purpose of the Convention as an instrument for the protection of individuals requires that its provisions be interpreted and applied so as to make its safeguards practical and effective.[18] The Convention should also be interpreted as far as possible in harmony with other principles of international law.[19] It has been emphasised that the Convention constitutes a 'constitutional instrument of European public order ("ordre public")'.[20] The Convention applies, of course, within the territory of contracting states, but the issue of its extraterritorial application has been addressed. The Court has interpreted the concept of 'jurisdiction' under article 1 to include the possibility of application to extradition or expulsion of a person by a contracting state to the territory of a non-contracting state[21] and the situation where acts of the authorities of contracting states, whether performed within or outside national boundaries, produce effects outside their own territory.[22] Further, in a significant move, the Court in Loizidou v. Turkey emphasised that the responsibility of a contracting state may also arise when it exercises effective control or 'effective overall control'

[15] See article 1 and Ireland v. UK, Series A, vol. 25, 1978, pp. 90–1; 58 ILR, pp. 188, 290–1. See also Loizidou v. Turkey, Series A, vol. 310, 1995, pp. 22–3; 103 ILR, p. 622.

[16] See e.g. the Tyrer case, Series A, vol. 26, 1978; 58 ILR, p. 339, and see also the Marckx case, Series A, vol. 31, 1979; 58 ILR, p. 561, although not to the extent of adding new rights or new jurisdictions thereby, see Johnston v. Ireland, Judgment of 18 December 1986 and Banković v. Belgium, Judgment of 12 December 2001, 123 ILR, p. 94. See also below, chapter 16, p. 937.

[17] See Loizidou v. Turkey, Series A, vol. 310, 1995, p. 23; 103 ILR, p. 622.

[18] See Soering v. UK, Series A, vol. 161, 1989, p. 34; 98 ILR, p. 270; Artico v. Italy, Series A, vol. 37, p. 16 and Loizidou v. Turkey, Series A, vol. 310, p. 23; 103 ILR, p. 622.

[19] See Al-Adsani v. UK, Judgment of 21 November 2001, para. 60; 123 ILR, p. 41.

[20] Loizidou v. Turkey, Series A, vol. 310, pp. 24 and 27; 103 ILR, p. 622.

[21] See e.g. Soering v. UK, Series A, vol. 161, 1989, pp. 35–6.

[22] See e.g. Drozd and Janousek v. France and Spain, Series A, vol. 240, 1992, p. 29. See also Issa v. Turkey, Judgment of 30 May 2000, and Öcalan v. Turkey, Judgment of 14 December 2000.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of an area outside its national territory, irrespective of the lawfulness of such control, whether by the state's own agents and officials or by the acts of a subordinate local administration.[23] Despite this, the Court has stated that its recognition of the exercise of extraterritorial jurisdiction by a contracting state is exceptional and that the Convention's notion of jurisdiction is essentially territorial.[24] These principles were reaffirmed in Ilaşcu v. Moldova and Russia, where the Court, while emphasising that jurisdiction was primarily territorial, noted that in exceptional circumstances the state might not be responsible for Convention violations where it was prevented from exercising its authority in a part of its territory, whether as a result of military occupation by the armed forces of another state which effectively controls the territory concerned, acts of war or rebellion, or the acts of a foreign state supporting the installation of a separatist state within the territory of the state concerned.[25] Further, a state's responsibility will be engaged where, as a consequence of military action, whether lawful or unlawful, it exercises in practice effective control of an area situated outside its national territory. Overall control of an area would suffice and the responsibility of the state would extent not only to the acts of its own soldiers and officials, but also to acts of the local administration which survives there by virtue of its military and other support.[26]

Linked with the territorial jurisdictional issue is the question whether the Court has jurisdiction over the states in question (or jurisdiction ratione personae). In Behrami v. France, the Court, in an application against a number of states with regard to activities undertaken as part of the international presence in Kosovo (whether military, KFOR, or civil, UNMIK), had to decide whether the acts in question were attributable or imputable to the states concerned such as to found jurisdiction or whether the acts were imputable rather to the UN. The Court concluded that KFOR was exercising lawfully delegated Chapter VII powers of the UN Security Council [23] Series A, vol. 310, p. 20; 103 ILR, p. 622. See also Cyprus v. Turkey, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 10 May 2001, paras. 75 ff.; 120 ILR, p. 10.

[24] See Banković v. Belgium, Judgment of 12 December 2001, paras. 63, 67 and 71; 123 ILR, pp. 110, 111 and 113. The Court noted that 'the Convention is a multi-lateral treaty operating ··· in an essentially regional context and notably in the legal space (espace juridique) of the contracting states', ibid., para. 80. See also Issa v. Turkey, Judgment of 16 November 2004, paras. 65 ff., where the Court held that the degree of control exercised by Turkish troops during a large-scale incursion into northern Iraq did not amount to overall control, and Assanidze v. Georgia, Judgment of 8 April 2004.

[25] Judgment of 8 July 2004 at paras. 312–13.

[26] Ibid., paras. 314–19.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

so that the impugned action was, in principle, 'attributable' to the UN and thus not to the states brought before the Court.[27]

The convention system

With the coming into force of Protocol 11 on 1 November 1998, a single permanent and full-time Court was established, so that the former Court and Commission ceased to exist. The new Court consists of a number of judges equal to that of the contracting parties to the Convention. Judges are elected by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe for six-year terms.[28] To consider cases before it, the Court may sit in Committees of three judges, in Chambers of seven judges and in a Grand Chamber of seventeen judges.[29] The Rules of Court provide for the establishment of at least four Sections, the compositions of which are to be geographically and gender-balanced and reflective of the different legal systems among the contracting states.[30] The Chambers of seven judges provided for in the amended Convention are constituted from the Sections, as are the Committees of three judges.[31] The plenary Court is responsible for the election of the President and Vice-Presidents of the Court, the appointment of the Presidents of the Chambers, constituting Chambers and adopting rules of procedure.[32]

In ascertaining whether an application is admissible, the President of the Chamber to which it has been assigned will appoint a judge as Judge Rapporteur to examine the application and decide whether it should be considered by a Committee of three or a Chamber.[33] A Committee, acting unanimously, may decide to declare the application inadmissible or strike it out of the list.[34] That decision is final. In other cases, the application will be considered by a Chamber on the basis of the Judge Rapporteur's report.

[27] Judgment of 2 May 2007, paras. 141 ff.; similarly with regard to those activitites falling within the framework of the UNMIK, deemed to be a subsidiary organ of the Security Council, para. 143. But see Bosphorus Airways v. Ireland, Judgment of 30 June 2005. See, as to the situation in Kosovo, above, chapter 5, pp. 204 and 232.

[28] Articles 22 and 23. Note that there will no longer be a prohibition on two judges having the same nationality. The terms of office of the judges will end at the age of seventy.

[29] Article 27. [30] Rule 25. There are now five Sections. [31] Rules 26 and 27.

[32] Article 26. [33] Rule 49.

[34] Ibid. and article 28. In so doing, the Committee will take into account the report of the Judge Rapporteur, Rule 53. Note that the Court has the right to strike out an application at any stage of the proceedings where it concludes that the applicant does not intend to pursue his application or the matter has been resolved or, for any other reason established by the Court, it is no longer justified to continue the examination of the application. However, the Court shall continue the examination of an application if respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and the Protocols thereto so requires: see article 37.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Chamber may hold oral hearings. The question of admissibility will then be decided. Once an application is declared admissible, the Chamber may invite the parties to submit further evidence and written observations and a hearing on the merits may be held if the Chamber decides or one of the parties so requests.[35] At this point the respondent government is usually contacted for written observations.[36] Where a serious question affecting the interpretation of the Convention or its Protocols is raised in a case, or where the resolution of a question might lead to a result inconsistent with earlier case-law, the Chamber may, unless one of the parties to the case objects, relinquish jurisdiction in favour of the Grand Chamber.[37]

The Court may give advisory opinions, although in very restrictive circumstances.[38] In all cases before a Chamber or the Grand Chamber, a [35] Rule 59.

[36] In the case of inter-state cases, the respondent government will be automatically contacted: see Rule 51.

[37] Article 30. While there is no specific power in the Convention under which the Court may order interim measures of protection with binding effect, Rule 39 of the Rules of Court provides that the Chamber or, where appropriate, its President may, at the request of a party or of any other person concerned, or of its own motion, indicate to the parties any interim measure which it considers should be adopted in the interests of the parties or of the proper conduct of the proceedings before it. The Court in Mamatkulov and Abdurasulovic v. Turkey, Judgment of 6 February 2003, referring to the practice of other international organs including the International Court of Justice and the Inter-American Court and Commission of Human Rights, held that article 34 of the Convention requires that applicants are entitled to exercise their right to individual application effectively, while article 3, relevant in the context of expulsion, also necessitated an effective examination of the issues in question. The Court noting that Rule 39 indications 'permit it to carry out an effective examination of the application and to ensure that the protection afforded by the Convention is effective', concluded that 'any state party to the Convention to which interim measures have been indicated in order to avoid irreparable harm being caused to the victim of an alleged violation must comply with those measures and refrain from any act or omission that will undermine the authority and effectiveness of the final judgment', paras. 107–10.

[38] Article 47. Only the Committee of Ministers can make such a request and advisory opinions cannot deal with any question relating to the content or scope of the rights and freedoms laid down in Section 1 of the Convention and its Protocols or with any question which the Court or Committee of Ministers might have to consider during proceedings instituted in accordance with the Convention. The first request for an advisory opinion concerned the co-existence of the Convention on Human Rights of the Commonwealth of Independent States and the European Convention on Human Rights, but on 2 June 2004 the Court concluded unanimously that the request did not come within its advisory competence. The first advisory opinion was given on 12 February 2008, where the Court unanimously concluded that it was not compatible with the European Convention on Human Rights for a list of candidates for election to the post of judge at the Court to be rejected on the sole

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

contracting party, one of whose nationals is an applicant, shall have the right to submit written comments and to take part in hearings, while the President of the Court may, in the interest of the proper administration of justice, invite any contracting party which is not a party to the proceedings, or any person concerned who is not the applicant to submit written comments or take part in hearings.[39] Once an application has been declared admissible, the Court will pursue the examination of the case and place itself at the disposal of the parties with a view to securing a friendly settlement.[40] If a friendly settlement is reached, the Court will strike the case out of its list.[41] Hearings before the Court will be in public unless the Court in exceptional circumstances decides otherwise. The Court will be able to afford just satisfaction to the injured party if necessary, where a violation is found and the domestic law of the contracting party concerned allows only partial reparation to be made.[42] Under article 43, within a period of three months from the date of the judgment of the Chamber, any party to the case may, in exceptional cases, request that the case be referred to the Grand Chamber. A panel of five judges of the Grand Chamber will accept this request if the case raises a serious question affecting the interpretation or application of the Convention or Protocols, or a serious issue of general importance. If the panel does accept the request, the Grand Chamber will decide the case by means of a judgment. Judgments of the Grand Chamber will be final, as will those of a Chamber where the parties declare that they will not request that the case be referred to the Grand Chamber, or three months after the date of judgment if reference to the Grand Chamber has not been requested, or when the panel of the Grand Chamber rejects the request to refer. The final judgment will be published[43] and is binding upon the parties,[44] and it will be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers, which shall supervise its execution.[45]

A number of crucial changes took place as a result of the reform of the system under Protocol 11. The right of individual petition became automatic rather than dependent upon the acceptance of the state complained against,[46] the new Court became full-time, the function of the Committee of Ministers was limited to the supervision of the execution of the judgments of the Court rather than including a decision-making ground that there was no woman included in the proposed list and called for exceptions to the principle that lists must contain a candidate of the under-represented sex to be defined as soon as possible.

[39] Article 36. [40] Article 38. Proceedings in the latter case will be confidential.
[41] Article 39. [42] Article 41. [43] Article 44. [44] Article 46(1).
[45] Article 46(2). [46] Compare former article 25 with current article 34.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

function in the absence of referral of a Commission report to the Court,[47] the number of judges in a Chamber was reduced from nine to seven, the right of third-party intervention became part of the Convention itself rather than a Rule of Court and hearings became public apart from the friendly settlement process. However, under article 30, the parties to a case are able to prevent the relinquishment of jurisdiction by a Chamber in favour of the Grand Chamber. In addition, where a case is referred to the Grand Chamber under article 43, the Grand Chamber will include the President of the Chamber and the judge who sat in respect of the state party concerned, who will thus be involved in a rehearing of a case that they have already heard. This unusual procedure remains a source of some disquiet.

The Convention provides for the right of both inter-state and individual application. Under article 33, any contracting state may institute a case against another contracting state. To date applications have been lodged with the Commission by states involving seven situations.[48] The first inter-state application to reach the Court was Ireland v. UK.[49] Such applications are a means of bringing to the fore an alleged breach of the European public order, so that, for example, it is irrelevant whether the applicant state has been recognised by the respondent state.[50] Article 34 provides for the right of individual petition to the Commission and this has proved to be a crucial provision.[51] This right is now automatic.[52] The [47] See former article 32 and e.g. P. Leuprecht, 'The Protection of Human Rights by Political Bodies: The Example of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe' in Progress in the Spirit of Human Rights: Festschrift für Felix Ermacora (eds. M. Nowak, D. Steurer and H. Tretter), Kehl, 1988, p. 95.

[48] Cyprus case (Greece v. UK), 1956 and 1957, two applications; Austria v. Italy, 1960; five applications against Greece, 1967–70; Ireland v. UK, 1971; Cyprus v. Turkey, 1974–94, four applications, and five applications against Turkey, 1982. See also the application brought by Georgia against Russia, 2007.

[49] Series A, vol. 25, 1978; 58 ILR, p. 188. Note also the Court's decision in Cyprus v. Turkey, Judgment of 10 May 2001; 120 ILR, p. 10.

[50] Cyprus v. Turkey (Third Application) 13 DR 85 (1978).

[51] The total number of new applications in 2007 was estimated at 54,000, of which 41,700 were allocated to a decision body. As at 31 December 2007, there were a total of 103,850 applications pending, of which some 79,000 were pending before a decision body: see Annual Report for 2007 (2008), p. 134.

[52] Note that the issue of reservations to former articles 25 and 46 (concerning the jurisdiction of the Court prior to Protocol XI) was discussed in the case-law. The Court noted that while temporal reservations could be valid, reservations beyond this were not: see Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary Objections), Series A, vol. 310, 1995; 103 ILR, p. 622. The Court, in dismissing the territorial limitations upon the Turkish declarations under articles 25 and 46, held that such declarations therefore took effect as valid declarations without such

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Convention system does not contemplate an actio popularis.[53] Individuals cannot raise abstract issues, but must be able to claim to be the victim of a violation of one or more of the Convention rights.[54] However, the Court has emphasised that:

> an individual may, under certain conditions, claim to be the victim of a violation occasioned by the mere existence of secret measures or of legislation permitting secret measures, without having to allege that such measures were in fact applied to him.[55]

A near relative of the victim, for example, could also raise an issue where the violation alleged was personally prejudicial or where there existed a valid personal interest.[56]

The Court may only deal with a matter once all domestic remedies have been exhausted according to the generally accepted rules of international law and within a period of six months from the date on which the final decision was taken.[57] Such remedies must be effective. Where there are no domestic remedies to exhaust, the act or decision complained against will itself normally be taken as the 'final decision' for the purposes of article 26.[58] The need to exhaust domestic remedies applies also in the limitations, Series A, vol. 310 pp. 27–9. Turkey had argued that if the limitations were not upheld, the declarations themselves would fall. Not to adopt this approach would, the Court noted, have entailed a weakening of the Convention system for the protection of human rights, which constituted a European constitutional public order, and would run counter to the aim of greater unity in the maintenance and further realisation of human rights, ibid. See also the Commission Report in Chrysostomos v. Turkey 68 DR 216.

53 See e.g. X v. Austria 7 DR 87 (1976) concerning legislation on abortion.

54 See e.g. Pine Valley v. Ireland, Series A, vol. 222, 1991; Johnston v. Ireland, Series A, vol. 112, 1986; Marckx v. Belgium, Series A, vol. 31, 1979; Campbell and Cosans v. UK, Series A, vol. 48, 1982; Eckle v. Federal Republic of Germany, Series A, vol. 51, 1982 and Vijayanathan and Pusparajah v. France, Series A, vol. 241-B, 1992.

55 The Klass case, Series A, vol. 28, 1979, pp. 17–18; 58 ILR, pp. 423, 442. See also e.g. the Marckx case, Series A, vol. 31, 1979, pp. 12–14; 58 ILR, pp. 561, 576; the Dudgeon case, Series A, vol. 45, 1982, p. 18; 67 ILR, pp. 395, 410; the Belgian Linguistics case, Series A, vol. 6, 1968; 45 ILR, p. 136 and Norris v. Ireland, Series A, No. 142, 1988; 89 ILR, p. 243.

56 See e.g. Application 100/55, X v. FRG, 1 Yearbook of the ECHR, 1955–7, p. 162 and Application 1478/62, Y v. Belgium, Yearbook of the ECHR, 1963, p. 590. See also Cyprus v. Turkey, Judgment of 10 May 2001; 120 ILR, p. 10.

57 Article 35. See Akdivar v. Turkey, Judgment of 16 September 1996. As to the meaning of domestic or local remedies in international law, see below, p. 819.

58 See e.g. X v. UK, 8 DR, pp. 211, 212–13 and Cyprus v. Turkey, Yearbook of the European Convention on Human Rights, 1978, pp. 240–2. Where, however, there is a permanent state of affairs which is still continuing, the question of the six-month rule can only arise after the state of affairs has ceased to exist: see e.g. De Becker v. Belgium, 2 Yearbook of the case of inter-state cases as does the six-month rule.[59] In addition, no petition may be dealt with which is anonymous or substantially the same as a matter already examined, and any petition which is incompatible with the Convention, manifestly ill-founded[60] or an abuse of the right of petition is to be rendered inadmissible.[61]

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Court, in an ever-increasing number of judgments,[62] has developed a jurisprudence of considerable importance.[63] It has operated on the basis of a number of evolving principles. In particular, the Court will allow states a degree of leeway in a system composed of obligations of contracting states and a European-level supervisory mechanism. The doctrine of 'the margin of appreciation' means that the Court will not interfere in certain domestic spheres while retaining a general overall supervision. For example, in Brannigan and McBride v. UK, the Court held that states benefit from a 'wide margin of appreciation' with regard to the process of determining the existence and scope of a public emergency permitting derogation from certain provisions of the Convention under article 15.[64] This margin of appreciation will vary depending upon the content of the rights in question in substantive proceedings or on the balancing of rights in contention. It will be wider with regard to issues of personal morality,[65] but narrower in other cases.[66] The essential point is, as the Court noted in Z v. UK, that: 'It is fundamental to the machinery of protection established by the Convention that the national systems themselves provide redress for breaches of its provision, the Court exercising its supervisory role subject to the principle of European Convention on Human Rights, 1958, pp. 214, 244. The rule is strict and cannot be waived by the state concerned: see Walker v. UK, Judgment of 25 January 2000.

59 See Cyprus v. Turkey, Judgment of 10 May 2001, paras. 82 ff. Note that the Court suggested that the remedies provided by the 'Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus' had to be taken into account in this situation, ibid. See above, chapter 5, p. 235.

60 See e.g. Boyle and Rice v. UK, Series A, vol. 131, 1988. This does not apply to inter-state cases.

61 Article 35. See Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 608 ff.; Jacobs and White, chapter 24 and e.g. the Vagrancy case, Series A, vol. 12, 1971; 56 ILR, p. 351.

62 One judgment was delivered in its first year of operation in 1960; 6 in 1976; 17 in 1986; 25 in 1989; 126 in 1996; 695 in 2000; 844 in 2002 and 1,503 in 2007: see Survey of Activities 2007 (2008).

63 See e.g. P. Mahoney, 'Judicial Activism and Judicial Self-Restraint in the European Court of Human Rights: Two Sides of the Same Coin', 11 HRLJ, 1990, p. 57.

64 Series A, No. 258-B, 1994, para. 43.

65 See e.g. Handyside v. UK, Series A, vol. 24, 1981; 58 ILR, p. 150.

66 E.g. fair trial and due process questions: see e.g. The Sunday Times v. UK, Series A, vol. 30, 1979; 58 ILR, p. 491.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

subsidiarity.'[67] This also means that the Court is wary of undertaking fact-finding[68] and similarly cautious about indicating which measures a state should take in order to comply with its obligations under the Convention.[69]

The Court has dealt with a number of critical issues. In Ireland v. UK,[70] for example, the Court found that the five interrogation techniques used by the UK Forces in Northern Ireland amounted to a practice of inhuman and degrading treatment, contrary to article 3.[71] In McCann v. UK,[72] the Court narrowly held that the killing by members of the security forces of three members of an IRA unit suspected of involvement in a bombing mission in Gibraltar violated the right to life under article 2. In Golder v. UK,[73] the Court inferred from article 6(1) a fundamental right of access to the courts, and the Court has emphasised the importance of fair trial mechanisms such as the principle of contempt of court.[74] The Court has also developed a considerable jurisprudence in the field of due process[75] that is having a significant impact upon domestic law, not least in the UK. A brief reference to some further examples will suffice. In the Marckx case,[76] the Court emphasised that Belgian legislation discriminating against illegitimate children violated the Convention, while in the Young, James and Webster case[77] it was held that railway workers dismissed for refusing to join a trade union in the UK were entitled to compensation. In the Brogan case,[78] the Court felt that periods of detention under anti-terrorist legislation in the UK before appearance before a judge or other judicial officer of at least four days violated the Convention. This [67] Judgment of 10 May 2001, para. 103.

[68] See e.g. the Tanli case, Judgment of 10 April 2001.

[69] The Vgt Verein gegen Tierfabriken case, Judgment of 28 June 2001, para. 78.

[70] Series A, vol. 25, 1978; 58 ILR, p. 188.

[71] See also Cyprus v. Turkey, where the Court held that the discriminatory treatment of the Greek Cypriots in the Turkish occupied north of Cyprus amounted to degrading treatment, Judgment of 10 May 2001, paras. 302–11; 120 ILR, p. 10.

[72] Series A, vol. 324, 1995. [73] Series A, vol. 18, 1975; 57 ILR, p. 200.

[74] See e.g. Handyside v. UK, Series A, vol. 24, 1981; 58 ILR, p. 150; the Dudgeon case, Series A, vol. 45, 1982; 67 ILR, p. 395 and the Sunday Times case, Series A, vol. 30, 1979; 58 ILR, p. 491.

[75] See e.g. S. Trechsel, 'Liberty and Security of Person' in Macdonald et al., European System, p. 277; P. Van Dijk, 'Access to Court', ibid., p. 345; O. Jacot-Guillarmod, 'Rights Related to Good Administration (Article 6)', ibid., p. 381; Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, chapter 6; and Digest of Strasbourg Case-law relating to the European Convention on Human Rights, Strasbourg, 1984, vol. II (article 6).

[76] Series A, vol. 31, 1979; 58 ILR, p. 561. [77] Series A, vol. 44, 1981; 62 ILR, p. 359.

[78] Series A, vol. 145, 1988.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

decision, however, prompted a notice of derogation under article 15 of the Convention by the UK government.[79]

In the important Soering case,[80] the Court unanimously held that the extradition of a German national from the UK to the United States, where the applicant feared he would be sentenced to death on a charge of capital murder and be subjected to the 'death row' phenomenon, would constitute a breach of article 3 of the Convention prohibiting torture and inhuman and degrading treatment and punishment. Further, the Court has held that the deportation to Iran of a woman who in the circumstances would have been at risk of punishment by stoning would violate article 3.[81] The Court has also emphasised that national security considerations had no application where article 3 violations were in question.[82]

The Court has approached its task in a generally evolving way. For example, it has deduced from a number of substantive provisions that circumstances may arise in which a state would have a positive obligation to conduct an inquiry or effective official investigation. This would arise, for instance, where individuals have been killed as a result of the use of force by agents of the state,[83] or while in custody,[84] or 'upon proof of an arguable claim that an individual, who was last seen in the custody of agents of the state, subsequently disappeared in a context which may be considered life-threatening'.[85] Similarly, the Court has held that the right to life under article 2 entails also the obligation upon states to take appropriate steps for the safeguarding of life within the jurisdiction.[86] Linked with these provisions is article 13 which requires the state party to provide a remedy, effective in law and in practice, which is able both to deal with the substance of the applicant's complaint and to provide an appropriate legal redress.[87] The jurisprudence of the Court with regard to Article 13 demonstrates that in an increasing number of cases that provision is [79] For the text, see e.g. 7 NQHR, 1989, p. 255. See also Brannigan and McBride v. UK, Series A, vol. 258-B, 1993.

[80] Series A, vol. 161, 1989. See also Mamatkulov and Abdurasulovic v. Turkey, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 6 February 2003, paras. 66 ff.

[81] Jabari v. Turkey, Judgment of 11 July 2000.

[82] Chahal v. UK, Judgment of 15 November 1996.

[83] See e.g. McCann v. UK, Series A, vol. 324, 1996.

[84] E.g. Tanli, Judgment of 10 April 2001, para. 152.

[85] Cyprus v. Turkey, Judgment of 10 May 2001, para. 132; 120 ILR, p. 10.

[86] LCB v. UK, Judgment of 9 June 1998.

[87] Soering v. UK, Judgment of 7 July 1989, at para. 120. See also Aksoy v. Turkey, Judgment of 18 December 1996, at para. 95 and Akdeniz v. Turkey, Judgment of 31 May 2005, at para. 138.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

understood as requiring states to undertake an effective investigation into arguable claims of the violation of Convention rights. This has included claims of violations of Articles 2, 3, 5 and 6.[88]

Execution of Court decisions is the responsibility of the Committee of Ministers.[89] This is a political body, the executive organ of the Council of Europe,[90] and consists of the Foreign Ministers, or their deputies, of all the member states.[91] Under article 15 of the Statute of the Council of Europe, the Committee of Ministers, acting on the recommendation of the Parliamentary Assembly or on its own initiative, considers the action required to further the aims of the Council of Europe, including the conclusion of conventions or agreements, and the adoption by governments of a common policy with regard to particular matters. Under article 16 of the Statute, it decides with binding effect all matters relating to the internal organisation and arrangements of the Council of Europe. Resolutions and recommendations on a wide variety of issues are regularly adopted.[92] The Committee of Ministers performs a variety of functions with regard to the protection of human rights. For example, in its Declaration on Compliance with Commitments Accepted by Member States of the Council of Europe, adopted on 10 November 1994, the Committee decided that it would consider the question of implementation of commitments concerning the situation of democracy, human rights and the rule of law in any member state which may be referred to it by member states, the Secretary-General or on the basis of a recommendation of the Parliamentary Assembly.

Where the Court has found a violation, the matter will be placed on the agenda of the Committee of Ministers and will stay there until the respondent government has confirmed that any sum awarded in just satisfaction under article 41 has been paid and/or any required individual measure has been taken and/or any general measures have been adopted [88] E.g. Kaya v. Turkey, Judgment of 19 February 1998, at para. 107; Ilhan v. Turkey, Judgment of 27 June 2000, at para. 97; Kurt v. Turkey, Judgment of 25 May 1998, at para. 140 and Kudla v. Poland, Judgment of 26 October 2000, at paras. 146–9. The Court has noted that 'the requirements of Article 13 are broader than a Contracting State's obligation under Article 2 to conduct an effective investigation into the disappearance of a person last seen in the hands of the authorities', Akdeniz v. Turkey, Judgment of 31 May 2005, at para. 139 and Estamirov and Others v. Russia, Judgment of 12 October 2006, at para. 118.

[89] Article 46(2). [90] Article 13 of the Statute of the Council of Europe.

[91] Article 14 of the Statute of the Council of Europe.

[92] These are non-binding. Resolutions relate to the general work of the Council as such, while recommendations concern action which it is suggested should be taken by the governments of member states.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

preventing new similar violations or putting an end to continuing violation.[93] Information so provided by states is to be accessible to the public, unless the Committee decides otherwise in order to protect legitimate public or private interests.[94]

Despite the reform of the Convention system by Protocol No. 11, difficulties remain. Applications continue to increase inexorably.[95] As a consequence, Protocol No. 14 provides that a single judge will be able to declare an application inadmissible and a committee of three judges will be able to rule on repetitive cases where the underlying matter is already the subject of well-established case-law. In addition, a new admissibility requirement will be added to article 35 so that an application may be declared inadmissible where the applicant has not suffered a significant disadvantage and where an examination on the merits by the Court is not seen as necessary in terms of respect for human rights, provided that the matter has been examined by a domestic tribunal. Judges will be elected for non-renewable periods of nine years.[96]

The European Social Charter[97]

The wide social and economic differences between the European states, coupled with the fact that economic and social rights often depend for their realisation upon economic resources, has meant that this area of [93] Rules 3 and 4. Very occasionally there have been difficulties. For example, the decision of the Court in Loizidou v. Turkey awarding the applicant compensation for deprivation of property rights remains to be implemented: see e.g. Jacobs and White, pp. 502 ff. See also e.g. interim Committee resolutions DH (2000) 105 and DH (2001) 80. Note that where the Court finds a systemic defect in the national legal order, which has or is likely to produce a large number of applications, a remedy may be required of the state that would apply to the class of individuals in the same category: see Broniowski v. Poland, Judgment of 22 June 2004. See also V. Colandrea, 'On the Power of the European Court of Human Rights to Order Specific Non-monetary Measures', 7 Human Rights Law Review, 2007, p. 396.

[94] Rule 5. [95] See above, p. 354.

[96] The Protocol was opened for signature on 30 May 2004. In order to come into force it requires all contracting states to ratify it. To date, only Russia has failed to ratify. See L. Caflisch, 'The Reform of the European Court of Human Rights: Protocol No. 14 and Beyond', 6 Human Rights Law Review, 2006, p. 403, and A. Mowbray, 'Faltering Steps on the Path to Reform of the Strasbourg Enforcement System', 7 Human Rights Law Review, 2007, p. 609. Note the Interim and Final Reports of the Group of Wise Persons to the Committee of Ministers in May and November 2006, CM (2006) 88 and CM (2006) 203.

[97] See e.g. D. J. Harris, The European Social Charter, 2nd edn, Charlottesville, 2000, 'A Fresh Impetus for the European Charter', 41 ICLQ, 1992, p. 659, and 'The System of Supervision of the European Social Charter – Problems and Options for the Future' in The Future

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

concern has lagged far behind that of civil and political rights. Seven years of negotiations were necessary before the Charter was signed in 1961.[98]

The Charter consists of a statement of long-term objectives coupled with a list of more restricted rights. The Charter covers labour rights and trade union rights,[99] the protection of specific groups such as children, women, disabled persons and migrant workers,[100] social security rights,[101] and protection of the family.[102] In an attempt to deal with economic disparities within Europe, the Charter provides for a system whereby only ten of the forty-five paragraphs (including five 'key articles'[103]) need to be accepted upon ratification. The Charter[104] is implemented by the European Committee of Social Rights, consisting of fifteen independent experts elected for a six-year period, renewable once. States parties submit annual reports on some of the provisions of the Charter. These provisions have been divided since 2007 into four thematic groups, each group being the subject of an annual review.[105] These reports are examined by the of European Social Policy (ed. L. Betten), 2nd edn, Deventer, 1991, p. 1; 25 Years of the European Social Charter (eds. A. P. C. M. Jaspers and L. Betten), 1988; H. Wiebringhaus, 'La Charte Sociale Européenne: 20 Ans Après la Conclusion du Traité', AFDI, 1982, p. 934; O. Kahn-Freund, 'The European Social Charter' in European Law and the Individual (ed. F. G. Jacobs), London, 1976, and 'La Charte Sociale Européenne et la Convention Européenne des Droits de l'Homme', 8 HRJ, 1975, p. 527; F. M. Van Asbeck, 'La Charte Sociale Européenne' in Mélanges Rolin, Paris, 1964, p. 427, and T. Novitz, 'Remedies for Violation of Social Rights Within the Council of Europe' in The Future of Remedies in Europe (eds. C. Kilpatrick, T. Novitz and P. Skidmore), London, 2000, p. 230.

98 As at April 2008, there were thirty-nine states parties to the Charter.

99 Articles 1–6, 9–10. 100 Articles 7–8, 15, 18–19. 101 Articles 11–14.

102 Articles 16–17. An Additional Protocol was signed in 1988 which added four more economic and social rights, guaranteeing the rights to equal opportunities in employment without discrimination based on sex; information and consultation of workers within the undertaking; participation in the determination and improvement of working conditions, and social protection of elderly persons. The Protocol entered into force on 4 September 1992.

103 Out of the following seven rights: the right to work, organise, bargain collectively, social security, social and medical assistance, and the rights of the family to special protection and of migrant workers and their families to protection and assistance: see article 20.

104 As amended by the Turin Protocol 1991 and as revised in 1996. The revised Charter came into force in 1999 and gathered together the rights contained in the 1961 instrument as amended and the 1988 Protocol and added new rights, such as the right to protection against poverty and social exclusion, the right to housing, the right to protection in cases of termination of employment and the right to protection against sexual harassment in the workplace.

105 These groups are employment, training and equal opportunities; health, social security and social protection; labour rights; and children, families and migrants respectively.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Committee and its conclusions published. If a state does not implement a Committee decision, the Committee of Ministers addresses a recommendation to the state to the same effect. A system of Collective Complaints was established by an Additional Protocol adopted in 1995. This provides that international organisations of employers and trade unions, other international non-governmental organisations with consultative status with the Council of Europe placed on a list for this purpose by the Governmental Committee, and representative national organisations of employers and trade unions within the jurisdiction of the contracting party against which they have lodged a complaint may submit complaints alleging unsatisfactory application of the Charter.[106] Contracting parties may also make a declaration recognising the right of any other representative national non-governmental organisation within their jurisdiction which has particular competence in the matters governed by the Charter to lodge complaints against them.[107] Such complaints are lodged with the European Committee of Social Rights, which makes a decision on both admissibility and on the merits. Its decision is sent to the parties concerned and to the Committee of Ministers, which adopts a resolution on the matter.

The European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment[108]

This innovative Convention was signed in 1987 and came into force on 1 February 1989.[109] The purpose of the Convention is to enable the supervision of persons deprived of their liberty and, in particular, to prevent

[106] Article 1. [107] Article 2.

[108] See e.g. M. Evans and R. Morgan, Combating Torture in Europe – The Work and Standards of the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture, Strasbourg, 2001; J. Murdoch, 'The Work of the Council of Europe's Torture Committee', 5 EJIL, 1994, p. 220; M. Evans and R. Morgan, 'The European Torture Committee: Membership Issues', 5 EJIL, 1994, p. 249; A. Cassese, 'A New Approach to Human Rights: The European Convention for the Prevention of Torture', 83 AJIL, 1989, p. 128, and Cassese, 'Une Nouvelle Approche des Droits de l'Homme: La Convention Européenne pour la Prévention de la Torture', 93 RGDIP, 1989, p. 6; M. Evans and R. Morgan, 'The European Convention on the Prevention of Torture: Operational Practice', 41 ICLQ, 1992, p. 590, and C. Jenkins, 'An Appraisal of the Role and Work of the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment', SOAS Working Paper No. 11, 1996.

[109] All forty-seven members of the Council of Europe are parties. By Protocol No. 1 non-member states of the Council of Europe are allowed to accede to the Convention at the invitation of the Committee of Ministers, CPT/Inf (93) 17. This came into force in March 2002.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the torture or other ill-treatment of such persons.[110] The Committee for the Prevention of Torture was established under the Convention,[111] placing, as it has noted, a 'proactive non-judicial mechanism alongside the existing reactive judicial mechanisms of the European Commission and European Court of Human Rights'.[112] The Committee is given a fact-finding and reporting function. The Committee is empowered to carry out both visits of a periodic nature and ad hoc visits to places of detention in order to examine the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty with a view to strengthening, if necessary, the protection of such persons from torture and from inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Periodic visits are carried out to all contracting parties on a regular basis, while ad hoc visits are organised when they appear to the Committee to be required in the circumstances.[113] Thus periodic visits are planned in advance.[114] The real innovation of the Convention, however, lies in the competence of the Committee to visit places of detention when the situation so warrants.[115] When the Committee is not in session, the Bureau (i.e. the President and Vice-President of the Committee)[116] may in cases of urgency decide, on the Committee's behalf, on the carrying out of such an ad hoc visit.[117] States parties agree to permit visits to any place within their jurisdiction where persons are deprived of their liberty by a public [110] The Committee established under the Convention described its function in terms of strengthening 'the cordon sanitaire that separates acceptable and unacceptable treatment or behaviour': see First General Report, CPT (91) 3, para. 3.

[111] See Resolution DH (89) 26 of the Committee of Ministers adopted on 19 September 1989 for the election of the members of the Committee. Note that under Protocol No. 2 to the Convention, the members of the Committee may be re-elected twice (rather than once as specified in article 5). The Protocol came into force in March 2002.

[112] See Fifth General Report, CPT/Inf (95) 10, 1995, p. 3.

[113] See articles 1 and 7. See also the Rules of Procedure of the Committee, 1989, CPT/Inf (89) 2, especially Rules 29–35. The Rules have been amended on a number of occasions, the most recent being 12 March 1997. See also Seventeenth General Report, 2007, CPT/Inf (2007) 39, p. 14.

[114] Note that in 2001, 17 visits took place, CPT/Inf (2002) 15. By January 2003, 146 visits had taken place, 98 periodic and 48 ad hoc: see www.cpt.coe.int/en/about.htm. In the period August 2006 to July 2007, the Committee made periodic visits to ten states and ad hoc visits to six states: see Seventeenth General Report, 2007, CPT/Inf (2007) 39, pp. 20 ff.

[115] A significant number of ad hoc visits have been made, e.g. to Turkey and Northern Ireland in the early years of operation of the Committee: see Murdoch, 'Work of the Council of Europe's Torture Committee', p. 227. In 2001, for example, ad hoc visits were made to Albania, Spain, Russia, Romania, Macedonia and Turkey, CPT/Inf (2002) 15, while in 2006–7 ad hoc visits were made to Greece, Hungary, Russia, Serbia (Kosovo), Spain and Turkey.

[116] Rule 10 of the Rules of Procedure.

[117] Rule 31 of the Rules of Procedure.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

authority,[118] although in exceptional circumstances, the competent authorities of the state concerned may make representations to the Committee against a visit at the time or place proposed on grounds of national defence, public safety, serious disorder, the medical condition of a person or because an urgent interrogation relating to a serious crime is in progress.[119] The Committee may interview in private persons deprived of their liberty and may communicate freely with any person whom it believes can supply relevant information.[120]

After each visit, the Committee draws up a report for transmission to the party concerned. That report will remain confidential[121] unless and until the state party concerned decides to make it public.[122] Where a state refuses to co-operate or to improve matters in the light of recommendations made, the Committee may decide, after the state has had an opportunity to make known its views, by a two-thirds majority to issue a public statement.[123] The Committee makes an annual general report on its activities to the Committee of Ministers, which is transmitted to the Parliamentary Assembly and made public.[124] The relationship between the approach taken by the Committee as revealed in its published reports and the practice under the European Human Rights Convention is [118] Article 2. [119] Article 9(1). [120] Article 8.

[121] As does the information gathered by the Committee in relation to a visit and its consultations with the contracting state concerned, article 11(1).

[122] See Rules 40–2. Most reports have been published together with the comments of contracting states upon them: see e.g. Report to the Government of Liechtenstein, CPT/Inf (95) 7 and the Interim Report of the Government of Liechtenstein, CPT/Inf (95) 8; Report to the Government of Italy, CPT/Inf (95) 1 and the Response of the Government of Italy, CPT/Inf (95) 2; Report to the Government of the UK, CPT/Inf (94) 17 and the Response of the Government of the UK, CPT/Inf (94) 18; Report to the Government of Greece, CPT/Inf (94) 20 and the Response of the Government of Greece, CPT/Inf (94) 21. The Fifth General Report of the Committee revealed that twenty-one of the thirty-seven visit reports had been published and that there was good reason to believe that most of the remaining sixteen would be published soon, CPT/Inf (95) 10, p. 6. According to its 12th Report covering 2001, 91 of the 129 visit reports so far drawn up had been placed in the public domain. On 6 February 2002, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe 'encourage[d] all Parties to the Convention to authorise publication, at the earliest opportunity, of all CPT visit reports and of their responses', CPT/Inf (2002) 15. See also CPT/Inf (2007), Appendix 4.

[123] Article 10(2). See e.g. the public statements concerning police detention conditions in Turkey, CPT/Inf (93) 1, paras. 21 and 37. The situation concerning Chechnya, Russia, has also led to public statements being made in 2001, 2003 and 2007: see e.g. CPT/Inf (2002) 15, Appendix 6 and CPT/Inf (2007), Appendix 9.

[124] Article 12. This is subject to the rules of confidentiality in article 11. Note that the Committee reports also include general substantive sections for the general guidance of states: see, for a collection of these, The CPT Standards, CPT/Inf/E (2002) 1.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

particularly interesting and appears to demonstrate that the Committee has adopted a more flexible attitude to issues relating to detention and ill-treatment.[125]

The Council of Europe Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities[126]

The question of minorities is addressed in the European Convention on Human Rights only in terms of one possible ground of prohibited discrimination stipulated in article 14. However, the Council of Europe has been dealing with the issue of minorities in a more vigorous manner in more recent years. Resolution 192 (1988) of the Standing Conference of Local and Regional Authorities of Europe proposed the text of a European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages, while Recommendation 1134 (1990) of the Parliamentary Assembly on the Rights of Minorities called for either a protocol to the European Convention or a special convention on this topic.[127] The Committee of Ministers adopted on 22 June 1992 the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages.[128] Under this Charter, a variety of measures to promote the use of regional or minority languages is suggested, for example, in the fields of education, court proceedings, public services, media, cultural facilities, economic and social life and transfrontier exchanges. Implementation is by periodic reports to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe in a form prescribed by the Committee of Ministers.[129] Such reports are examined by a committee of experts,[130] composed of one member per contracting party, nominated by the party concerned, appointed for a period of six years and eligible for re-appointment.[131] Bodies or associations legally established in a party may draw the attention of the committee of experts to matters relating to the undertakings entered into by that party and, on the basis of states' reports, the committee will itself report to the Committee of Ministers. The committee of experts' report may be accompanied by the comments which the parties have been requested to make and may also contain the proposals of the committee of experts to the Committee of Ministers for [125] See e.g. Murdoch, 'Work of the Council of Europe's Torture Committee', pp. 238 ff.

[126] See generally, P. Thornberry and M. Estebanez, The Council of Europe and Minorities, Strasbourg, 1994, and G. Pentasugglia, Minorities in International Law, Strasbourg, 2002.
[127] See also Recommendations 1177 (1992) and 1201 (1993).
[128] It came into force in March 1998.
[129] Article 15. See e.g. the reports by Germany, MIN-LANG/PR (2000) 1 and by the UK, MIN-LANG/PR (2002) 5.
[130] Article 16. See e.g. the report on Germany, ECRML (2002) 1. [131] Article 17.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the preparation of such recommendations of the latter body to one or more of the parties as may be required.[132] The Secretary-General also makes a two-yearly detailed report to the Parliamentary Assembly on the application of the Charter.[133] The Committee of Ministers may invite any non-member state of the Council of Europe to accede to the Charter.[134]

At the Vienna Meeting of Heads of State and Government of the Council of Europe in October 1993, it was decided that a legal instrument would be drafted with regard to the protection of national minorities, and appendix II of the Vienna Declaration instructed the Committee of Ministers to work upon both a framework convention on national minorities and a draft protocol on cultural rights complementing the European Convention on Human Rights.[135] The Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities was adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 10 November 1994 and opened for signature on 1 February 1995.[136] The Framework Convention underlines the right to equality before the law of persons belonging to national minorities and prohibits discrimination based on belonging to a national minority. Contracting parties to the Framework Convention undertake to adopt, where necessary, adequate measures to promote in all areas of economic, social, political and cultural life, full and effective equality between persons belonging to a national minority and to the majority.[137] The parties agree to promote the conditions necessary for persons belonging to minorities to develop their culture and to preserve the essential elements of their identity, namely their religion, language, traditions and cultural heritage.[138] The collective expression of individual human rights of persons belonging to national minorities is to be respected,[139] while in areas inhabited by such persons traditionally [132] See e.g. the Committee of Ministers Recommendations to the Netherlands, RecChL (2001) 1 and to Germany, RecChL (2002) 1.

[133] Article 16. See the first biennial report in 2000, Doc. 8879, and the second in 2002, Doc. 9540.

[134] Article 20.

[135] See 14 HRLJ, 1993, pp. 373 ff. See also the Explanatory Report to the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities, 1995. An ad hoc Committee for the Protection of National Minorities (CAHMIN) was established. Note that in January 1996, it was decided to suspend the work of the Committee on the drafting of an Additional Protocol: see CAHMIN (95) 22 Addendum, 1996.

[136] The Convention came into force on 1 February 1998.

[137] Article 4.

[138] Article 5. The parties also agree to refrain from assimilation policies and practices where this is against the will of persons belonging to national minorities.

[139] E.g. the freedoms of peaceful assembly, association, expression and thought, conscience and religion, article 7. See also articles 8 and 9.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

or in substantial numbers, the parties shall endeavour to ensure as far as possible the condition which would make it possible to use the minority languages in relations between those persons and the administrative authorities.[140] By article 15, the parties agree to refrain from measures which alter the geographic proportions of the population in areas inhabited by persons belonging to national minorities.

The implementation of this Framework Convention is monitored by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe[141] with the assistance of an advisory committee of experts[142] and on the basis of periodic reports from contracting states.[143] The Committee of Ministers adopted rules on monitoring arrangements in 1997[144] and the Advisory Committee started operating in June 1998. The Committee examines state reports,[145] which are made public by the Council of Europe upon receipt from the state party, and prepares an opinion on the measures taken by that party.[146] The Committee may request additional information from a state party or other sources, including individuals and NGOs, but cannot deal with individual complaints. It may hold meetings with governments, and has to do so if the government concerned so requests, and may hold meetings with others than the governments concerned, during the course of country visits. Having received the opinion of the Advisory Committee, the Committee of Ministers will take the final decisions (called conclusions) concerning the adequacy of the measures taken by the state party. Where appropriate, it may also adopt recommendations in respect of the state party concerned. The conclusions and recommendations of the Committee of Ministers shall be made public upon their adoption, together with [140] Upon request and where such a request corresponds to a real need, article 10(2). Similarly with regard to the display of traditional local names, street names and other topographical indications intended for the public in the minority language, article 11(3), and with regard to adequate opportunities for being taught the minority language or for receiving instruction in that language, article 14(2).

[141] Article 24. Note that parties which are not members of the Council of Europe shall participate in the implementation mechanism according to modalities to be determined. Accordingly, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia became a party to the Convention on 11 May 2001 and its first report became due on 1 September 2002.

[142] Article 26. [143] Article 25. The first reports became due on 1 February 1999.

[144] Resolution (97) 10 and see H(1998)005 rev.11.

[145] Guidelines for such reports have been issued by the Committee: see e.g. ACFC/INF(2003)001 and ACFC/INF(1998)001.

[146] See, for a list of opinions delivered as of January 2003, ACFC(2002)Opinions bil. See also the Collection of Resolutions and Recommendations Referred to by the Advisory Committee in its Opinions, 2007 and the Activities of the Council of Europe in the Field of the Protection of National Minorities, DH-MIN (2005) 003.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

any comments the state party may have submitted in respect of the opinion delivered by the Advisory Committee. The opinion of the Advisory Committee is as a rule made public together with the conclusions of the Committee of Ministers. A first cycle of monitoring began in 1998 with thirty-four opinions adopted by the Advisory Committee and twenty-nine resolutions adopted by the Committee of Ministers. A second cycle of monitoring began in February 2004.

While the range of rights accorded to members of minorities is clearly greater than that envisaged in UN instruments,[147] its ambit is narrower in being confined to 'national minorities'. The Framework Convention itself provides no definition of that term since no consensus existed as to its meaning,[148] although Recommendation 1201 (1993) adopted by the Parliamentary Assembly and reaffirmed in Recommendation 1255 (1995) suggests that it refers to persons who reside on the territory of the state concerned and are citizens of it; maintain longstanding, firm and lasting ties with that state; display distinctive ethnic, cultural, religious or linguistic characteristics; are sufficiently representative, although smaller in numbers than the rest of the population of that state or of a region of that state; and are motivated by a concern to preserve together that which constitutes their common identity, including their culture, their traditions, their religion or their language. The narrowing of regard to persons belonging to national minorities who are citizens of the state concerned is perhaps a matter of concern.[149] The issue of the protection of minority rights is the subject of continuing discussion as to both their nature and scope.[150]

The Council of Europe has adopted measures with regard to other areas of human rights activities of some relevance to the above issues.[151]

[147] See above, p. 293.

[148] See the Explanatory Report to the Convention, which states that, 'It was decided to adopt a pragmatic approach, based on the recognition that at this stage, it is impossible to arrive at a definition capable of mustering general support of all Council of Europe member States', H(1995)010, para. 12. The European Court of Human Rights has also referred to the problem of defining national minorities: see Gorzelik v. Poland, Judgment of 20 December 2001, para. 62.

[149] See e.g. R. Higgins, 'Minority Rights Discrepancies and Divergencies Between the International Covenant and the Council of Europe System' in Liber Amicorum for Henry Schermers, The Hague, 1994.

[150] See e.g. Parliamentary Assembly Recommendation Rec 1492 (2001) and the response of the Advisory Committee dated 14 September 2001.

[151] See e.g. the European Charter of Local Self-Government, 1985; the European Convention on the Participation of Foreigners in Public Life at Local Level, 1992; the European Outline Convention on Transfrontier Co-operation between Territorial Communities or

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The European Union[152]

The Treaty of Rome, 1957 established the European Economic Community and is not of itself a human rights treaty. However, the European Court of Justice has held that subsumed within Community law are certain relevant unwritten general principles of law, emanating from several sources.[153] The Court noted in the Internationale Handelsgesellschaft case[154] that 'respect for fundamental rights forms an integral part of the general principles of law protected by the Court of Justice',[155] while in Nold v. Commission,[156] the Court emphasised that measures incompatible with fundamental rights recognised and protected by the constitutions of member states could not be upheld. It was also held that international treaties for the protection of human rights on which member states have collaborated, or of which they are signatories, could supply guidelines which should be followed within the framework of Community law.[157] The European Convention on Human Rights is clearly the prime example of this and it has been referred to on several occasions by Authorities, 1980; the European Convention on the Legal Status of Migrant Workers, 1977 and the European Convention on the Exercise of Children's Rights, 1995.

[152] See e.g. D. Chalmers and A. Tomkins, European Union Public Law, Cambridge, 2007; European Fundamental Rights and Freedoms (ed. D. Ehlers), Berlin, 2007; The European Union and Human Rights (eds. N. Neuwahl and A. Rosas), Dordrecht, 1995; The EU and Human Rights (ed. P. Alston), Oxford, 1999; L. Betten and N. Grief, EU Law and Human Rights, London, 1998; S. Weatherill and P. Beaumont, EU Law, 3rd edn, London, 1999; T. C. Hartley, The Foundations of European Community Law, 6th edn, Oxford, 2007; L. N. Brown and T. Kennedy, The Court of Justice of the European Communities, 4th edn, London, 1994, chapter 15; M. Mendelson, 'The European Court of Justice and Human Rights', 1 Yearbook of European Law, 1981, p. 126, and H. Schermers, 'The European Communities Bound by Fundamental Human Rights', 27 Common Market Law Review, 1990, p. 249.

[153] See e.g. Stauder v. City of Ulm [1969] ECR 419; Internationale Handelsgesellschaft [1970] ECR 1125; Nold v. EC Commission [1974] ECR 491; Kirk [1984] ECR 2689 and Johnston v. Chief Constable of the RUC [1986] 3 CMLR 240. See also the Joint Declaration by the European Parliament, the Council and the Commission of 5 April 1979, Official Journal, 1977, C103/1; the Joint Declaration Against Racism and Xenophobia, 11 June 1986, Official Journal, 1986, C158/1 and the European Parliament's Declaration of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms, 1989, EC Bulletin, 4/1989.

[154] [1970] ECR 1125, 1134.

[155] See also Re Accession of the European Community to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms 108 ILR, p. 225 and Kremzow v. Austria [1997] ECR I-2629; 113 ILR, p. 264.

[156] [1974] ECR 491, 507.

[157] See e.g. Hauer v. Land Rheinland-Pfaltz [1979] ECR 3727 and SPUC v. Grogan [1991] ECR I-4685.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the Court.[158] Indeed the question has also been raised and considered without resolution as to whether the Community should itself accede to the European Convention on Human Rights.[159]

The Treaty on European Union (the Maastricht Treaty), 1992 amended the Treaty of Rome and established the European Union, founded on the European Communities supplemented by the policies and forms of co-operation established under the 1992 Treaty. Article F(2) of Title I noted that the Union 'shall respect fundamental rights', as guaranteed by the European Convention on Human Rights and as they result from common constitutional traditions, 'as general principles of Community law'. Under article K.1 of Title VI, the member states agreed that asylum, immigration, drug, fraud, civil and criminal judicial co-operation, customs co-operation and certain forms of police co-operation would be regarded as 'matters of common interest', which under article K.2 would be dealt with in compliance with the European Convention on Human Rights and the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, 1951. The provisions under Title V on the Common Foreign and Security Policy may also impact upon human rights, so that, for instance, the European Union sent its own human rights observers to Rwanda within this framework.[160] From the early 1990s, the European Communities began to include human rights references in its trade and aid policies, formalised in article 177(2), and from the mid-1990s, all trade and co-operation agreements contained provisions concerning respect for human rights.[161]

The Treaty of Amsterdam, which came into force on 1 May 1999, inserted a new article 6 into the Treaty on European Union, which stated that the European Union 'is founded on the principles of liberty, democracy, [158] See e.g. Rutili [1975] ECR 1219; Valsabbia v. Commission [1980] ECR 907; Kirk [1984] ECR 2689; Dow Chemical Ibérica v. Commission [1989] ECR 3165; ERT [1991] ECR I-2925 and X v. Commission [1992] ECR II-2195 and 16 HRLJ, 1995, p. 54. Note also the Joint Declaration on Human Rights, 1977, by which the three EC institutions undertook to respect the European Convention on Human Rights, OJ 1977 C103/1.

[159] See e.g. 'Accession of the Communities to the European Convention on Human Rights', EC Bulletin, Suppl. 2/79. Note that the President of the European Court of Human Rights suggested in January 2003 that the EU should accede to the Convention: see www.echr.coe.int/eng/Edocs/SpeechWildhaber.htm.

[160] See J. Van Der Kaauw, 'European Union', 13 NQHR, 1995, p. 173. Note, however, that the European Court of Justice held in Opinion 2/94 that the EC had no competence to accede to the European Convention as it did not have any general human rights competence, [1996] ECR I-1759.

[161] See e.g. E. Riedel and M. Will, 'Human Rights Clauses in External Agreements' in Alston, The EU and Human Rights, p. 723.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law, principles which are common to the Member States', and provided that the Union 'shall respect fundamental rights as guaranteed by' the European Convention on Human Rights.[162] Member states violating these principles in a 'serious and persistent' manner risk the suspension of certain of their rights deriving from the application of the Union Treaty.[163] In addition, candidate countries have to respect these principles to join the Union.[164] The European Union adopted the Charter of Fundamental Rights in December 2000. This instrument, for example, notes the principle of the equality before the law of all people,[165] prohibits discrimination on any ground,[166] provides for a number of workers' rights and citizens' rights, and requests the Union to protect cultural, religious and linguistic diversity. Quite what the legal status of this Charter was[167] and how it related to the Strasbourg system were open questions.[168] However, Advocates-General of the European Court of Justice have been referring to the Charter with great frequency as part of a shared set of values within the Union,[169] as has the Court of First Instance[170] and more recently the European Court of Justice.[171] Further, the Lisbon Treaty, 2007 (which is not as yet in force) provides for article 6 to be revised so that the Charter would have legally binding force[172] and [162] See the discussion by the European Court of Justice of these principles in the context of the European Arrest Warrant, C-303/05, Advocaten voor de Wereld, Judgment of 3 May 2007. See A. Hinarejos, 'Recent Human Rights Developments in the EU Courts', 7 Human Rights Law Review, 2007, p. 793.

[163] Article 7. See also the amendments introduced by the Nice Treaty, 2001.

[164] Article 49. See also the Copenhagen Criteria 1993, including stable institutions guaranteeing democracy, the rule of law, human rights and the protection of minorities, EC Bulletin 6-1993, I.13.

[165] Article 20. [166] Article 21.

[167] Note the official UK view that it is a political declaration and not legally binding, 365 HC Deb., col. 614W, 27 March 2001; UKMIL, 72 BYIL, 2001, p. 564.

[168] However, article 52(3) of the Charter specifies that any rights that 'correspond' to those already articulated by the Human Rights Convention shall have the same meaning and scope.

[169] See e.g. BECTU [2001] ECR I-4881 and Netherlands v. Parliament and Council [2001] ECR I-7079.

[170] See e.g. Jégo-Quéré v. Commission [2002] ECR II-2365.

[171] See e.g. European Parliament v. Council [2006] ECR I-5769 and C-411/04 P, Salzgitter Mannesmann v. Commission, Judgment of 25 January 2007.

[172] Although a Protocol to the treaty provides that the Charter does not extend the ability of the Court of Justice to find the law or practices of the UK and Poland to be inconsistent with the Charter and that no new justiciable rights applicable to these states have been created, and that a provision of the Charter referring to national laws and practices shall

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

opens the way for the accession of the EU to the European Convention on Human Rights.

The Union, more generally, seeks in some measure to pay regard to human rights as internationally defined, in its activities.[173] As noted above, there appears now to be a formal policy, for example, to include a human rights clause in co-operation agreements with third countries, which incorporates a provision for the suspension of the agreement in case of a breach of the essential elements of the agreement in question, including respect for human rights.[174] The European Parliament is also active in consideration of human rights issues.[175]

The OSCE (Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe)[176]

What was initially termed the 'Helsinki process', and which more formally was referred to as the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, developed out of the Final Act of the Helsinki meeting, which was signed on 1 August 1975 after two years of discussions by the representatives of the then thirty-five participating states.[177] The Final Act[178] dealt primarily with questions of international security and state relations, and was seen only apply to the UK and Poland to the extent that the rights or principles in the Charter are recognised in the laws and practices of these two states.

[173] See e.g. the Commission Report on the Implementation of Actions to Promote Human Rights and Democracy, 1994, COM 9(5) 191, 1995.

[174] See e.g. 13 NQHR, 1995, pp. 276 and 460.

[175] See e.g. the Annual Reports of the Parliament on Respect for Human Rights in the European Community, www.europarl.europa.eu/comparl/afet/droi/annual_reports.htm.

[176] See, for example, A. Bloed, 'Monitoring the CSCE Human Dimension: In Search of its Effectiveness' in Monitoring Human Rights in Europe (eds. Bloed et al.), Dordrecht, 1993, p. 45; The CSCE (ed. A. Bloed), Dordrecht, 1993; Human Rights, International Law and the Helsinki Accord (ed. T. Buergenthal), Montclair, NJ, 1977; J. Maresca, To Helsinki – The CSCE 1973–75, Durham, 1987; T. Buergenthal, 'The Helsinki Process: Birth of a Human Rights System' in Human Rights in the World Community (eds. R. Claude and B. Weston), 2nd edn, Philadelphia, 1992, p. 256; Essays on Human Rights in the Helsinki Process (eds. A. Bloed and P. Van Dijk), Dordrecht, 1985; A. Bloed and P. Van Dijk, The Human Dimension of the Helsinki Process, Dordrecht, 1991; D. McGoldrick, 'Human Rights Developments in the Helsinki Process', 39 ICLQ, 1990, p. 923, and McGoldrick, 'The Development of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe – From Process to Institution' in Legal Visions of the New Europe (eds. B. S. Jackson and D. McGoldrick), London, 1993, p. 135. See also the OSCE Handbook published regularly and available at www.osce.org/publications/handbook/files/handbook.pdf.

[177] I.e. all the states of Western and Eastern Europe, except Albania, plus the United States and Canada.

[178] For the text, see, for example, 14 ILM, 1975, p. 1292.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

as the method by which the post-war European territorial settlement would be finally accepted. In the Western view, the Final Act constituted a political statement and accordingly could not be regarded as a binding treaty. Nonetheless, the impact of the Final Act on developments in Europe has far exceeded the impact of most legally binding treaties.

The Final Act set out in 'Basket I' a list of ten fundamental principles dealing with relations between participating states, principle 7 of which refers to 'respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief'. 'Basket III' dealt with Co-operation in Humanitarian and Other Fields and covered family reunification, free flow of information and cultural and educational co-operation.[179]

At the third 'follow-up' meeting at Vienna in January 1989, great progress regarding human rights occurred,[180] primarily as a result of the changed attitudes in the then USSR and in Eastern Europe, especially as regards the extent of the detailed provisions and the recognition of concrete rights and duties. The part entitled 'Questions Relating to Security in Europe' contained a Principles section, in which inter alia the parties confirmed their respect for human rights and their determination to guarantee their effective exercise. Paragraphs 13–27 contain in a detailed and concrete manner a list of human rights principles to be respected, ranging from due process rights to equality and non-discrimination and the rights of religious communities, and from the rights of minorities to the rights of refugees. The provision in which states agree to respect the right of their citizens to contribute actively, either individually or collectively, to the promotion and protection of human rights, constitutes an important innovation of great practical significance, as does the comment that states will respect the right of persons to observe and promote the implementation of CSCE provisions.

The part entitled 'Co-operation in Humanitarian and Other Fields' included an important section on Human Contacts in which the right to leave one's country and return thereto was reaffirmed. It was decided that all outstanding human contacts applications would be resolved within six months and that thereafter there would be a series of regular reviews. Family reunion issues were to be dealt with in as short a time as possible and in normal practice within one month. The parties committed [179] 'Basket II' covered co-operation in the fields of economics, science, technology and the environment.

[180] See the text of the Concluding Document in 10 HRLJ, 1989, p. 270.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

themselves to publishing all laws and statutory regulations concerning movement by individuals within their territory and travel between states, an issue that had caused a great deal of controversy, while the right of members of religions to establish and maintain personal contacts with each other in their own and other countries, inter alia through travel and participation in religious events, was proclaimed.[181]

In a further significant development, the Vienna Concluding Document contained a part entitled 'Human Dimension of the CSCE' in which some implementation measures were provided for. The participating states decided to exchange information and to respond to requests for information and to representations made to them by other participating states on questions relating to the human dimension of the CSCE. Bilateral meetings would be held with other participating states that so request, in order to examine such questions, while such questions could be brought to the attention of other participating states through diplomatic channels or raised at further 'follow-up' meetings or at meetings of the Conference on the Human Dimension. The procedure is confidential.[182]

The Concluding Document of the Copenhagen meeting in 1990[183] constituted a further crucial stage in the development of the process. The participating states proclaimed support for the principles of the rule of law, free and fair elections, democracy, pluralism and due process rights. Paragraph 1 of Chapter 1 emphasised that the protection and promotion of human rights was one of the basic purposes of government. A variety of specific rights, including the freedoms of expression, assembly, association, thought, conscience and religion, and the rights to leave one's own country and return and to receive legal assistance, the rights of the child, the rights of national minorities and the prohibition of torture are proclaimed. Time-limits were imposed with regard to the Vienna Human Dimension mechanism.

[181] Paragraphs 18 and 32.

[182] The mechanism was used over 100 times between 1989 and 1992: see Bloed and Van Dijk, Human Dimension, p. 79, and McGoldrick, 'Development of the CSCE', p. 139. See also H. Tretter, 'Human Rights in the Concluding Document of the Vienna Follow-up Meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe of January 15, 1989', 10 HRLJ, 1989, p. 257; R. Brett, The Development of the Human Dimension Machinery, Essex University, 1992, and A. Bloed and P. Van Dijk, 'Supervisory Mechanisms for the Human Dimension of the CSCE: Its Setting-up in Vienna, its Present Functioning and its Possible Development towards a General Procedure for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes' in Bloed and Van Dijk, Human Dimension, p. 74.

[183] See 8 NQHR, 1990, p. 302 and Cm 1324 (1990).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Charter of Paris, adopted at the Summit of Heads of State and of Government in 1990,[184] called for more regular consultations at ministerial and senior official level and marked an important stage in the institutionalisation of the process, with a Council of Foreign Ministers, a Committee of Senior Officials and a secretariat being established. The section on Human Rights, Democracy and Rule of Law consisted of a list of human rights, including the right to effective remedies, full respect for which constituted 'the bedrock' for the construction of 'the new Europe'. The Moscow Human Dimension meeting of 1991[185] described the Human Dimension mechanism as an essential achievement of the CSCE process and it was strengthened. The time-limits provided for at Copenhagen were reduced[186] and a resource list of experts was to be established,[187] with three experts being appointed by each participating state in order to allow for CSCE missions to be created to assist states requesting such help in facilitating the resolution of a particular question or problem related to the human dimension of the CSCE. The observations of the missions of experts together with the comments of the state concerned were to be forwarded to CSCE states within three weeks of the submission of the observations to the state concerned and might be discussed by the Committee of Senior Officials, who could consider follow-up measures.[188]

By the time of the Helsinki Conference in 1992, the number of participating states had risen to fifty-two,[189] the political climate in Europe having changed dramatically after the establishment of democratic regimes in Eastern Europe, the ending of the Soviet Union and the rise of tensions in Yugoslavia and other parts of Eastern Europe. The participating states strongly reaffirmed that Human Dimension commitments were matters of direct and legitimate concern to all participating states and did not belong exclusively to the internal affairs of the states concerned, while [184] See 30 ILM, 1991, p. 190. [185] See 30 ILM, 1991, p. 1670 and Cm 1771 (1991).

[186] So that, for example, the written responses to requests for information were to occur within ten days, and the bilateral meetings were to take place as a rule within one week of the date of request, Section I(1).

[187] The Council of Ministers of the CSCE subsequently decided that the Office of Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (formerly the Office for Free Elections) would be the appropriate institution establishing the resource list.

[188] A variety of missions have now been employed in, for example, Nagorno-Karabakh, Georgia, Chechnya, Moldova and Croatia. See generally OSCE Handbook, Vienna, 2007.

[189] There are currently fifty-six participating states. Note also the report entitled 'Common Purposes: Towards a More Effective OSCE' produced by a Panel of Eminent Persons in 2005 and the new OSCE Rules of Procedure adopted in 2006: see OSCE Handbook.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

gross violations of such commitments posed a special threat to stability. This reference of the link between human rights and international stability was to increase in the following years. At Helsinki, the CSCE was declared to be a regional arrangement in the sense of Chapter VIII of the UN Charter.[190] The post of High Commissioner on National Minorities was established in order to provide early warning and early action where appropriate, concerning tensions relating to national minority issues that have the potential to develop into a conflict within the CSCE area affecting peace, stability or relations between participating states.[191] The High Commissioner, who acts in confidence, was also mandated to collect relevant information and make visits. Where the High Commissioner concludes that there is a prima facie risk of potential conflict in such situations, an early warning is to be issued, which will be promptly conveyed by the Chairman-in-Office of the CSCE to the Committee of Senior Officials. The High Commissioner is able to make recommendations to participating states regarding the treatment of national minorities.[192] In addition, a number of general recommendations have been made with regard to Roma[193] and other matters.[194]

As far as the Human Dimension mechanism was concerned, the Conference decided to permit any participating state to provide information on situations and cases that are the subject of requests for information, and it was also decided that in years in which a review conference was not being held, a three-week meeting at expert level of participating states would be organised in order to review implementation of the CSCE Human

[190] See further below, p. 1273.

[191] See Section II of the Helsinki Decisions. Note that the High Commissioner deals with situations and not with individual complaints. See also Quiet Diplomacy in Action: The OSCE High Commissioner on National Minorities (ed. W. A. Kemp), The Hague, 2001; K. Drzewicki, 'The OSCE High Commissioner on National Minorities – Confronting Traditional and Emerging Challenges' in OSCE and Minorities. Assessment and Priorities (ed. S. Parzymies), Warsaw, 2007, and J. Packer, 'The OSCE High Commissioner on National Minorities: Pyrometer, Prophylactic, Pyrosvestis' in Minorities, Peoples and Self-Determination (eds. N. Ghanea and A. Xanthaki), Leiden, 2005, p. 249.

[192] See generally www.osce.org/hcnm/documents.html.

[193] See www.osce.org/documents/hcnm/2000/03/241_en.pdf.

[194] See e.g. the Hague Recommendation on Education Rights of National Minorities, 1996; the Oslo Recommendations on Linguistic Rights of National Minorities, 1998; the Lund Recommendations on Effective Participation of National Minorities in Public Life, 1999; the Guidelines on the Use of Minority Languages in the Broadcast Media, 2003, and the Recommendations on Policing in Multi-Ethnic Societies, 2006: see www.osce.org/hcnm/documents.html.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Dimension commitments. In addition, it was provided that the Office of Democratic Institutions and Human Rights would begin organising Human Dimension seminars.[195]

The next major step in the process took place at Budapest at the end of 1994.[196] The CSCE, in recognition of the institutional changes underway in recent years, changed its name to the OSCE (the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe) and took a number of steps in the field of security and conflict management. The Conference emphasised that human rights, the rule of law and democratic institutions represented a crucial contribution to conflict prevention and that the protection of human rights constituted an 'essential foundation of democratic civil society',[197] and it was decided that Human Dimension issues would be regularly dealt with by the Permanent Council,[198] with the Office of Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (based in Warsaw) acting as the main institution of the Human Dimension in an advisory capacity to the organisation, with enhanced roles in election monitoring and the dispatch of missions.[199] States were encouraged to use the Human Dimension mechanism (now termed the Moscow Mechanism) and the Chairman-in-Office was encouraged to inform the Permanent Council of serious cases of alleged non-implementation of Human Dimension commitments. Further, an OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media was appointed in 1997 and the role increased in 2004 to include the task of combating the misuse of hate speech regulations in order to silence legitimate dissent and alternative opinion.[200] Thus, step by step over recent years, the Helsinki process has transformed itself into an institutional structure with a particular interest in describing and requiring the implementation of human rights.[201]

[195] Section VI of the Helsinki Decisions and www.osce.org/odihr/.

[196] See 5 HRLJ, 1994, p. 449.

[197] Section VIII of the Budapest Decisions.

[198] This group is responsible for the day-to-day operations of the OSCE and its members are the permanent representatives of the member states meeting weekly. It is based in Vienna.

[199] Note also that the Monitoring Section within the ODIHR analyses human rights developments and compliance with Human Dimension commitments by participating states and alerts the Chairman-in-Office to serious deteriorations in respect for human rights.

[200] See OSCE Handbook, p. 34 and the Sofia Decision 12, para. 16, 2004.

[201] An OSCE Advisory Panel for the Prevention of Torture was established in 1998: see e.g. the Final Report of the Supplementary Human Dimension Meeting on Human Rights and Inhuman Treatment and Punishment 2000, www.osce.org/documents/odihr/2000/03/1787_en.pdf, and a restructured Advisory Panel of Experts on Freedom of Religion or Belief was established in 2000. Note that as a consequence of the Dayton Peace Agreement on Bosnia, 1995, it was agreed that the OSCE would supervise elections in that country and would closely monitor human rights throughout Bosnia and would

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The OSCE has also established a number of missions in order to help mitigate conflicts[202] and adopted a Treaty on Open Skies and a Convention on Conciliation and Arbitration within the OSCE in 1992. Although some overlay with the Council of Europe system does exist, the fact that a large proportion of participating states are now members of the Council of Europe obviates the most acute dangers inherent in differing human rights systems. Nevertheless, as the Council of Europe system moves beyond the strictly legal enforcement stage and as the OSCE develops and strengthens its institutional mechanisms, some overlapping is inevitable. However, in general terms, the OSCE system remains politically based and expressed, while the essence of the Council of Europe system remains juridically focused.

The CIS Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms[203]

The Commonwealth of Independent States, which links together the former Republics of the Soviet Union (with the exception of the three Baltic states), adopted a Convention on Human Rights in May 1995. Under this Convention, a standard range of rights is included, ranging from the right to life, liberty and security of person, equality before the judicial system, respect for private and family life, to freedom of religion, expression, assembly and the right to marry. The right to work is included (article 14) as is the right to social security, the right to education and the right of every minor child to special protective measures (article 17). The right of persons belonging to national minorities to express and develop their ethnic, linguistic, religious and cultural identity is protected (article 21), while everyone has the right to take part in public affairs, including voting (article 29). It is intended that the implementation of the Convention be monitored by the Human Rights Commission of the CIS (article 34). Under Section II of the Regulations of the Human Rights Commission, adopted in September 1993, states parties may raise human rights matters falling within the appoint an international human rights Ombudsman: see MC (5) Dec/1, 1995. The OSCE also has a role in Kosovo: see OSCE Handbook, p. 46.

[202] See OSCE Handbook, pp. 39 ff. Of particular importance, perhaps, is the Minsk Process, dealing with the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict, ibid., p. 76.

[203] See H/INF (95) 3, pp. 195 ff. See also the essays contained in 17 HRLJ, 1996 concerning the CIS and human rights.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Convention with other states parties and, if no satisfactory response is received within six months, the matter may be referred to the Commission. Domestic remedies need to be exhausted. Under Section III of the Regulations, the Commission may examine individual and collective applications submitted by any person or non-governmental organisation. The Convention entered into force on 11 August 1998 upon the third ratification.

Concerned with the level of protection afforded under this Convention (in particular the facts that the members of the Commission are appointed representatives of member states and the Commission implements the instrument by means of recommendations) and the problems of co-existence with the Council of Europe human rights system, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe adopted a resolution in 2001 calling upon member or applicant states which are also members of the CIS not to sign or ratify the CIS Convention. In addition, it recommended that those that already had should issue a legally binding declaration stating that the European Convention procedures would not be replaced or weakened through recourse to the CIS Convention procedures.[204]

The Human Rights Chamber of Bosnia and Herzegovina

The Chamber was established under Annex 6 of the Dayton Peace Agreement, 1995.[205] It consisted of fourteen members, eight of whom (not to be citizens of Bosnia or of any neighbouring state) were appointed by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe.[206] The Chamber considered alleged or apparent violations of human rights as provided in the European Convention on Human Rights, as well as alleged or apparent discrimination on any ground. Applications could be submitted by all persons or groups of persons, including by way of referral from the Ombudsman, claiming to be a victim of a violation or acting on behalf [204] Resolution 1249 (2001). See also recommendation 1519 (2001) stating that recourse to the CIS Commission should not be regarded as another procedure of international settlement within the meaning of article 35(2)b of the European Convention.

[205] As part of the Commission on Human Rights, the other part being the Ombudsman: see article II of Annex 6 of the Dayton Agreement.

[206] See resolutions (93)6 and (96)8. It should be noted that, at the time, Bosnia was not a member of the Council of Europe.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of victims who were deceased or missing.[207] There were a number of admissibility requirements similar to those of international human rights bodies, including the exhaustion of effective remedies and the submission of the application within six months of the date of any final decision. The Chamber normally sat in panels[208] of seven, four of whom were not to be citizens of Bosnia or a neighbouring state. In such cases, the decision could be reviewed by the full Chamber.[209] The President could refer to the plenary Chamber any application not yet placed before a panel where a serious question was raised as to the interpretation of the Agreement or any other international agreement therein referred to or it appeared that a final decision should be taken without delay or there appeared to be any other justified reason.[210] Decisions were final and binding.[211] The work of the Chamber, primarily concerning housing-related issues[212] and property rights,[213] steadily increased.[214] According to the Agreement Pursuant to Article XIV of Annex 6 of the Dayton Agreement, 2003, the mandate of the Human Rights Chamber expired on 31 December 2003. This Agreement established a five-member Human Rights Commission to operate during 2004 within the framework of the Constitutional Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina. After 1 January 2004, new cases alleging human rights violations were decided by the Constitutional Court.

[207] Article VIII.

[208] Two panels were set up under Rule 26 of the Rules of Procedure 1996, as amended in 1998 and 2001.

[209] Article X. [210] Rule 29.

[211] Article XI. The Chamber could also order provisional measures: see article X. These were made particularly in housing-related cases where eviction was threatened: see Annual Report 2000, p. 6.

[212] For example, the question of refugees seeking to regain possession of properties from which they had fled and which were being used to house other persons: see e.g. Bašić et al. v. Republika Srpska, Cases Nos. CH/98/752 et al., Decisions of the Human Rights Chamber August–December 1999, 2000, pp. 149 ff.

[213] For example, the question of restriction on withdrawal of foreign currency from bank accounts: see e.g. Poropat v. Bosnia, Cases Nos. CH/97/42, 52, 105 and 108, and the question of pensions from the Yugoslav army, Šećerbegović v. Bosnia, Cases Nos. CH/98/706, 740 and 776. Note in particular, however, the case of Boudellaa et al. v. Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Judgment of 11 October 2002, where in a case involving expulsion of Bosnian citizens of Algerian origin into the custody of the US on terrorism charges, the chamber found that the respondents had violated relevant human rights provisions.

[214] In 1996, 31 applications were received; 83 in 1997; 3,226 in 2000. By the end of 2000, a total of 6,675 applications had been registered and a total of 669 separate decisions reached: see Annual Report 2000, p. 3.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Inter-American Convention on Human Rights[215]

The Inter-American Convention, which came into force in 1978, contains a range of rights to be protected by the states parties.[216] The rights are fundamentally those protected by the European Convention, but with some interesting differences.[217] For example, under article 4 the right to life is deemed to start in general as from conception,[218] while the prohibition on torture and inhuman or degrading treatment is more extensively expressed and is in the context of the right to have one's physical, mental and moral integrity respected (article 5). In addition, articles 18 and 19 of the Inter-American Convention protect the right to a name and the specific rights of the child, article 23 provides for a general right to participation in the context of public affairs and article 26 provides for the progressive achievement of the economic, social and cultural rights contained in the Charter of the Organisation of American States, 1948, as amended by the Protocol of Buenos Aires, 1967.[219]

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights was created in 1959 and its first Statute approved by the OAS Council in 1960. In 1971, it was recognised as one of the principal organs of the OAS.[220] Under its [215] See generally J. M. Pasqualucci, The Practice and Procedure of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, Cambridge, 2003; H. J. Steiner, P. Alston and R. Goodman, International Human Rights in Context, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2008, pp. 1020 ff.; The Inter-American System of Human Rights (eds. D. J. Harris and S. Livingstone), Oxford, 1998; T. Buergenthal and D. Shelton, Protecting Human Rights in the Americas, 4th edn, Strasbourg, 1995; D. Shelton, 'The Inter-American Human Rights System' in Guide to International Human Rights Practice (ed. H. Hannum), 4th edn, Ardsley, 2004, p. 127, and T. Buergenthal and R. Norris, The Inter-American System, Dobbs Ferry, 5 vols., 1983–4. See also J. Rehman, International Human Rights Law, London, 2003, chapter 8; A. H. Robertson and J. G. Merrills, Human Rights in the World, 4th edn, London, 1996, chapter 6; S. Davidson, The Inter-American Court of Human Rights, Aldershot, 1992; S. Davidson, 'Remedies for Violations of the American Convention on Human Rights', 44 ICLQ, 1995, p. 405, and C. Grossman, 'Proposals to Strengthen the Inter-American System of Protection of Human Rights', 32 German YIL, 1990, p. 264.

[216] The Convention currently has twenty-four parties: see Annual Report of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights 2006, Washington, 2007.

[217] See e.g. J. Frowein, 'The European and the American Conventions on Human Rights – A Comparison', 1 HRLJ, 1980, p. 44. See also the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man, 1948.

[218] See e.g. 10 DR, 1977, p. 100.

[219] The Charter of the OAS has also been amended by the Protocols of Cartagena de Indias, 1985; Washington, 1992 and Managua, 1993.

[220] See e.g. C. Medina, 'The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights: Reflections on a Joint Venture', 12 HRQ, 1990, p. 439.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

original Statute, it had wide powers to promote the awareness and study of human rights in America and to make recommendations to member states. In 1965, the Statute was revised and the Commission's powers expanded to include inter alia the examination of communications. With the entry into force of the 1969 Convention in 1978, the Commission's position was further strengthened. The Commission has powers regarding all member states of the OAS, not just those that have ratified the Convention, and its Statute emphasises that the human rights protected include those enumerated in both the Convention and the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man.[221] Article 44 of the Convention provides that any person or group of persons or any non-governmental entity legally recognised in one or more of the OAS states may lodge petitions with the Commission alleging a violation of the Convention by a state party.[222] Contrary to the European Convention prior to its reform in Protocol 11, this right is automatic, whereas the right of inter-state complaint, again contrary to the European Convention, is under article 45 subject to a prior declaration recognising the competence of the Commission in this regard. The admissibility requirements in articles 46 and 47 are very broadly similar to those in the European Convention, as is the procedure laid down in article 48 and the drawing-up of a report in cases in which a friendly settlement has been achieved.[223] The Commission has dealt with a number of issues in the individual application procedure. During 1994, for example, just under 300 cases were opened and the total number of cases being processed by early 1995 was 641.[224] In 2006, 1,325 complaints were received.[225]

The Commission has a wide-ranging competence to publicise human rights matters by way of reports, studies, lectures and so forth. It may also make recommendations to states on the adoption of progressive measures in favour of human rights and conduct on-site investigations with [221] See generally the Basic Documents Pertaining to Human Rights in the Inter-American System, Washington, 1992. The competence of the Commission to hear petitions relates to the rights in the Convention for states parties and to rights in the American Declaration for states not parties to the Convention.

[222] Note that this is far broader than the equivalent article 34 of the European Convention, which requires that the applicant be a victim.

[223] Articles 49–51. The Secretary-General of the OAS has played the role assigned in the European Convention to the Committee of Ministers.

[224] See Annual Report 1994, p. 39. [225] Annual Report 2006, chapter III.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the consent of the state in question.[226] It provides states generally with advisory services in the human rights field and submits an annual report to the OAS General Assembly. Many special reports have been published dealing with human rights in particular states, e.g. Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Suriname and Uruguay.[227] The Commission has also devoted attention to certain themes, such as disappearances, torture, refugees and economic and social rights.[228] Special Rapporteurs have been appointed, for example, on the rights of indigenous peoples, the rights of women and the rights of the child.[229] The Inter-American Court of Human Rights has declared that the Commission also has the authority to determine that any domestic law of a state party has violated the obligations assumed in ratifying or acceding to the Convention[230] and that the Commission may consequentially recommend that states repeal or amend the law that is in violation of the Convention. For the Commission to be able to do this, the law may have come to its attention by any means, regardless of whether or not that law is applied in any specific case before the Commission.[231] In the light of this, the Commission in 1994, for example, made a thorough study of the contempt laws (leyes de desacato), and concluded that many of these do not meet international human rights standards. The Commission recommended that all member states of the OAS that have such laws should repeal or amend them to bring them into line with international instruments, and with the obligations acquired [226] In 1994, for example, with regard to Guatemala, Haiti, the Bahamas, Ecuador and Jamaica, see Annual Report 1994, pp. 21 ff., while in 2006 on-site visits were made to Haiti, Colombia, Bolivia, Dominican Republic, Brazil, Argentina and Peru, Annual Report 2006, chapter II C, paras. 34 ff.

[227] See Annual Report 1994, chapter IV, with regard to Colombia, Cuba, El Salvador and Guatemala, and Annual Report 2006, chapter IV, with regard to Colombia, Cuba, Haiti and Venezuela.

[228] See e.g. Annual Report 1992–3, pp. 539 ff. See also e.g. AG/Res.443, 1979, AG/Res.666, 1983, AG/Res.547, 1981, AG/Res.624, 1982 and AG/Res.644, 1983 (torture). In its Annual Report 2000, the Commission reported on migrant workers and made recommendations with regard to asylum and international crimes, and the promotion and protection of the mentally ill, chapter VI.

[229] Annual Report 2006, chapter II D, paras. 49 ff. See as to the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression, Annual Report 2006, vol. II.

[230] Some Powers of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, Advisory Opinion OC-13/93 of 16 July 1993, Series A, No. 13, para. 26.

[231] International Responsibility for Issuing and Applying Laws in Violation of the Convention, Advisory Opinion OC-14/94 of 9 December 1994, Series A, No. 14, para. 39.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

under those instruments, so as to harmonise their laws with human rights treaties.[232]

In 1985, the OAS General Assembly adopted the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture,[233] while in 1988 an Additional Protocol on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights was signed.[234] Under article 19 of this instrument, states parties agreed to provide periodic reports on the progressive measures undertaken to ensure respect for the rights set forth therein. Such reports go to the Secretary-General of the OAS, who sends them to the Inter-American Economic and Social Council and the Inter-American Council for Education, Science and Culture, with a copy to both the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and the specialised agencies of the inter-American system. Violations by a state party of the rights to organise and join trades unions (article 8(a)) and to education (article 13) 'may give rise' to application of the system of individual or inter-state petition under the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights.

A Protocol on the Abolition of the Death Penalty was adopted on 8 June 1990[235] and a Convention on Forced Disappearances of Persons was adopted on 9 June 1994.[236] Under article 13 of this Convention, states parties agree that the processing of petitions or communications presented to the Inter-American Commission alleging the forced disappearance of persons will be subject to the procedures established under the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights, the Statute and Regulations of the Commission and the Statute and Rules of the Court. Particular reference is made to precautionary measures.[237] Under article 14, when [232] Annual Report 1994, pp. 199 ff.

[233] This entered into force in February 1987. Under the Convention, states parties agree to inform the Inter-American Commission of measures taken in application of the Convention, and the Commission 'will endeavour in its annual report to analyse the existing situation in the member states of the Organisation of American States in regard to the prevention and elimination of torture', article 17.

[234] This came into force in November 1999. Eleven states parties were required for the Additional Protocol to come into force. See also L. Le Blanc, 'The Economic, Social and Cultural Rights Protocol to the American Convention and its Background', 10 NQHR, 1992, 130.

[235] This entered into force the following year. It currently has eight parties. See e.g. C. Cerna, 'US Death Penalty Tested Before the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights', 10 NQHR, 1992, p. 155.

[236] This entered into force in March 1996.

[237] Article 63(2) of the Convention states that in cases of extreme gravity and urgency, and when necessary to avoid irreparable damage to persons, the Court shall adopt such provisional measures as it deems pertinent in matters it has under consideration. With

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the Commission receives a petition or communication alleging forced disappearance, its Executive Secretariat shall urgently and confidentially address the respective government and shall request that government to provide as soon as possible information as to the whereabouts of the allegedly disappeared person. The OAS also adopted the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence Against Women in 1994, which entered into force in March the following year. Article 10 provides that states parties are to include in their national reports to the Inter-American Commission of Women information on measures taken in this area, while under article 11, both states parties and the Commission of Women may request of the Inter-American Court advisory opinions on the interpretations of this Convention. Article 12 provides a procedure whereby any person, group of persons or any non-governmental entity legally recognised in one or more member states of the OAS may lodge petitions with the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights alleging violations of the duties of states under article 7 to pursue without delay and by all appropriate means policies to prevent, punish and eradicate violence against women.[238] The question of indigenous peoples has also been addressed and on 18 September 1995, the Inter-American Commission adopted a Draft Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.[239]

The Commission itself consists of seven members elected in a personal capacity by the OAS General Assembly for four-year terms.[240] The Commission may indicate precautionary measures as provided for in article respect to a case not yet submitted to the Court, it may act at the request of the Commission. Article 19(c) of the Statute of the Commission provides that the Commission has the power to request the Court to take such provisional measures as it considers appropriate in serious and urgent cases which have not yet been submitted to it for consideration, whenever this becomes necessary to prevent irreparable injury to persons. Under article 29 of the Regulations of the Commission, the Commission may on its own initiative or at the request of a party take any action it considers necessary for the discharge of its functions. In particular, in urgent cases, when it becomes necessary to avoid irreparable damage to persons, the Commission may request that provisional measures be taken to avoid irreparable damage in cases where the denounced facts are true. Article 24 of the Rules of Procedure of the Inter-American Court provides that at any stage of the proceeding involving cases of extreme gravity and urgency and when necessary to avoid irreparable damage to persons, the Court may, at the request of a party or on its own motion, order whatever provisional measures it deems appropriate, pursuant to article 63(2) of the Convention.

[238] Note also the Inter-American Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Persons with Disabilities, 1999. This came into force in September 2001.

[239] See above, chapter 6, p. 298.

[240] See articles 34–8 of the Convention.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

25 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure. This grants the Commission the power in serious and urgent cases, and whenever necessary according to the information available, either on its own initiative or upon request by a party, to request that the state concerned adopt precautionary measures to prevent irreparable harm to persons. The Commission may also request information from the interested parties related to any aspect of the adoption and observance of the precautionary measures.[241] Of particular interest has been the granting of precautionary measures in favour of individuals captured in connection with the US-led military operation against the former Taliban regime in Afghanistan and the Al-Qaida organisation and their detention at the US naval base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. Such measures were first granted on 12 March 2002 and requested that the United States take the 'urgent measures necessary to have the legal status of the detainees at Guantanamo determined by a competent tribunal'. The Commission considered that, without this determination, the fundamental and non-derogable rights of the detainees might not be recognised and guaranteed by the United States. Such measures were repeated on four separate occasions and amplified in response to information indicating the possible torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment of detainees at Guantanamo Bay or the possible removal of detainees to jurisdictions where they could be subjected to torture. As these measures were not complied with – the US arguing that the Commission lacked jurisdiction – the Commission adopted resolution no. 2/06 on 28 July 2006, noting that the failure of the United States to give effect to the Commission's precautionary measures had resulted in irreparable prejudice to the fundamental rights of the detainees at Guantanamo Bay, including their rights to liberty and to humane treatment, and urging the US to close the Guantanamo Bay facility without delay; to remove the detainees from Guantanamo Bay through a process undertaken in full accordance with applicable forms of international human rights and humanitarian law; to ensure that detainees who may face a risk of torture elsewhere are provided with a fair and independent examination of their circumstances and to ensure that any instances of torture at Guantanamo Bay are investigated, prosecuted and punished.[242]

[241] See, for recent examples, Annual Report 2001, chapter III C. I and Annual Report 2006, chapter III C I.

[242] See Annual Report 2006, chapter III E and see also 45 ILM, 2006, pp. 669 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Where in the case of petitions received, a friendly settlement has not been achieved,[243] then under article 50 a report will be drawn up, together with such proposals and recommendations as are seen fit, and transmitted to the parties. The Commission may, under article 46 of the Rules of Procedure, adopt the follow-up measures it deems appropriate, such as requesting information from the parties and holding hearings in order to verify compliance with friendly settlement agreements and its recommendations and report thereon. It also publishes a table indicating whether its recommendations have achieved total or partial compliance from the state concerned or whether compliance is pending.[244]

After its report, a three-month period is then available during which the Commission or the state concerned (but not the individual concerned) may go to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.[245] The Court consists of seven judges serving in an individual capacity and elected by an absolute majority of the states parties to the Convention in the OAS General Assembly for six-year terms.[246] The jurisdiction of the Court is subject to a prior declaration under article 62. Article 63(2) of the Convention provides that, in cases of extreme gravity and urgency, and when necessary to avoid irreparable damage to persons, the Court, in matters not yet submitted to it, may adopt such provisional measures as it deems pertinent in matters under its consideration. Where a case has not yet been submitted to it, the Court may act at the request of the Commission. This power has been used on a number of occasions.[247]

[243] See, for examples of friendly settlement procedures, Annual Report 2001, chapter III C. 4.

[244] See Annual Report 2006, chapter III D.

[245] Article 51. If this does not happen and the matter is not settled with the state concerned, the Commission by a majority vote may set forth its own opinion and conclusions on the matter, which may be published. See, for example, Annual Report 1983–4, pp. 23–75.

[246] Articles 52–4. See also Davidson, Inter-American Court; C. Cerna, 'The Structure and Functioning of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (1979–1992)', 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 135, and L. E. Frost, 'The Evolution of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights', 14 HRQ, 1992, p. 171.

[247] The first time was in January 1988, against Honduras, following the killing of a person due to testify before it and concerns expressed about the safety of other witnesses, H/Inf. (88) 1, p. 64. See also the provisional measures adopted by the Court against Peru, in similar circumstances, in August 1990, 11 HRLJ, 1990, p. 257, and the Alemán Lacayo v. Nicaragua case, Series E, Order of 2 February 1996; the Álvarez et al. v. Colombia case, Series E, Order of 22 July 1997, and the Constitutional Court case, Series E, Order of 14 August 2000. See also Hilaire and Others v. Trinidad and Tobago, Judgment of 21 June 2002. The Court also granted provisional measures, for example, to protect the lives and personal integrity of witnesses in the Mapiripán Massacre case against Colombia, see

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Under article 64, the Court also possesses an advisory jurisdiction with regard to the interpretation of the Inter-American Convention and other conventions concerning the protection of human rights in the American states at the request of any member state of the OAS. The Court has dealt with a variety of important issues by way of advisory opinions.[248] In Definition of Other Treaties Subject to the Interpretation of the Inter-American Court,[249] the Court took the view that the object of the Convention was to integrate the regional and universal systems of human rights protection and that, therefore, any human rights treaty to which American states were parties could be the subject of an advisory opinion. In The Effect of Reservations,[250] the Court stressed that human rights treaties involve the establishment of legal orders within which obligations are created towards all individuals within their jurisdiction and concluded that an instrument of ratification of adherence containing a reservation compatible with the object and purpose of the Convention does not require acceptance by the other states parties and the instrument thus enters into force as of the moment of deposit.[251] In a manner reminiscent of and clearly influenced by the European Court of Human Rights, the Inter-American Court stated that human rights treaties were different in nature from traditional multilateral treaties, since they focused not upon the reciprocal exchange of rights for the mutual benefit of the contracting states, but rather upon the protection of the basic rights of individuals. The obligations were erga omnes, rather than with regard to particular other states.[252]

In an important discussion of freedom of expression in the Licensing of Journalists case,[253] the Court advised that the compulsory licensing of journalists was incompatible with article 13, the freedom of expression provision in the Convention, if it denied any person access to the full use of the media as a means of expressing opinions. The Court emphasised that freedom of expression could only be restricted on the basis of 'compelling governmental interest' and that the restriction must be 'closely tailored Annual Report of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights 2005, p. 39, and in the case of the Children and Adolescents Deprived of Liberty in the 'Complexo do Tatuapé' of FEBEM against Brazil, ibid., p. 41.

248 Of the nineteen advisory opinions issued between 1959 and 2005, twelve concerned the interpretation of the Convention, four concerned the interpretation of other treaties and three concerned the compatibility between domestic laws and international instruments: see Annual Report 2005, p. 60.

249 22 ILM, 1983, p. 51; 67 ILR, p. 594.

250 22 ILM, 1983, p.33; 67 ILR, p. 559.

251 Para. 37. See article 74 of the Convention.

252 Ibid., para. 29. See also below, p. 937.

253 7 HRLJ, 1986, p. 74; 75 ILR, p. 31.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

to the accomplishment of the legitimate governmental objective necessitating it'.[254] In the Habeas Corpus case,[255] the Court declared that the writ of habeas corpus was a non-suspendable 'judicial guarantee' for the protection of rights from which no derogation was permitted under the Convention under article 27. Reference was made to the 'inseparable bond between the principle of legality, democratic institutions and the rule of law'. The Court also emphasised that only democratic governments could avail themselves of the right to declare a state of emergency and then only under closely circumscribed conditions. The Court has also addressed the issue of the relationship between itself and the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man, 1948 in the Interpretation of the American Declaration case.[256] In an opinion likely to be of significance in view of the fact that, for example, the USA is not a party to the Convention but, as a member of the OAS, has signed the Declaration, the Court stressed that in interpreting the Declaration regard had to be had to the current state of the Inter-American system and that, by a process of authoritative interpretation, the member states of the OAS have agreed that the Declaration contains and defines the human rights norms referred to in the OAS Charter.[257] Since the Charter was a treaty, the Court could, therefore, interpret the Declaration under article 64.[258] This rather ingenious argument is likely to open the door to a variety of advisory opinions on a range of important issues.

In the Right to Information on Consular Assistance opinion requested by Mexico,[259] the Court declared that article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963, providing for the right to consular assistance of detained foreign nationals,[260] was part of international human rights law and that the state must comply with its duty to inform the detainee of the rights that the article confers upon him at the time of his arrest or at least before he makes his first statement before the authorities. Further, it was held that the enforceability of the right was not subject to the protests of the sending state and that the failure to observe a detained foreign national's right to information, recognised in article 36(1)(b) of [254] Ibid., para. 45. See also the Sunday Times case, European Court of Human Rights, Series A, vol. 30, 1979.

[255] 9 HRLJ, 1988, p. 94; 96 ILR, p. 392. [256] 28 ILM, 1989, p. 378; 96 ILR, p. 416.

[257] Ibid., pp. 388–9. See also T. Buergenthal, 'The Revised OAS Charter and the Protection of Human Rights', 69 AJIL, 1975, p. 828.

[258] The problem was that the Declaration clearly was not a treaty and article 64 provides for advisory opinions regarding the Convention itself and 'other treaties'.

[259] Series A 16, OC-16/99, 1999. [260] See further below, chapter 13, p. 773.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the Vienna Convention, was prejudicial to the due process of law. In such circumstances, imposition of the death penalty constituted a violation of the right not to be deprived of life 'arbitrarily', as stipulated in the relevant provisions of the human rights treaties,[261] involving therefore the international responsibility of the state and the duty to make reparation.

The exercise of the Court's contentious jurisdiction was, however, less immediately successful. In the Gallardo case,[262] the Court remitted the claim to the Commission declaring it inadmissible, noting that a state could not dispense with the processing of the case by the Commission, while in the Velásquez Rodríguez[263] and Godínez Cruz[264] cases the Court in 'disappearance' situations found that Honduras had violated the Convention.[265] In the former case, it was emphasised that states had a legal responsibility to prevent human rights violations and to use the means at their disposal to investigate and punish such violations. Where this did not happen, the state concerned had failed in its duty to ensure the full and free exercise of these rights within the jurisdiction.[266] In Loayza Tamayo v. Peru, the Court held Peru responsible for a number of breaches of the Convention concerned with the detention and torture of the applicant and for the absence of a fair trial.[267] In Chumbipuma Aguirre v. Peru, the Barrios Altos case, the Court tackled the issue of domestic amnesty laws and held that the Peruvian amnesty laws in question were incompatible with the Inter-American Convention and thus void of any legal effect.[268] The Court has also addressed the question of indigenous peoples in several cases, in which it has emphasised the close ties of such peoples with their traditional lands and the natural resources associated with their culture in the context particularly of the right to the use and enjoyment of property in article 21 of the Convention. It has concluded that the traditional possession of their lands by indigenous peoples has equivalent effects to those of a state-granted full property title; that traditional possession entitles indigenous peoples to demand official recognition and registration [261] I.e. article 4 of the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights and article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

[262] 20 ILM, 1981, p. 1424; 67 ILR, p. 578. [263] 9 HRLJ, 1988, p. 212; 95 ILR, p. 232.

[264] H/Inf (90) 1, p. 80; 95 ILR, p. 320 (note).

[265] Note also the award of compensation to the victims in both of these cases, ibid., pp. 80–1.

[266] At paras. 174–6. See also Castillo Páez v. Peru, Series C, No. 34, 1997; 116 ILR, p. 451.

[267] Series C, No. 33, 1997; 116 ILR, p. 338.

[268] Judgment of 14 March 2001, 41 ILM, 2002, p. 93. See also generally C. Martin, 'Catching Up with the Past: Recent Decisions of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights Addressing Gross Human Rights Violations Perpetrated During the 1970–1980s', 7 Human Rights Law Review, 2007, p. 774.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of property titles; that members of such peoples who have been obliged to leave their traditional lands maintain property rights thereto even though they lack legal title, unless the lands have been lawfully transferred to innocent third parties; and that in the latter instance, such members are entitled to restitution thereof or to obtain other lands of equal extension and quality.[269] In the period between 1959 and 2005, the Court issued 62 orders of provisional measures, 19 advisory opinions and 139 judgments.[270]

The Banjul Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights[271]

This Charter was adopted by the Organisation of African Unity in 1981 and came into force in 1986. Currently all fifty-three members of the African Union (as the OAU was renamed in 2000) are parties.[272] The Charter contains a wide range of rights, including in addition to the traditional civil and political rights, economic, social and cultural rights and [269] See e.g. Sawhoyamaxa Indigenous Community v. Paraguay, Judgment of 29 March 2006. See further above, chapter 6, p. 293.

[270] See Annual Report 2005, p. 57.

[271] See e.g. U. O. Umozurike, The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, The Hague, 1997; R. Murray, The African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, London, 2000; The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights (eds. M. Evans and R. Murray), Cambridge, 2002; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 9; Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, p. 1062; E. Ankumah, The African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, Dordrecht, 1996; R. Gittleman, 'The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights: A Legal Analysis', 22 Va. JIL, 1981, p. 667; Robertson and Merrills, Human Rights in the World, p. 242; U. O. Umozurike, 'The Protection of Human Rights under the Banjul (African) Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights', 1 African Journal of International Law, 1988, p. 65; A. Bello, 'The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights', 194 HR, 1985, p. 5; S. Neff, 'Human Rights in Africa', 33 ICLQ, 1984, p. 331; U. O. Umozurike, 'The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights', 77 AJIL, 1983, p. 902; B. Ramcharan, 'The Travaux Préparatoires of the African Commission on Human Rights', HRLJ, 1992, p. 307; W. Benedek, 'The African Charter and Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights: How to Make It More Effective', 14 NQHR, 1993, p. 25; C. Flinterman and E. Ankumeh, 'The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights' in Hannum, Guide to International Human Rights Practice, p. 171; M. A. Baderin, 'Recent Developments in the African Regional Human Rights System', 5 Human Rights Law Review, 2005, p. 117, and C. Beyani, 'Recent Developments in the African Human Rights System 2004–2006', 7 Human Rights Law Review, 2007, p. 582. See also F. Ouguergouz, 'La Commission Africaine des Droits de l'Homme et des Peuples', AFDI, 1989, p. 557; K. Mbaye, Les Droits de l'Homme en Afrique, Paris, 1992, and M. Hamalengwa, C. Flinterman and E. Dankwa, The International Law of Human Rights in Africa – Basic Documents and Annotated Bibliography, Dordrecht, 1988.

[272] See www.achpr.org/english/ratifications/ratification_african%20charter.pdf.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

various peoples' rights. In this latter category are specifically mentioned the rights to self-determination, development and a generally satisfactory environment.[273] The reference to the latter two concepts is unusual in human rights instruments and it remains to be seen both how they will be interpreted and how they will be implemented.

One question that is immediately posed with respect to the notion of 'peoples' rights' is to ascertain the definition of a people. If experience with the definition of self-determination in the context of the United Nations is any guide,[274] and bearing in mind the extreme sensitivity which African states have manifested with regard to the stability of the existing colonial borders,[275] then the principle is likely to be interpreted in the sense of independent states. This was confirmed in the Katangese Peoples' Congress v. Zaire,[276] where the Commission declared that Katanga was obliged to exercise a variant of self-determination that was compatible with the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Zaire.

The African Charter is the first human rights convention that details the duties of the individual to the state, society and family.[277] Included are the duties to avoid compromising the security of the state and to preserve and strengthen social and national solidarity and independence. It remains to be seen whether this distinctive approach brings with it more problems than advantages.

The Charter set up the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, consisting of eleven persons appointed by the Conference of the Heads of State and Government of the OAU for six-year renewable terms, to implement the Charter. The Secretary to the Commission is appointed by the Secretary-General of the Organisation of African Unity. The Commission has important educational and promotional responsibilities,[278] including undertaking studies, organising conferences, disseminating information and making recommendations to governments. This is quite unlike the European Commission as it used to be prior to Protocol 11, but rather more similar to the Inter-American Commission. The African Commission has developed a range of special mechanisms, including the appointment of Special Rapporteurs (not being independent experts but [273] See articles 19–22. [274] See above, chapter 5, p. 256.

[275] See e.g. M. N. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa, Oxford, 1986.
[276] Case No. 75/92: see 13 NQHR, 1995, p. 478. [277] See articles 27–9.
[278] See article 45 and Rule 87 of the Rules of Procedure 1995. See also A. Bello, 'The Mandate of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights', 1 African Journal of International Law, 1988, p. 31.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Commission members)[279] and working groups;[280] and the adoption of country and thematic resolutions.[281]

The Commission may hear as of right inter-state complaints.[282] The first such complaint was brought in 1999 by the Democratic Republic of the Congo alleging inter alia that it had been the victim of aggression perpetrated by Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda. The Commission held that the respondent states had contravened the principle of the peaceful settlement of disputes and had violated article 23 of the African Charter concerning the right to peace. It concluded that the three states concerned had occupied parts of the Congo in violation of the Charter and had committed a series of human rights violations as a consequence.[283]

Other, non-state, communications may also be sent to the Commission and the terminology used is far more flexible than is the case in the other regional human rights systems.[284] Where it appears that one or more communications apparently relates to special cases which reveal the existence of a series of serious or massive violations of rights, the Commission will draw the attention of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government to these special cases. The Commission may then be asked to conduct an in-depth study of these cases and make a factual report, accompanied by its finding and recommendations.[285] The Commission

[279] Covering topics such as the rights of women, refugees, asylum seekers and internally displaced persons in Africa; freedom of expression; human rights defenders in Africa, and prisons and conditions of detention in Africa: see e.g. Beyani, 'Recent Developments', p. 588.

[280] Covering issues such as economic, social and cultural rights; indigenous populations and communities; and the death penalty: e.g. ibid., p. 589.

[281] Such as the resolutions expressing deep concern about the violation of human rights and international humanitarian law in Darfur, e.g. ACHPR/Res.74(XXXVII)05, 2005 and about the continued attacks on the independence of the judiciary by the government of Zimbabwe, e.g. resolution adopted by the Executive Council of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, 9th Ordinary Session, June 2006, Ex. CL/279 (ix), Annex III, p. 99. See also Beyani, 'Recent Developments', pp. 592 ff., and the resolution concerning the protection of human rights defenders in Africa, ACHPR/Res.69(XXXV)04, 2004.

[282] Articles 47–54. See also Rules 88 ff. of the Rules of Procedure.

[283] Communication 227/99, African Commission, Twentieth Activity Report, EX.CL/279 (IX), Annex IV, pp. 111 ff. See also Beyani, 'Recent Developments', pp. 598 ff.

[284] See article 55. There are a number of admissibility requirements: see article 56. For recent decisions on communications, see African Commission, Twentieth Activity Report.

[285] Article 58(1) and (2). Further, a case of emergency duly noted by the Commission shall be submitted to the Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government who may request an in-depth study, article 58(3).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

is able to suggest provisional measures where appropriate.[286] The Commission adopted Rules of Procedure in 1988, which were amended in 1995.[287] A number of important individual communications have been dealt with.[288] In addition, there is an obligation upon states parties to produce reports every two years upon the measures taken to implement the rights under the Charter.[289] The Commission was given authority by the OAU to study the reports and make observations upon them and has indeed adopted guidelines. However, to date, it is fair to conclude that the reporting procedure has encountered serious problems, not least in that many states have failed to submit reports or adequate reports,[290] while the financial resources difficulties faced by the Commission have been significant. No provision was made for a Court in the Charter, but a Protocol on the Establishment of an African Court of Human and Peoples' Rights was signed in 1998.[291] Under this Protocol, the Court has advisory, conciliatory and contentious jurisdiction. The African Commission, states parties and African intergovernmental organisations have automatic access to the Court,[292] but not individuals or non-governmental organisations, whose access depends upon the state concerned having made [286] Rule 111. See e.g. G. J. Naldi, 'Interim Measures of Protection in the African System for the Protection of Human and Peoples' Rights', 2 African Human Rights Law Journal, 2002, p. 1. The Commission has taken the view that the adoption of interim measures is binding on the parties: see e.g. Saro-Wiwa v. Nigeria, 7 International Human Rights Reports, 2000, p. 274.

[287] See 40 The Review, International Commission of Jurists, 1988, p. 26.

[288] See e.g. Lawyers for Human Rights v. Swaziland, Communication 251/2002, 13 International Human Rights Reports, 2006, p. 887, concerning the overthrow of constitutional democracy and the banning of political parties. See also Zimbabwe Human Rights NGO Forum v. Zimbabwe, African Commission, Twenty-First Activity Report, Annex III, pp. 54 ff. See S. Gumedz, 'Bringing Communications Before the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights', 3 African Human Rights Law Journal, 2003, p. 118.

[289] Article 62. See also Rules 81–6.

[290] See e.g. G. Oberleitner and C. Welch, 'Africa: 15th Session African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights', 12 NQHR, 1994, p. 333; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, p. 255, and M. Vans, T. Ige and R. Murray, 'The Reporting Mechanism of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights' in The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights (eds. M. Evans and R. Murray), Cambridge, 2002, p. 36.

[291] This came into force on 25 January 2004. Judges were elected in 2006. See e.g. D. Padilla, 'An African Human Rights Court: Reflections from the Perspective of the Inter-American System', 2 African Human Rights Law Journal, 2002, p. 185; R. W. Eno, 'The Jurisdiction of the African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights', 2 African Human Rights Law Journal, 2002, p. 223, and R. Murray, 'A Comparison Between the African and European Courts of Human Rights', 2 African Human Rights Law Journal, 2002, p. 195.

[292] Article 5.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

a declaration accepting the jurisdiction of the Court to hear relevant applications.[293]

The Arab Charter on Human Rights[294]

An Arab Charter on Human Rights was adopted by the Council of the League of Arab States on 15 September 1994 and a revised version was adopted by the League of Arab States in May 2004. It affirms the principles contained in the UN Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam.[295] Reference is made to the national identity of the Arab states and the right to self-determination is affirmed. A number of traditional human rights are also provided for, including the right to liberty and security of persons, equality of persons before the law, fair trial, protection of persons from torture, the right to own private property, freedom to practise religious observance and freedom of peaceful assembly and association.[296] The Charter also provides for the election of a seven-person Arab Human Rights Committee to consider states' reports.[297] The Charter came into force on 24 January 2008 upon the seventh ratification.[298]

[293] Article 34(6).

[294] See e.g. M. Rishmawi, 'The Revised Arab Charter on Human Rights: A Step Forward?', 5 Human Rights Law Review, 2005, p. 361, and R. K. M. Smith, Textbook on International Human Rights, Oxford, 2002, p. 87. See also Robertson and Merrills, Human Rights in the World, p. 238, and A. A. A. Naim, 'Human Rights in the Arab World: A Legal Perspective', 23 HRQ, 2001, p. 70.

[295] Adopted in 1990 by the Nineteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers. This Declaration emphasises that all rights and freedoms provided for are subject to Islamic Shari'ah (article 24), which is also 'the only source of reference for the explanation or clarification of any of the articles in the Declaration' (article 25).

[296] Articles 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 30, 31 and 35. The right to development is proclaimed as a fundamental human right, see article 37.

[297] Articles 45 and 48.

[298] Note, however, the statement by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights expressing concern with regard to the incompatibility of some of the provisions of the Arab Charter with international norms and standards. These concerns included the approach to the death penalty for children and the rights of women and non-citizens. The High Commissioner also noted that in equating Zionism with racism, the Arab Charter was 'not in conformity with General Assembly resolution 46/86, which rejects that Zionism is a form of racism and racial discrimination': see statement of 30 January 2008, www.unhchr.ch/huricane/huricane.nsf/0/6C211162E43235FAC12573E00056E19D?opendocument.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Suggestions for further reading

The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights (eds. M. Evans and R. Murray), Cambridge, 2002

Guide to International Human Rights Practice (ed. H. Hannum), 4th edn, Ardsley, 2004

Jacobs and White: The European Convention on Human Rights (eds. C. Ovey and R. C. A. White), 4th edn, Oxford, 2006

J. M. Pasqualucci, The Practice and Procedure of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, Cambridge, 2003

H. J. Steiner, P. Alston and R. Goodman, International Human Rights in Context, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2008

P. Van Dijk, G. J. H. Van Hoof, A. Van Rijn and L. Zwaak, Theory and Practice of the European Convention on Human Rights, 4th edn, Antwerp, 2006

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

8

Individual criminal responsibility in international law[1]

The rise of individual criminal responsibility directly under international law marks the coming together of elements of traditional international law with more modern approaches to human rights law and humanitarian law, and involves consideration of domestic as well as international enforcement mechanisms. Although the rights of individuals in international law have evolved significantly in the post-1945 era, the placing of obligations directly upon persons as opposed to states has a distinct, if narrow, pedigree.[2] Those committing piracy or slave trading[3] have long been regarded as guilty of crimes against international society bearing direct responsibility, for which they may be punished by international tribunals or by any state at all. Jurisdiction to hear the offence is not confined to, for example, the state on whose territory the act took place, or the national state of the offender or the victim. This universal jurisdiction over piracy constitutes a long-established principle of the world community.[4]

[1] See e.g. A. Cassese, International Criminal Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2008; W. Schabas, An Introduction to the International Criminal Court, 3rd edn, Cambridge, 2007; R. Cryer, H. Friman, D. Robinson and E. Wilmshurst, An Introduction to International Criminal Law and Procedure, Cambridge, 2007; I. Bantekas and S. Nash, International Criminal Law, 2nd edn, London, 2003; G. Werle, Principles of International Criminal Law, The Hague, 2005; C. de Than and E. Shorts, International Criminal Law and Human Rights, London, 2003; S. R. Ratner and J. Abrams, Accountability for Human Rights Atrocities in International Law: Beyond the Nuremberg Legacy, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2001; K. Kittichaisaree, International Criminal Law, Oxford, 2001, and Justice for Crimes Against Humanity (eds. M. Lattimer and P. Sands), Oxford, 2003.

[2] See e.g. M. C. Bassiouni, Crimes Against Humanity in International Criminal Law, 2nd edn, The Hague, 1999. As to state responsibility for international offences, see below, chapter 14.

[3] See as to slave trading, article 99 of the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982 and below, chapter 11, p. 616.

[4] See e.g. In re Piracy Jure Gentium [1934] AC 586; 7 AD, p. 213. See also D. H. Johnson, 'Piracy in Modern International Law', 43 Transactions of the Grotius Society, 1957, p. 63, and G. E. White, 'The Marshall Court and International Law: The Piracy Cases', 83 AJIL, 1989, p. 727. See also the Separate Opinion of Judge Guillaume in Congo v. Belgium, ICJ

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

All states may both arrest and punish pirates, provided of course that they have been apprehended on the high seas[5] or within the territory of the state concerned. The punishment of the offenders takes place whatever their nationality and wherever they happened to carry out their criminal activities.

Piracy under international law (or piracy jure gentium) must be distinguished from piracy under municipal law. Offences that may be characterised as piratical under municipal laws do not necessarily fall within the definition of piracy in international law, and thus are not susceptible to universal jurisdiction (depending of course upon the content and form of international conventions). Piracy jure gentium was defined in article 15 of the High Seas Convention, 1958 (and reaffirmed in article 101 of the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea) as illegal acts of violence, detention or depredation committed for private ends by the crew or passengers of a private ship or private aircraft and directed against another ship or aircraft (or persons or property therein) on the high seas or terra nullius.[6] Attempts to commit such acts are sufficient to constitute piracy and it is not essential for the attempt to have been successful.[7]

However, the range of offences under international law for which individuals bore international responsibility was narrow indeed.[8] It is doubtful whether it had extended beyond piracy and slave trading by the turn of the twentieth century. Even then, jurisdiction was exercisable in practice only by domestic courts. It is a modern phenomenon to establish international courts or tribunals to exercise jurisdiction directly over individuals with regard to specified crimes. As will be seen in chapter 12, domestic courts are indeed exercising a greater jurisdiction with regard to offences with international elements, for example, with regard to torture or war crimes committed outside of the territory of the state concerned provided that the alleged offender is within the territory of the state, but this is only where an international treaty authorises states to exercise such Reports, 2002, pp. 3, 37–8; 128 ILR, pp. 60, 92–4, and R v. Jones [2006] UKHL 16; 132 ILR, p. 668.

[5] Article 105 of the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982 (reproducing article 19 of the Geneva Convention on the High Seas, 1958).

[6] See further below, chapter 11, p. 615.

[7] In re Piracy Jure Gentium [1934] AC 586; 7 AD, p. 213.

[8] See the advisory opinion of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in the Re-Introduction of the Death Penalty in the Peruvian Constitution case, 16 HRLJ, 1995, pp. 9, 14, noting that individual responsibility may only be invoked for violations that are defined in international instruments as crimes under international law.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com jurisdiction and this has been brought into effect internally.[9] However, the focus of this chapter is upon courts established internationally or with an international element in order to prosecute individuals directly accused of international offences.

International criminal courts and tribunals

After the conclusion of the First World War, a commission set up by the Allied Powers recommended that as the defeated powers had violated the laws of war, high officials, including the Kaiser, be prosecuted for ordering such crimes and on the basis of command responsibility. It was also suggested that an Allied High Tribunal be established to try violations of the laws and customs of war and the laws of humanity.[10] Accordingly, the Treaty of Versailles, 1919 noted that the German government recognised the right of the Allied and Associated Powers to bring individuals accused of crimes against the laws and customs of war before military tribunals (article 228) and established the individual responsibility of the Kaiser (article 227). In the event, the Netherlands refused to hand over the Kaiser and only a few trials were held before German courts in Leipzig with, at best, mixed results.[11]

The Charter annexed to the Agreement for the Prosecution and Punishment of the Major War Criminals, 1945 provided specifically for individual responsibility for crimes against peace, war crimes and crimes against humanity. There was also a conspiracy charge.[12] The Nuremberg Tribunal, composed of four principal judges (from the US, UK, USSR and France) and four alternates, was the first international criminal

[9] See below, p. 673.

[10] See the Report of the Commission to the Preliminary Peace Conference, 14 AJIL, 1920, p. 95. See also Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, pp. 91–2, and T. Meron, 'Reflections on the Prosecution of War Crimes by International Tribunals', 100 AJIL, 2006, p. 551.

[11] See C. Mullins, The Leipzig Trials, London, 1921. See also e.g. the International Convention for the Protection of Submarine Telegraph Cables, 1884; the Agreement for the Suppression of the Circulation of Obscene Publications, 1910; the International Convention for the Suppression of the Circulation of and Traffic in Obscene Publications 1924; the Agreement Concerning the Suppression of Opium-Smoking, 1931; the Convention for the Suppression of the Illicit Traffic in Dangerous Drugs, 1936, and the International Convention for the Suppression of Counterfeiting Currency, 1929 with regard to the establishment of individual responsibility in the case of specific issues.

[12] See article 6, 39 AJIL, 1945, Supp., p. 259. See also H. Lauterpacht, International Law and Human Rights, London, 1950, p. 6, and Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, pp. 92 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

tribunal and marks the true starting-point for international criminal law. It affirmed in ringing and lasting terms that 'international law imposes duties and liabilities upon individuals as well as upon states' as 'crimes against international law are committed by men, not by abstract entities, and only by punishing individuals who commit such crimes can the provisions of international law be enforced'. Included in the relevant category for which individual responsibility was posited were crimes against peace, war crimes and crimes against humanity.[13] In addition, a number of war crimes trials were instituted within Allied-occupied Germany under the authority of Control Council Law No. 10.[14] The International Military Tribunal for the Far East was established in January 1946 to deal with Japanese war crimes.[15] This Tribunal was composed of judges from eleven states[16] and it essentially reaffirmed the Nuremberg Tribunal's legal findings as to, for example, the criminality of aggressive war and the rejection of the absolute defence of superior orders.[17] The Charter of the Tribunal also provided for individual responsibility with regard to certain crimes.[18]

The provisions of the Nuremberg Charter can now be regarded as part of international law, particularly since the General Assembly in 1946 affirmed the principles of this Charter and the decision of the Tribunal.[19] The Assembly also stated that genocide was a crime under international [13] See 41 AJIL, 1947, p. 220. See also I. Brownlie, International Law and the Use of Force by States, Oxford, 1963, p. 167; T. Taylor, An Anatomy of the Nuremberg Trial, London, 1993, and A. Tusa and J. Tusa, The Nuremberg Trial, London, 1983.

[14] 36 ILR, p. 31. Twelve major US trials took place in Nuremberg, see H. Levie, Terrorism in War: The Law of War Crimes, New York, 1992, pp. 72 ff., while trials took place in the British occupied sector of Germany under the Royal Warrant of 1946, see A. P. V. Rogers, 'War Crimes Trials under the Royal Warrant, British Practice 1945–1949', 39 ICLQ, 1990, p. 780, and see also R v. Jones [2006] UKHL 16, para. 22 (Lord Bingham); 132 ILR, p. 679, and Re Sandrock and Others 13 ILR, p. 297.

[15] Established by a proclamation by General MacArthur of 19 January 1946, so authorised by the Allied Powers in order to implement the Potsdam Declaration: see Hirota v. MacArthur 335 US 876 and TIAS, 1946, No. 1589, p. 3; 15 AD, p. 485.

[16] US, UK, USSR, Australia, Canada, China, France, India, the Netherlands, New Zealand and the Philippines.

[17] See e.g. B. V. A. Röling and A. Cassese, The Tokyo Trial and Beyond, Cambridge, 1992, and S. Horowitz, The Tokyo Trial, International Conciliation No. 465 (1950). But see as to criticisms of the process, R. Minear, Victor's Justice: The Tokyo War Crimes Trial, Princeton, 1971.

[18] Article 5.

[19] Resolution 95(I). See also the International Law Commission's Report on Principles of the Nuremberg Tribunal, Yearbook of the ILC, 1950, vol. II, p. 195, and the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity, 1968.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

law bearing individual responsibility.[20] This was reaffirmed in the Genocide Convention of 1948, which also called for prosecutions by either domestic courts or 'an international penal tribunal'.[21] The International Law Commission produced a Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind in 1954, article 1 of which provided that 'offences against the peace and security of mankind, as defined in this Code, are crimes under international law, for which the responsible individuals shall be punishable'.[22]

Individual responsibility has also been confirmed with regard to grave breaches of the four 1949 Geneva Red Cross Conventions and 1977 Additional Protocols I and II dealing with armed conflicts. It is provided specifically that the High Contracting Parties undertake to enact any legislation necessary to provide effective penal sanctions for persons committing or ordering to be committed any of a series of grave breaches.[23] Such grave breaches include wilful killing, torture or inhuman treatment, extensive destruction and appropriation of property not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly, unlawful deportation or transfer of protected persons and the taking of hostages.[24] Protocol I of 1977 extends the list to include, for example, making the civilian population the object of attack and launching an attack against works or installations containing dangerous forces in the knowledge that such attack will cause excessive loss of life or damage to civilians or their property when committed wilfully and causing death or serious injury; other activities such as transferring civilian population from the territory of an occupying power to that of an occupied area or deporting from an occupied area, apartheid and racial discrimination and attacking clearly recognised historic monuments, works of art or places of worship, may also constitute grave breaches when committed wilfully.[25]

[20] Resolution 96(1).

[21] Note that the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid of 1973 declared apartheid to be an international crime involving direct individual criminal responsibility.

[22] A/2693, and 45 AJIL, 1954, Supp., p. 123.

[23] See article 49 of the First Geneva Convention, article 50 of the Second Geneva Convention, article 129 of the Third Geneva Convention and article 146 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. See further below, chapter 21, p. 1199.

[24] See e.g. article 50 of the First Geneva Convention, article 51 of the Second Geneva Convention, article 130 of the Third Geneva Convention and article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. See also L. C. Green, The Contemporary Law of Armed Conflict, 2nd edn, Manchester, 2000, chapter 18.

[25] See article 85 of Protocol I.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Any individual, regardless of rank or governmental status, would be personally liable for any war crimes or grave breaches committed, while the principle of command (or superior) responsibility means that any person in a position of authority ordering the commission of a war crime or grave breach would be as accountable as the subordinate committing it.[26] The International Law Commission in 1991 provisionally adopted a Draft Code of Crimes Against the Peace and Security of Mankind,[27] which was revised in 1996.[28] The 1996 Draft Code provides for individual criminal responsibility[29] with regard to aggression,[30] genocide,[31] a crime against humanity,[32] a crime against United Nations and associated personnel[33] and war crimes.[34] The fact that an individual may be responsible for the crimes in question is deemed not to affect the issue of state responsibility.[35] The Security Council in two resolutions on the Somali situation in the early 1990s unanimously condemned breaches of humanitarian law and stated that the authors of such breaches or those who had ordered their commission would be held 'individually responsible' for them,[36] while Security Council resolution 674 (1990) concerning Iraq's occupation of Kuwait, reaffirming Iraq's liability under the Fourth Geneva Convention, 1949 dealing with civilian populations of occupied areas, noted that such responsibility for grave breaches extended to 'individuals who commit or order the commission of grave breaches'.[37]

The International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY)[38]

It was, however, the events in the former Yugoslavia that impelled a renewal of interest in the establishment of an international criminal court, which had long been under consideration, but in a desultory fashion.[39]

[26] See further below, pp. 404 and 408. [27] A/46/10 and 30 ILM, 1991, p. 1584.
[28] A/51/10, p. 9. [29] See article 2. [30] See article 16. [31] Article 17.
[32] Article 18. [33] Article 19. [34] Article 20. [35] Article 4.
[36] Resolutions 794 (1992) and 814 (1993).
[37] See also e.g. the Special Section on Iraqi War Crimes, 31 Va. JIL, 1991, p. 351.
[38] See e.g. W. Schabas, The UN International Criminal Tribunals: The Former Yugoslavia, Rwanda and Sierra Leone, Cambridge, 2006; V. Morris and M. P. Scharf, An Insider's Guide to the International Criminal Tribunal for Former Yugoslavia, New York, 1995; R. Kerr, The International Criminal Tribunal for Former Yugoslavia: An Exercise in Law, Politics and Diplomacy, Oxford, 2004; the series of articles on the ICTY published in 2 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2004, pp. 353 ff. and 37 New England Law Review, 2002–3, pp. 865 ff.
[39] See e.g. B. Ferencz, 'An International Criminal Code and Court: Where They Stand and Where They're Going', 30 Columbia Journal of Transnational Law, 1992, p. 375.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Yugoslav experience, and the Rwanda massacres of 1994, led to the establishment of two specific war crimes tribunals by the use of the authority of the UN Security Council to adopt decisions binding upon all member states of the organisation under Chapter VII of the Charter, rather than by an international conference as was to be the case with the International Criminal Court. This method was used in order both to enable the tribunal in question to come into operation as quickly as possible and to ensure that the parties most closely associated with the subject-matter of the war crimes alleged should be bound in a manner not dependent upon their consent (as would be necessary in the case of a court established by international agreement). The establishment of the Tribunal was preceded by a series of steps. In Security Council resolutions 764 (1992), 771 (1992) and 820 (1993) grave concern was expressed with regard to breaches of international humanitarian law and the responsibilities of the parties were reaffirmed. In particular, individual responsibility for the commission of grave breaches of the 1949 Conventions was emphasised. Under resolution 780 (1992), the Security Council established an impartial Commission of Experts to examine and analyse information concerning evidence of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia. The Commission produced a report in early 1993 in which it concluded that grave breaches and other violations of international humanitarian law had been committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, including wilful killing, 'ethnic cleansing', mass killings, torture, rape, pillage and destruction of civilian property, the destruction of cultural and religious property and arbitrary arrests.[40]

The Security Council then adopted resolution 808 (1993) calling for the establishment of an international tribunal to prosecute 'persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991'. The Secretary-General of the UN produced a report incorporating a draft statute and commentary,[41] which was adopted by the Security Council in resolution 827 (1993) acting under Chapter VII of the UN Charter.[42]

[40] See S/25274. See also M.C. Bassiouni, 'The United Nations Commission of Experts Established Pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992)', 88 AJIL, 1994, p. 784.

[41] S/25704 (1993).

[42] The Statute has been subsequently amended: see Security Council resolutions 1166 (1998), 1329 (2000), 1411 (2002), 1431 (2002), 1481 (2003), 1597 (2005) and 1660 (2006).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Tribunal has the power to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991 (articles 1 and 8 of the Statute). The absence of a closing date meant that the later conflict in Kosovo could be the subject of prosecutions.[43] The Tribunal consists of three main organs: the Registry, the office of the Prosecutor and the Chambers.[44] The Registry is the administrative body,[45] while the Office of the Prosecutor is responsible for investigations, issuing of indictments and bringing matters to trial. There are currently three Trial Chambers, each consisting of a presiding judge and two other judges, and an Appeals Chamber, consisting of seven members but sitting in a panel of five, headed by a President. Of the seven, five come from the ICTY and two from the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda.[46] The Chambers have a maximum of sixteen permanent judges and a maximum of twelve ad litem judges drawn from a pool of twenty-seven such judges elected by the General Assembly for four-year renewable terms.[47]

Articles 2 to 5 of the Statute lay down the crimes with regard to which the Tribunal can exercise jurisdiction. These are: grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949, violation of the laws or customs of war, genocide and crimes against humanity.[48]

Article 7 establishes that persons who 'planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution' of crimes listed in articles 2 to 5 shall be individually responsible for the crime. This article also provides that the official position of any accused person is not to relieve a person of criminal responsibility nor mitigate punishment, while the fact that a subordinate committed the crime is not to relieve a superior of responsibility if the latter knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to or had committed the crime and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof. It is also stipulated that the fact that an accused person acted pursuant to an order of a government or of a superior will not relieve him of criminal responsibility, although this may constitute a mitigating factor if the Tribunal determines that justice so requires. The Appeals Chamber of the Tribunal

[43] See Security Council resolution 1160 (1998) and Milutinović, ICTY, A. Ch. 8 June 2004. See also as to events in the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, In re: The Republic of Macedonia I, ICTY, T. Ch. 4 October 2002.

[44] Article 11. [45] Article 17. [46] Article 14.

[47] Articles 12 and 13. [48] See further below, p. 430.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in the Tadić case confirmed that customary international law had imposed criminal responsibility for serious violations of humanitarian law governing internal as well as international armed conflicts.[49]

The Tribunal and national courts have concurrent jurisdiction with regard to the prosecution of relevant accused persons, but the Tribunal has primacy over national courts, so that the former may request the latter to defer to its competence.[50] States are obliged to co-operate with the International Tribunal in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of committing serious violations of international humanitarian law and must comply without undue delay with any request for assistance or an order issued by a Trial Chamber, including the identification and location of persons; the taking of testimony and the production of evidence; the arrest or detention of persons; and the surrender or the transfer of the accused to the International Tribunal.[51] No person may be tried by a national court for acts constituting serious violations of international humanitarian law under the Statute, for which he or she has already been tried by the International Tribunal, but the Tribunal may try a person for relevant acts after trial by a national court where the act for which he or she was tried was characterised as an ordinary crime; or where the national court proceedings were not impartial or independent, were designed to shield the accused from international criminal responsibility, or the case was not diligently prosecuted.[52]

Investigations into alleged offences under the Statute are initiated by the Prosecutor either ex officio or on the basis of information obtained from any source, particularly from governments, United Nations organs, intergovernmental and non-governmental organisations. Information received is assessed by the Prosecutor, who then decides whether there is a sufficient basis to proceed. The Prosecutor may question suspects, victims and witnesses, collect evidence and conduct on-site investigations.

[49] See IT-94-1-AR72, 2 October 1995, p. 70; 105 ILR, p. 419. See further below, chapter 21, p. 1194.

[50] Article 9. Under Rule 9 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence as amended, deferral of national proceedings may be requested where the act being investigated or which is the subject of those proceedings is characterised as an ordinary crime; or there is a lack of impartiality or independence, or the investigations or proceedings are designed to shield the accused from international criminal responsibility, or the case is not diligently prosecuted; or what is in issue is closely related to, or otherwise involves, significant factual or legal questions which may have implications for investigations or prosecutions before the Tribunal. See as to the different situation with regard to the International Criminal Court, below, p. 410.

[51] Article 29. [52] Article 10.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Where it is determined that a prima facie case exists, the Prosecutor shall prepare an indictment containing a concise statement of the facts and the crime or crimes with which the accused is charged, and this indictment is then transmitted to a judge of the Trial Chamber, who will review it. If satisfied that a prima facie case has been established by the Prosecutor, the judge will confirm the indictment. If not so satisfied, the indictment shall be dismissed. Upon confirmation of an indictment, the judge may, at the request of the Prosecutor, issue such orders and warrants for the arrest, detention, surrender or transfer of persons, and any other orders as may be required for the conduct of the trial. It will then be for the Trial Chambers to ensure that the trial is fair and expeditious and that proceedings are conducted in accordance with the rules of procedure and evidence, with full respect for the rights of the accused and due regard for the protection of victims and witnesses.[53] Judgment will then be reached by the Trial Chamber concerned and punishment, limited to imprisonment, imposed upon conviction.[54] Appeal is to the Appeals Chamber on the grounds either of an error of law invalidating the decision or of an error of fact occasioning a miscarriage of justice. The Appeals Chamber may affirm, reverse or revise the decisions taken by the Trial Chambers.[55]

The Tribunal has dealt with a number of significant issues.[56] In an early case, the Appeal Chamber held that it had the power to review the question of the legality of the establishment of the Tribunal and noted that the Security Council had adopted a decision under Chapter VII of the UN Charter binding on all member states to create the Tribunal in the framework of the restoration of international peace and security.[57]

As of early March 2008, the Tribunal had issued 161 indictments; 111 proceedings had been concluded, with regard to which 53 individuals had been sentenced, 9 acquitted and 36 indictments withdrawn (including where the accused had died). Four persons indicted were still at large, including Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić, the leaders of the Bosnian Serbs during the war.[58] However, the UN Security Council has [53] Articles 18–20. [54] Article 24. [55] Article 25. [56] See further below, pp. 435 ff.

[57] Tadić, IT-94-1-AR72, 2 October 1995, p. 70, paras. 30 ff.; 105 ILR, p. 419. After this decision, the Dayton Peace Agreement was signed, which includes the obligation placed upon all states of the former Yugoslavia to co-operate with the Tribunal: see Article X, Annex 1-A.

[58] See www.un.org/icty/glance-e/index.htm. Note the death in custody of the Yugoslav President Slobodan Milošević on 11 March 2006 during his trial on sixty-six counts of violations of the Statute including genocide: see ICTY Annual Report 2006, A/61/271 – S/2006/666, para. 55. After the text above was written, Radovan Karadžić was arrested in Belgrade and sent to the Tribunal, who assigned his case to a Trial Chamber: see IT-95-5/18-I, 22 July 2008.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

confirmed a completion strategy which is intended to ensure a phased and co-ordinated completion of the Tribunal's mission by the end of 2010.[59] Under this strategy, the ICTY has concentrated on the prosecution and trial of the most senior leaders while referring other cases involving intermediate and lower-rank accused to national courts. Two main categories of cases have been referred to national courts in the region of the former Yugoslavia, being those cases that were investigated to different levels by the Tribunal's Prosecution which did not result in the issuance of an indictment by the ICTY and the small number of cases that were investigated by the Tribunal's Prosecution and that resulted in the confirmation of indictments by the Tribunal and the transfer of accused persons to the Tribunal's custody. Cases began to be transferred to the national courts of successor states to the former Yugoslavia, particularly Bosnia and Croatia, in 2005.[60] By mid-2007, thirteen 'lower to mid-level accused' had been transferred to local courts.[61]

The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR)[62]

Following events in Rwanda during 1994 and the mass slaughter that took place, the Security Council decided in resolution 955 (1994) to establish an International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, with the power to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law. The Statute of this Tribunal was annexed to the body of the Security Council resolution and bears many similarities to the Statute of the Yugoslav Tribunal.

[59] See resolutions 1503 (2003) and 1534 (2004). Under the resolutions the Trial Chambers were required to complete their business by 2008 and the Appeals Chamber by 2010. See also D. Raab, 'Evaluating the ICTY and Its Completion Strategy', 3 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2005, p. 82.

[60] See M. Bohlander, 'Referring an Indictment from the ICTY and ICTR to Another Court – Rule 11 bis and the Consequences for the Law of Extradition', 55 ICLQ, 2006, p. 219. See also below, pp. 409 ff.

[61] See ICTY Annual Report 2007, A/62/172 – S/2007/469, para. 10.

[62] See e.g. UN Secretary-General Reports S/1994/879 and S/1994/906 and the Report of the Special Rapporteur for Rwanda of the UN Commission on Human Rights, S/1994/1157, annex I and annex II, and the Report of the Commission of Experts, S/1994/1125. See also V. Morris and M. P. Scharf, The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, New York, 1998; L. J. van den Herik, The Contribution of the Rwanda Tribunal to the Development of International Law, The Hague, 2005; L. Sunga, 'The Commission of Experts on Rwanda and the Creation of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda', 16 HRLJ, 1995, p. 121, and R. S. Lee, 'The Rwanda Tribunal', 9 Leiden Journal of International Law, 1996, p. 37.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Rwanda Tribunal consists of three Trial Chambers, an Office of the Prosecutor and a Registry with the same functions as those of the Yugoslav Tribunal.[63] The Chambers are composed of sixteen permanent independent judges, no two of whom may be nationals of the same state, and a maximum at any one time of nine ad litem independent judges. The ICTR and the ICTY share a joint Appeals Chamber, two members of whom are members of the Rwanda Tribunal.[64]

Articles 2 to 4 stipulate the crimes over which the Tribunal has jurisdiction. Article 2 deals with genocide; article 3 with crimes against humanity, being the crimes of (a) murder; (b) extermination; (c) enslavement; (d) deportation; (e) imprisonment; (f) torture; (g) rape; (h) persecutions on political, racial and religious grounds; and (i) other inhumane acts, when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds; and article 4 deals with violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.[65] Article 6 provides for individual criminal responsibility with regard to persons planning, ordering, committing or aiding the crimes listed, while provisions similar to the Statute of the Yugoslav Tribunal with regard to the absence of immunity for persons holding official positions, command responsibility and superior orders apply.

The Tribunal has jurisdiction with regard to serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of Rwanda and Rwandan citizens responsible for such violations committed in the territory of neighbouring states between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994.[66] As is the case with the ICTY, the ICTR has concurrent jurisdiction with national courts and has primacy over national courts of all states, while at any stage of the procedure, the Tribunal may formally request national courts to defer to its competence.[67] Similarly, no person may be tried before a national court for acts constituting serious violations of international humanitarian law under the present Statute, for which he or she has already been tried by the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, while a person who has been tried before a national court for acts constituting serious violations of international humanitarian law may be subsequently tried by the Tribunal only if either the act for which

[63] Article 10.

[64] See Security Council resolution 1329 (2000). The two Tribunals shared a Prosecutor until a separate Prosecutor was appointed to the ICTR in 2003; see Security Council resolution 1503 (2003).

[65] See below, chapter 21, p. 1194. [66] Article 7. [67] Article 8.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

he or she was tried was characterised as an ordinary crime; or the national court proceedings were not impartial or independent, were designed to shield the accused from international criminal responsibility, or the case was not diligently prosecuted.[68]

After several difficult early years, during which problems of mismanagement with regard to the Office of the Prosecutor and the Registry predominated,[69] the Tribunal began to produce some significant decisions. These commenced with the Kambanda case,[70] which was the first time that a former head of government was convicted for the crime of genocide (after having pleaded guilty), and the Akayesu case,[71] in which for the first time an international tribunal was called upon to interpret the definition of genocide in the Genocide Convention, 1948 and to define the crime of rape in international law. However, the rate of progress has been disappointing and tensions with Rwanda have surfaced from time to time.[72]

As in the case of the ICTY, the Rwanda Tribunal has formulated a completion strategy, which has been affirmed by Security Council resolutions 1503 (2003) and 1534 (2004), although it had in 2002 adopted Rule 11 bis of the Rules of Procedure permitting the transfer of cases to national jurisdictions. The Security Council, as with the ICTY, increased the number of ad litem judges and various other management decisions were taken. A separate Prosecutor for the ICTR was appointed in 2003. Attention was focused upon the prosecution of individuals who allegedly were in positions of leadership, and those who allegedly bore the greatest responsibility for the genocide, while the Prosecutor is continuously reviewing his files to determine which cases may be suitable for referral to national jurisdictions for trial. Such decision is for judicial determination. The Prosecutor also holds discussions with states, including Rwanda, regarding the referral of cases to national jurisdictions for trial, in particular with respect to accused persons who were investigated but not indicted by his office. Considerations of fair trial in the state concerned are also a relevant factor, as well as the alleged status and extent of participation of the individual during the genocide, the alleged connection that the individual may have had with other cases, the need to cover the major geographical areas of Rwanda, the availability of evidence with regard to

[68] Article 9.

[69] See e.g. Report of the Secretary-General on the Activities of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, A/51/789 and ICTR Annual Report 1997, A/52/582 – S/1997/868.

[70] ICTR T. Ch. 4 September 1998. [71] ICTR T. Ch. 1 2 September 1998.

[72] As of May 2007, twenty-seven judgments, involving thirty-three accused, had been rendered: see ICTR Annual Report 2007, A/62/284 – S/007/502.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the individual concerned and the availability of investigative material for transmission to a state for national prosecution.[73]

The International Criminal Court (ICC)[74]

Article VI of the Genocide Convention, 1948 provided for persons charged with genocide to be tried either by a court in the territory where the act had been committed or by an 'international penal tribunal' to be established. The International Law Commission was asked to study the possibility of the establishment of such an international court and a report was produced.[75] The matter was then transmitted to the General Assembly which produced a draft statute.[76] However, the question was postponed until a definition of aggression had been achieved and the draft Code of Offences completed. Due primarily to political reasons, no further progress was made until Trinidad and Tobago proposed the creation of a permanent international criminal court to deal with drug trafficking in 1989. Given additional urgency by the developing Yugoslav situation in the early 1990s, the International Law Commission adopted a Draft Statute for an International Criminal Court in 1994.[77] This draft statute proposed that an international criminal court be established with jurisdiction not only over genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity and aggression, but also over certain 'treaty crimes' such as terrorism and drugs offences found in UN conventions. The draft statute was also less expansive than the International Criminal Court Statute proved to be in a number of ways, including not providing for the Prosecutor to initiate investigations on his or her own authority. However, the ILC draft proved very [73] See Report on the Completion Strategy of the ICTR 2007, S/2007/676, paras. 32 ff. Of the fourteen indicted persons still at large, five have been earmarked for trial at the Tribunal on the basis of the leadership roles they played during the 1994 genocide, ibid., para. 38.

[74] See e.g. Schabas, International Criminal Court; The Permanent International Criminal Court: Legal and Policy Issues (eds. D. McGoldrick, P. Rowe and E. Donelly), Oxford, 2004; The Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (eds. A. Cassese, P. Gaeta and J. R. W. D. Jones), Oxford, 2002; M. C. Bassiouni, 'The Permanent International Criminal Court' in Lattimer and Sands, Justice for Crimes Against Humanity, p. 173; B. Broomhall, International Justice and the International Criminal Court: Between Sovereignty and the Rule of Law, Oxford, 2003, and The International Criminal Court: The Making of the Rome Statute (ed. R. Lee), The Hague, 1999.

[75] See General Assembly resolution 260 (III) B and A/CN.4/15 and A/CN.4/20 (1950).

[76] UNGAOR A/2645.

[77] See Report of the ILC on the Work of its 46th Session, A/49/10, pp. 43 ff. See in particular J. Crawford, 'The ILC's Draft Statute for an International Criminal Court', 88 AJIL, 1994, p. 140, and Crawford, 'The Making of the Rome Statute' in From Nuremberg to The Hague: The Future of International Criminal Justice (ed. P. Sands), Cambridge, 2003, p. 109.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

influential and a Preparatory Committee was convened in December 1995.[78] The work of this Committee[79] led to the Rome Conference in 1998, which produced after some effort the Rome Statute on the International Criminal Court on 17 July 1998.[80] Sixty states were needed to ratify the Rome Statute in order for it to come into force and this duly happened on 1 July 2002. Unlike the two international criminal tribunals (for the former Yugoslavia and for Rwanda), the ICC is the product not of a binding Security Council resolution, but of an international treaty. This was essentially because states, while being prepared to accept the creation of geographically limited and temporally constrained (in Rwanda's case) tribunals by Security Council action, were not willing to be so bound by the establishment of a permanent international criminal court with much more extensive jurisdiction without express consent. Secondly, it is to be noted that the range and content of the Rome Statute is far greater than those of the two international criminal tribunals. The Rome Statute contains 128 articles, while the ICTY Statute contains 34 articles and the ICTR Statute 32 articles

The Statute provides that the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court is limited to the 'most serious crimes of concern to the international community as a whole', being genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and aggression,[81] and that a person who commits a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court 'shall be individually responsible and liable for punishment' in accordance with the Statute.[82] The ICC only has jurisdiction with respect to crimes committed after the Statute came into force and with respect to states which have become parties to the Statute.[83]

[78] General Assembly resolution 50/46. See also resolutions 51/207 and 52/160.

[79] See A/51/22 and A/CONF.183/13 (III), p. 5.

[80] See Schabas, International Criminal Court, pp. 18 ff.

[81] Article 5. These provisions are further defined in detail in articles 6–8 and see below, p. 430. In addition, article 9 provides for the preparation of Elements of Crimes to assist the Court in the interpretation and application of articles 6, 7 and 8. This was adopted on 9 September 2002 by the Assembly of States Parties, together with the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. However, jurisdiction cannot be exercised with regard to the crime of aggression until the Statute has been amended by its definition and the acceptance of conditions for jurisdiction. A review conference is due to take place in 2009 during which the issue is to be discussed.

[82] Article 25.

[83] Article 11. Note, however, that a state may make a declaration under article 12(3) to permit the Court to exercise jurisdiction in the particular case as from 1 July 2002. Note also that under article 124, a state may, upon ratification, decide not to accept the jurisdiction of the ICC over war crimes with regard to its nationals or to crimes committed on its territory for a period of seven years. In fact, only France and Colombia have taken advantage of this provision.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Further, jurisdiction may only be exercised provided either the state on the territory of which the conduct in question occurred (or if the crime was committed on board a vessel or aircraft, the state of registration of that vessel or aircraft) or the state of which the person accused of the crime is a national is a party to the Statute.[84] This means that the jurisdiction of the ICC is not universal, but territorial or personal in nature. It also means that the national of a state which is not a party to the Statute may be prosecuted where the crime is committed in the territory of a state which is a party. However, the Court may also have jurisdiction where a situation has been referred to the Prosecutor by the Security Council acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, which is thereby binding and in which case it is unnecessary that a relevant state be a party to the Statute.[85] This has happened with regard to the situation in Darfur, Sudan, which was referred to the Prosecutor on 31 March 2005 by the Security Council in resolution 1593. After a preliminary examination of the situation, an investigation was opened on 1 June 2005 and after a twenty-month investigation into crimes allegedly committed in Darfur since 1 July 2002, the Prosecutor presented evidence to the judges and a summons to two named Sudanese individuals, one being a government minister and the other a military officer, to appear was issued with regard to charges alleging the commission of war crimes and crimes against humanity.[86] Warrants of arrest were issued on 27 April 2007 against the two individuals by Pre-Trial Chamber I.[87]

In addition to the Security Council referral, the ICC is also able to exercise its jurisdiction with regard to one or more of the crimes in question where the situation in which one or more of these crimes appears to have been committed has been referred to the Prosecutor by a state party to the Statute,[88] or the where Prosecutor has himself or herself initiated an investigation.[89] In the latter case, where the Prosecutor concludes, after having analysed the seriousness of the information received, that there is a reasonable basis to proceed to an investigation, a request for authorisation of an investigation, together with any supporting material collected, will be submitted to the Pre-Trial Chamber. Victims may also make representations to the Pre-Trial Chamber, in accordance with the [84] Article 12(2). [85] Article 13(b).

[86] See www.icc-cpi.int/library/organs/otp/ICC-OTP_Fact-Sheet-Darfur-20070227_en.pdf.

[87] See ICC-02/05-01/07-2 01-05-2007 1/16 CB PT and ICC-02/05-01/07-3 01-05-2007 1/17 CB PT. See also Schabas, International Criminal Court, pp. 47 ff. The Prosecutor applied for a warrant of arrest against the President of Sudan on 14 July 2008 alleging genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity, ICC-OTP-20080714-PR341-ENG.

[88] Articles 13(a) and 14. [89] Article 13(c).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Rules of Procedure and Evidence. Where the Pre-Trial Chamber, upon examination of the request and the supporting material, considers that there is a reasonable basis to proceed with an investigation, and that the case appears to fall within the jurisdiction of the Court, it shall authorise the commencement of the investigation, without prejudice to subsequent determinations by the Court with regard to the jurisdiction and admissibility of a case.[90]

There have been three examples to date of referral by a state party. In December 2003, Uganda referred to the Prosecutor the situation with regard to the Lord's Resistance Army;[91] in April 2004, the Democratic Republic of the Congo referred to the Prosecutor the situation of crimes committed in its territory;[92] and in December 2004, the Central African Republic referred the situation in its country during the armed conflict of 2002–3 to the Prosecutor.[93]

However, in a concession to obtain the support of states to the ICC, article 16 provides that no investigation or prosecution may be commenced

[90] Article 15. The refusal of the Pre-Trial Chamber to authorise the investigation will not preclude the presentation of a subsequent request by the Prosecutor based on new facts or evidence regarding the same situation. If, after the preliminary examination referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2, the Prosecutor concludes that the information provided does not constitute a reasonable basis for an investigation, he or she shall inform those who provided the information. This shall not preclude the Prosecutor from considering further information submitted to him or her regarding the same situation in the light of new facts or evidence.

[91] In July 2004, an investigation was opened by the Prosecutor, and on 8 July 2005, warrants of arrest for crimes against humanity and war crimes against five senior commanders of the Lord's Resistance Army were issued under seal by Pre-Trial Chamber II. These warrants were made public on 13 October 2005: see www.icc-cpi.int/library/cases/ICC_20051410-056-1_English.pdf and Schabas, International Criminal Court, pp. 36 ff.

[92] See ICC-OTP-20040419-50-En. An investigation was opened in June 2004, the first such investigation by the Prosecutor: see ICC-OTP-20040623-59-En. An arrest warrant was issued in early 2006 against Thomas Lubanga Dyilo, who was charged on various counts concerning the recruitment and use of child soldiers: see ICC Newsletter, No. 10, November 2006. However, a stay on proceedings was ordered and the accused released due to fair trial considerations. An appeal is pending, ICC-01/04-01/06, 2 July 2008. An arrest warrant was issued against Germain Katanga on 2 July 2007 and he was transferred to the custody of the Court in October that year: see www.icc-cpi.int/library/cases/DRC-18-10-07_En.pdf. An arrest warrant was issued against Mathieu Ngudjolo Chui on 7 July 2007 and he was transferred to the custody of the Court in February 2008: see www.icc-cpi.int/pressrelease_details&id=329.html. Both the latter individuals are also charged with regard to the situation in the Congo. See also Schabas, International Criminal Court, pp. 42 ff.

[93] An investigation was opened by the Prosecutor in May 2007: see www.icc-cpi.int/library/press/pressreleases/ICC-OTP-BN-20070522-220_A_EN.pdf and Schabas, International Criminal Court, pp. 51–2.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

or proceeded with for a period of twelve months after the Security Council, in a resolution adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, has so requested the Court. Such request may be renewed by the Council under the same conditions.[94] Article 98(2) provides that the Court may not proceed with a request for surrender which would require the requested state to act inconsistently with its obligations under international agreements pursuant to which the consent of a sending state is required to surrender a person of that state to the Court, unless the Court can first obtain the co-operation of the sending state for the giving of consent for the surrender. The provision, which was intended to deal with conflicting obligations, such as the position of soldiers stationed overseas under Status of Forces agreements which allow the sending state to exercise elements of criminal jurisdiction with regard to its soldiers, has been used by the US for a much broader purpose. The US has signed a number of bilateral agreements with states, some parties to the Rome Statute and some not, which provide that no nationals, current or former officials, or military personnel of either party may be surrendered or transferred by the other state to the ICC for any purpose. This tactic has been widely criticised and is highly controversial.[95]

A key feature of the ICC, and one that distinguished it from the two international criminal tribunals, is that it is founded upon the concept of complementarity, which means essentially that the national courts have priority. A case will be inadmissible and the Court will be unable to exercise jurisdiction in a number of situations.[96] These are, first, where the case is being investigated or prosecuted by a state which has jurisdiction over it, unless the state is unwilling or unable genuinely to carry out the [94] See Security Council resolution 1422 (2002) calling for the ICC to defer any exercise of jurisdiction for twelve months if a case arises involving current or former officials or personnel from a contributing state not a party to the Rome Statute over acts or omissions relating to a UN established or authorised operation. This was renewed for a further twelve months in resolution 1487 (2003), but not subsequently: see e.g. D. McGoldrick, 'Political and Legal Responses to the ICC' in McGoldrick et al. The Permanent International Criminal Court, p. 415. However, resolutions 1497 (2003) and 1593 (2005) provide that personnel from a state not a party to the Rome Statute will be subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of that state for all acts related to the multinational force or UN force in Liberia and Darfur respectively: see Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, pp. 142 ff.

[95] See e.g. Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, pp. 144–5; M. Benzing, 'US Bilateral Non-Surrender Agreements and Article 98 of the Statute of the International Criminal Court', 8 Max Planck Yearbook of United Nations Law, 2004, p. 182, and Schabas, International Criminal Court, pp. 29 ff.

[96] Article 17. See also the Thomas Lubanga Dyilo case, ICC-01/04-01/06, Decision on the Prosecutor's Application for a Warrant of Arrest, 10 February 2006.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

investigation or prosecution; secondly, where the case is being investigated or prosecuted by a state which has jurisdiction over it and the state has decided not to prosecute the person concerned, unless the decision resulted from the unwillingness[97] or inability[98] of the state genuinely to prosecute; and thirdly, where the person concerned has already been tried for conduct which is the subject of the complaint, unless the proceedings before the court other than the ICC were for the purpose of shielding the person concerned from criminal responsibility for crimes within the jurisdiction of the ICC or where those proceedings were not conducted independently or impartially.[99]

The Court consists of four organs. These are respectively the Presidency; an Appeals Division, a Trial Division and a Pre-Trial Division; the Office of the Prosecutor; and the Registry.[100] The eighteen judges elected must be independent and serve on a full-time basis,[101] have competence in criminal law or in relevant areas of international law and must represent the principal legal systems in the world, as well as reflect equitable geographical representation and the need for a fair representation of male and female judges. The judges are elected by the Assembly of States Parties using rather complicated voting rules.[102] The Presidency, consisting of the President and the First and Second Vice-Presidents, is responsible for the proper administration of the Court (apart from the Office of the Prosecutor),[103] while the Registry is responsible for the non-judicial aspects of the administration and servicing of the Court.[104] The Office of the Prosecutor acts independently as a separate organ of the Court. It is responsible for receiving referrals and any substantiated information on crimes within the jurisdiction of the Court, for examining them and for conducting investigations and prosecutions before the Court.[105] The Office is headed by the Prosecutor who is elected by secret ballot by members of the Assembly of States Parties and assisted by one or more Deputy Prosecutors.[106]

[97] In order to determine this, the Court must consider whether the proceedings were being undertaken or the decision made in order to shield the person concerned from criminal responsibility for crimes within the jurisdiction of the ICC; whether there has been an unjustified delay in the proceedings, and whether the proceedings have been conducted independently or impartially, article 17(2)a–c.

[98] In order to determine this, the Court must consider whether, due to a total or substantial collapse or unavailability of its national judicial system, the state is unable to obtain the accused or the necessary evidence and testimony or is otherwise unable to carry out its proceedings, article 17(3).

[99] Article 20(3). [100] Article 34. [101] Article 40. [102] Article 36.

[103] Article 38. [104] Article 43. [105] See further articles 53–5. [106] Article 42.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Pre-Trial Division is composed of judges with predominantly criminal trial experience, who serve in the Division for a period of three years. The Pre-Trial Chamber is composed either of a single judge or of a bench of three judges[107] and confirms or rejects the authorisation to commence an investigation and makes a preliminary determination that the case falls within the jurisdiction of the Court, without prejudice to subsequent determinations by the Court with regard to the jurisdiction and admissibility of a case. The Pre-Trial Chamber may also review a decision of the Prosecutor not to proceed with an investigation either on its own initiative, or at the request of the state making a referral under article 14, or the United Nations Security Council under article 13(b),[108] and can issue warrants of arrests and summons to appear before the Court at the request of the Prosecutor, issue orders to grant the rights of the parties in the proceeding, and, where necessary, provide for the protection and privacy of victims and witnesses, the preservation of evidence, the protection of persons who have been arrested or appeared in response to a summons, and the protection of national security information. Within a reasonable time after the person's surrender or voluntary appearance before the Court, the Pre-Trial Chamber holds a hearing in the presence of the Prosecutor, the person charged and his/her counsel to confirm or reject the charges. Once the Pre-Trial Chamber has confirmed the charges and committed the person for trial by the Trial Chamber, the Presidency will establish a Trial Chamber to conduct subsequent proceedings.

The Trial Division is also predominantly composed of judges with criminal trial experience who serve for a period of three years. Three judges of the Division carry out the judicial functions of the Trial Chamber.[109] The primary function of the Trial Chamber is to ensure that a trial is fair and expeditious, and is conducted with full respect for the rights of the accused with regard for the protection of victims and witnesses.[110] The Trial Chamber will determine whether the accused is innocent or guilty. In the latter case, imprisonment for a specified number of years, which may not exceed a maximum of thirty years or a term of life imprisonment, may be imposed. Financial penalties may also be imposed[111] and the Trial Chamber can also order a convicted person to pay money for compensation, restitution or rehabilitation for victims.[112] The trial must be held in public unless special circumstances require that certain proceedings be in [107] Article 39(2)(b)(iii). [108] Article 53. [109] Article 39(2)(b)(ii).

[110] Article 64. [111] Article 77. [112] Article 75(2).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

closed session to protect confidential or sensitive information to be given in evidence, or to protect victims and witnesses.[113]

The Appeals Division is composed of judges with established competence in relevant areas of international law and the Appeals Chamber is composed of all the judges assigned to the Appeals Division.[114] The Prosecutor or the convicted person can appeal against the decisions of the Pre-Trial and Trial Chambers to the Appeals Chamber. A sentence may be appealed on the ground of procedural error, error of fact, error of law, or any other ground that affects the fairness or reliability of the proceedings or decision. Further, a sentence may be appealed on the ground of disproportion between the crime and the sentence.[115] The Appeals Chamber may decide to reverse or amend the decision, judgment or sentence, or order a new trial before a different Trial Chamber.[116]

Hybrid courts and other internationalised domestic courts and tribunals[117]

In addition to the temporary and geographically limited international criminal tribunals and the permanent International Criminal Court, a new style of judicial institution has made an appearance recently in which both international and national elements co-exist in varying combinations. Such institutions, which may for convenience be termed hybrid courts, exist primarily to enhance legitimacy and increase acceptability both locally and internationally, invariably in difficult post-conflict situations where reliance upon purely domestic mechanisms carries significant political risks or costs. However, as will be seen, there are a number of models adopted which differ as to formal legal origin, constitutional status, applicable law and structure. Some of these mechanisms may more [113] Article 68. [114] Article 39(2)(b)(i).

[115] Article 81. Either party may appeal against decisions as to, for example, jurisdiction or admissibility; decisions as to the grant or denial of the release of the person being investigated or prosecuted; and decisions of the Pre-Trial Chamber to act on its own initiative under article 56(3): see article 82.

[116] Article 83. The revision of the sentence can be requested if new evidence has been discovered which was not available at the time of the trial and is sufficiently important or decisive for the Appeals Chamber to revise or amend the sentence: see article 84.

[117] See e.g. Internationalized Criminal Courts (eds. C. P. R. Romano, A. Nollkaemper and J. K. Kleffner), Oxford, 2004; Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, chapter 9; Schabas, The UN International Criminal Tribunals; and L. A. Dickinson, 'The Promise of Hybrid Courts', 97 AJIL, 2003, p. 295.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

correctly be termed internationalised courts or tribunals[118] as the balance between the international and the domestic tips far to the latter. They are essentially domestic courts applying domestic law, but with a heightened international element in terms, for example, of their function or origins, the basis of their applicable law or the use of international experts. Some courts are difficult to place along the spectrum, but together this category marks an extension of international concern and involvement in issues focusing upon individual criminal responsibility for what are international crimes, even if subsequently incorporated into domestic law.

The Special Court for Sierra Leone

The Special Court for Sierra Leone was established, following a particularly violent civil war, by virtue of an agreement between the UN and Sierra Leone dated 16 January 2002, pursuant to Security Council resolution 1315 (2000), in order to prosecute persons bearing 'the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law and Sierra Leonean law committed in the territory of Sierra Leone since 30 November 1996' on the basis of individual criminal responsibility.[119] However, it is stipulated that any transgressions by peacekeepers and related personnel present in the country by virtue of agreements with the UN or other governments or regional organisations or otherwise with the consent of the Sierra Leonean government are within the 'primary jurisdiction' of the sending state.[120]

The Special Court consists of the Chambers (two Trial Chambers and an Appeals Chamber), the Prosecutor and the Registry. Three judges serve [118] See for this terminology, M. P. Scharf, 'The Iraqi High Tribunal', 5 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2007, pp. 258, 259.

[119] Article 1 of the Agreement contained in S/2002/246, Appendix II, and articles 1 and 6 of the Statute of the Special Court, contained in S/2002/246, Appendix III, and see Security Council resolution 1436 (2002) affirming 'strong support' for the Court, and the Report on the Special Court by Professor A. Cassese, the independent expert commissioned by the UN Secretary-General to review the work of the Special Court, December 2006, www.sc-sl.org/documents/independentexpertreport.pdf. See also R. Cryer, 'A "Special Court" for Sierra Leone', 50 ICLQ, 2001, p. 435; Schabas, The UN International Criminal Tribunals; A. Smith, 'Sierra Leone: The Intersection of Law, Policy and Practice', P. Mochochoko and G. Tortora, 'The Management Committee for the Special Court for Sierra Leone', and W. A. Schabas, 'Internationalized Courts and their Relationship with Alternative Accountability Mechanisms' in Romano et al., Internationalized Criminal Courts, at pp. 125, 141 and 157 respectively.

[120] Article 1(2) of the Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in each Trial Chamber, of whom one is appointed by the Sierra Leonean government and two are appointed by the UN Secretary-General. Five judges sit in the Appeals Chamber, of whom two are appointed by the government and three by the UN Secretary-General.[121] The Appeals Chamber hears appeals from persons convicted by the Trial Chamber or from the Prosecutor on the grounds of procedural error, an error on a question of law invalidating the decision or an error of fact which has occasioned a miscarriage of justice. The Appeals Chamber may affirm, reverse or revise the decisions taken by the Trial Chamber. In so acting, the judges of the Appeals Chamber of the Special Court are to be guided by the decisions of the Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and for Rwanda. In the interpretation and application of the laws of Sierra Leone, they are to be guided by the decisions of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone.[122]

The Prosecutor, who is appointed by the UN Secretary-General for a three-year term and acts independently as a separate organ of the Special Court, is responsible for the investigation and prosecution of persons who bear the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law and crimes under Sierra Leonean law committed in the territory of Sierra Leone since 30 November 1996. The Office of the Prosecutor has the power to question suspects, victims and witnesses, to collect evidence and to conduct on-site investigations. The Prosecutor is assisted by a Sierra Leonean Deputy Prosecutor, and by a mixture of Sierra Leonean and international staff.[123] The Registry is responsible for the administration and servicing of the Special Court and is appointed by the UN Secretary-General after consultation with the President of the Special Court.[124]

The jurisdiction of the Special Court mirrors the hybrid nature of its creation and staffing. The Court has jurisdiction with regard to crimes against humanity; violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II; other serious violations of [121] Article 12(1). Eight judges were appointed in July 2002: see UN Press Release SG/A/813. There are currently eleven judges and one alternate judge.

[122] Article 20. Under article 21, the convicted person or the Prosecutor may apply to the Appeals Chamber for review where a new fact has been discovered which was not known at the time of the proceedings before the Trial Chamber or Appeals Chamber and which could have been a decisive factor in reaching the decision. The Appeals Chamber may reject the application, reconvene the Trial Chamber or retain jurisdiction over the matter.

[123] Article 15. [124] Article 16.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

international humanitarian law[125] and certain crimes under Sierra Leonean law.[126] Article 8 of the Statute provides that the Special Court and the national courts of Sierra Leone have concurrent jurisdiction, but that the Special Court has primacy over the national courts and that at any stage of the procedure it may formally request a national court to defer to its competence. The Annual Report of the Special Court for 2006–7 notes that thirteen persons were indicted, all between March and September 2003. Of these, nine were in custody, one dead, one still at large, while two indictments were withdrawn. Trials of the nine in custody began in 2004 and 2005 in three joint trials. Of particular interest is the Charles Taylor case. He was the former President of Liberia. His claim to immunity was rejected by the Appeals Chamber in May 2004[127] and he is currently standing trial in The Hague at the premises of the ICC.[128] Judgment in the AFRC trial was handed down on 20 June 2007 and the three accused convicted of offences. Sentencing took place on 19 July 2007 and the appeal against sentencing was dismissed on 22 February 2008.[129] On 2 August 2007, Trial Chamber I reached a decision in the trial of three persons accused of being leaders of the so-called 'Civil Defence Forces', of whom one died prior to pronouncement of judgment, in which the two remaining accused were convicted.[130] The Special Court adopted a completion strategy under which proceedings were due to be completed in 2007.[131] However, this date was not able to be met.

[125] Articles 2–4 of the Statute.

[126] Article 5 of the Statute. These crimes relate to offences relating to the abuse of girls under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act 1926 and offences relating to the wanton destruction of property under the Malicious Damages Act 1861. However, the Special Court has no jurisdiction with regard to any person under the age of fifteen at the time of the alleged commission of the crime. No person may be tried before a national court of Sierra Leone for acts for which he or she has already been tried by the Special Court. But a person who has been tried by a national court for the acts referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the Statute may be subsequently tried by the Special Court if either the act for which he or she was tried was characterised as an ordinary crime; or the national court proceedings were not impartial or independent, or were designed to shield the accused from international criminal responsibility or the case was not diligently prosecuted: see article 9.

[127] See www.sc-sl.org/Documents/Taylor/SCSL-03-01-I-059.pdf.

[128] See Annual Report 2006–7, p. 5.

[129] See www.sc-sl.org/AFRC.html.

[130] See www.sc-sl.org/documents/CDF/SCSL-04-14-T-785A.pdf. See also S. M. Meisenberg, 'Legality of Amnesties in International Humanitarian Law – The Lomé Decision of the Special Court for Sierra Leone', 86 International Review of the Red Cross, 2004, p. 837.

[131] See A/59/816 – S/2005/350.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Extraordinary Chambers of Cambodia

The Khmer Rouge regime under Pol Pot took power in Cambodia in 1975 following a civil war and proceeded to commit widescale atrocities which are believed to have resulted in the death of well over 1 million people. The regime was ousted by a Vietnamese invasion in 1979. In 1997, the Cambodian government requested the United Nations (UN) to assist in establishing a trial process in order to prosecute the senior leaders of the Khmer Rouge. In 2001, the Cambodian National Assembly passed a law to create a court to try serious crimes committed during the Khmer Rouge regime. On 13 May 2003, after a long period of negotiation, the UN General Assembly approved a Draft Agreement between the UN and Cambodia providing for Extraordinary Chambers in the courts of Cambodia, with the aim of bringing to trial senior leaders of Democratic Kampuchea and those who were most responsible for the crimes and serious violations of Cambodian penal law, international humanitarian law and custom, and international conventions recognised by Cambodia, that were committed during the period from 17 April 1975 to 6 January 1979.[132] The Agreement was ratified by Cambodia on 19 October 2004.

Article 2 of the Agreement provided that the Extraordinary Chambers were to have subject-matter jurisdiction consistent with that laid down in the Cambodian Law (of 2001) and that the Agreement was to be implemented via that law. However, it is provided also that the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969 is to apply to the Agreement. Accordingly, the Agreement must be seen as an international treaty, although one closely linked with the relevant domestic law. The Chambers are composed of a Trial Chamber, consisting of three Cambodian judges and two international judges, and a Supreme Court Chamber, serving as both appellate chamber and final instance and consisting of four Cambodian judges and three international judges. The UN Secretary-General was to nominate seven judges and the Cambodian Supreme [132] See General Assembly resolutions 57/228A and 57/228B and A/57/806. See also R. Williams, 'The Cambodian Extraordinary Chambers – A Dangerous Precedent for International Justice?', 53 ICLQ, 2004, p. 227; G. Acquaviva, 'New Paths in International Criminal Justice? The Internal Rules of the Cambodian Extraordinary Chambers', 6 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2008, p. 129; C. Etcheson, 'The Politics of Genocide Justice in Cambodia' and E. E. Meijer, 'The Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia for Prosecuting Crimes Committed by the Khmer Rouge: Jurisdiction, Organization and Procedure of an Internationalized Tribunal' in Romano et al., Internationalized Criminal Courts, at pp. 181 and 207 respectively.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Council of Magistracy, the highest domestic judicial body, was to choose five of these to serve in the Chambers.[133] The Agreement also provided for independent co-investigation judges, one Cambodian and one international, who are responsible for the conduct of investigations,[134] and two independent co-prosecutors, one Cambodian and one international, competent to appear in both Chambers, who are responsible for the conduct of the prosecutions.[135]

The jurisdiction of the Extraordinary Chambers covers the crime of genocide as defined in the Genocide Convention, 1948, crimes against humanity as defined in the 1998 Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court and grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and such other crimes as are defined in Chapter II of the Cambodian Law of 2001.[136] The procedure of the Chambers is to be in accordance with Cambodian law, but where Cambodian law does not deal with a particular matter, or where there is uncertainty regarding the interpretation or application of a relevant rule of Cambodian law, or where there is a question regarding the consistency of such a rule with international standards, guidance may also be sought in procedural rules established at the international level. It is also provided that the Extraordinary Chambers are to exercise their jurisdiction in accordance with international standards of justice, fairness and due process of law, as set out in Articles 14 and 15 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to which Cambodia is a party.[137]

A list of five suspects was submitted by the prosecutors on 19 July 2007 to the Chambers with a request that they be indicted and, on 31 July 2007, the first suspect (Khang Khek Ieu, known as 'Duch') was indicted.[138] To [133] Article 3 of the Agreement. The Secretary-General nominated seven judges in March 2006 and the Supreme Council of Magistracy approved a list of thirty Cambodian and international judges in May that year to be followed by appointment by Royal Decree. The judges were duly sworn in in July 2006 and Internal Rules were adopted in June 2007 and revised in February 2008.

[134] Article 5.

[135] Article 6. In the case of both the co-investigating judges and co-prosecutors, the UN Secretary-General was to make two nominations out of which the Supreme Council of Magistracy was to choose one international investigating judge and one international prosecutor. Any differences between the two co-investigating judges and the two co-prosecutors are to be settled by a Pre-Trial Chamber of five judges, three appointed by the Supreme Council of the Magistracy, with one as President, and two appointed by the Supreme Council of the Magistracy upon nomination by the Secretary-General: see article 7.

[136] Article 9. [137] Article 12.

[138] Case file No. 001/18-07-2007-ECCC/OCIJ. See also Annual Report 2007, p. 11.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

date, five suspects are before the Chambers[139] and two appeal proceedings have taken place.[140]

Kosovo Regulation 64 panels[141]

Following the conflict between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (as it then was, today Serbia) and NATO in 1999, the Security Council adopted resolution 1244, which inter alia called for the establishment of an 'international civil presence' in Kosovo. The international civil presence was granted responsibilities, including promoting 'the establishment, pending a final settlement, of substantial autonomy and self-government'; performing basic civilian administrative functions; organising the development of provisional institutions for democratic and autonomous self-government pending a political settlement; and protecting and promoting human rights.[142] The competence of the international civil presence carried out by the UN Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) was extensive. Section 1.1 of the first regulation issued by UNMIK in 1999 stated that: 'All legislative and executive authority with respect to Kosovo, including the administration of the judiciary, is vested in UNMIK and is exercised by the Special Representative of the Secretary General',[143] while section 1.2 provided that the Special Representative could appoint any person to perform functions in the civil administration in Kosovo, including the judiciary, or remove such person in accordance with the applicable law.[144]

Following a series of disturbances in 2000, UNMIK Regulation 2000/6 was adopted, providing for the appointment of international judges and prosecutors,[145] and UNMIK Regulation 2000/64 was adopted, providing for UNMIK to create panels (known as Regulation 64 panels) of three judges, including at least two international judges, at the request [139] Annual Report 2007, pp. 9 ff [140] Annual Report 2007, pp. 13–14.

[141] See e.g. J. Cerone and C. Baldwin, 'Explaining and Evaluating the UNMIK Court System' and J. C. Cady and N. Booth, 'Internationalized Courts in Kosovo: An UNMIK Perspective' in Romano et al., Internationalized Criminal Courts, at pp. 41 and 59 respectively. See also S. de Bertodano, 'Current Developments in Internationalized Courts', 1 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2003, pp. 226, 239 ff., and Finding the Balance: The Scales of Justice in Kosovo, International Crisis Group, 2002.

[142] Paragraphs 10 and 11. [143] UNMIK/REG/1991/1, S/1999/987, p. 14.

[144] As amended in UNMIK/REG/2000/54.

[145] Initially in Mitrovica and then in all domestic courts and the Supreme Court: see UNMIK Regulation 2000/34. Note that attempts to establish a Kosovo War and Ethnic Crimes Court were abandoned in September 2000: see Cady and Booth, 'Internationalized Courts in Kosovo', p. 60.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of the accused, defence counsel or prosecutor. Such international judges functioned as regular court judges in Kosovo with powers derived from domestic legislation, but their involvement in a case was under either their own control or at the behest of the UN Secretary-General's Special Representative in Kosovo. The applicable law was stated to be regulations promulgated by the Special Representative and subsidiary instruments issued thereunder and the law in force in Kosovo on 22 March 1989.[146] However, problems surfaced, particularly with regard to the high rate of national judge convictions overturned by retrials by international judges and lack of systematic publication of case decisions and brevity of such decisions.[147] Kosovo declared independence in early 2008.[148]

East Timor Special Panels for Serious Crimes[149]

Following a period of violence in East Timor instigated by pro-Indonesian militia after the ending of the long Indonesian occupation, the Security Council established the UN Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET) with a wide-ranging mandate to administer the territory.[150] By Regulation No. 1 adopted on 27 November 1999, all legislative and executive authority with respect to East Timor, including the administration of the judiciary, was vested in UNTAET and exercised by the Transitional Administrator. This administrator was given the competence further to appoint any person to perform functions in the civil administration in the territory, including the judiciary, or remove such person and to issue regulations and directives. UNTAET created a new courts

[146] See UNMIK/REG/1999/24 and UNMIK/REG/2000/59. Section 1.3 provided that all persons exercising public functions were to observe internationally recognised human rights standards as reflected in particular in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the European Convention on Human Rights, the Racial Discrimination Convention, the Women's Discrimination Convention, the Torture Convention and the Rights of the Child Convention.

[147] See e.g. de Bertodano, 'Current Developments in Internationalized Courts', pp. 239 ff.

[148] See above, chapter 5, p. 201.

[149] See e.g. S. de Bertodano, 'East Timor: Trials and Tribulations' in Romano et al., Internationalized Criminal Courts, p. 79; S. Linton, 'Prosecuting Atrocities at the District Court of Dili', 2 Melbourne Journal of International Law, 2001, p. 414, and S. Linton and C. Reiger, 'The Evolving Jurisprudence and Practice of East Timor's Special Panels for Serious Crimes on Admission of Guilt, Duress and Superior Orders', 4 Yearbook of International Humanitarian Law, 2001, p. 1. See also the report produced by the Judicial System Monitoring Programme in April 2007, www.jsmp.minihub.org/Reports/2007/SPSC/SERIOUS%20CRIMES %20DIGEST%20(Megan)%20250407.pdf.

[150] Resolution 1272 (1999). See also resolution 1264 (1999) and S/1999/24.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

system,[151] including the establishment of special panels to deal with serious crimes within the District Court of Dili and in the Court of Appeal.[152] These serious crimes were defined as genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity, murder, sexual offences and torture,[153] for which there was individual criminal responsibility.[154] The applicable law was the law of East Timor as promulgated by sections 2 and 3 of UNTAET Regulation No. 1999/1 and any subsequent UNTAET regulations and directives; and, where appropriate, applicable treaties and recognised principles and norms of international law, including the established principles of the international law of armed conflict.

The Panels in the District Court of Dili were to be composed of two international judges and one East Timorese judge, as were the Panels in the Court of Appeal in Dili. In cases of special importance or gravity, a panel of five judges composed of three international and two East Timorese judges could be established.[155] However, the system had barely started before 2003 and in the Armando Dos Santos case, the Court of Appeal held, in a decision much criticised,[156] that since the Indonesian occupation was illegal, Indonesian law was never validly in force so that domestic law was Portuguese law and, further, Regulation 2000/15 could not be applied retroactively so that only Portuguese law could be applied to crimes committed before 6 June 2000.[157] On 20 May 2002, the UN handed over its authority to the new institutions of East Timor and UNTAET was replaced by the UN Mission of Support in East Timor (UNMISET), although UNTAET regulations continued in force. In May 2005, UNMISET came to an end and the Serious Crimes Unit closed. Partly no doubt as a consequence, the Special Panels suspended operations indefinitely. By this time, fifty-five trials, most involving relatively low-level defendants, had taken place, eighty-four individuals had been convicted and three acquitted.[158]

[151] UNTAET Regulations 2000/11 and 2000/14.

[152] Regulation 2000/15. [153] Defined in sections 4–10 of Regulation 2000/15.

[154] Section 14. [155] Section 22.

[156] See de Bertodano, 'East Timor', pp. 90 ff., and de Bertodano, 'Current Developments in Internationalized Courts: East Timor – Justice Denied', 2 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2004, p. 910.

[157] Case No. 16/201: see www.jsmp.minihub.org/Judgements/courtofappeal/Ct_of_App-dos_Santos_English22703.pdf.

[158] See the digest of cases before the Special Panels, produced in 2007, www.jsmp.minihub.org/Reports/2007/SPSC/SERIOUS%20CRIMES%20DIGEST%20(Megan)%20250407.pdf.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Bosnia War Crimes Chamber[159]

In January 2003, the Office of the High Representative in Bosnia[160] and the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia issued a set of joint conclusions recommending the creation of a specialised chamber within the State Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina to try war crimes cases.[161] This was supported by the UN Security Council.[162] The Chamber came into being in 2005 with jurisdiction concerning cases referred to it by the ICTY pursuant to Rule 11 bis of the ICTY Rules of Procedure and Evidence with regard to lower- to mid-level accused persons. As such, this procedure forms part of the completion strategy of the ICTY.[163] In addition, the Chamber has jurisdiction with regard to cases submitted to it by the Office of the Prosecutor of the ICTY where investigations have not been completed, and the first case was referred to the Chamber on 1 September 2005.[164] Further, the Chamber also has jurisdiction over what have been termed 'Rules of the Road' cases. The 'Rules of the Road' procedure was first established in response to the widespread fear of arbitrary arrest and detention immediately after the conflict in Bosnia. Originally, the Bosnian authorities were obliged to submit every war crimes case proposed for prosecution in Bosnia to the Office of the Prosecutor of the ICTY to determine whether the evidence was sufficient by international standards before proceeding to arrest. This review function was subsequently assumed by the Special Department for War Crimes within the Office of the Prosecutor of the State Court of Bosnia in October 2004. Where the case has not yet led to a confirmed indictment and where the prosecutor determines that the case is 'highly sensitive', it will be passed to the Chamber, otherwise it will be tried before the relevant cantonal or district court. If, however, the indictment has been confirmed, the case will remain with the relevant cantonal or district court.

The Chamber has both trial and appeals chambers and there are currently five judicial panels, each comprising two international judges and one local judge, the latter of whom is the presiding judge of the [159] See Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, pp. 159 ff.; Bohlander, 'Referring an Indictment from the ICTY and the ICTR to Another Court', p. 219; Looking for Justice – The War Crimes Chamber in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Human Rights Watch, 2006, and Narrowing the Impunity Gap – Trials Before Bosnia's War Crimes Chamber, Human Rights Watch, 2007.

[160] As to the High Representative, see above, chapter 5, p. 231.

[161] See www.un.org/icty/pressreal/2003/p723-e.htm.

[162] See resolution 1503 (2003).

[163] See above, p. 407.

[164] Prosecutor v. Radovan Stanković, ICTY, Case No. IT-96-23/2-AR11 bis.1, Decision on Rule 11 bis Referral (Appeals Chamber), 1 September 2005, para. 30.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

panel. The Office of the Prosecutor of the State Court includes a Special Department for War Crimes and there are five international prosecutors and one international acting prosecutor, as well as eight local prosecutors, including the deputy prosecutor.[165] The Registry manages the process of appointing and engaging international judges and prosecutors. The international judges are appointed by the High Representative after a joint recommendation of the President of the State Court and the President of the High Judicial and Prosecutorial Council, while the international prosecutors are appointed by the High Representative following a joint recommendation from the Bosnian Chief Prosecutor, the President of the High Judicial and Prosecutorial Council and the Registry.[166]

As of October 2006, the Chamber had confirmed a total of eighteen indictments involving thirty-two defendants. In addition to cases initiated locally, the Chamber had received five Rule 11 bis referrals, involving nine accused, from the ICTY.[167] The applicable law is that of Bosnia, including criminal and criminal procedure codes introduced by the High Representative in 2003.

The Special Tribunal for Lebanon[168]

Following the assassination of Rafiq Hariri, the former Prime Minister of Lebanon, in February 2005, the Security Council established an International Independent Investigation Commission to aid the Lebanese authorities in their investigation. As a result of its report and the request of the Lebanese government to establish 'a tribunal of an international character' to try those persons accused of the assassination,[169] the Security Council adopted resolution 1664 (2006) calling upon the UN Secretary-General to negotiate an agreement with the government of Lebanon aimed at establishing a tribunal of an international character based on the highest international standards of criminal justice. The Secretary-General's report[170] was accepted by the Council in resolution 1757 (2007). Acting [165] See Human Rights Watch, Looking for Justice, pp. 4 ff.

[166] The appointments by the High Representative are made under the powers vested in him by article 5, annex 10, of the Dayton Peace Accord.

[167] See Human Rights Watch, Narrowing the Impunity Gap, p. 5.

[168] See e.g. Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, p. 155; B. Fassbender, 'Reflections on the International Legality of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon', C. Aptel, 'Some Innovations in the Statute of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon', and N. N. Jurdi, 'The Subject-Matter Jurisdiction of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon', 5 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2007, pp. 1091, 1107 and 1125 respectively.

[169] See Security Council resolutions 1595 (2005), 1636 (2005) and 1644 (2005). See also S/2005/783 and S/2006/375.

[170] S/2006/893 and S/2007/150. See resolutions 1686 (2006) and 1748 (2007) calling for the work of the Commission to continue.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council established the Special Tribunal for Lebanon by virtue of an agreement with the government of Lebanon, annexed to the resolution. The Statute of the Tribunal is attached to the agreement.

The Tribunal has jurisdiction not only with regard to those responsible for the assassination of Rafiq Hariri but also with regard to those responsible for other attacks that occurred in Lebanon between 1 October 2004 and 12 December 2005, or any later date decided by the parties and with the consent of the Security Council, that are seen as connected in accordance with the principles of criminal justice and are of a nature and gravity similar to the attack of 14 February 2005.[171] The Tribunal is to be composed of the Chambers, the Prosecutor, the Registry and the Defence Office. The Chambers, to be composed of between eleven and fourteen independent judges, are to consist of a Pre-Trial Judge, a Trial Chamber and an Appeals Chamber. A single international judge is to serve as Pre-Trial Judge, while three judges are to serve in the Trial Chamber, being one Lebanese judge and two international judges. Five judges are to serve in the Appeals Chamber, of whom two are to be Lebanese and three international judges.[172] The Prosecutor and the Registrar are to be appointed by the UN Secretary-General after consultation with the Lebanese government, while the Head of the Defence Office is to be appointed by the Secretary-General after consultation with the President of the Tribunal.[173] The applicable law is Lebanese criminal law and the Tribunal is to have concurrent jurisdiction with Lebanese courts and have primacy over them.[174]

The Iraqi High Tribunal[175]

The Governing Council of Iraq was authorised by the Coalition Provisional Authority on 10 December 2003 to establish the Iraqi Special [171] Article 1 of the Statute. [172] Articles 7 and 8 of the Statute.

[173] Articles 11, 12 and 13 of the Statute. The Registrar was appointed on 11 March 2008: see www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=25925&Cr=Leban&Cr1.

[174] Articles 2 and 4 of the Statute.

[175] See e.g. Scharf, 'The Iraqi High Tribunal', Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, p. 160; I. Bantekas, 'The Iraqi Special Tribunal for Crimes against Humanity', 54 ICLQ, 2004, p. 237; M. C. Bassiouni, 'Post-Conflict Justice in Iraq: An Appraisal of the Iraq Special Tribunal', 38 Cornell International Law Journal, 2005, p. 327; M. Sissons and A. S. Bassin, 'Was the Dujail Trial Fair?', 5 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2007, p. 272; G. Mettraux, 'The 2005 Revision of the Statute of the Iraqi Special Tribunal', 5 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2007, p. 287; S. de Bertodano, 'Were There More Acceptable Alternatives to the Iraqi High Tribunal?', 5 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2007, p. 294.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Tribunal to hear crimes alleged against the former regime of Saddam Hussein.[176] A revised Statute was enacted in 2005 and the tribunal renamed the Iraqi High Tribunal. The Tribunal has jurisdiction over genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, the definitions of which are based upon the provisions of the Rome Statute and newly incorporated into Iraqi law, committed between 16 July 1968 and 1 May 2003[177] by Iraqi nationals or residents.[178] Persons accused of committing crimes within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal bear individual criminal responsibility.[179] The Tribunal has concurrent jurisdiction with national courts but primacy over them. Article 6(b) of the Statute provides that the President of the Tribunal shall be required to appoint non-Iraqi nationals to act in advisory capacities or as observers to the Trial Chambers and to the Appeals Chamber. The role of the non-Iraqi nationals is stated to be to provide assistance to the judges with respect to international law and the experience of similar tribunals (whether international or otherwise), and to monitor the protection by the Tribunal of general due process of law standards. In appointing such non-Iraqi experts, the President of the Tribunal is entitled to request assistance from the international community, including the United Nations. However, the judges and prosecutors of the Tribunal are all Iraqi nationals. Criticisms have been made of the Tribunal, including the fact that it can impose the death penalty, as for example with regard to Saddam Hussein upon his conviction in the Dujail case.[180]

The Serbian War Crimes Chamber

On 1 July 2003, the Serbian National Assembly adopted a law establishing a specialised War Crimes Chamber within the Belgrade District Court to prosecute and investigate crimes against humanity and serious violations of international humanitarian law as defined in Serbian law. A War Crimes Prosecutor's Office was established in Belgrade. The Chamber consists of two panels of three judges each selected from the Belgrade District Court [176] Order No. 48.

[177] The dates reflect the commencement of the Ba'ath party control of Iraq and the end of the Saddam Hussein regime.

[178] Articles 1 and 11–14 of the Statute of the Tribunal. [179] Article 15.

[180] See e.g. N. Bhuta, 'Fatal Errors: The Trial and Appeal Judgments in the Dujail Case', 6 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2008, p. 39; M. P. Scharf and M. A. Newton, 'The Iraq High Tribunal's Dujail Trial Opinion', ASIL Insight, 18 December 2006, www.asil.org/insights/2006/12/insights061218.html, and Human Rights Watch report on the Dujail trial, http://hrw.org/english/docs/2007/06/22/iraq16230.htm.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com or seconded from other courts, and two investigative judges. It is, however, essentially a national court.[181]

International crimes

A brief survey of some of the main features of international crimes for which individual criminal responsibility now exists will follow, noting that issues concerning the jurisdiction of purely domestic courts for those international crimes that have been incorporated into domestic legislation are covered in chapter 12, while state responsibility for such offences is covered in chapter 14.

Genocide[182]

Article 4 of the Statute of the ICTY, by way of example, provides that:

> 2. Genocide means any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such: (a) killing members of the group; (b) causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group; (c) deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part; (d) imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group; (e) forcibly transferring children of the group to another group and that the following acts shall be punishable:

> (a) genocide; (b) conspiracy to commit genocide; (c) direct and public incitement to commit genocide; (d) attempt to commit genocide; (e) complicity in genocide.[183]

[181] The War Crimes Chamber's first trial, the Ovcara case, began on 9 March 2004. As of 2006, three trials had been completed and three others were ongoing: see Unfinished Business – Serbia's War Crimes Chamber, Human Rights Watch, 2007, pp. 1 ff. See also M. Ellis, 'Coming to Terms with its Past: Serbia's New Court for the Prosecution of War Crimes', 22 Berkeley Journal of International Law, 2004, p. 165. The ICTY has referred some cases to this Chamber: see e.g. Vladimir Kovačevič, ICTY Referral Bench, 2006.

[182] See e.g. Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, chapter 10; Werle, Principles of International Criminal Law, part 3; and Cassese, International Criminal Law, chapter 6. This section should also be read with the relevant section in chapter 6 above: see p. 282.

[183] See also article IV of the Genocide Convention, 1948, article 2 of the Statute of the ICTR and article 6 of the Statute of the ICC.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Genocide has been regarded as an international crime since the Second World War and the Genocide Convention, 1948 was a critical step in that process. The crime of genocide has also been included in the operative provisions of the statutes of most of the courts and tribunals discussed in the previous section. Case-law before the two international criminal tribunals (ICTY and ICTR) has, however, helped clarify many of the relevant principles. For example, perhaps the distinctive feature of the crime is the importance of establishing the specific intent to destroy the group in question in whole or in part, for genocide is more than the act of killing. This was emphasised by the ICTY in the Jelisić case, which noted that 'it is in fact the mens rea [i.e. the intention as distinct from the actual act] which gives genocide its speciality and distinguishes it from an ordinary crime and other crimes against international humanitarian law'.[184] This was reaffirmed by the ICTR in the Akayesu case,[185] which defined the specific intent necessary as 'the specific intention, required as a constitutive element of the crime, which demands that the perpetrator clearly seeks to produce the act charged'. The Trial Chamber underlined the difficulties in establishing the critical intent requirement and held that recourse may be had in the absence of confessions to inferences from facts.[186] In the Ruggiu case, the ICTR held that a person who incites others to commit genocide must himself have a specific intent to commit genocide.[187] However, in the Jelisić case, the ICTY pointed to the difficulty in practice of proving the genocidal intention of an individual if the crimes committed were not widespread or backed up by an organisation or a system.[188] This may be distinguished from the Ruggiu case, where a systematic scheme to destroy the Tutsis was not in doubt.

The element of intention was further discussed by the ICTY in the Krstić case, where it was noted that the intent to eradicate a group within a limited geographical area, such as a region of a country or even a municipality, could be characterised as genocide,[189] while 'the intent to destroy a group, even if only in part, means seeking to destroy a distinct part of the group as opposed to an accumulation of isolated individuals within it'. The part of the group sought to be destroyed had to constitute a distinct element.[190] In the decision of the Appeal Chamber in this case, it was emphasised that it was well established that [184] IT-95-10, para. 66. [185] ICTR-96-4-T, 1998, para. 498.

[186] Ibid., para. 523. See also the cases of Kayishema and Ruzindana, ICTR-95-1-T, 1999, paras. 87 ff. and Musema, ICTR-96-13-T, 2000, paras. 884 ff.
[187] ICTR-97-32-I, 2000, para. 14. [188] IT-95-10, paras. 100–1.
[189] IT-98-33-T, 2001, para. 589. [190] Ibid., para. 590.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> where a conviction for genocide relies on the intent to destroy a protected group 'in part', the part must be a substantial part of that group. The aim of the Genocide Convention is to prevent the intentional destruction of entire human groups, and the part targeted must be significant enough to have an impact on the group as a whole.[191]

It was concluded that the intent requirement of genocide under article 4 of the Statute was satisfied where evidence shows that the alleged perpetrator > intended to destroy at least a substantial part of the protected group. The determination of when the targeted part is substantial enough to meet this requirement may involve a number of considerations. The numeric size of the targeted part of the group is the necessary and important starting point, though not in all cases the ending point of the inquiry. The number of individuals targeted should be evaluated not only in absolute terms, but also in relation to the overall size of the entire group. In addition to the numeric size of the targeted portion, its prominence within the group can be a useful consideration. If a specific part of the group is emblematic of the overall group, or is essential to its survival, that may support a finding that the part qualifies as substantial within the meaning of Article 4.[192]

It was also emphasised that each perpetrator must possess the necessary specific intent.[193]

The intention to 'destroy' means the physical or biological destruction of all or part of the group and not, for example, attacks upon the cultural or sociological characteristics of a group in order to remove its separate identity.[194] The sometimes difficult question of the definition of membership of the groups specifically referred to in the relevant instruments has also been analysed. In Akayesu,[195] the Trial Chamber of the Rwanda Tribunal leaned towards the objective definition of membership of groups,[196] but this has been mitigated by other cases emphasising the importance of subjective elements as part of the relevant framework.[197]

[191] IT-98-33-A, 2004, para. 8. [192] Ibid., para. 12. [193] Ibid., para. 134.
[194] Ibid., para. 25. [195] ICTR-96-4-T, 1998, paras. 511 ff.
[196] In Kayishema and Ruzindana, ICTR-95-1-T, 1999, paras. 522 ff., the Trial Chamber emphasised the importance of the designation contained in identity cards.
[197] See Rutaganda, ICTR-96-3-T, 1999, paras. 55 ff. See also Bagilishima, ICTR-95-1A-T, 2001, para. 65, where the Trial Chamber concluded that 'if a victim was perceived by a perpetrator as belonging to a protected group, the victim could be considered by the Chamber as a member of the protected group, for the purposes of genocide'. See also the Report of the UN Commission of Inquiry on Darfur, S/2005/60, paras. 500 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

In so far as the material elements of the crime are concerned, killing is clearly the key conduct involved and it has been held that the act in question must be intentional if not necessarily premeditated.[198] Forced migration (or 'ethnic cleansing') as such does not constitute genocide,[199] but may amount to a pattern of conduct demonstrating genocidal intent.[200] The Akayesu case has also been important in emphasising that rape and sexual violence may amount to genocide when committed with the necessary specific intent to commit genocide. The Trial Chamber concluded that 'Sexual violence was an integral part of the process of destruction, specifically targeting Tutsi women and specifically contributing to their destruction and to the destruction of the Tutsi group as a whole.'[201] Further, where it is intended to prevent births within the group whether by impelling the child born of rape to be part of another group or where the woman raped refuses subsequently to procreate, this may amount to genocide.[202] The Rwanda Tribunal has also held that genocide may be committed by omission as well as by acts.[203]

War Crimes[204]

War crimes are essentially serious violations of the rules of customary and treaty law concerning international humanitarian law, otherwise known as the law governing armed conflicts.[205] Article 2 of the Statute of the ICTY, by way of example, provides for jurisdiction with regard to:

[198] See e.g. Stakić, IT-97-24-T, 2003, para. 515.

[199] See e.g. the Eichmann case, 36 ILR, p. 5 and the Brdjanin case, IT-99-36-T, 2004, para. 118. See also the Blagojević case, where, in addition, the Appeals Chamber of the ICTY held that awareness of facts related to the forcible transfer operation was insufficient to prove complicity in genocide in the absence of knowledge of mass killings at Srebrenica, IT-02-60-A, 2007, paras. 119 ff.

[200] See e.g. the Review of the Indictments Concerning Karadžić and Mladić Pursuant to Rule 61 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, ICTY, IT-95-5-R61 and IT-95-18-R61, 11 July 1996, para. 94, 108 ILR, pp. 134–5. See also ad hoc Judge Lauterpacht's Separate Opinion in the Genocide Convention (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia) case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 325, 431–2, and the ICC Elements of Crimes, article 6(c), footnote 4, UN Doc. PCNICC/2000/1/Add.2 (2000).

[201] ICTR-96-4-T, para. 731. [202] Ibid., paras. 507–8.

[203] Kambanda, ICTR-97-23-S, 1998, paras. 39–40.

[204] See e.g. Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, chapter 12; Werle, Principles of International Criminal Law, part 5; and Cassese, International Criminal Law, chapter 4.

[205] See further as to international humanitarian law, below, chapter 21.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, namely the following acts against persons or property protected under the provisions of the relevant Geneva Convention: (a) wilful killing; (b) torture or inhuman treatment, including biological experiments; (c) wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health; (d) extensive destruction and appropriation of property, not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly; (e) compelling a prisoner of war or a civilian to serve in the forces of a hostile power; (f) wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or a civilian of the rights of fair and regular trial; (g) unlawful deportation or transfer or unlawful confinement of a civilian; (h) taking civilians as hostages.

Article 3 provides for jurisdiction for violation of the laws or customs of war. Such violations include, but are not be limited to:

> (a) employment of poisonous weapons or other weapons calculated to cause unnecessary suffering; (b) wanton destruction of cities, towns or villages, or devastation not justified by military necessity; (c) attack, or bombardment, by whatever means, of undefended towns, villages, dwellings, or buildings; (d) seizure of, destruction or wilful damage done to institutions dedicated to religion, charity and education, the arts and sciences, historic monuments and works of art and science; (e) plunder of public or private property.[206]

Accordingly, war crimes are a discrete part of the principles of international humanitarian law, being those which have become accepted as criminal offences for which there is individual responsibility (in addition to state responsibility). Essentially, war crimes law applies to individuals and international humanitarian law to states. There is a long history of provision for individual responsibility for war crimes,[207] and article 6(b) of the Nuremberg Charter included war crimes within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal, while the concept of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions

[206] See article 8 of the Statute of the ICC, which is exhaustive rather than illustrative in its exposition of fifty offences and is divided into sections dealing with: grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949; other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in international armed conflict, within the established framework of international law; in the case of an armed conflict not of an international character, serious violations of article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in armed conflicts not of an international character, within the established framework of international law. See also article 4 of the Statute of the ICTR concerning violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II of 1977; article 3 of the Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone and article 14 of the Statute of the Iraqi High Tribunal.

[207] See e.g. the US Army Lieber Code, April 1864.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of 1949 recognised certain violations as crimes subject to universal jurisdiction. Traditionally, international humanitarian law has distinguished between international and non-international armed conflicts, with legal provision being relatively modest with regard to the latter. However, common article 3 to the Geneva Conventions laid down certain minimum standards which were elaborated in Additional Protocol II of 1977.[208] In addition, since the conflict in Rwanda was clearly an internal one, the ICTR Statute necessarily provided for individual responsibility for violations of the principles concerning non-international armed conflicts, in effect recognising that common article 3 and Additional Protocol II formed the basis of criminal liability.

The key modern decision has been the Tadić case before the ICTY. The Appeals Chamber in the jurisdictional phase of the case noted that an armed conflict existed whenever there was a resort to armed force between states or protracted armed violence between governmental authorities and organised armed groups or between such groups within a state. International humanitarian law applied from the initiation of such armed conflicts and extended beyond the cessation of hostilities until a general conclusion of peace was reached; or, in the case of internal conflicts, a peaceful settlement achieved. Until that moment, international humanitarian law continued to apply in the whole territory of the warring states or, in the case of internal conflicts, the whole territory under the control of a party, whether or not actual combat takes place there.[209] The distinction between international and non-international armed conflicts was thus minimised. Although it was noted that international law did not regulate internal conflict in all aspects, it was held to 'cover such areas as protection of civilians from hostilities, in particular from indiscriminate attacks, protection of civilian objects, in particular cultural property, protection of all those who do not (or no longer) take active part in hostilities, as well as prohibition of means of warfare proscribed in international armed conflicts and ban of certain methods of conducting hostilities'.[210] Further, it was held that individual criminal responsibility existed with regard to violations laid down in customary and treaty law, irrespective of whether the conflict was an international or an internal one.[211] It was concluded that in order for article 3 of the ICTY Statute to be applicable, the violation had to be 'serious', which meant that it had to constitute a

[208] See below, chapter 21, p. 1194.
[209] IT-94-1-T, Decision of 2 October 1995, para. 70, 105 ILR, pp. 453, 486.
[210] Ibid., para. 127. [211] Ibid., para. 129.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

breach of a rule protecting important values, and the breach must involve grave consequences for the victim. In addition, the violation of the rule must entail, under customary or conventional law, the individual criminal responsibility of the person breaching the rule.[212]

This Tadić judgment can now be taken as reflecting international law and it is to be noted that a significant number of provisions dealing with international conflicts now apply to internal conflicts as laid down in the Statute of the International Criminal Court.[213]

Crimes against humanity[214]

Article 6(c) of the Nuremberg Charter included 'crimes against humanity' within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal and these were defined as 'murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation and other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population, before or during the war, or persecutions on political, racial or religious grounds in execution of or in connection with any crime within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal, whether or not in violation of the law of the country where perpetrated'.[215]

Article 5 of the Statute of the ICTY provided for jurisdiction with regard to the following crimes when committed in armed conflict, whether international or internal in character, and directed against any civilian population: '(a) murder; (b) extermination; (c) enslavement; (d) deportation; (e) imprisonment; (f) torture; (g) rape; (h) persecutions on political, racial and religious grounds; (i) other inhumane acts'. Article 3 of the Statute of the ICTR is in similar form, other than that it is specified that the crimes in question (which are the same as those specified in the ICTY Statute) must have been committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds. Article 7 of the Statute of the ICC notes that the crimes in question (enforced disappearance and apartheid are added to the list appearing in

[212] Ibid., para. 94. See also e.g. the Galić case, IT-98-29-T, 2003, para. 11 and the Kanyabashi decision on jurisdiction, ICTR-96-15-T, 1997, para. 8.

[213] See article 8(2)(c) and (e) of the Statute.

[214] See e.g. Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, chapter 11; Werle, Principles of International Criminal Law, part 4; and Cassese, International Criminal Law, chapter 5. See also Bassiouni, Crimes Against Humanity in International Criminal Law.

[215] The Tokyo Charter was in similar terms, as was Allied Control Council Law No. 10 save that it added rape, imprisonment and torture to the list of inhumane acts and did not require a connection to war crimes or aggression: see Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, pp. 188 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the Statutes of the two international criminal tribunals) have to be committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack.

Although article 5 of the ICTY Statute did not specifically refer, unlike the other instruments, to the necessity of a widespread or systematic attack as the required framework for the commission of acts amounting to crimes against humanity, this was incorporated into the jurisprudence through the Tadić trial decision of 7 May 1997. This interpreted the phrase 'directed against any civilian population' as meaning 'that the acts must occur on a widespread or systematic basis, that there must be some form of a governmental, organizational or group policy to commit these acts and that the perpetrator must know of the context within which his actions are taken'.[216]

The requirement of 'widespread or systematic' was examined in Akayesu, where the Trial Chamber declared that the concept of widespread could be defined as 'massive, frequent, large scale action, carried out collectively with considerable seriousness and directed against a multiplicity of victims', while 'systematic' could be defined as 'thoroughly organised and following a regular pattern on the basis of a common policy involving substantial public or private resources'. It was noted that there was no requirement that this policy must be adopted formally as the policy of a state, although there had to be some kind of preconceived plan or policy.[217] In Blaškić, the ICTY Trial Chamber defined 'systematic' in terms of > the existence of a political objective, a plan pursuant to which the attack is perpetrated or an ideology, in the broad sense of the word, that is, to destroy, persecute or weaken a community; the perpetration of a criminal act on a very large scale against a group of civilians or the repeated and continuous commission of inhumane acts linked to one another; the preparation and use of significant public or private resources, whether military or other, and the implication of high-level political and/or military authorities in the definition and establishment of the methodical plan. The plan, however, need not necessarily be declared expressly or even stated clearly and precisely. It may be surmised from the occurrence of a series of events.[218]

In Kunarac, the ICTY Appeals Chamber held that while proof that the attack was directed against a civilian population and proof that it was [216] IT-94-1-T, para. 644, 112 ILR, pp. 1, 214. See also paras. 645 ff. This was reaffirmed in the decision of the Appeals Chamber of 15 July 1999, para. 248, 124 ILR, pp. 61, 164.

[217] ICTR-96-4-T, 1998, para. 580. [218] IT-95-14-T, 2000, paras. 203–4, 122 ILR, pp. 1, 78

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

widespread or systematic were legal elements of the crime, it was not necessary to show that they were the result of the existence of a policy or plan. The existence of a policy or plan could be evidentially relevant, but it was not a legal element of the crime.[219]

Many of the same acts may constitute both war crimes and crimes against humanity, but what is distinctive about the latter is that they do not need to take place during an armed conflict. However, to constitute crimes against humanity the acts in question have to be committed as part of a widespread or systematic activity, and to be committed against any civilian population, thus any reference to nationality is irrelevant. However, it is important to maintain a clear distinction between civilian and non-civilian in this context. The Trial Chamber in the Martić case noted that one could not allow the term 'civilian' for the purposes of a crime against humanity to include all persons who were not actively participating in combat, including those who were hors de combat, at the time of the crimes, as this would blur the necessary distinction between combatants and non-combatants.[220]

Of course, any act of genocide by definition will constitute also a crime against humanity, although the reverse is clearly not the case. What is required for crimes against humanity is an 'attack' and this has been broadly defined. In the Akayesu case, for example, this term was defined as an > unlawful act of the kind enumerated in Article 3(a) to (i) of the Statute, like murder, extermination, enslavement etc. An attack may also be non-violent in nature, like imposing a system of apartheid, which is declared a crime against humanity in Article 1 of the Apartheid Convention of 1973, or exerting pressure on the population to act in a particular manner, may come under the purview of an attack, if orchestrated on a massive scale or in a systematic manner.[221]

It is also necessary for the alleged perpetrator to be aware that his act was part of a broader attack. The Appeals Chamber in its jurisdiction decision in Tadić concluded that to convict an accused of crimes against humanity, it had to be proved that the crimes were related to the attack on a civilian population and that the accused knew that his crimes were so related.[222] This is so even if he does not identify with the aims of the attack and his act was committed for personal reasons.[223]

[219] IT-96-23&23/1, 2002, para. 98.
[220] IT-95-11-T, 2007, paras. 55–6. [221] ICTR-96-4-T, 1998, para. 581.
[222] IT-94-1-A, 1999, para. 271, 124 ILR, pp. 61, 173. [223] Ibid., paras. 255 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Aggression[224]

Aggression is recognised as a crime in customary international law. Article 6 of the Nuremberg Charter defined its jurisdiction as including '(a) Crimes against peace. Namely, planning, preparation, initiation, or waging of a war of aggression or a war in violation of international treaties, agreements or assurances, or participation in a common plan or conspiracy for the accomplishment of any of the foregoing' and a number of defendants were convicted of offences under this head. General Assembly resolution 95(1) affirmed the principles recognised by the Nuremberg Charter and its judgment. Aggression was termed the 'supreme international crime' in one of the judgments.[225] The Tokyo Charter included the same principle as did Allied Control Council Law No. 10. General Assembly resolution 3314 (XXIX) of 14 December 1974 contained a definition of aggression in contravention of the Charter.[226] The crime of aggression is referred to in article 5 of the Statute of the ICC, but in no other such instrument. Indeed, article 5(2) provides that the Court cannot exercise jurisdiction over the crime of aggression until a provision is adopted defining the crime and setting out the conditions under which the Court may exercise jurisdiction with respect to it. The delay in achieving this has been caused by several problems. The first is that, unlike the other substantive international crimes, aggression is a crime of 'leadership' and necessarily requires that it be determined as an initial point that the state, of whom the accused is a 'leader' in some capacity, has committed aggression. This is a wholly different proposition from asserting the responsibility of individuals for genocide, war crimes or crimes against humanity. It is also unclear what differences may exist between the state's act of aggression and the individual's crime of aggression. Secondly, article 5(2) of the ICC Statute provides that the conditions for the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction must be consistent with the relevant provisions of the UN Charter. The Security Council has the competence under Chapter VII of the Charter [224] See e.g. Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, chapter 13; and Werle, Principles of International Criminal Law, part 6. See also Y. Dinstein, War, Aggression and Self-Defence, 4th edn, Cambridge, 2005, and see further below, chapter 22, p. 1240.

[225] See Judgment 186, 41 AJIL, 1947, p. 172.

[226] See also the General Treaty for the Renunciation of War (the 'Kellogg–Briand Pact'), 1928, which condemned recourse to war as an instrument of international policy; article 1 of the International Law Commission's Draft Code of Offences against Peace and Security, 1954, and article 1(2) of the revised Draft Code adopted in 1996. Article 16 of the latter instrument provides that a leader who as leader or organiser actively participates in or orders the planning, preparation, initiation or waging of aggression committed by a state shall be responsible for a crime of aggression.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

to determine whether an act of aggression has taken place and it has been argued that a prior determination by the Council is necessary before the Court may exercise jurisdiction with regard to individual responsibility for aggression. This has been contested.[227] However, the question of the relationship between the competences of the Council and Court respectively is unsettled. These matters are currently being negotiated by the Assembly of States Parties to the Rome Statute.[228]

Conclusion – fair trial provisions

Part of the rapidly developing international law concerning individual responsibility for international crimes relates to the protection of the human rights of the accused. The following provisions constitute the essence of the requirements of fair trial. Article 21 of the ICTY Statute, for example, provides that:

> 1. All persons shall be equal before the International Tribunal.
>
> 2. In the determination of charges against him, the accused shall be entitled to a fair and public hearing, subject to article 22 of the Statute [which concerns the protection of victims and witnesses].
>
> 3. The accused shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to the provisions of the present Statute.
>
> 4. In the determination of any charge against the accused pursuant to the present Statute, the accused shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality:
>
> (a) to be informed promptly and in detail in a language which he understands of the nature and cause of the charge against him;
> (b) to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence and to communicate with counsel of his own choosing;
> (c) to be tried without undue delay;
> (d) to be tried in his presence, and to defend himself in person or through legal assistance of his own choosing; to be informed, if he does not have legal assistance, of this right; and to have legal assistance assigned to

[227] See e.g. Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, pp. 276 ff. See also A. Carpenter, 'The International Criminal Court and the Crime of Aggression', 64 Nordic Journal of International Law, 1995, p. 223; A. Zimmermann, 'The Creation of a Permanent International Criminal Court', 25 Suffolk Transnational Law Review, 2005, p. 1, and C. Kress, 'Versailles–Nuremberg–The Hague: Germany and the International Criminal Law', 40 International Lawyer, 2006, p. 15.

[228] See e.g. the Fifth Session of the Assembly of States Parties, February 2007, ICC-ASP/5/35, Annex II and the Report of the Special Working Group on the Crime of Aggression, 13 December 2007, www.icc-cpi.int/library/asp/ICC-ASP-6-SWGCA-1_English.pdf.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

him, in any case where the interests of justice so require, and without payment by him in any such case if he does not have sufficient means to pay for it;

(e) to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him;

(f) to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand or speak the language used in the International Tribunal;

(g) not to be compelled to testify against himself or to confess guilt.

This formulation is essentially repeated in article 20 of the ICTR Statute. Article 55 of the ICC Statute provides that:

1. In respect of an investigation under this Statute, a person:

(a) Shall not be compelled to incriminate himself or herself or to confess guilt;

(b) Shall not be subjected to any form of coercion, duress or threat, to torture or to any other form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

(c) Shall, if questioned in a language other than a language the person fully understands and speaks, have, free of any cost, the assistance of a competent interpreter and such translations as are necessary to meet the requirements of fairness; and

(d) Shall not be subjected to arbitrary arrest or detention, and shall not be deprived of his or her liberty except on such grounds and in accordance with such procedures as are established in this Statute.

2. Where there are grounds to believe that a person has committed a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court and that person is about to be questioned either by the Prosecutor, or by national authorities pursuant to a request made under Part 9, that person shall also have the following rights of which he or she shall be informed prior to being questioned:

(a) To be informed, prior to being questioned, that there are grounds to believe that he or she has committed a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court;

(b) To remain silent, without such silence being a consideration in the determination of guilt or innocence;

(c) To have legal assistance of the person's choosing, or, if the person does not have legal assistance, to have legal assistance assigned to him or her, in any case where the interests of justice so require, and without payment by the person in any such case if the person does not have sufficient means to pay for it; and

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

(d) To be questioned in the presence of counsel unless the person has voluntarily waived his or her right to counsel.

In addition, article 66 provides for the presumption of innocence and for the fact that it is for the Prosecutor to prove the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt. Article 67 lays down that:

1. In the determination of any charge, the accused shall be entitled to a public hearing, having regard to the provisions of this Statute, to a fair hearing conducted impartially, and to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality:

(a) To be informed promptly and in detail of the nature, cause and content of the charge, in a language which the accused fully understands and speaks;
(b) To have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of the defence and to communicate freely with counsel of the accused's choosing in confidence;
(c) To be tried without undue delay;
(d) Subject to article 63, paragraph 2, to be present at the trial, to conduct the defence in person or through legal assistance of the accused's choosing, to be informed, if the accused does not have legal assistance, of this right and to have legal assistance assigned by the Court in any case where the interests of justice so require, and without payment if the accused lacks sufficient means to pay for it;
(e) To examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him or her and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his or her behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him or her. The accused shall also be entitled to raise defences and to present other evidence admissible under this Statute;
(f) To have, free of any cost, the assistance of a competent interpreter and such translations as are necessary to meet the requirements of fairness, if any of the proceedings of or documents presented to the Court are not in a language which the accused fully understands and speaks;
(g) Not to be compelled to testify or to confess guilt and to remain silent, without such silence being a consideration in the determination of guilt or innocence;
(h) To make an unsworn oral or written statement in his or her defence; and
(i) Not to have imposed on him or her any reversal of the burden of proof or any onus of rebuttal.

2. In addition to any other disclosure provided for in this Statute, the Prosecutor shall, as soon as practicable, disclose to the defence evidence in

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the Prosecutor's possession or control which he or she believes shows or tends to show the innocence of the accused, or to mitigate the guilt of the accused, or which may affect the credibility of prosecution evidence. In case of doubt as to the application of this paragraph, the Court shall decide.[229]

Suggestions for further reading

A. Cassese, International Criminal Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2008

R. Cryer, H. Friman, D. Robinson and E. Wilmshurst, An Introduction to International Criminal Law and Procedure, Cambridge, 2007

W. Schabas, An Introduction to the International Criminal Court, 3rd edn, Cambridge, 2007

The UN International Criminal Tribunals: The Former Yugoslavia, Rwanda and Sierra Leone, Cambridge 2006

[229] Note among other relevant issues, the principle of command responsibility, whereby a superior is criminally responsible for acts committed by subordinates that he knew or had reason to know had been or were about to be committed and no action was taken: see e.g. Green, Armed Conflict, pp. 303–4; I. Bantekas, 'The Contemporary Law of Superior Responsibility', 93 AJIL, 1999, p. 573, and Kittichaisaree, International Criminal Law, p. 251. See also article 87 of Additional Protocol I, 1977; article 7(3) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, 1993; article 6(3) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, 1994 and article 28 of the Statute of the International Criminal Court, 1998. Note the Čelebići case, IT-96-21, 16 November 1998, paras. 370 ff.; the Krnojela case, IT-97-25-A, 17 September 2003 and the Blagojević case, IT-02-60-A, 2007. Further, military necessity may not be pleaded as a defence, see e.g. In re Lewinski (called von Manstein), 16 AD, p. 509, and the claim of superior orders will not provide a defence, although it may be taken in mitigation depending upon the circumstances: see e.g. Green, Armed Conflict, pp. 305–7; Green, Superior Orders in National and International Law, Leiden, 1976; Kittichaisaree, International Criminal Law, p. 266, and Y. Dinstein, The Defence of 'Obedience to Superior Orders' in International Law, Leiden, 1965. See also article 8 of the Nuremberg Charter, 39 AJIL, 1945, Supp., p. 259; Principle IV of the International Law Commission's Report on the Principles of the Nuremberg Tribunal 1950, Yearbook of the ILC, 1950, vol. II, p. 195; article 7(4) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, 1993; article 6(4) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, 1994 and article 33 of the Statute of the International Criminal Court, 1998.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

9

Recognition

International society is not an unchanging entity, but is subject to the ebb and flow of political life.[1] New states are created and old units fall away. New governments come into being within states in a manner contrary to declared constitutions whether or not accompanied by force. Insurgencies occur and belligerent administrations are established in areas of territory hitherto controlled by the legitimate government. Each of these events creates new facts and the question that recognition is concerned with revolves around the extent to which legal effects should flow from such occurrences. Each state will have to decide whether or not to recognise the particular eventuality and the kind of legal entity it should be accepted as.

Recognition involves consequences both on the international plane and within municipal law. If an entity is recognised as a state in, for example, the United Kingdom, it will entail the consideration of rights and duties that would not otherwise be relevant. There are privileges permitted to [1] See generally e.g. J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2006; Oppenheim's International Law (eds. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992; H. Lauterpacht, Recognition in International Law, Cambridge, 1947; T. C. Chen, The International Law of Recognition, London, 1951; J. Charpentier, La Reconnaissance Internationale et l'Évolution du Droit des Gens, Paris, 1956; T. L. Galloway, Recognising Foreign Governments, Washington, 1978; J. Verhoeven, La Reconnaissance Internationale dans la Pratique Contemporaine, Paris, 1975 and Verhoeven, 'La Reconnaissance Internationale, Déclin ou Renouveau?', AFDI, 1993, p. 7; J. Dugard, Recognition and the United Nations, Cambridge, 1987; H. Blix, 'Contemporary Aspects of Recognition', 130 HR, 1970-II, p. 587; J. Salmon, 'Reconnaissance d'État', 25 Revue Belge de Droit International, 1992, p. 226; S. Talmon, Recognition in International Law: A Bibliography, The Hague, 2000; T. D. Grant, The Recognition of States: Law and Practice in Debate and Evolution, London, 1999, and Third US Restatement on Foreign Relations Law, Washington, 1987, vol. I, pp. 77 ff. See also Nguyen Quoc Dinh, P. Daillier and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 7th edn, Paris, 2002, pp. 556 ff.; P. M. Dupuy, Droit International Public, 8th edn, Paris, 2006, p. 95, and L. Henkin, R. C. Pugh, O. Schachter and H. Smit, International Law: Cases and Materials, 3rd edn, St Paul, 1993, pp. 244 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

a foreign state before the municipal courts that would not be allowed to other institutions or persons.

It is stating the obvious to point to the very strong political influences that bear upon this topic.[2] In more cases than not the decision whether or not to recognise will depend more upon political considerations than exclusively legal factors. Recognition is not merely applying the relevant legal consequences to a factual situation, for sometimes a state will not want such consequences to follow, either internationally or domestically.

To give one example, the United States refused for many years to recognise either the People's Republic of China or North Korea, not because it did not accept the obvious fact that these authorities exercised effective control over their respective territories, but rather because it did not wish the legal effects of recognition to come into operation.[3] It is purely a political judgment, although it has been clothed in legal terminology. In addition, there are a variety of options open as to what an entity may be recognised as. Such an entity may, for example, be recognised as a full sovereign state, or as the effective authority within a specific area or as a subordinate authority to another state.[4] Recognition is a statement by an international legal person as to the status in international law of another real or alleged international legal person or of the validity of a particular factual situation. Once recognition has occurred, the new situation is deemed opposable to the recognising state, that is the pertinent legal consequences will flow. As such, recognition constitutes participation in the international legal process generally while also being important within the context of bilateral relations and, of course, domestically.

Recognition of states

There are basically two theories as to the nature of recognition. The constitutive theory maintains that it is the act of recognition by other states that creates a new state and endows it with legal personality and not the process by which it actually obtained independence. Thus, new states are

[2] See e.g. H. A. Smith, Great Britain and the Law of Nations, London, 1932, vol. I, pp. 77–80.

[3] See e.g. M. Kaplan and N. Katzenbach, The Political Foundations of International Law, New York, 1961, p. 109.

[4] See e.g. Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. Rayner and Keeler [1967] AC 853; 43 ILR, p. 23, where the Court took the view that the German Democratic Republic was a subordinate agency of the USSR, and the recognition of the Ciskei as a subordinate body of South Africa, Gur Corporation v. Trust Bank of Africa Ltd [1986] 3 All ER 449; 75 ILR, p. 675.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

established in the international community as fully fledged subjects of international law by virtue of the will and consent of already existing states.[5] The disadvantage of this approach is that an unrecognised 'state' may not be subject to the obligations imposed by international law and may accordingly be free from such restraints as, for instance, the prohibition on aggression. A further complication would arise if a 'state' were recognised by some but not other states. Could one talk then of, for example, partial personality?

The second theory, the declaratory theory, adopts the opposite approach and is a little more in accord with practical realities.[6] It maintains that recognition is merely an acceptance by states of an already existing situation. A new state will acquire capacity in international law not by virtue of the consent of others but by virtue of a particular factual situation. It will be legally constituted by its own efforts and circumstances and will not have to await the procedure of recognition by other states. This doctrine owes a lot to traditional positivist thought on the supremacy of the state and the concomitant weakness or non-existence of any central guidance in the international community.

For the constitutive theorist, the heart of the matter is that fundamentally an unrecognised 'state' can have no rights or obligations in international law. The opposite stance is adopted by the declaratory approach that emphasises the factual situation and minimises the power of states to confer legal personality.

Actual practice leads to a middle position between these two perceptions. The act of recognition by one state of another indicates that the former regards the latter as having conformed with the basic requirements of international law as to the creation of a state. Of course, recognition is highly political and is given in a number of cases for purely political reasons. This point of view was emphasised by the American representative on the Security Council during discussions on the Middle East in May 1948. He said that it would be:

[5] See e.g. Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 19 ff. and J. Salmon, La Reconnaissance d'État, Paris, 1971. See also R. Rich and D. Turk, 'Symposium: Recent Developments in the Practice of State Recognition', 4 EJIL, 1993, p. 36.

[6] See e.g. J. L. Brierly, The Law of Nations, 6th edn, Oxford, 1963, p. 138; I. Brownlie, Principles of Public International Law, 6th edn, Oxford, 2003, p. 87; D. P. O'Connell, International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1970, vol. I, pp. 128 ff.; S. Talmon, 'The Constitutive Versus the Declaratory Theory of Recognition: Tertium Non Datur?', 75 BYIL, 2004, p. 101, and Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 22 ff. See also the Tinoco arbitration, 1 RIAA, p. 369; 2 AD, p. 34 and Wulfsohn v. Russian Republic 138 NE 24; 2 AD, p. 39.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> highly improper for one to admit that any country on earth can question the sovereignty of the United States of America in the exercise of the high political act of recognition of the de facto status of a state.

Indeed, he added that there was no authority that could determine the legality or validity of that act of the United States.[7] This American view that recognition is to be used as a kind of mark of approval was in evidence with regard to the attitude adopted towards Communist China for a generation.[8]

The United Kingdom, on the other hand, has often tended to extend recognition once it is satisfied that the authorities of the state in question have complied with the minimum requirements of international law, and have effective control which seems likely to continue over the country.[9] Recognition is constitutive in a political sense, for it marks the new entity out as a state within the international community and is evidence of acceptance of its new political status by the society of nations. This does not imply that the act of recognition is legally constitutive, because rights and duties do not arise as a result of the recognition.

Practice over the last century or so is not unambiguous but does point to the declaratory approach as the better of the two theories. States which for particular reasons have refused to recognise other states, such as in the Arab world and Israel and the USA and certain communist nations,[10] rarely contend that the other party is devoid of powers and obligations before international law and exists in a legal vacuum. The stance is rather that rights and duties are binding upon them, and that recognition has not been accorded for primarily political reasons. If the constitutive theory were accepted it would mean, for example, in the context of the former Arab non-recognition of Israel, that the latter was not bound by international law rules of non-aggression and non-intervention. This has not been adopted in any of the stances of non-recognition of 'states'.[11]

[7] See M. Whiteman, Digest of International Law, Washington, 1968, vol. II, p. 10.

[8] See generally D. Young, 'American Dealings with Peking', 45 Foreign Affairs, 1966, p. 77, and Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, pp. 551 ff. See also A/CN.4/2, p. 53.

[9] See Lauterpacht, Recognition, p. 6.

[10] See 39 Bulletin of the US Department of State, 1958, p. 385.

[11] See e.g. the Pueblo incident, 62 AJIL, 1968, p. 756 and Keesing's Contemporary Archives, p. 23129; Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, pp. 604 ff. and 651; 'Contemporary Practice of the UK in International Law', 6 ICLQ, 1957, p. 507, and British Practice in International Law (ed. E. Lauterpacht), London, 1963, vol. II, p. 90. See also N. Mugerwa, 'Subjects of International Law' in Manual of International Law (ed. M. Sørensen), London, 1968, pp. 247, 269.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Of course, if an entity, while meeting the conditions of international law as to statehood, went totally unrecognised, this would undoubtedly hamper the exercise of its rights and duties, especially in view of the absence of diplomatic relations, but it would not seem in law to amount to a decisive argument against statehood itself.[12] For example, the Charter of the Organisation of American States adopted at Bogotá in 1948 notes in its survey of the fundamental rights and duties of states that:

> the political existence of the state is independent of recognition by other states. Even before being recognised the state has the right to defend its integrity and independence.[13]

And the Institut de Droit International emphasised in its resolution on recognition of new states and governments in 1936 that the > existence of the new state with all the legal effects connected with that existence is not affected by the refusal of one or more states to recognise.[14]

In the period following the end of the First World War, the courts of the new states of Eastern and Central Europe regarded their states as coming into being upon the actual declaration of independence and not simply as a result of the Peace Treaties. The tribunal in one case pointed out that the recognition of Poland in the Treaty of Versailles was only declaratory of the state which existed 'par lui-même'.[15] In addition, the Arbitration Commission established by the International Conference on Yugoslavia in 1991 stated in its Opinion No. 1 that 'the existence or disappearance of the state is a question of fact' and that 'the effects of recognition by other states are purely declaratory'.[16]

On the other hand, the constitutive theory is not totally devoid of all support in state practice. In some cases, the creation of a new state, or the establishment of a new government by unconstitutional means, or the occupation of a territory that is legally claimed will proceed uneventfully and be clearly accomplished for all to see and with little significant opposition.

[12] See above, chapter 5.

[13] Article 9. This became article 12 of the Charter as amended in 1967. See also the Montevideo Convention on Rights and Duties of States, 1933, article 3.

[14] 39 Annuaire de L'Institut de Droit International, 1936, p. 300. See also Third US Restatement, pp. 77–8.

[15] Deutsche Continental Gas-Gesellschaft v. Polish State 5 AD, p. 11.

[16] 92 ILR, pp. 162, 165. See also the decision of the European Court of Human Rights in Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary Objections), Series A, No. 310, 1995, at p. 14; 103 ILR, p. 621, and Chuan Pu Andrew Wang and Others v. Office of the Federal Prosecutor, Swiss Supreme Court, First Public Law Chamber, decision of 3 May 2004, No. 1A.3/2004; partly published as BGE 130 II 217, para. 5.3.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

However, in many instances, the new entity or government will be insecure and it is in this context that recognition plays a vital role. In any event, and particularly where the facts are unclear and open to different interpretations, recognition by a state will amount to a declaration by that state of how it understands the situation, and such an evaluation will be binding upon it. It will not be able to deny later the factual position it has recognised, unless, of course, circumstances radically alter in the meantime. In this sense, recognition can be constitutive. Indeed, the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission noted in Opinion No. 8 that 'while recognition of a state by other states has only declarative value, such recognition, along with membership of international organisations, bears witness to these states' conviction that the political entity so recognised is a reality and confers on it certain rights and obligations under international law'.[17] By way of contrast, the fact of non-recognition of a 'new state' by a vast majority of existing states will constitute tangible evidence for the view that such an entity has not established its conformity with the required criteria of statehood.[18]

Another factor which leans towards the constitutive interpretation of recognition is the practice in many states whereby an unrecognised state or government cannot claim the rights available to a recognised state or government before the municipal courts. This means that the act of recognition itself entails a distinct legal effect and that after recognition a state or government would have enforceable rights within the domestic jurisdiction that it would not have had prior to the recognition.[19]

This theoretical controversy is of value in that it reveals the functions of recognition and emphasises the impact of states upon the development of international law. It points to the essential character of international law, poised as it is between the state and the international community. The declaratory theory veers towards the former and the constitutive doctrine towards the latter.

There have been a number of attempts to adapt the constitutive theory.[20] Lauterpacht maintained, for example, that once the conditions prescribed by international law for statehood have been complied with, there is a duty

[17] 92 ILR, pp. 199, 201.

[18] See Democratic Republic of East Timor v. State of the Netherlands 87 ILR, pp. 73, 74.

[19] See below, p. 471.

[20] Note the reference to the 'relativism inherent in the constitutive theory of recognition' with regard to the situation where some states recognised the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia as the continuator of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and others did not: see the Genocide Convention (Bosnia v. Serbia) case, ICJ Reports, 2007, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Al-Khasawneh, para. 8.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

on the part of existing states to grant recognition. This is because, in the absence of a central authority in international law to assess and accord legal personality, it is the states that have to perform this function on behalf, as it were, of the international community and international law.[21]

This operation is both declaratory, in that it is based upon certain definite facts (i.e. the entity fulfils the requirements of statehood) and constitutive in that it is the acceptance by the recognising state of the particular community as an entity possessing all the rights and obligations that are inherent in statehood. Before the act of recognition, the community that is hoping to be admitted as a state will only have such rights and duties as have been expressly permitted to it, if any.

The Lauterpacht doctrine is an ingenious bid to reconcile the legal elements in a coherent theory. It accepts the realities of new creations of states and governments by practical (and occasionally illegal) means, and attempts to assimilate this to the supremacy of international law as Lauterpacht saw it. However, in so doing it ignores the political aspects and functions of recognition, that is, its use as a method of demonstrating or withholding support from a particular government or new community. The reality is that in many cases recognition is applied to demonstrate political approval or disapproval. Indeed, if there is a duty to grant recognition, would the entity involved have a right to demand this where a particular state (or states) is proving recalcitrant? If this were so, one would appear to be faced with the possibility of a non-state with as yet no rights or duties enforcing rights against non-recognising states.

Nevertheless, state practice reveals that Lauterpacht's theory has not been adopted.[22] The fact is that few states accept that they are obliged in every instance to accord recognition. In most cases they will grant recognition, but that does not mean that they have to, as history with regard to some Communist nations and with respect to Israel illustrates. This position was supported in Opinion No. 10 of the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission in July 1992, which emphasised that recognition was 'a discretionary act that other states may perform when they choose and in a manner of their own choosing, subject only to compliance with the imperatives of general international law'.[23]

The approach of the United States was emphasised in 1976. The Department of State noted that:

[21] Recognition, pp. 24, 55, 76–7.

[22] See e.g. H. Waldock, 'General Course on Public International Law', 106 HR, 1962, p. 154. See also Mugerwa, 'Subjects', pp. 266–90.

[23] 92 ILR, pp. 206, 208.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> [i]n the view of the United States, international law does not require a state to recognise another entity as a state; it is a matter for the judgment of each state whether an entity merits recognition as a state. In reaching this judgment, the United States has traditionally looked to the establishment of certain facts. These facts include effective control over a clearly defined territory and population; an organised governmental administration of that territory and a capacity to act effectively to conduct foreign relations and to fulfil international obligations. The United States has also taken into account whether the entity in question has attracted the recognition of the international community of states.[24]

The view of the UK government was expressed as follows:

> The normal criteria which the government apply for recognition as a state are that it should have, and seem likely to continue to have, a clearly defined territory with a population, a government who are able of themselves to exercise effective control of that territory, and independence in their external relations. Other factors, including some United Nations resolutions, may also be relevant.[25]

Recent practice suggests that 'other factors' may, in the light of the particular circumstances, include human rights and other matters. The European Community adopted a Declaration on 16 December 1991 entitled 'Guidelines on the Recognition of New States in Eastern Europe and in the Soviet Union' in which a common position on the process of recognition of the new states was adopted. It was noted in particular that recognition required:

- respect for the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the commitments subscribed to in the Final Act of Helsinki and in the Charter of Paris,[26] especially with regard to the rule of law, democracy and human rights;
- guarantees for the rights of ethnic and national groups and minorities in accordance with the commitments subscribed to in the framework of the CSCE;[27]
- respect for the inviolability of all frontiers which can only be changed by peaceful means and by common agreement;

[24] DUSPIL, 1976, pp. 19–20.

[25] 102 HC Deb., col. 977, Written Answer, 23 October 1986. See also 169 HC Deb., cols. 449–50, Written Answer, 19 March 1990. As to French practice, see e.g. Journal Officiel, Débats Parl., AN, 1988, p. 2324.

[26] See above, chapter 7, p. 372. [27] See above, chapter 7, p. 376.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

- acceptance of all relevant commitments with regard to disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation as well as to security and regional stability;
- commitment to settle by agreement, including where appropriate by recourse to arbitration, all questions concerning state succession and regional disputes.[28]

On the same day that the Guidelines were adopted, the European Community also adopted a Declaration on Yugoslavia,[29] in which the Community and its member states agreed to recognise the Yugoslav republics fulfilling certain conditions. These were that such republics wished to be recognised as independent; that the commitments in the Guidelines were accepted; that provisions laid down in a draft convention under consideration by the Conference on Yugoslavia were accepted, particularly those dealing with human rights and the rights of national or ethnic groups; and that support would be given to the efforts of the Secretary-General of the UN and the Security Council and the Conference on Yugoslavia. The Community and its member states also required that the particular Yugoslav republic seeking recognition would commit itself prior to recognition to adopting constitutional and political guarantees ensuring that it had no territorial claims towards a neighbouring Community state. The United States took a rather less robust position, but still noted the relevance of commitments and assurances given by the new states of Eastern Europe and the former USSR with regard to nuclear safety, democracy and free markets within the process of both recognition and the establishment of diplomatic relations.[30]

Following a period of UN administration authorised by Security Council resolution 1244 (1999),[31] the Yugoslav (later Serbian) province of Kosovo declared independence on 17 February 2008. This was preceded by [28] UKMIL, 62 BYIL, 1991, pp. 559–60. On 31 December 1991, the European Community issued a statement noting that Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Kazakhstan, Moldova, Turkmenistan, Ukraine and Uzbekistan had given assurances that the requirements in the Guidelines would be fulfilled. Accordingly, the member states of the Community declared that they were willing to proceed with the recognition of these states, ibid., p. 561. On 15 January 1992, a statement was issued noting that Kyrghyzstan and Tadzhikistan had accepted the requirements in the Guidelines and that they too would be recognised, UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 637.

[29] UKMIL, 62 BYIL, 1991, pp. 560–1.

[30] See the announcement by President Bush on 25 December 1991, 2(4 & 5) Foreign Policy Bulletin, 1992, p. 12, as cited in Henkin et al., International Law, pp. 252–3. See also, as to the importance of democratic considerations, S. D. Murphy, 'Democratic Legitimacy and the Recognition of States and Governments', 48 ICLQ, 1999, p. 545.

[31] See above, chapter 5, p. 204.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the Comprehensive Proposal for the Kosovo Status Settlement formulated by Martti Ahtisaari which had in March 2007 called for independence for Kosovo with international supervision.[32] This was rejected by Serbia. The international community was divided as to the question of recognition of Kosovo's independence. It was recognised swiftly by the US, the UK, Germany and the majority of EU states, Japan and others. Russia and Serbia, on the other hand, made it clear that they opposed recognition, as did Spain and Greece. Accordingly, in the current circumstances, while many countries recognise Kosovo, many do not and entry into the UN is not possible until, for example, Russia is prepared to lift its opposition in view of its veto power.[33] For those states that have recognised Kosovo, the latter will be entitled to all the privileges and responsibilities of statehood in the international community and within the legal systems of the recognising states. However, for those that have not, the state and diplomatic agents of Kosovo will not be entitled to, for example, diplomatic and state immunities, while the international status of Kosovo will be controversial and disputed. While recognition may cure difficulties in complying with the criteria of statehood, a situation where the international community is divided upon recognition will, especially in the absence of UN membership, ensure the continuation of uncertainty.

There are many different ways in which recognition can occur and it may apply in more than one kind of situation. It is not a single, constant idea but a category comprising a number of factors. There are indeed different entities which may be recognised, ranging from new states, to new governments, belligerent rights possessed by a particular group and territorial changes. Not only are there various objects of the process of recognition, but recognition may itself be de facto or de jure and it may arise in a variety of manners.

Recognition is an active process and should be distinguished from cognition, or the mere possession of knowledge, for example, that the entity involved complies with the basic international legal stipulations as to statehood. Recognition implies both cognition of the necessary facts and an intention that, so far as the acting state is concerned, it is willing that the legal consequences attendant upon recognition should operate.

[32] See S/2007/168 and S/2007/168/Add.1.

[33] One month after the declaration of independence, twenty-eight states had recognised the independence of Kosovo, including sixteen of the twenty-seven EU member states and six of the UN Security Council's fifteen members: see 'Kosovo's First Month', International Crisis Group Europe Briefing No. 47, 18 March 2008, p. 3.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

For example, the rules as to diplomatic and sovereign immunities should apply as far as the envoys of the entity to be recognised are concerned. It is not enough for the recognising state simply to be aware of the facts, it must desire the coming into effect of the legal and political results of recognition. This is inevitable by virtue of the discretionary nature of the act of recognition, and is illustrated in practice by the lapse in time that often takes place between the events establishing a new state or government and the actual recognition by other states. Once given, courts have generally regarded recognition as retroactive so that the statehood of the entity recognised is accepted as of the date of statehood (which is a question of fact), not from the date of recognition.[34]

Recognition of governments[35]

The recognition of a new government is quite different from the recognition of a new state. As far as statehood is concerned, the factual situation will be examined in terms of the accepted criteria.[36] Different considerations apply where it is the government which changes. Recognition will only really be relevant where the change in government is unconstitutional. In addition, recognition of governments as a category tends to minimise the fact that the precise capacity or status of the entity so recognised may be characterised in different ways. Recognition may be of a de facto[37] government or administration or of a government or administration in effective control of only part of the territory of the state in question. Recognition constitutes acceptance of a particular situation

[34] See e.g. Chen, Recognition, pp. 172 ff. See also the views of the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission as to the date of succession of the former Yugoslav republics, Opinion No. 11, 96 ILR, p. 719. Note that retroactivity of recognition is regarded by Oppenheim as a rule of convenience rather than of principle: see Oppenheim's International Law, p. 161.

[35] See e.g. I. Brownlie, 'Recognition in Theory and Practice', 53 BYIL, 1982, p. 197; C. Warbrick, 'The New British Policy on Recognition of Governments', 30 ICLQ, 1981, p. 568; M. J. Peterson, 'Recognition of Governments Should Not Be Abolished', 77 AJIL, 1983, p. 31, and Peterson, Recognition of Governments: Legal Doctrine and State Practice, London, 1997; N. Ando, 'The Recognition of Governments Reconsidered', 28 Japanese Annual of International Law, 1985, p. 29; C. Symmons, 'United Kingdom Abolition of the Doctrine of Recognition: A Rose by Another Name', Public Law, 1981, p. 248; S. Talmon, 'Recognition of Governments: An Analysis of the New British Policy and Practice', 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 231, and Talmon, Recognition of Governments in International Law, Oxford, 1998; B. R. Roth, Governmental Illegitimacy in International Law, Oxford, 1999; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 150; Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 415, and Galloway, Recognising Foreign Governments.

[36] See above, chapter 5, p. 197. [37] See further below, p. 459.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

by the recognising state both in terms of the relevant factual criteria and in terms of the consequential legal repercussions, so that, for example, recognition of an entity as the government of a state implies not only that this government is deemed to have satisfied the required conditions, but also that the recognising state will deal with the government as the governing authority of the state and accept the usual legal consequences of such status in terms of privileges and immunities within the domestic legal order.

Political considerations have usually played a large role in the decision whether or not to grant recognition. However, certain criteria have emerged to cover recognition of illegal changes in government. Such criteria amounted to an acceptance of the realities of the transfer of power and suggested that once a new government effectively controlled the country and that this seemed likely to continue, recognition should not be withheld. The United Kingdom on a number of occasions adopted this approach.[38] It was declared by the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in 1970 that the test employed was whether or not the new government enjoyed, 'with a reasonable prospect of permanence, the obedience of the mass of the population . . . effective control of much of the greater part of the territory of the state concerned'.[39]

It is this attitude which prompted such policies as the recognition of the communist government of China and the Russian-installed government of Hungary in 1956 after the failure of the uprising. However, this general approach cannot be regarded as an absolute principle in view of the British refusal over many years to recognise as states North Vietnam, North Korea and the German Democratic Republic.[40] The effective control of a new government over the territory of the state is thus an important guideline to the problem of whether to extend recognition or not, providing such control appears well established and likely to continue. But it was no more than that and in many cases appeared to yield to political considerations.

The Tinoco arbitration[41] constitutes an interesting example of the 'effective control' concept. In 1919, the government of Tinoco in Costa Rica was overthrown and the new authorities repudiated certain [38] See the Morrison statement, 485 HC Deb., cols. 2410–11, 21 March 1951.

[39] 799 HC Deb., col. 23, 6 April 1970. See also Foreign Office statements, 204 HL Deb., col. 755, 4 July 1957 and 742 HC Deb., cols. 6–7, Written Answer, 27 February 1967.

[40] See e.g. D. Greig, 'The Carl-Zeiss Case and the Position of an Unrecognised Government in English Law', 83 LQR, 1967, pp. 96, 128–30 and Re Al-Fin Corporation's Patent [1970] Ch. 160; 52 ILR, p. 68.

[41] 1 RIAA, p. 369 (1923); 2 AD, p. 34.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

obligations entered into by Tinoco with regard to British nationals. Chief Justice Taft, the sole arbitrator, referred to the problems of recognition or non-recognition as relating to the Tinoco administration. He decided that since the administration was in effective control of the country, it was the valid government irrespective of the fact that a number of states, including the United Kingdom, had not recognised it. This was so despite his opinion that:

> the non-recognition by other nations of a government claiming to be a national personality, is usually appropriate evidence that it has not attained the independence and control entitling it by international law to be classed as such.[42]

Where recognition has been refused because of the illegitimacy or irregularity of origin of the government in question, rather than because of the lack of effectiveness of its control in the country, such non-recognition loses some of its evidential weight. In other words, where the degree of authority asserted by the new administration is uncertain, recognition by other states will be a vital factor. But where the new government is firmly established, non-recognition will not affect the legal character of the new government. The doctrine of effective control is an indication of the importance of the factual nature of any situation. But in those cases where recognition is refused upon the basis of the improper origins of the new government, it will have less of an impact than if recognition is refused because of the absence of effective control. Taft's view of the nature of recognition is an interesting amalgam of the declaratory and constitutive theories, in that recognition can become constitutive where the factual conditions (i.e. the presence or absence of effective control) are in dispute, but otherwise is purely declaratory or evidential.

A change in government, however accomplished, does not affect the identity of the state itself. The state does not cease to be an international legal person because its government is overthrown. That is not at issue. The recognition or non-recognition of a new administration is irrelevant to the legal character of the country. Accordingly one can see that two separate recognitions are involved and they must not be confused. Recognition of a state will affect its legal personality, whether by creating or acknowledging it, while recognition of a government affects the status of the administrative authority, not the state.

It is possible, however, for recognition of state and government to occur together in certain circumstances. This can take place upon the creation of a new state. Israel, to take one example, was recognised by the United States and the United Kingdom by the expedient of having its government recognised de facto.[43] Recognition of the government implies recognition of the state, but it does not work the other way.

[42] 1 RIAA, p. 380; 2 AD, p. 37.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

It should be noted that recognition of a government has no relevance to the establishment of new persons in international law. Where it is significant is in the realm of diplomatic relations. If a government is unrecognised, there is no exchange of diplomatic envoys and thus problems can arise as to the enforcement of international rights and obligations.

Although the effective control doctrine is probably accepted as the most reliable guide to recognition of governments, there have been other theories put forward, the most prominent amongst them being the Tobar doctrine or the so-called doctrine of legitimacy. This suggested that governments which came into power by extra-constitutional means should not be recognised, at least until the change had been accepted by the people.[44] This policy was applied particularly by the United States in relation to Central America and was designed to protect stability in that delicate area adjacent to the Panama Canal. Logically, of course, the concept amounts to the promotion of non-recognition in all revolutionary situations and it is, and was, difficult to reconcile with reality and political consideration. In American eyes it became transmuted into the Wilson policy of democratic legitimacy. Where the revolution was supported by the people, it would be recognised. Where it was not, there would be no grant of recognition. It was elaborated with respect to the Soviet Union until 1933, but gradually declined until it can now be properly accepted merely as a political qualification for recognition to be considered by the recognising state.[45]

A doctrine advocating the exact opposite, the automatic recognition of governments in all circumstances, was put forward by Estrada, the Mexican Secretary of Foreign Relations.[46] But this suffers from the same disadvantage as the legitimacy doctrine. It attempts to lay down a clear test for recognition in all instances excluding political considerations and [43] See e.g. Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, p. 168.

[44] See e.g. Mugerwa, 'Subjects', p. 271, and 2 AJIL, 1908, Supp., p. 229.

[45] See e.g. G. H. Hackworth, Digest of International Law, Washington, DC, 1940, vol. I, pp. 181 ff. See also 17 AJIL, 1923, Supp., p. 118; O'Connell, International Law, pp. 137–9, and Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, p. 69.

[46] See e.g. 25 AJIL, 1931, Supp., p. 203; P. Jessup, 'The Estrada Doctrine', 25 AJIL, 1931, p. 719, and Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, p. 85. See also Talmon, 'Recognition of Governments', p. 263; Chen, Recognition, p. 116; O'Connell, International Law, pp. 134–5, and C. Rousseau, Droit International Public, Paris, 1977, vol. III, p. 555.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

exigencies of state and is thus unrealistic, particularly where there are competing governments.[47] It has also been criticised as minimising the distinction between recognition and maintenance of diplomatic relations.[48]

The problem, of course, was that recognition of a new government that has come to power in a non-constitutional fashion was taken to imply approval. Allied with the other factors sometimes taken into account in such recognition situations,[49] an unnecessarily complicated process had resulted. Accordingly, in 1977 the United States declared that:

> US practice has been to de-emphasise and avoid the use of recognition in cases of changes of governments and to concern ourselves with the question of whether we wish to have diplomatic relations with the new governments . . . The Administration's policy is that establishment of relations does not involve approval or disapproval but merely demonstrates a willingness on our part to conduct our affairs with other governments directly.[50]

In 1980, the UK government announced that it would no longer accord recognition to governments as distinct from states.[51] This was stated to be primarily due to the perception that recognition meant approval, a perception that was often embarrassing, for example, in the case of regimes violating human rights. There were, therefore, practical advantages in not according recognition as such to governments. This change to a policy of not formally recognising governments had in fact taken place in certain [47] See e.g. Peterson, 'Recognition', p. 42, and C. Rousseau, 'Chroniques des Faits Internationaux', 93 RGDIP, 1989, p. 923.

[48] Warbrick, 'New British Policy', p. 584.

[49] For example, the democratic requirement noted by President Wilson, President Rutherford Hayes' popular support condition and Secretary of State Seward's criterion of ability to honour international obligations: see statement by US Department of State, DUSPIL, 1977, pp. 19, 20. See also Third US Restatement, para. 203, note 1. The Organisation of American States adopted a resolution in 1965 recommending that states contemplating recognition of a new government should take into account whether that government proposes to hold elections within a reasonable time, 5 ILM, 1966, p. 155.

[50] DUSPIL, 1977, p. 20. See also DUSPIL, 1981–8, vol. I, 1993, p. 295. Note that Deputy Secretary of State Christopher stated in 1977 that unscheduled changes of government were not uncommon in this day and age and that 'withholding diplomatic relations from these regimes after they have obtained effective control penalises us', ibid., p. 18. See also, as regards Afghanistan and the continuation of diplomatic relations, 72 AJIL, 1978, p. 879. Cf. the special circumstances of the recognition of the government of China, DUSPIL, 1978, pp. 71–3 and ibid., 1979, pp. 142 ff. But cf. Petersen, 'Recognition'.

[51] See 408 HL Deb., cols. 1121–2, 28 April 1980. See also Symmons, 'United Kingdom Abolition', p. 249.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

civil law countries rather earlier. Belgium[52] and France[53] appear, for example, to have adopted this approach in 1965. By the late 1980s, this approach was also adopted by both Australia[54] and Canada,[55] and indeed by other countries.[56]

The change, however, did not remove all problems, but rather shifted the focus from formal recognition to informal 'dealings'. The UK announced that it would continue to decide the nature of dealings with unconstitutional regimes:

> in the light of [an] assessment of whether they are able of themselves to exercise effective control of the territory of the state concerned, and seem likely to continue to do so.[57]

The change, therefore, is that recognition of governments is abolished but that the criterion for dealing with such regimes is essentially the same as the former test for the recognition of governments.[58] In that context, regard should also be had to the phrase 'of themselves'.[59]

De facto and de jure recognition[60]

In addition to the fact that there are different entities to be recognised, recognition itself may take different forms. It may be either de facto or de [52] See 11 Revue Belge de Droit International, 1973, p. 351.

[53] See 69 RGDIP, 1965, p. 1089. See also 83 RGDIP, 1979, p. 808; G. Charpentier, 'Pratique Française du Droit International', AFDI, 1981, p. 911, and Rousseau, Droit International Public, p. 555.

[54] See J. G. Starke, 'The New Australian Policy of Recognition of Foreign Governments', 62 Australian Law Journal, 1988, p. 390.

[55] See 27 Canadian YIL, 1989, p. 387. See also Re Chateau-Gai Wines Ltd and Attorney-General for Canada [1970] Ex CR 366; 55 ILR, p. 38.

[56] See e.g. the Netherlands, 22 Netherlands YIL, 1991, p. 237, and New Zealand, Attorney-General for Fiji v. Robt Jones House Ltd [1989] 2 NZLR 69 at 70–1; 80 ILR, p. 1. The European Union has stated that 'it does not recognise governments, and even less political personalities, but states, according to the most common international practice', Bulletin of the European Union, 1999–7/8, p. 60 and UKMIL, 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 424.

[57] 408 HL Deb., cols. 1121–2, 28 April 1980. This has been reaffirmed on a number of occasions: see e.g. UKMIL, 69 BYIL, 1998, p. 477 and UKMIL, 72 BYIL, 2001, p. 577.

[58] See Gur Corporation v. Trust Bank of Africa [1987] 1 QB 599; 75 ILR, p. 675.

[59] See, as regards the different approaches adopted to the Cambodian and Ugandan experiences, Symmons, 'United Kingdom Abolition', p. 250, and UKMIL, 50 BYIL, 1979, p. 296. See also above, chapter 4, p. 192. See, as to recognition of belligerency and insurgency, e.g. O'Connell, International Law, pp. 148–53; Lauterpacht, Recognition, p. 270, and Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 161 ff.

[60] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 154.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

jure. A more correct way of putting this might be to say that a government (or other entity or situation) may be recognised de facto or de jure.

Recognition de facto implies that there is some doubt as to the long-term viability of the government in question. Recognition de jure usually follows where the recognising state accepts that the effective control displayed by the government is permanent and firmly rooted and that there are no legal reasons detracting from this, such as constitutional subservience to a foreign power. De facto recognition involves a hesitant assessment of the situation, an attitude of wait and see, to be succeeded by de jure recognition when the doubts are sufficiently overcome to extend formal acceptance. To take one instance, the United Kingdom recognised the Soviet government de facto in 1921 and de jure in 1924.[61] A slightly different approach is adopted in cases of civil war where the distinction between de jure and de facto recognition is sometimes used to illustrate the variance between legal and factual sovereignty. For example, during the 1936–9 Spanish Civil War, the United Kingdom, while recognising the Republican government as the de jure government, extended de facto recognition to the forces under General Franco as they gradually took over the country. Similarly, the government of the Italian conquering forces in Ethiopia was recognised de facto by the UK in 1936, and de jure two years later.[62]

By this method a recognising state could act in accordance with political reality and its own interests while reserving judgment on the permanence of the change in government or its desirability or legality. It is able to safeguard the affairs of its citizens and institutions by this, because certain legal consequences will flow in municipal law from the recognition.[63]

There are in reality few meaningful distinctions between a de facto and a de jure recognition, although only a government recognised de jure may enter a claim to property located in the recognising state.[64] Additionally, it is generally accepted that de facto recognition does not of itself include the exchange of diplomatic relations.

Premature recognition[65]

There is often a difficult and unclear dividing line between the acceptable recognition of a new state, particularly one that has emerged or is emerging [61] See e.g. O'Connell, International Law, p. 161. See also the Morrison statement, above, note 38.

[62] See below, pp. 473 and 474. [63] See below, p. 471.

[64] See e.g. Haile Selassie v. Cable and Wireless Ltd (No. 2) [1939] 1 Ch. 182; 9 AD, p. 94.

[65] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 143 ff. and Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 558.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

as a result of secession, and intervention in the domestic affairs of another state by way of premature or precipitate recognition, such as, for example, the view taken by the Nigerian federal government with respect to the recognition of 'Biafra' by five states.[66] In each case, the state seeking to recognise will need to consider carefully the factual situation and the degree to which the criteria of statehood (or other relevant criteria with regard to other types of entity with regard to which recognition is sought) have been fulfilled. It is therefore a process founded upon a perception of fact. In the case of Croatia, it could be argued that the recognition of that state by the European Community and its member states (together with Austria and Switzerland) on 15 January 1992 was premature.[67] Croatia at that time, and for several years thereafter, did not effectively control some one-third of its territory. In addition, the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission had taken the view in Opinion No. 5 on 11 January 1992 that Croatia did not meet fully the conditions for recognition laid down in the European Community Guidelines of 16 December 1991,[68] since the Constitutional Act adopted by Croatia did not fully incorporate the required guarantees relating to human rights and minority rights.[69] It could also be argued that the recognition of Bosnia-Herzegovina on 6 April 1992 by the European Community and member states and on 7 April 1992 by the USA was premature, particularly since the government of that state effectively controlled less than one-half of its territory, a situation that continued until the Dayton Peace Agreement of November 1995.[70] On the other hand, it could be argued that in the special [66] See e.g. J. Stremlau, The International Politics of the Nigerian Civil War, 1967–70, Princeton, 1977, pp. 127–9, and D. Ijalaye, 'Was "Biafra" at Any Time a State in International Law?', 65 AJIL, 1971, p. 51. See also Lauterpacht, Recognition, pp. 7–8.

[67] See e.g. R. Müllerson, International Law, Rights and Politics, London, 1994, p. 130, and R. Rich, 'Recognition of States: The Collapse of Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union', 4 EJIL, 1993, p. 36.

[68] See above, p. 451.

[69] 92 ILR, pp. 179, 181. Note that the President of Croatia on 15 January 1992 announced that Croatia would abide by the necessary conditions and on 8 May 1992 its Constitution was amended. The amended Constitution was considered by the Arbitration Commission on 4 July 1992, which concluded that the requirements of general international law with regard to the protection of minorities had been satisfied, ibid., p. 209. Note, however, the critical views of the UN Human Rights Committee with regard to the distinctions made in the Croatian Constitution between ethnic Croats and other citizens: see CCPR/C/79/Add.15, p. 3. Croatia became a member of the UN on 22 May 1992. See also M. Weller, 'The International Response to the Dissolution of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia', 86 AJIL, 1992, p. 569.

[70] See e.g. Weller, 'International Response'. Cf. the views of the UK Minister of State at the Foreign Office, UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 645. Note that Bosnia became a member of the UN on 22 May 1992.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

circumstances of Former Yugoslavia, the international community (particularly by means of membership of the UN which is restricted to states) was prepared to accept a loosening of the traditional criteria of statehood, so that essentially international recognition compensated for lack of effectivity.

Recognition may also be overdue, in the sense that it occurs long after it is clear as a matter of fact that the criteria of statehood have been satisfied, but in such cases, different considerations apply since recognition is not compulsory and remains a political decision by states.[71]

Implied recognition[72]

Recognition itself need not be express, that is in the form of an open, unambiguous and formal communication, but may be implied in certain circumstances.[73] This is due to the fact that recognition is founded upon the will and intent of the state that is extending the recognition. Accordingly, there are conditions in which it might be possible to declare that in acting in a certain manner, one state has by implication recognised another state or government. Because this facility of indirect or implied recognition is available, states may make an express declaration to the effect that a particular action involving another party is by no means to be interpreted as comprehending any recognition. This attitude was maintained by Arab countries with regard to Israel, and in certain other cases.[74] It automatically excludes any possibility of implied recognition but [71] See e.g. with regard to the delays in recognising Macedonia, Henkin et al., International Law, p. 253, and Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 565. Israel, of course, remained unrecognised by its Arab neighbours until long after its establishment in 1948. It was recognised in 1979 by Egypt and in 1995 by Jordan.

[72] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 169; Lauterpacht, Recognition, pp. 369–408, and Chen, Recognition, pp. 201–16. See also Talmon, 'Recognition of Governments', pp. 255 ff., and M. Lachs, 'Recognition and Modern Methods of International Co-operation', 35 BYIL, 1959, p. 252.

[73] Note that article 7 of the Montevideo Convention on Rights and Duties of States, 1933 provides that 'the recognition of a state may be express or tacit. The latter results from any act which implies the intention of recognising the new state.' See also R. Higgins, The Development of International Law by the Political Organs of the United Nations, Oxford, 1963, pp. 140 ff.

[74] See e.g. UK and North Vietnam, Cmd 9763, p. 3, note 1, and Israel and Arab countries, International Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Racial Discrimination, 1965: see Human Rights International Instruments, UN, ST/HR/4/rev.4, 1982. Note that Egypt withdrew its declarations regarding non-recognition of Israel with regard to this Convention on 18 January 1980, ibid., p. 86.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

does suggest that without a definite and clear waiver, the result of some international actions may be recognition of a hitherto unrecognised entity in certain circumstances.

The point can best be explained by mentioning the kind of conditions which may give rise to the possibility of a recognition where no express or formal statement has been made. A message of congratulations to a new state upon attaining sovereignty will imply recognition of that state, as will the formal establishment of diplomatic relations,[75] but the maintenance of informal and unofficial contacts (such as those between the United States and Communist China during the 1960s and early 1970s in Warsaw) will not.[76] The issuing of a consular exequatur, the accepted authorisation permitting the performance of consular functions, to a representative of an unrecognised state will usually amount to a recognition of that state, though not in all cases.[77] A British Consul has operated in Taiwan, but the UK does not recognise the Taiwan government.[78] It is possible that the conclusion of a bilateral treaty between the recognising and unrecognised state, as distinct from a temporary agreement, might imply recognition, but the matter is open to doubt since there are a number of such agreements between parties not recognising each other. One would have to study the circumstances of the particular case to clarify the issue.[79]

[75] See O'Connell, International Law, pp. 154–5. Note that the UK stated that in the case of Namibia 'there was no formal recognition of statehood, but it was implicit in the establishment of diplomatic relations in March 1990', UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 642. Instructing an ambassador to make suitable, friendly contact with the new administration in question might also suffice: see UKMIL, 50 BYIL, 1979, p. 294.

[76] See e.g. Pan American World Airways Inc. v. Aetna Casualty and Surety Co. 13 ILM, 1974, pp. 1376, 1397.

[77] See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 171, note 9.

[78] Discussions with an unrecognised entity conducted by consular officers will not of itself imply recognition: see e.g. H. de Smith, Great Britain and the Law of Nations, London, 1932, vol. I, p. 79, and Civil Air Transport Inc. v. Central Air Transport Corporation [1953] AC 70, 88–9. The establishment of an office in the UK, for example, of an unrecognised entity is not as such prohibited nor does it constitute recognition: see e.g. with regard to the PLO, 483 HL Deb., cols. 1248–52, 27 January 1987 and UKMIL, 58 BYIL, 1987, p. 531. Note that under section 1 of the Diplomatic and Consular Premises Act 1987, the permission of the Foreign Secretary is required if the premises in question are to be regarded as diplomatic or consular.

[79] See e.g. Republic of China v. Merchants' Fire Assurance Corporation of New York 30 F.2d 278 (1929); 5 AD, p. 42 and Clerget v. Banque Commerciale pour l'Europe du Nord 52 ILR, p. 310. See, with regard to the special position as between the German Federal Republic and the German Democratic Republic, Re Treaty on the Basis of Relations Between the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic 78 ILR, p. 150. See also Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, pp. 567 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The making of claims by a state against an entity will not necessarily imply recognition.[80]

Recognition is not normally to be inferred from the fact that both states have taken part in negotiations and signed a multilateral treaty,[81] for example the United Nations Charter. Practice shows that many of the member states or their governments are not recognised by other member states.[82] Although Israel and many Arab countries are UN members, this did not affect Arab non-recognition of the Israeli state.[83] However, where the state concerned has voted in favour of membership in the UN of the entity in question, it is a natural inference that recognition has occurred. The UK, for example, regarded its vote in favour of UN membership for the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia as amounting to recognition of that entity as a state.[84] Indeed, irrespective of recognition by individual states, there is no doubt that membership of the UN is powerful evidence of statehood since being a state is a necessary precondition to UN membership by virtue of article 4 of the UN Charter.[85]

In the case of common participation in an international conference, similar considerations apply, although the element of doubt has often stimulated non-recognising states to declare expressly that their presence and joint signature on any agreement issuing forth from the meeting is in no way to be understood as implying recognition. Such has been the case particularly with the Arab states over the years with regard to Israel.

State practice has restricted the possible scope of operation of this concept of implied recognition to a few instances only and all the relevant surrounding circumstances will have to be carefully evaluated before one can deduce from conduct the intention to extend recognition. States like to retain their control of such an important political instrument as recognition and are usually not keen to allow this to be inferred from the [80] See e.g. with regard to Formosa/Taiwan, 6 ICLQ, 1957, p. 507 and with regard to Turkish-occupied northern Cyprus, 957 HC Deb., col. 247, Written Answer, 8 November 1978.

[81] See e.g. UKMIL, 49 BYIL, 1978, p. 339 and Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, pp. 563 ff. See also Civil Aeronautics Administration v. Singapore Airlines Ltd [2004] 1 SLR 570; [2004] SGCA 3, para. 35; 133 ILR, pp. 371, 383.

[82] See the Memorandum on the Legal Aspects of the Problem of Representation in the United Nations, S/1466, 1950 and 4 International Organisation, 1950, pp. 356, 359.

[83] See e.g. Q. Wright, 'Some Thoughts about Recognition', 44 AJIL, 1950, p. 548. See also, with regard to the Ukraine and Byelorussia, members of the UN prior to the demise of the USSR of which they were constituent republics, UKMIL, 55 BYIL, 1978, p. 339.

[84] See 223 HC Deb., col. 241, Written Answer, 22 April 1993 and UKMIL, 64 BYIL, 1993, p. 601. Note that a similar view was taken with regard to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, 62 BYIL, 1991, p. 559.

[85] See the Conditions of Membership of the United Nations case, ICJ Reports, 1948, pp. 57 ff.; 15 AD, p. 333.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

way they behave. They prefer recognition to be, in general, a formal act accorded after due thought.

Conditional recognition

The political nature of recognition has been especially marked with reference to what has been termed conditional recognition. This refers to the practice of making the recognition subject to fulfilment of certain conditions, for example, the good treatment of religious minorities as occurred with regard to the independence of some Balkan countries in the late nineteenth century, or the granting of most-favoured-nation status to the recognised state. One well-known instance of this approach was the Litvinov Agreement of 1933 whereby the United States recognised the Soviet government upon the latter undertaking to avoid acts prejudicial to the internal security of the USA, and to come to a settlement of various financial claims.[86]

However, breach of the particular condition does not invalidate the recognition. It may give rise to a breach of international law and political repercussions but the law appears not to accept the notion of a conditional recognition as such. The status of any conditions will depend upon agreements specifically made by the particular parties.[87] It is, however, important to distinguish conditional recognition in this sense from the evolution of criteria for recognition generally, although the two categories may in practice overlap.[88]

Collective recognition[89]

The expediency of collective recognition has often been noted. This would amount to recognition by means of an international decision, whether [86] See e.g. United States v. Pink 315 US 203, 229 (1942), Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, pp. 120 ff.; 10 AD, p. 48, and A. Kiss, Répertoire de la Pratique Française en Matière de Droit International Public, Paris, 1962–72, vol. III, pp. 40 ff.

[87] See e.g. Lauterpacht, Recognition, chapter 19. See also the Treaty of Berlin, 1878 concerning Bulgaria, Montenegro, Serbia and Romania and the provisions dealing with freedom of religion, articles V, XXVII, XXXV and XLIII.

[88] See further above, p. 451, with regard to the approach of the European Community to the emergence of new states in Eastern Europe and out of the former USSR and Yugoslavia. This constituted a co-ordinated stand with regard to criteria for recognition by the Community and its member states rather than collective recognition as such.

[89] See e.g. Higgins, Development of International Law; Dugard, Recognition; Lauterpacht, Recognition, p. 400; Chen, Recognition, p. 211, and Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 177 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

by an international organisation or not. It would, of course, signify the importance of the international community in its collective assertion of control over membership and because of this it has not been warmly welcomed, nor can one foresee its general application for some time to come. The idea has been discussed particularly since the foundation of the League of Nations and was re-emphasised with the establishment of the United Nations. However, it rapidly became clear that member states reserved the right to extend recognition to their own executive authorities and did not wish to delegate it to any international institution. The most that could be said is that membership of the United Nations constitutes powerful evidence of statehood. But that, of course, is not binding upon other member states who are free to refuse to recognise any other member state or government of the UN.[90]

Withdrawal of recognition[91]

Recognition once given may in certain circumstances be withdrawn. This is more easily achieved with respect to de facto recognition, as that is by its nature a cautious and temporary assessment of a particular situation. Where a de facto government loses the effective control it once exercised, the reason for recognition disappears and it may be revoked. It is in general a preliminary acceptance of political realities and may be withdrawn in accordance with a change in political factors.[92] De jure recognition, on the other hand, is intended to be more of a definitive step and is more difficult to withdraw.

Of course, where a government recognised de jure has been overthrown a new situation arises and the question of a new government will have to be faced, but in such instances withdrawal of recognition of the previous administration is assumed and does not have to be expressly stated, providing always that the former government is not still in existence and carrying on the fight in some way. Withdrawal of recognition of one government without recognising a successor is a possibility and indeed was the approach adopted by the UK and France, for example, with regard to Cambodia in 1979.[93] However, with the adoption of the new British

[90] See further above, p. 445. [91] See Lauterpacht, Recognition, p. 349.

[92] Withdrawal of de facto recognition does not always entail withdrawal of de jure recognition: see, with regard to Latvia, Re Feivel Pikelny's Estate, 32 BYIL, 1955–6, p. 288.

[93] See 975 HC Deb., col. 723, 6 December 1979, and C. Warbrick, 'Kampuchea: Representation and Recognition', 30 ICLQ, 1981, p. 234. See also AFDI, 1980, p. 888.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

policy on recognition with regard to governments,[94] the position is now that the UK government will neither recognise nor withdraw recognition of regimes.[95]

Withdrawal of recognition in other circumstances is not a very general occurrence but in exceptional conditions it remains a possibility. The United Kingdom recognised the Italian conquest of Ethiopia de facto in 1936 and de jure two years later. However, it withdrew recognition in 1940, with the intensification of fighting and the dispatch of military aid.[96] Recognition of belligerency will naturally terminate with the defeat of either party, while the loss of one of the required criteria of statehood would affect recognition. It is to be noted that the 1979 recognition of the People's Republic of China as the sole legal government of China entailed the withdrawal of recognition or 'derecognition' of the Republic of China (Taiwan). This was explained to mean that, 'so far as the formal foreign relations of the United States are concerned, a government does not exist in Taiwan any longer'.[97]

Nevertheless, this was not to affect the application of the laws of the United States with respect to Taiwan in the context of US domestic law.[98] To some extent in this instance the usual consequences of non-recognition have not flowed, but this has taken place upon the background of a formal and deliberate act of policy.[99] It does show how complex the topic of recognition has become.

The usual method of expressing disapproval with the actions of a particular government is to break diplomatic relations. This will adequately demonstrate aversion as did, for example, the rupture in diplomatic relations between the UK and the USSR in 1927, and between some Arab countries and the United States in 1967, without entailing the legal consequences and problems that a withdrawal of recognition would initiate. But one must not confuse the ending of diplomatic relations with a withdrawal of recognition.

[94] See above, p. 458. [95] 424 HL Deb., col. 551, 15 October 1981.

[96] See Azazh Kebbeda v. Italian Government 9 AD, p. 93.

[97] US reply brief in the Court of Appeals in Goldwater v. Carter 444 US 996 (1979), quoted in DUSPIL, 1979, pp. 143–4.

[98] Taiwan Relations Act, Pub. L. 96–8 Stat. 22 USC 3301–3316, s. 4.

[99] Also of interest is the UK attitude to the 'republic of Somaliland'. This territory is part of Somalia but proclaimed independence in 1991. It is totally unrecognised by any state, but the UK maintains 'continuing contacts' with it and works 'very closely' with it: see HL Deb., vol. 677, col. 418, 16 January 2006 and HL Deb., vol. 683, col. 212, 14 June 2006. See also M. Schoiswohl, Status and (Human Rights) Obligations of Non-Recognized De Facto Regimes in International Law: The Case of 'Somaliland', Leiden, 2004.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Since recognition is ultimately a political issue, no matter how circumscribed or conditioned by the law, it logically follows that, should a state perceive any particular situation as justifying a withdrawal of recognition, it will take such action as it regards as according with its political interests.

Non-recognition[100]

There has been developing since the 1930s a doctrine of non-recognition where, under certain conditions, a factual situation will not be recognised because of strong reservations as to the morality or legality of the actions that have been adopted in order to bring about the factual situation. It is a doctrine that has also been reinforced by the principle that legal rights cannot derive from an illegal situation (ex injuria jus non oritur).[101]

This approach was particularly stimulated by the Japanese invasion of Manchuria in 1931. The US Secretary of State declared in 1932 that the illegal invasion would not be recognised as it was contrary to the 1928 Pact of Paris (the Kellogg–Briand Pact) which had outlawed war as an instrument of national policy. The doctrine of not recognising any situation, treaty or agreement brought about by non-legal means was named the Stimson doctrine after the American Secretary of State who put it forward. It was reinforced not long afterwards by a resolution of the Assembly of the League of Nations stressing that League members should not recognise any situation, treaty or agreement brought about by means contrary to the League's Covenant or the Pact of Paris.[102]

However, state practice until the Second World War was not encouraging. The Italian conquest of the Empire of Ethiopia was recognised and the German takeover of Czechoslovakia accepted. The Soviet Union made a series of territorial acquisitions in 1940, ranging from areas of Finland to the Baltic States (of Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia) and Bessarabia. These [100] See e.g. Lauterpacht, Recognition, pp. 416–20, and Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 183 ff. See also R. Langer, Seizure of Territory, Princeton, 1947; Hackworth, Digest, vol. I, p. 334; I. Brownlie, International Law and the Use of Force by States, Oxford, 1963, chapter 25; Dugard, Recognition, pp. 24 ff. and 81 ff., and Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 120 ff. See also S. Talmon La Non Reconnaissance Collective des États Illégaux, Paris, 2007.

[101] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 183–4, and the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 46–7; 49 ILR, pp. 2, 36–7.

[102] LNOJ, Sp. Supp. no. 101, p. 8. This principle was reiterated in a number of declarations subsequently: see e.g. 34 AJIL, 1940, Supp., p. 197. See also O'Connell, International Law, pp. 143–6.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

were recognised de facto over the years by Western powers (though not by the United States).[103]

The doctrine was examined anew after 1945. Article 2(4) of the UN Charter prohibits the threat or use of force inter alia against the territorial integrity of states, while the draft Declaration on the Rights and Duties of States, 1949, emphasised that territorial acquisitions by states were not to be recognised by other states where achieved by means of the threat or use of force or in any other manner inconsistent with international law and order. The Declaration on Principles of International Law, 1970, also included a provision to the effect that no territorial acquisition resulting from the threat or use of force shall be recognised as legal,[104] and Security Council resolution 242 (1967) on the solution to the Middle East conflict emphasised 'the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war'.[105]

Rhodesia unilaterally proclaimed its independence in November 1965 and in the years of its existence did not receive official recognition from any state at all, although it did maintain diplomatic relations with South Africa and Portugal prior to the revolution of 1974. The day following the Rhodesian declaration of independence, the Security Council passed a resolution calling upon all states not to accord it recognition and to refrain from assisting it.[106] The Council imposed selective mandatory economic sanctions on Rhodesia and these were later made comprehensive.[107] Similar action was also taken with regard to the Bantustans, territories of South Africa declared by that state to be independent.[108] The Security Council also adopted resolution 541 in 1983, which deplored the purported [103] O'Connell, International Law, pp. 143–6.

[104] See also article 11 of the Montevideo Convention on the Rights and Duties of States, 1933; article 17 of the Bogotá Charter of the OAS, 1948, and article 52 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969. Note also article 5(3) of the Consensus Definition of Aggression, 1974, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 3314 (XXIX).

[105] See also Security Council resolutions 476 (1980) and 478 (1980) declaring purported changes in the status of Jerusalem by Israel to be null and void, and resolution 491 (1981) stating that Israel's extension of its laws, jurisdiction and administration to the Golan Heights was without international legal effect.

[106] Security Council resolution 216 (1965). See also Security Council resolutions 217 (1965), 277 (1970) and 288 (1970).

[107] See e.g. Security Council resolutions 221 (1961), 232 (1966) and 253 (1968). See also M. N. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa, Oxford, 1986, p. 160; R. Zacklin, The United Nations and Rhodesia, Oxford, 1974, and J. Nkala, The United Nations, International Law and the Rhodesian Crisis, Oxford, 1985.

[108] See e.g. General Assembly resolution 31/6A and the Security Council statements of 21 September 1979 and 15 December 1981, Shaw, Title to Territory, p. 149. See also J. Dugard, International Law, A South African Perspective, Kenwyn, 1994, chapter 5.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

secession of part of Cyprus occupied by Turkey in 1974 and termed the proposed Turkish Cypriot state 'legally invalid'.[109] In 1990, the Security Council adopted resolution 662, which declared the Iraqi annexation of Kuwait 'null and void' and called on all states and institutions not to recognise the annexation.[110] The principle of non-recognition of title to territory acquired through aggression in violation of international law was also reaffirmed in the Brcko Inter-Entity Boundary award with regard to aggression in Bosnia.[111]

The role of non-recognition as an instrument of sanction as well as a means of pressure and a method of protecting the wronged inhabitants of a territory was discussed more fully in the Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice in the Namibia case, 1971, dealing with South Africa's presence in that territory. The Court held that since the continued South African occupancy was illegal, member states of the United Nations were obliged to recognise that illegality and the invalidity of South Africa's acts concerning Namibia and were under a duty to refrain from any actions implying recognition of the legality of, or lending support or assistance to, the South African presence and administration.[112]

The legal effects of recognition

In this section some of the legal results that flow from the recognition or non-recognition of an entity, both in the international sphere and within the municipal law of particular states, will be noted. Although recognition may legitimately be regarded as a political tool, it is one that nevertheless entails important consequences in the legal field.

Internationally

In the majority of cases, it can be accepted that recognition of a state or government is a legal acknowledgement of a factual state of affairs. Nevertheless, it should not be assumed that non-recognition of, for example, [109] See above, chapter 5, p. 235. See also Cyprus v. Turkey, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 10 May 2001, paras. 60–1; 120 ILR, p. 10.

[110] See below, chapter 22, p. 1253.

[111] 36 ILM, 1997, pp. 396, 422.

[112] ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 54, 56; 49 ILR, pp. 2, 44, 46. Non-member states of the UN were similarly obliged, ibid. The non-recognition obligation did not extend, however, to certain acts of a humanitarian nature the effect of which could only be ignored to the detriment of the inhabitants of the territory, ibid., p. 56 and Cyprus v. Turkey, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 10 May 2001, paras. 90–8; 120 ILR, p. 10. See also above, chapter 5, p. 225.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

a state will deprive that entity of rights and duties before international law, excepting, of course, those situations where it may be possible to say that recognition is constitutive of the legal entity.

In general, the political existence of a state is independent of recognition by other states, and thus an unrecognised state must be deemed subject to the rules of international law. It cannot consider itself free from restraints as to aggressive behaviour, nor can its territory be regarded as terra nullius. States which have signed international agreements are entitled to assume that states which they have not recognised but which have similarly signed the agreement are bound by that agreement. For example, the United Kingdom treated the German Democratic Republic as bound by its signature of the 1963 Nuclear Test Ban Treaty even when the state was not recognised by the UK.

Non-recognition, with its consequent absence of diplomatic relations, may affect the unrecognised state in asserting its rights or other states in asserting its duties under international law, but will not affect the existence of such rights and duties. The position is, however, different under municipal law.

Internally

Because recognition is fundamentally a political act, it is reserved to the executive branch of government. This means that the judiciary must as a general principle accept the discretion of the executive and give effect to its decisions. The courts cannot recognise a state or government. They can only accept and enforce the legal consequences which flow from the executive's political decision, although this situation has become more complex with the change in policy from express recognition of governments to acceptance of dealings with such entities.

To this extent, recognition is constitutive, because the act of recognition itself creates legal results within the domestic jurisdiction. In the United Kingdom and the United States particularly, the courts feel themselves obliged to accept the verdict of the executive branch of government as to whether a particular entity should be regarded as recognised or not. If the administration has recognised a state or government and so informs the judiciary by means of a certificate, the position of that state or government within the municipal structure is totally transformed.

It may sue in the domestic courts and be granted immunity from suit in certain instances. Its own legislative and executive acts will be given effect to in the courts of the recognising state and its own diplomatic representatives will be able to claim the various immunities accorded to the official envoys of a recognised state. In addition, it will be entitled to possession in the recognising state of property belonging to its predecessor.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The UK[113]

The English courts have adopted the attitude over many years that an entity unrecognised by the Foreign Office would be treated before the courts as if it did not exist and accordingly it would not be able to claim immunity before the courts.[114] This meant in one case that ships of the unrecognised 'Provisional Government of Northern Russia' would not be protected by the courts from claims affecting them.[115] Similarly an unrecognised state or government is unable to appear before the courts as a plaintiff in an action. This particular principle prevented the revolutionary government of Berne in 1804 from taking action to restrain the Bank of England from dealing with funds belonging to the previous administration of the city.[116]

The leading case in English law on the issue of effects of recognition of an entity within the domestic sphere is Luther v. Sagor.[117] This concerned the operations and produce of a timber factory in Russia owned by the plaintiffs, which had been nationalised in 1919 by the Soviet government. In 1920 the defendant company purchased a quantity of wood from the USSR and this was claimed in England by the plaintiffs as their property since it had come from what had been their factory. It was argued by them that the 1919 Soviet decree should be ignored before the English courts since the United Kingdom had not recognised the Soviet government. The lower court agreed with this contention and the matter then came to the Court of Appeal.[118]

In the meantime the UK recognised the Soviet government de facto and the Foreign Office informed the Court of Appeal of this in writing. The result was that the higher court was bound to take note of the Soviet decree and accordingly the plaintiffs lost their case, since a court must give effect to the legislation of a recognised state or government. The Court also held that the fact that the Soviet government was recognised [113] See e.g. Talmon, 'Recognition of Governments', pp. 275 ff.; Greig, 'Carl-Zeiss Case', and J. G. Merrills, 'Recognition and Construction', 20 ICLQ, 1971, p. 476.

[114] See e.g. Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th edn, London, 1977, vol. XVIII, p. 735.
[115] The Annette [1919] P. 105; 1 AD, p. 43.
[116] The City of Berne v. The Bank of England (1804) 9 Ves. Jun. 347.
[117] [1921] 1 KB 456; 1 AD, p. 47. [118] [1921] 3 KB 532; 1 AD, p. 49.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

de facto and not de jure did not affect the issue. Another interesting point is that since the Foreign Office certificate included a statement that the former Provisional Government of Russia recognised by the UK had been dispersed during December 1917, the Court inferred the commencement of the Soviet government from that date.

The essence of the matter was that the Soviet government was now accepted as the sovereign government of the USSR as from December 1917. And since recognition once given is retroactive and relates back to the date that the authority of the government was accepted as being established, and not the date on which recognition is granted, the Soviet decree of 1919 was deemed to be a legitimate act of a recognised government. This was so even though at that date the Soviet government was not recognised by the United Kingdom.

The purpose of the retroactivity provision[119] is to avoid possible influence in the internal affairs of the entity recognised, since otherwise legislation made prior to recognition might be rejected. However, this will depend always upon the terms of the executive certificate by which the state informs its courts of the recognition. Should the Foreign Office insist that the state or government in question is to be recognised as a sovereign state or government as of the date of the action, the courts would be bound by this.

As is the case with legislation, contracts made by an unrecognised government will not be enforced in English courts. Without the required action by the political authorities, an unrecognised entity does not exist as a legal person before the municipal courts. The case of Luther v. Sagor suggested that in general the legal consequences of a de facto recognition would be the same as a de jure one. This was emphasised in Haile Selassie v. Cable and Wireless Ltd (No. 2),[120] but regarded as restricted to acts in relation to persons or property in the territory which the de facto government has been recognised as effectively controlling.

In other words, a different situation would ensue with regard to persons or property situated outside the territory of the state or government. In the Haile Selassie case, the Emperor of Ethiopia was suing a British company for money owing to him under an agreement. The problem was that when the action was brought, the UK had recognised the Italian forces as the de facto authority in Ethiopia while Haile Selassie was still recognised as the de jure sovereign. The Court held that since the case concerned a debt [119] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 161, and Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, pp. 728–45.

[120] [1939] 1 Ch. 182; 9 AD, p. 94.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

recoverable in England and not the validity of acts with regard to persons or property in Ethiopia, the de jure authority, Emperor Haile Selassie, was entitled to the sum due from the company, and the de facto control of the Italians did not affect this.

However, before the defendant's appeal was heard, the United Kingdom extended de jure recognition to the Italian authorities in Ethiopia. The Court of Appeal accepted that this related back to, and was deemed to operate as from the date of, the de facto recognition. Since this had occurred prior to the case starting, it meant that the Italian government was now to be recognised as the de jure government of Ethiopia, before and during the time of the hearing of the action. Accordingly, Haile Selassie was divested of any right whatsoever to sue for the recovery of the money owing.

This problem of the relationship between a de facto government and a de jure government as far as English courts were concerned, manifested itself again during the Spanish Civil War. The case of the Arantzazu Mendi[121] concerned a private steamship registered in Bilbao in the Basque province of Spain. In June 1937, following the capture of that region by the forces of General Franco, the opposing Republican government issued a decree requisitioning all ships registered in Bilbao. Nine months later the Nationalist government of Franco also passed a decree taking control over all Bilbao vessels. In the meantime, the Arantzazu Mendi itself was in London when the Republican government issued a writ to obtain possession of the ship. The owners opposed this while accepting the Nationalists' requisition order.

It was accepted rule of international law that a recognised state cannot be sued or otherwise brought before the courts of another state. Accordingly, the Nationalists argued that since their authority had been recognised de facto by the UK government over the areas they actually controlled, their decree was valid and could not be challenged in the English courts. Therefore, the action by the Republican government must be dismissed.

The case came before the House of Lords, where it was decided that the Nationalist government, as the de facto authority of much of Spain including the region of Bilbao, was entitled to be regarded as a sovereign state and was able to benefit from the normal immunities which follow therefrom. Thus, the action by the Republican government failed.

[121] [1939] AC 256; 9 AD, p. 60.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The House of Lords pointed out that it did not matter that the territory over which the de facto authority was exercising sovereign powers was from time to time increased or diminished.[122] This case marks the high-point in the attribution of characteristics to a de facto authority and can be criticised for its over-generous assessment of the status of such an entity.[123]

The problems faced by the English court when the rights and obligations of a de jure government and a de facto government, claiming the same territory, appear to be in conflict have been briefly noted. Basically, the actions of a de facto authority with regard to people and property within this sphere of control will be recognised in an English court, but where property is situated and recoverable in England, the de jure sovereign will have precedence. A similarly complicated situation arises where the interests of two recognised de jure governments of the same state are involved, as one supersedes the other. Problems can arise concerning the issue of retroactivity, that is, how far the court will relate back actions of a de jure government, since recognition is normally retroactive to the moment of inception of the particular state or government.

The matter was discussed in the Gdynia Ameryka Linie v. Boguslawski case.[124] During the Second World War the Polish government-in-exile stationed in London was recognised by the UK as the de jure government of Poland. However, on 28 June 1945 the communist provisional government was established with effective control of the country and at midnight on 5 July the UK recognised that government as the de jure government of Poland. A couple of days prior to this recognition, the Polish government-in-exile made an offer to Polish seamen of compensation in the event of leaving the merchant navy service. The money was to be paid by the particular employers to seamen not wanting to work for the communist provisional government. In the Boguslawski case the employers refused to pay the compensation to seamen requesting it, and argued that the UK recognition de jure of the provisional government was retroactive to 28 June, this being the date that the government effectively took control of the country. If this was the case, then acts of the government-in-exile after 28 June ceased to be of effect and thus the offers of compensation could not be enforced in the English courts.

The House of Lords emphasised the general proposition that recognition operates retroactively. However, they modified the statement by [122] See e.g. Lord Atkin, [1939] AC 256, 264–5.

[123] See e.g. Lauterpacht, Recognition, pp. 288–94.
[124] [1953] AC 11; 19 ILR, p. 72.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

declaring that the courts had to give effect not only to acts done by the new government after recognition, but also to acts done before the recognition 'in so far as those acts related to matters under its control at the time when the acts were done'.[125] It was stated that while the recognition of the new government had certain retroactive effects, the recognition of the old government remained effective down to the date when it was in fact withdrawn. Problems might have arisen had the old government, before withdrawal of recognition, attempted to take action with respect to issues under the control of the new government. However, that was not involved in this case.

In other words, and in the circumstances of the case, the principle of retroactivity of recognition was regarded as restricted to matters within the effective control of the new government. Where something outside the effective control of the new government is involved, it would appear that the recognition does not operate retroactively and that prior to the actual date of recognition one would have to accept and put into effect the acts of the previous de jure government.

This could lead to many complicated situations, especially where a court is faced with conflicting courses of action, something which is not hard to envisage when one de jure government has been superseded by another. It could permit abuses of government such as where a government, knowing itself to be about to lose recognition, awards its supporters financial or other awards in decrees that may be enforced in English courts. What would happen if the new government issued contrary orders in an attempt to nullify the effect of the old government's decrees is something that was not examined in the Boguslawski case.

Another case which came before the courts in the same year was Civil Air Transport Inc. v. Central Air Transport Corporation,[126] and it similarly failed to answer the question mentioned above. It involved the sale of aircraft belonging to the nationalist government of China, which had been flown to the British Crown Colony of Hong Kong. Such aircraft were sold to an American company after the communist government established effective control over the country but before it had been recognised by the UK. The Court accepted that the nationalist government had been entitled to the aircraft and pointed out that:

[125] Lord Reid, [1953] AC 11, 44–5; 19 ILR, pp. 81, 83.

[126] [1953] AC 70; 19 ILR, pp. 85, 93, 110. See also F. A. Mann, 'Recognition of Sovereignty', 16 MLR, 1953, p. 226.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> retroactivity of recognition operates to validate acts of a de facto Government which has subsequently become the new de jure Government, and not to invalidate acts of the previous de jure Government.[127]

It is to be noted that the communist government did not attempt to nullify the sale to the American company. Had it done so, a new situation would have been created, but it is as yet uncertain whether that would have materially altered the legal result.

The general doctrine adhered to by the UK with regard to recognition (and now diplomatic dealings) is that it will be accorded upon the evidence of effective control. It is used to acknowledge factual situations and not as a method of exhibiting approval or otherwise. However, this is not so in all cases and there are a number of governments in effective control of their countries and unrecognised by the UK. One major example was the former German Democratic Republic. Since the prime consequence of non-recognition is that the English courts will not give effect to any laws of an unrecognised entity, problems are thus likely to arise in ordinary international political and commercial life.

The issue came before the courts in the Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. Rayner and Keeler Ltd (No. 2) case.[128] It concerned the Carl Zeiss foundation which was run by a special board, reconstituted in 1952 as the Council of Gera. The problem was that it was situated in the German Democratic Republic (GDR) and the establishment of the Council of Gera as the governing body of the Carl Zeiss foundation was effected by a reorganisation of local government in the GDR. When Carl Zeiss brought a claim before the English courts, the issue was at once raised as to whether, in view of the UK non-recognition of the GDR, the governing body of the foundation could be accepted by the courts. The Court of Appeal decided that since the Foreign Office certified that the UK recognised 'the State and Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics as de jure entitled to exercise governing authority in respect of that zone'[129] (i.e. the GDR, being the former Soviet zone of occupation), it was not possible to give effect to any rules or regulations laid down by the GDR. The House of Lords, however, extricated the English courts system from a rather difficult position by means of an elaborate fiction.

It stated that as a Foreign Office certificate is binding on the courts as to the facts it contains, it logically followed that the courts must recognise [127] [1953] AC 70, 90; 19 ILR, pp. 110, 113.

[128] [1967] AC 853; 43 ILR, p. 42. See also Greig, 'Carl-Zeiss Case'.
[129] [1966] 1 Ch. 596; 43 ILR, p. 25.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the USSR as the de jure governing authority of East Germany, irrespective of the creation of the GDR. The courts were not entitled to enter into a political examination of the actual situation but were obliged to accept and give effect to the facts set out in the Foreign Office certificate. Thus, the Soviet Union was the de jure sovereign and the GDR government must be accepted as a subordinate and dependent body.

Accordingly, the Court could recognise the existence of the Carl Zeiss Stiftung by virtue of the UK recognition of the de jure status of the Soviet Union, the GDR as an administrative body being relevant only as a legal creature of the USSR.

The problem brought out in the Carl Zeiss case and sidestepped there was raised again in a series of cases concerning Rhodesia, following the unilateral declaration of independence by the Smith regime in 1965. Basically, if a government or state which exercises effective control over its own territory is unrecognised by the UK a strict enforcement of the 'no recognition, no existence' rule could lead to much hardship and inconvenience. Accordingly, in Adams v. Adams[130] a Rhodesian divorce decree was not recognised in an English court. However, in Hesperides Hotels Ltd v. Aegean Turkish Holidays,[131] concerning an action in trespass with respect to hotels owned by Greek Cypriots but run by Turkish Cypriots following the Turkish invasion of 1974, Lord Denning stated obiter that he believed that the courts could recognise the laws and acts of an unrecognised body in effective control of territory, at least with regard to laws regulating the day-to-day affairs of the people.[132] It is certainly an attractive approach, provided it is carefully handled and strictly limited to determinations of a humanitarian and non-sovereign nature.[133] In Caglar v. Bellingham, it was noted that while the existence of a foreign unrecognised government could be acknowledged in matters relating to commercial obligations or matters of private law between individuals or matters of routine administration such as registration of births, marriages and deaths, the courts would not acknowledge the existence of an unrecognised state if to do so would involve them in acting inconsistently with the foreign [130] [1971] P. 188; 52 ILR, p. 15.

[131] [1978] QB 205; 73 ILR, p. 9. See also M. N. Shaw, 'Legal Acts of an Unrecognised Entity', 94 LQR, 1978, p. 500.

[132] [1978] QB 205, 218; 73 ILR, pp. 9, 15. See also Steyn J, Gur Corporation v. Trust Bank of Africa Ltd [1986] 3 WLR 583, 589, 592; 75 ILR, p. 675.

[133] See further the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 56; 49 ILR, pp. 2, 46, and Cyprus v. Turkey, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 10 May 2001, paras. 90–8; 120 ILR, p. 10.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

policy or diplomatic stance of the UK.[134] In Emin v. Yeldag, the Court held that private acts taking place within an unrecognised state could be regarded as valid within the English legal system provided that there was no statutory prohibition[135] and that such acceptance did not compromise the UK government in the conduct of foreign relations.[136] Indeed, where the issue concerns the lawful acts of a person recognised as existing in English law, they will be justiciable before the English courts and will not be tainted by illegality because the unrecognised state can be associated with the actions.[137]

In many cases, however, the problems with regard to whether an entity is or is not a 'state' arise in connection with the interpretation of a particular statutory provision. The approach of the courts has been to focus upon the construction of the relevant instrument rather than upon the Foreign Office certificate or upon any definition in international law of statehood.[138]

Some of the consequential problems of non-recognition were addressed in the Foreign Corporations Act 1991. This provides that a corporation incorporated in a territory not recognised by the UK government as a state would be regarded as having legal personality within the UK where the laws of that territory were applied by a settled court system. In other words, the territory would be treated for this purpose as if it were a recognised state, thereby enabling its legislation to be applied in this circumstance on the normal conflict of rules basis. The point should, however, be stressed that the legislation was not intended at all to impact upon recognition issues as such.[139]

[134] 108 ILR, p. 510, at 534.

[135] Such as in Adams v. Adams [1970] 3 All ER 572 in view of the relationship between the UK and Southern Rhodesia.

[136] [2002] 1 FLR 956. This contradicted the earlier case of B v. B [2000] FLR 707, where a divorce obtained in the unrecognised 'Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus' was not recognised. See also Parent and Others v. Singapore Airlines Ltd and Civil Aeronautics Administration 133 ILR, p. 264.

[137] See North Cyprus Tourism Centre Ltd v. Transport for London [2005] EWHC 1698 (Admin), para. 50.

[138] See e.g. Re Al-Fin Corporation's Patent [1970] Ch. 160; 52 ILR, p. 68; Reel v. Holder [1981] 1 WLR 1226; 74 ILR, p. 105 and Caglar v. Bellingham 108 ILR, p. 510 at 528, 530 and 539, where the statutory term 'foreign state' was held to mean a state recognised by the UK.

[139] This legislation was adopted essentially to deal with the situation following Arab Monetary Fund v. Hashim (No. 3) [1991] 2 WLR, whereby the legal personality of a company not incorporated in a territory recognised as a state would not be recognised in English law. See UKMIL, 62 BYIL, 1991, pp. 565–8. See also the decision of the Special Commissioners in Caglar v. Bellingham, 108 ILR, p. 510 at 530, where it was emphasised that the intention of

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Since the UK decision to abandon recognition of governments in 1980, the question arises as to the attitude of the courts on this matter. In particular, it appears that they may be called upon to examine the nature of the UK government's dealings with a new regime in order to determine its status for municipal law purposes.[140]

In Gur Corporation v. Trust Bank of Africa[141] the Court was in fact called upon to decide the status of Ciskei. This territory, part of South Africa, was one of the Bantustans granted 'independence' by South Africa. This was accomplished by virtue of the Status of Ciskei Act 1981. The preliminary issue that came before the Court in a commercial dispute was whether Ciskei had locus standi to sue or be sued in England. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office certified that Ciskei was not recognised as an independent sovereign state either de facto or de jure and that representations were made to South Africa in relation to matters occurring in Ciskei. The Court of Appeal held that it was able to take account of such declarations and legislation as were not in conflict with the certificates.

The effect of that, noted Lord Donaldson, was that the Status of Ciskei Act 1981 could be taken into account, except for those provisions declaring the territory independent and relinquishing South African sovereignty. This led to the conclusion that the Ciskei legislature was in fact exercising power by virtue of delegation from the South African authorities.[142] Accordingly, the government of Ciskei could sue or be sued in the English courts 'as being a subordinate body set up by the Republic of South Africa to act on its behalf'.[143] Clearly the Court felt that the situation was analogous to the Carl Zeiss case. Whether this was in fact so is an open question. It is certainly open to doubt whether the terms of the certificates in the cases were on all fours. In the Gur case, the executive was far more cautious and non-committal. Indeed, one of the certificates actually stated that the UK government did not have a formal position regarding the exercise of governing authority over the territory of Ciskei,[144] whereas in Carl Zeiss the certificate noted expressly that the USSR was recognised as de jure entitled to exercise governing authority in respect the legislation was not to affect at all the government's policy on recognition, but to sever the connection with public international law and deal with issues of private international law.

[140] See 409 HL Deb., cols. 1097–8 and Symmons, 'United Kingdom Abolition', pp. 254–60.

[141] [1987] 1 QB 599; 75 ILR, p. 675.

[142] [1987] 1 QB 599, 623; 75 ILR, p. 696.

[143] [1987] 1 QB 599, 624. See also Nourse LJ, ibid., pp. 624–66; 75 ILR, pp. 696–9.

[144] [1987] 1 QB 599, 618–19; 75 ILR, p. 690.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of the territory (the GDR).[145] The gap was bridged by construction and inference.

More widely, it is unclear to what extent the change in policy on recognition of governments has actually led to a change in attitude by the courts. There is no doubt that the attitude adopted by the government in certifying whether or not diplomatic dealings were in existence with regard to the entity in question is crucial. An assertion of such dealing would, it appears, be determinative.[146] The problem arises where the Foreign Office statement is more ambiguous than the mere assertion of dealings with the entity. The consequence is that a greater burden is imposed on the courts as an answer as to status is sought. On the one hand, the Gur case suggests that the courts are not willing to examine for themselves the realities of any given situation, but would seek to infer from the terms of any certificate what the answer ought to be.[147] On the other hand, Hobhouse J in the High Court in Republic of Somalia v. Woodhouse Drake and Carey (Suisse) SA[148] took the wider view that in deciding whether a regime was the government of a state, the court would have to take into account the following factors: (a) whether it is the constitutional government of the state; (b) the degree, nature and stability of administrative control, if any, that it of itself exercises over the territory of the state; (c) whether the UK government has any dealings with it, and if so the nature of those dealings; and (d) in marginal cases, the extent of international recognition that it has as the government of the state.[149] Part of the answer as to why a different emphasis is evident is no doubt due to the fact that in the latter case, there were competing bodies claiming to be the government of Somalia and the situation on the ground as a matter of fact was deeply confused. It should also be noted that in the Republic of Somalia case, the court took the view that Foreign Office statements were no more than part of the evidence in the case, although likely to be the best evidence as to whether the government had dealings with the entity in question.[150]

[145] [1966] 1 Ch. 596; 43 ILR, p. 25.

[146] See e.g. the Arantzazu Mendi [1939] AC 256, 264; 9 AD, p. 60, and Gur Corporation v. Trust Bank of Africa [1987] 1 QB 599, 625; 75 ILR, p. 675. See also Republic of Somalia v. Woodhouse Drake and Carey (Suisse) SA [1993] QB 54, 65–6; 94 ILR, p. 620.

[147] See e.g. F. A. Mann, 'The Judicial Recognition of an Unrecognised State', 36 ICLQ, 1987, p. 349, and Beck, 'A South African Homeland Appears in the English Court: Legitimation of the Illegitimate?', 36 ICLQ, 1987, p. 350.

[148] [1993] QB 54; 94 ILR, p. 608.

[149] [1993] QB 54, 68; 94 ILR, p. 622.

[150] [1993] QB 54, 65; 94 ILR, p. 619. This was reaffirmed in Sierra Leone Telecommunications Co. Ltd v. Barclays Bank [1998] 2 All ER 821; 114 ILR, p. 466. See also K. Reece Thomas,

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The USA

The situation in the United States with regard to the recognition or non-recognition of foreign entities is similar to that pertaining in the UK, with some important differences. Only a recognised state or government can in principle sue in the US courts.[151] This applies irrespective of the state of diplomatic relations, providing there is no war between the two.[152] However, an unrecognised state or government may in certain circumstances be permitted access before the American courts. This would appear to depend on the facts of each case and a practical appreciation of the entity in question.[153] For example, in Transportes Aeros de Angola v. Ronair,[154] it was held that in the particular circumstances where the US State Department had clearly stated that allowing the plaintiff (a corporation owned by the unrecognised government of Angola) access to the Court would be consistent with the foreign policy interests of the United States, the jurisdictional bar placed upon the Court would be deemed to have been lifted.

As in the UK, a declaration by the executive will be treated as binding the courts, but in the USA the courts appear to have a greater latitude. In the absence of the 'suggestion' clarifying how far the process of non-recognition is to be applied, the courts are more willing than their UK counterparts to give effect to particular acts of an unrecognised body. Indeed, in the Carl Zeiss case Lords Reid and Wilberforce referred in approving terms to the trend evident in decisions of US courts to give recognition to the 'actual facts or realities found to exist in the territory in question', in the interests of justice and common sense. Such recognition did not apply to every act, but in Lord Wilberforce's words, it did apply to 'private rights, or acts of everyday occurrence, or perfunctory acts of administration'.[155] How far this extends, however, has never been precisely defined.

It was the difficulties engendered by the American Civil War that first stimulated a reappraisal of the 'no recognition, no existence' doctrine. It

'Non-recognition, Personality and Capacity: The Palestine Liberation Organisation and the Palestine Authority in English Law', 29 Anglo-American Law Review, 2000, p. 228.

151 See e.g. Republic of Vietnam v. Pfizer 556 F.2d 892 (1977); 94 ILR, p. 199.

152 See Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino 376 US 398, 412; 35 ILR, p. 2 and National Oil Corporation v. Libyan Sun Oil Co. 733 F.Supp. 800 (1990); 94 ILR, p. 209.

153 See above, p. 234, regarding Taiwan after 1 January 1979. See also Wulfsohn v. Russian Republic 234 NY 372 (1924); 2 AD, p. 39.

154 544 F.Supp. 858, 863–4 (1982); 94 ILR, pp. 202, 208–9.

155 [1967] AC 853, 954; 43 ILR, pp. 23, 66.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

was not possible to ignore every act of the Confederate authorities and so the idea developed that such rules adopted by the Confederate states as were not hostile to the Union or the authority of the Central Government, or did not conflict with the terms of the US Constitution, would be treated as valid and enforceable in the courts system.[156] The doctrine was developed in a case before the New York Court of Appeals, when, discussing the status of the unrecognised Soviet government, Judge Cardozo noted that an unrecognised entity which had maintained control over its territory, 'may gain for its acts and decrees a validity quasi-governmental, if violence to fundamental principles of justice or to our public policy might otherwise be done'.[157]

This thesis progressed rapidly in the period immediately preceding the American recognition of the USSR and led in Salimoff v. Standard Oil Co. of New York[158] to the enforcement of a Soviet oil nationalisation decree, with the comment that: 'to refuse to recognise that Soviet Russia is a government regulating the internal affairs of the country, is to give to fictions an air of reality which they do not deserve'.

This decision, diametrically opposed to the Luther v. Sagor approach,[159] constituted a step towards the abolition of differences between the judicial treatment of the acts of recognised and unrecognised governments.

However, the limits of this broad doctrine were more carefully defined in The Maret,[160] where the Court refused to give effect to the nationalisation of an Estonian ship by the government of the unrecognised Soviet Republic of Estonia. However, the ship in dispute was located in an American port at the date of the nationalisation order, and there appears to be a difference in treatment in some cases depending upon whether the property was situated inside or outside the country concerned.

One can mention, in contrast to The Maret, the case of Upright v. Mercury Business Machines,[161] in which the non-recognition of the German Democratic Republic was discussed in relation to the assignment of a bill to the plaintiff by a state-controlled company of the GDR. The judge of the New York Supreme Court declared, in upholding the plaintiff's claim, that a foreign government, although unrecognised by the executive:

[156] See e.g. Texas v. White 74 US 700 (1868).
[157] Sokoloff v. National City Bank of New York 239 NY 158 (1924); 2 AD, p. 44.
[158] 262 NY 220 (1933); 7 AD, pp. 22, 26.
[159] [1921] 1 KB 456; 1 AD, p. 47; above, p. 472.
[160] 145 F.2d 431 (1944); 12 AD, p. 29.
[161] 213 NYS (2d) 417 (1961); 32 ILR, p. 65.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> may nevertheless have de facto existence which is judicially cognisable. The acts of such a de facto government may affect private rights and obligations arising either as a result of activity in, or with persons or corporations within, the territory controlled by such de facto government.

However, the creation of judicial entities by unrecognised states will not be allowed to circumvent executive policy. In Kunstsammlungen zu Weimar v. Elicofon,[162] the KZW was an East German governmental agency until 1969, when it was transformed into a separate juristic person in order to avoid the problems relating to unrecognised states in the above litigation. This concerned the recovery of pictures stolen from a museum during the American occupation of Germany.

As a branch of an unrecognised state, the KZW could not of course be permitted to sue in an American court, but the change of status in 1969 was designed to circumvent this. The Court, however, refused to accept this and emphasised that to allow the KZW to intervene in the case 'would render our government's non-recognition of the German Democratic Republic a meaningless gesture'.[163] Further, in Autocephalous Church of Cyprus v. Goldberg, the Court of Appeals held that it would not give effect to confiscatory decrees adopted by the unrecognised 'Turkish Federated State of Cyprus', later called the 'Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus'.[164]

In Ministry of Defense of the Islamic Republic of Iran v. Gould,[165] the Court was faced with an action in which the unrecognised Iranian government sought to enforce an award. However, the US intervened and filed a statement of interest supporting Iran's argument and this proved of significant influence. This general approach was reinforced in National Petrochemical v. The M/T Stolt Sheaf,[166] where the Court stressed that the executive must have the power to deal with unrecognised governments and that therefore the absence of formal recognition did not necessarily result in a foreign government being barred from access to US courts.[167] However, where the executive has issued a non-recognition certificate and makes known its view that in the instant case the unrecognised party

[162] 358 F.Supp. 747 (1972); 61 ILR, p. 143.

[163] 358 F.Supp. 747, 757; 61 ILR, p. 154. See also Federal Republic of Germany v. Elicofon, 14 ILM, 1976, p. 806, following the US recognition of the GDR in which KZW was permitted to intervene in the litigation in progress. See also Transportes Aereos de Angola v. Ronair 544 F.Supp. 858.

[164] 917 F.2d 278 (1990); 108 ILR, p. 488.

[165] 1988 Iranian Assets Litig. Rep. 15, 313. See also 82 AJIL, 1988, p. 591.

[166] 860 F.2d 551 (1988); 87 ILR, p. 583.

[167] 860 F.2d 551, 554.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

should not be permitted access to the courts, the courts appear very willing to comply.[168]

It is somewhat difficult to reconcile the various American cases or to determine the extent to which the acts of an unrecognised state or government may be enforced in the courts system of the United States. But two factors should be particularly noted. First of all, the declaration of the executive is binding. If that intimates that no effect is to be given to acts of the unrecognised entity, the courts will be obliged to respect this. It may also be the case that the State Department 'suggestions' will include some kind of hint or indication which, while not clearly expressed, may lead the courts to feel that the executive is leaning more one way than another in the matter of the government's status, and this may influence the courts. For example, in the Salimoff[169] case the terms of the certificate tended to encourage the court to regard the Soviet government as a recognised government, whereas in the case of The Maret[170] the tone of the executive's statement on the Soviet Republic of Estonia was decidedly hostile to any notion of recognition or enforcement of its decrees.

The second point is the location of the property in question. There is a tendency to avoid the enforcement of acts and decrees affecting property situated outside the unrecognised state or government and in any event the location of the property often introduces additional complications as regards municipal law provision.[171]

There is some uncertainty in the United States as to the operation of the retroactivity doctrine, particularly as it affects events occurring outside the country. There is a line of cases suggesting that only those acts of the unrecognised government performed in its own territory could be validated by the retroactive operation of recognition[172] while, on the other hand, there are cases illustrating the opposite proposition decided by the Supreme Court.[173]

[168] See e.g. Republic of Panama v. Republic National Bank of New York 681 F.Supp. 1066 (1988); 86 ILR, p. 1 and Republic of Panama v. Citizens & Southern International Bank 682 F.Supp. 1144 (1988); 86 ILR, p. 10. See also T. Fountain, 'Out From the Precarious Orbit of Politics: Reconsidering Recognition and the Standing of Foreign Governments to Sue in US Courts', 29 Va. JIL, 1989, p. 473.

[169] 262 NY 220 (1933); 7 AD, p. 22.

[170] 145 F.2d 431 (1944); 12 AD, p. 29.

[171] See e.g. Civil Air Transport Inc. v. Central Air Transport Corporation [1953] AC 70; 19 ILR, p. 85.

[172] See e.g. Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. v. Russia 21 F.2d 396 (1927); 4 AD, p. 58.

[173] See e.g. US v. Pink 315 US 203 (1942); 10 AD, p. 48, and US v. Belmont 301 US 324 (1937); 8 AD, p. 34.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Suggestions for further reading

J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2006
J. Dugard, Recognition and the United Nations, Cambridge, 1987
H. Lauterpacht, Recognition in International Law, Cambridge, 1947
S. Talmon, Recognition of Governments in International Law, Oxford, 1998

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

10

Territory

The concept of territory in international law

International law is based on the concept of the state. The state in its turn lies upon the foundation of sovereignty, which expresses internally the supremacy of the governmental institutions and externally the supremacy of the state as a legal person.[1]

But sovereignty itself, with its retinue of legal rights and duties, is founded upon the fact of territory. Without territory a legal person cannot be a state.[2] It is undoubtedly the basic characteristic of a state and the one most widely accepted and understood. There are currently some 200 distinct territorial units, each one subject to a different territorial sovereignty and jurisdiction.

Since such fundamental legal concepts as sovereignty and jurisdiction can only be comprehended in relation to territory, it follows that the legal nature of territory becomes a vital part in any study of international law. Indeed, the principle whereby a state is deemed to exercise exclusive power over its territory can be regarded as a fundamental axiom of [1] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law (eds. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992, chapter 5; J. Castellino and S. Allen, Title to Territory in International Law: A Temporal Analysis, Aldershot, 2002; G. Distefano, L'Ordre International entre Légalité et Effectivité: Le Titre Juridique dans le Contentieux Territorial, Paris, 2002; R. Y. Jennings, The Acquisition of Territory in International Law, Manchester, 1963; J. H. W. Verzijl, International Law in Historical Perspective, Leiden, 1970, vol. III, pp. 297 ff.; Nguyen Quoc Dinh, P. Daillier and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 7th edn, Paris, 2002, pp. 464 ff. and pp. 529 ff.; M. N. Shaw, 'Territory in International Law', 13 Netherlands YIL, 1982, p. 61; N. Hill, Claims to Territory in International Law and Relations, London, 1945; J. Gottman, The Significance of Territory, Charlottesville, 1973; S. Akweenda, International Law and the Protection of Namibia's Territorial Integrity, The Hague, 1997; S. P. Sharma, Territorial Acquisition, Disputes and International Law, The Hague, 1997; W. Schoenborn, 'La Nature Juridique du Territoire', 30 HR, 1929, p. 85, and K. H. Kaikobad, Interpretation and Revision of International Boundary Decisions, Cambridge, 2007.

[2] See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 563.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

classical international law.[3] The development of international law upon the basis of the exclusive authority of the state within an accepted territorial framework meant that territory became 'perhaps the fundamental concept of international law'.[4] Most nations indeed developed through a close relationship with the land they inhabited.[5]

The central role of territory in the scheme of international law may be seen by noting the development of legal rules protecting its inviolability. The principle of respect for the territorial integrity of states is well founded as one of the linchpins of the international system, as is the norm prohibiting interference in the internal affairs of other states.[6] A number of factors, however, have tended to reduce the territorial exclusivity of the state in international law. Technological and economic changes have had an impact as interdependence becomes more evident and the rise of such transnational concerns as human rights and self-determination have tended to impinge upon this exclusivity.[7] The growth of international organisations is another relevant factor, as is the development of the 'common heritage' concept in the context of the law of the sea and air law.[8] Nevertheless, one should not exaggerate the effects upon international law doctrine today of such trends.[9] Territorial sovereignty remains as a key concept in international law.

Since the law reflects political conditions and evolves, in most cases, in harmony with reality, international law has had to develop a series of rules governing the transfer and control of territory. Such rules, by the

[3] See L. Delbez, 'Du Territoire dans ses Rapports avec l'État', 39 Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1932, p. 46. See also Hill, Claims to Territory, p. 3.

[4] D. P. O'Connell, International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1970, vol. I, p. 403. See also Jennings, Acquisition, p. 87, and Judge Huber, The Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 838 (1928).

[5] See generally, Gottman, Significance.

[6] See e.g. articles 2(4) and 2(7) of the UN Charter; the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law adopted by the UN General Assembly, resolution 2625 (XXV), and article 1 of the 1974 Consensus Definition of Aggression adopted by the General Assembly, resolution 3314 (XXIX).

[7] See e.g. R. Falk, 'A New Paradigm for International Legal Studies: Prospects and Proposals', 84 Yale Law Journal, 1975, pp. 969, 973, 1020. See also H. Lauterpacht, International Law and Human Rights, London, 1950, and C. W. Jenks, The Common Law of Mankind, London, 1958.

[8] See e.g. the Treaty on Outer Space, 1967 and the Convention on the Law of the Sea, 1982. See also Shaw, 'Territory', pp. 65–6; and below, p. 541.

[9] See e.g. the Asylum case, ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 266, 275; 17 ILR, pp. 280, 283. The International Court emphasised in the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, para. 122, the 'central importance in international law and relations of state sovereignty over territory and of the stability and certainty of that sovereignty'.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

very nature of international society, have often (although not always) had the effect of legitimising the results of the exercise of power. The lack of a strong, central authority in international law has emphasised, even more than municipal legal structures, the way that law must come to terms with power and force.

The rules laid down by municipal legislation and judicial decisions regarding the transfer and control of land within a particular state are usually highly detailed, for they deal with one of the basic resources and wealth-creating factors of the nation. Land law has often reflected the power balance within a society, with feudal arrangements being succeeded by free market contracts and latterly the introduction of comprehensive provisions elaborating the rights and duties of landlords and their tenants, and the development of more sophisticated conveyancing techniques. A number of legal interests are capable of existing over land and the possibility exists of dividing ownership into different segments.[10] The treatment of territory in international law has not reached this sophisticated stage for a number of reasons, in particular the horizontal system of territorial sovereignty that subsists internationally as distinct from the vertical order of land law that persists in most municipal systems. There is thus a critical difference in the consequences that result from a change in the legal ownership of land in international law and in municipal law.

In international law a change in ownership of a particular territory involves also a change in sovereignty, in the legal authority governing the area. This means that the nationality of the inhabitants is altered, as is the legal system under which they live, work and conduct their relations, whereas in municipal law no such changes are involved in an alteration of legal ownership. Accordingly international law must deal also with all the various effects of a change in territorial sovereignty and not confine its attentions to the mere mechanism of acquisition or loss of territory.[11]

Territorial sovereignty

Judge Huber noted in the Island of Palmas case[12] that:

> sovereignty in relation to a portion of the surface of the globe is the legal condition necessary for the inclusion of such portion in the territory of any particular state.

[10] See e.g. R. Megarry and H. W. R. Wade, The Law of Real Property, 5th edn, London, 1984.
[11] See below, chapter 17, dealing with the problems of state succession.
[12] 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 838 (1928); 4 AD, pp. 103, 104. See also the Report of the Commission of Jurists in the Aaland Islands case, LNOJ, Supp. no. 3, p. 6.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Brierly defined territorial sovereignty in terms of the existence of rights over territory rather than the independence of the state itself or the relation of persons to persons. It was a way of contrasting 'the fullest rights over territory known to the law' with certain minor territorial rights, such as leases and servitudes.[13] Territorial sovereignty has a positive and a negative aspect. The former relates to the exclusivity of the competence of the state regarding its own territory,[14] while the latter refers to the obligation to protect the rights of other states.[15]

The international rules regarding territorial sovereignty are rooted in the Roman law provisions governing ownership and possession, and the classification of the different methods of acquiring territory is a direct descendant of the Roman rules dealing with property.[16] This has resulted in some confusion. Law, being so attached to contemporary life, cannot be easily transposed into a different cultural milieu.[17] And, as shall be noted, the Roman method of categorising the different methods of acquiring territory faces difficulties when applied in international law.

The essence of territorial sovereignty is contained in the notion of title. This term relates to both the factual and legal conditions under which territory is deemed to belong to one particular authority or another. In other words, it refers to the existence of those facts required under international law to entail the legal consequences of a change in the juridical status of a particular territory.[18] As the International Court noted in the Burkina Faso/Mali case,[19] the word 'title' comprehends both any evidence which may establish the existence of a right and the actual source of that right.[20]

One interesting characteristic that should be noted and which again points to the difference between the treatment of territory under [13] The Law of Nations, 6th edn, Oxford, 1963, p. 162.

[14] See Judge Huber, Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 838 (1928); 4 AD, pp. 103, 104.

[15] 2 RIAA, p. 839. See also Shaw, 'Territory', pp. 73 ff., and S. Bastid, 'Les Problèmes Territoriaux dans la Jurisprudence de la Cour Internationale', 107 HR, 1962, pp. 360, 367.

[16] See e.g. Schoenborn, 'Nature Juridique', p. 96. See also O'Connell, International Law, pp. 403–4. Note in particular the Roman law distinction between imperium and dominium: Shaw, 'Territory', p. 74.

[17] See, as regards the theories concerning the relationship between states and territory, Shaw, 'Territory', pp. 75–9.

[18] See e.g. Jennings, Acquisition, p. 4. See also I. Brownlie, Principles of Public International Law, 6th edn, Oxford, 2003, p. 119.

[19] ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 564; 80 ILR, pp. 440, 459.

[20] This was reaffirmed in the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier (El Salvador/Honduras) case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 388; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 301.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

international law and municipal law is that title to territory in international law is more often than not relative rather than absolute.[21] Thus, a court, in deciding to which of contending states a parcel of land legally belongs, will consider all the relevant arguments and will award the land to the state which relatively speaking puts forward the better (or best) legal case.[22] Title to land in municipal law is much more often the case of deciding in uncertain or contentious circumstances which party complies with the legal requirements as to ownership and possession, and in that sense title is absolute. It is not normally a question of examining the facts to see which claimant can under the law put forward a better claim to title. Further, not all rights or links will amount to territorial sovereignty. Personal ties of allegiance may exist but these may not necessarily lead to a finding of sovereignty.[23] The special characteristics of the territory need to be taken into account, as does the particular structure of the sovereignty in question.[24]

Disputes as to territory in international law may be divided into different categories. The contention may be over the status of the country itself, that is, all the territory comprised in a particular state, as for example Arab claims against Israel at one time and claims formerly pursued by Morocco against Mauritania.[25] Or the dispute may refer to a certain area on the borders of two or more states, as for example Somali claims against the north-east of Kenya and south-east of Ethiopia.[26] Similarly, claims to territory may be based on a number of different grounds, ranging from the traditional method of occupation or prescription to the newer concepts such as self-determination, with various political and legal factors, for example, geographical contiguity, historical demands and economic [21] See e.g. the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, p. 46; 6 AD, p. 95.

[22] See the Minquiers and Ecrehos case, ICJ Reports, 1953, pp. 47, 52; 20 ILR, p. 94. The Court noted in the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, para. 120, that the passing of sovereignty may be by way of agreement between states, either in the form of a treaty or tacitly arising from the conduct of the parties. The emphasis was to be placed on the intention of the parties.

[23] Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 48, 64 and 68; 59 ILR, p. 14. See also Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, para. 86. But see as to the confirmatory value of such ties, the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, paras. 74–5. Note that there is a critical difference between territorial sovereignty on the one hand and the regular rights of property on the other, ibid., paras. 138–9 and 222.

[24] See e.g. the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 41–3; 59 ILR, p. 14; the Rann of Kutch case, 50 ILR, p. 2; the Dubai/Sharjah award, 91 ILR, pp. 543, 587 and the Eritrea/Yemen case, 114 ILR, pp. 1, 116.

[25] See below, p. 524. [26] See below, p. 525.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

elements, possibly being relevant. These issues will be noted during the course of this chapter.

Apart from territory actually under the sovereignty of a state, international law also recognises territory over which there is no sovereign. Such territory is known as terra nullius. In addition, there is a category of territory called res communis which is (in contrast to terra nullius) generally not capable of being reduced to sovereign control. The prime instance of this is the high seas, which belong to no-one and may be used by all. Another example would be outer space. The concept of common heritage of mankind has also been raised and will be examined in this chapter.

New states and title to territory[27]

The problem of how a state actually acquires its own territory in international law is a difficult one and one that may ultimately only be explained in legal–political terms. While with long-established states one may dismiss the question on the basis of recognition and acceptance, new states pose a different problem since, under classical international law, until a new state is created, there is no legal person in existence competent to hold title. None of the traditional modes of acquisition of territorial title satisfactorily resolves the dilemma, which has manifested itself particularly in the post-Second World War period with the onset of decolonisation. The international community has traditionally approached the problem of new states in terms of recognition, rather than in terms of acquisition of title to territory. This means that states have examined the relevant situation and upon ascertainment of the factual conditions have accorded recognition to the new entity as a subject of international law. There has been relatively little discussion of the method by which the new entity itself acquires the legal rights to its lands. The stress has instead been on compliance with factual requirements as to statehood coupled with the acceptance of this by other states.[28]

One approach to this problem has been to note that it is recognition that constitutes the state, and that the territory of the state is, upon recognition, accepted as the territory of a valid subject of international law irrespective [27] See Jennings, Acquisition, pp. 36 ff.; J. G. Starke, 'The Acquisition of Title to Territory by Newly Emerged States', 41 BYIL, 1965–6, p. 411; J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2006, and M. N. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa, Oxford, 1986, pp. 168–73.

[28] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 677.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of how it may have been acquired.[29] While this theory is not universally or widely accepted,[30] it does nevertheless underline how the emphasis has been upon recognition of a situation and not upon the method of obtaining the rights in law to the particular territory.[31]

One major factor that is relevant is the crucial importance of the doctrine of domestic jurisdiction. This constitutes the legal prohibition on interference within the internal mechanisms of an entity and emphasises the supremacy of a state within its own frontiers. Many of the factual and legal processes leading up to the emergence of a new state are therefore barred from international legal scrutiny and this has proved a deterrent to the search for the precise method by which a new entity obtains title to the territory in question.[32]

In recent years, however, the scope of the domestic jurisdiction rule has been altered. Discussions in international conferences and institutions, such as the United Nations, have actively concerned themselves with conditions in non-independent countries and it has been accepted that territorial sovereignty in the ordinary sense of the words does not really exist over mandate or trust territories.[33] This is beginning to encourage a re-examination of the procedures of acquiring title. However, the plea of domestic jurisdiction does at least illustrate the fact that not only international law but also municipal law is involved in the process of gaining independence.

There are basically two methods by which a new entity may gain its independence as a new state: by constitutional means, that is by agreement with the former controlling administration in an orderly devolution of power, or by non-constitutional means, usually by force, against the will of the previous sovereign.

The granting of independence according to the constitutional provisions of the former power may be achieved either by agreement between the former power and the accepted authorities of the emerging state, or by a purely internal piece of legislation by the previous sovereign. In many cases a combination of both procedures is adopted. For example, the independence of Burma was preceded by a Burmese–United Kingdom

[29] Ibid. [30] See above, chapter 9.

[31] See e.g. Jennings, Acquisition, p. 37, and Starke, 'Acquisition of Title', p. 413.

[32] See Shaw, Title to Territory, pp. 168–9.

[33] See e.g. International Status of South-West Africa, ICJ Reports, 1950, p. 128; 17 ILR, p. 47; the South West Africa cases, ICJ Reports, 1966, p. 6; 37 ILR, p. 243; the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, p. 16; 49 ILR, p. 2, and the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, p. 12; 59 ILR, p. 14. See further above, chapter 5, p. 224.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

agreement and treaty (June and October, 1947) and by the Burma Independence Act of 1947 passed by the British legislature, providing for Burmese independence to take effect on 4 January 1948. In such cases what appears to be involved is a devolution or transfer of sovereignty from one power to another and the title to the territory will accordingly pass from the previous sovereign to the new administration in a conscious act of transference.

However, a different situation arises where the new entity gains its independence contrary to the wishes of the previous authority, whether by secession or revolution. It may be that the dispossessed sovereign may ultimately make an agreement with the new state recognising its new status, but in the meantime the new state might well be regarded by other states as a valid state under international law.[34]

The principle of self-determination is also very relevant here. Where a state gains its sovereignty in opposition to the former power, new facts are created and the entity may well comply with the international requirements as to statehood, such as population, territory and government. Other states will then have to make a decision as to whether or not to recognise the new state and accept the legal consequences of this new status. But at this point a serious problem emerges.

For a unit to be regarded as a state under international law it must conform with the legal conditions as to settled population, a definable area of land and the capacity to enter into legal relations. However, under traditional international law, until one has a state one cannot talk in terms of title to the territory, because there does not exist any legal person capable of holding the legal title. So to discover the process of acquisition of title to territory, one has first to point to an established state. A few ideas have been put forward to explain this. One theory is to concentrate upon the factual emergence of the new state and to accept that since a new state is in existence upon a certain parcel of land, international law should look no further but accept the reality of possession at the moment of independence as denoting ownership, that is, legal title.[35] While in most cases this would prove adequate as far as other states are concerned, it can lead to problems where ownership is claimed of an area not in possession and it does little to answer the questions as to the international legal explanation of territorial sovereignty. Another approach is to turn to the [34] Shaw, Title to Territory. See also D. Greig, International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1976, p. 156.

[35] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 677, and Starke, 'Acquisition of Title', p. 413.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

constitutive theory of recognition, and declare that by recognition not only is a new state in the international community created, but its title to the territory upon which it is based is conclusively determined.[36] The disadvantage of this attitude is that it presupposes the acceptance of the constitutive theory by states in such circumstances, something which is controversial.[37]

One possibility that could be put forward here involves the abandonment of the classical rule that only states can acquire territorial sovereignty, and the substitution of a provision permitting a people to acquire sovereignty over the territory pending the establishment of the particular state. By this method the complicated theoretical issues related to recognition are avoided. Some support for this view can be found in the provision in the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law that the territory of a colony or other non-self-governing entity possesses, under the United Nations Charter, a status separate and distinct from that of the administering power, which exists until the people have exercised the right of self-determination.[38] However, the proposition is a controversial one and must remain tentative.[39]

The acquisition of additional territory

The classical technique of categorising the various modes of acquisition of territory is based on Roman law and is not adequate.[40] Many of the leading cases do not specify a particular category or mode but tend to adopt an overall approach. Five modes of acquisition are usually detailed: occupation of terra nullius, prescription, cession, accretion and subjugation (or conquest); and these are further divided into original and derivative modes.[41]

Boundary treaties and boundary awards

Boundary treaties, whereby either additional territory is acquired or lost or uncertain boundaries are clarified by agreement between the states concerned, constitute a root of title in themselves. They constitute a special [36] Starke, 'Acquisition of Title', p. 413. See also Jennings, Acquisition, p. 37.

[37] See above, chapter 9, p. 445.
[38] See the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 31; 49 ILR, pp. 2, 21.
[39] See Shaw, Title to Territory, pp. 171–3.
[40] See O'Connell, International Law, p. 405.
[41] See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 677, and Brownlie, Principles, pp. 127 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

kind of treaty in that they establish an objective territorial regime valid erga omnes.[42] Such a regime will not only create rights binding also upon third states, but will exist outside of the particular boundary treaty and thus will continue even if the treaty in question itself ceases to apply.[43] The reason for this exceptional approach is to be found in the need for the stability of boundaries.[44] Further, the establishment or confirmation of a particular boundary line by way of referring in a treaty to an earlier document (which may or may not be binding of itself) laying down a line is also possible and as such invests the line in question with undoubted validity.[45] Indeed, this earlier document may also be a map upon which a line has been drawn.

Accordingly, many boundary disputes in fact revolve around the question of treaty interpretation. It is accepted that a treaty should be interpreted in the light of Articles 31 and 32 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969, 'in good faith, in accordance with the ordinary meaning to be given to its terms in their context and in the light of its object and purpose'.[46] Essentially the aim is to find the 'common will' of the parties, a concept which includes consideration of the subsequent conduct of the parties.[47] Since many of the boundary treaties that need to be interpreted long pre-date the coming into force of the Vienna Convention,[48] the problem of the applicability of its provisions has arisen. Courts have taken the view that the Convention in this respect at least represents customary international law, thus apparently obviating the problem.[49]

More generally, the difficulty in seeking to interpret both general concepts and geographical locations used in early treaties in the [42] See Eritrea/Yemen 114 ILR, p. 48.

[43] See Libya/Chad, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 37; 100 ILR, p. 1.

[44] Ibid. and the Temple case, ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 6, 34; 33 ILR, p. 48.

[45] See Libya/Chad, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 23; 33 ILR, p. 48. See also Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, paras. 50–1.

[46] Libya/Chad, pp. 21–2.

[47] See the Argentina/Chile Frontier Award (La Palena) 38 ILR, pp. 10, 89 and the Eritrea/Ethiopia case, decision of 13 April 2002, 130 ILR, pp. 1, 34. See also, with regard to acquiescence, below, p. 515.

[48] See article 4 providing that the Convention applies only to treaties concluded after the coming into force of the Convention itself (27 January 1980).

[49] See e.g. Libya/Chad, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 21–2; the Beagle Channel case, 52 ILR, pp. 93, 124 and the Botswana/Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 1045, 1059–60. But cf. the Separate Opinion of Judge Oda, ibid., p. 1118. See also D. W. Greig, Intertemporality and the Law of Treaties, British Institute of International and Comparative Law, 2001, pp. 108 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

light of modern scientific knowledge has posed difficulties. In the Botswana/Namibia case, the Court, faced with the problem of identifying the 'main channel' of the River Chobe in the light of an 1890 treaty, emphasised that 'the present-day state of scientific knowledge' could be used in order to illuminate terms of that treaty.[50] In the Eritrea/Ethiopia case, the Boundary Commission referred to the principle of contemporaneity, by which it meant that a treaty should be interpreted by reference to the circumstances prevailing when the treaty was concluded. In particular, the determination of a geographical name (whether of a place or of a river) depended upon the contemporary understanding of the location to which that name related at the time of the treaty. However, in seeking to understand what that was, reference to subsequent practice and to the objects of the treaty was often required.[51] In interpreting a boundary treaty, in particular in seeking to resolve ambiguities, the subsequent practice of the parties will be relevant. Even where such subsequent practice cannot in the circumstances constitute an authoritative interpretation of the treaty, it may be deemed to 'be useful' in the process of specifying the frontier in question.[52] However, where the boundary line as specified in the pertinent instrument is clear, it cannot be changed by a court in the process of interpreting delimitation provisions.[53]

Like boundary treaties, boundary awards may also constitute roots or sources of legal title to territory.[54] A decision by the International Court or arbitral tribunal allocating title to a particular territory or determining the boundary line as between two states will constitute establishment or confirmation of title that will be binding upon the parties themselves and for all practical purposes upon all states in the absence of maintained protest.[55] It is also possible that boundary allocation decisions that do not constitute international judicial or arbitral awards may be binding, [50] ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 1045, 1060. But see here the Declaration of Judge Higgins noting that the task of the Court was to 'decide what general idea the parties had in mind, and then make reality of that general idea through the use of contemporary knowledge' rather than to decide in abstracto 'by a mechanistic appreciation of relevant indicia', ibid., p. 1114. See also the Argentina/Chile Award (La Laguna del Desierto) 113 ILR, pp. 1, 76. In the Cameroon v. Nigeria case, the Court, in seeking to determine the location of the mouth of the River Ebeji, emphasised that 'the Court must seek to ascertain the intention of the parties at the time', ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 346.

[51] Decision of 13 April 2002, 130 ILR, pp. 1, 34.

[52] Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 345.

[53] Ibid., p. 370.

[54] See e.g. Brownlie, Principles, p. 132.

[55] See e.g. the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras), ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 401; 97 ILR, p. 112.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com providing that it can be shown that the parties consented to the initial decision.[56]

Accretion[57]

This describes the geographical process by which new land is formed and becomes attached to existing land, as for example the creation of islands in a river mouth or the change in direction of a boundary river leaving dry land where it had formerly flowed. Where new land comes into being within the territory of a state, it forms part of the territory of the state and there is no problem. When, for example, an island emerged in the Pacific after an under-sea volcano erupted in January 1986, the UK government noted that: 'We understand the island emerged within the territorial sea of the Japanese island of Iwo Jima. We take it therefore to be Japanese territory.'[58]

As regards a change in the course of a river forming a boundary, a different situation is created depending whether it is imperceptible and slight or a violent shift (avulsion). In the latter case, the general rule is that the boundary stays at the same point along the original river bed.[59] However, where a gradual move has taken place the boundary may be shifted.[60] If the river is navigable, the boundary will be the middle of the navigable channel, whatever slight alterations have occurred, while if the river is not navigable the boundary will continue to be the middle of the river itself. This aspect of acquiring territory is relatively unimportant in international law but these rules have been applied in a number of cases involving disputes between particular states of the United States of America.[61]

[56] See e.g. the Dubai/Sharjah case, 91 ILR, pp. 543, 577 (where the Court of Arbitration termed such procedures 'administrative decisions', ibid.) and Qatar/Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, paras. 110 ff.

[57] See e.g. C. C. Hyde, International Law, 2nd edn, Boston, 1947, vol. I, pp. 355–6; O'Connell, International Law, pp. 428–30, and Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 696–8.

[58] 478 HL Deb., col. 1005, Written Answer, 17 July 1986. See also A. J. Day, Border and Territorial Disputes, 2nd edn, London, 1987, p. 277, regarding a new island appearing after a cyclone in 1970 on a river boundary between India and Bangladesh. Title is disputed. See also Georgia v. South Carolina 111 L.Ed.2d 309; 91 ILR, p. 439.

[59] See e.g. Georgia v. South Carolina 111 L.Ed.2d 309, 334; 91 ILR, pp. 439, 458. See also the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras), ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 546.

[60] ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 546.

[61] See e.g. The Anna 5 C.Rob. 373 (1805); Arkansas v. Tennessee 246 US 158 (1918); Louisiana v. Mississippi 282 US 458 (1940); Georgia v. South Carolina 111 L.Ed.2d 309; 91 ILR,

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Cession[62]

This involves the peaceful transfer of territory from one sovereign to another (with the intention that sovereignty should pass) and has often taken place within the framework of a peace treaty following a war. Indeed the orderly transference of sovereignty by agreement from a colonial or administering power to representatives of the indigenous population could be seen as a form of cession.

Because cession has the effect of replacing one sovereign by another[63] over a particular piece of territory, the acquiring state cannot possess more rights over the land than its predecessor had. This is an important point, so that where a third state has certain rights, for example, of passage over the territory, the new sovereign must respect them. It is expressed in the land law phrase that the burden of obligations runs with the land, not the owner. In other words, the rights of the territorial sovereign are derived from a previous sovereign, who could not, therefore, dispose of more than he had.

This contrasts with, for example, accretion which is treated as an original title, there having been no previous legal sovereign over the land.

The Island of Palmas case[64] emphasised this point. It concerned a dispute between the United States and the Netherlands. The claims of the United States were based on an 1898 treaty with Spain, which involved the cession of the island. It was emphasised by the arbitrator and accepted by the parties that Spain could not thereby convey to the Americans greater rights than it itself possessed.

The basis of cession lies in the intention of the relevant parties to transfer sovereignty over the territory in question.[65] Without this it cannot legally operate. Whether an actual delivery of the property is also required for

p. 439, and the Chamizal arbitration, 5 AJIL, 1911, p. 782. See also E. Lauterpacht, 'River Boundaries: Legal Aspects of the Shatt-Al-Arab Frontier', 9 ICLQ, 1960, pp. 208, 216; L. J. Bouchez, 'The Fixing of Boundaries in International Boundary Rivers', 12 ICLQ, 1963, p. 789; S. McCaffrey, The Law of International Watercourses, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2007, and the Botswana/Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1999, p. 1045.

62 See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 679–86, and O'Connell, International Law, pp. 436–40.

63 See Christian v. The Queen [2006] UKPC 47, para. 11, 130 ILR 696, 700, 711, where the Privy Council noted that cession 'contemplates a transfer of sovereignty by one sovereign power to another'.

64 2 RIAA, p. 829 (1928); 4 AD, p. 103.

65 Sovereignty over the territorial sea contiguous to and the airspace above the territory concerned would pass with the land territory: see the Grisbadarna case, 11 RIAA, p. 147 (1909) and the Beagle Channel case, HMSO, 1977; 52 ILR, p. 93. This suggests the corollary

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

a valid cession is less certain. It will depend on the circumstances of the case. For example, Austria ceded Venice to France in 1866, and that state within a few weeks ceded the territory to Italy. The cession to the Italian state through France was nonetheless valid.[66] In the Iloilo case,[67] it was held that the cession of the Philippines to the United States took place, on the facts of the case, upon the ratification of the Treaty of Paris of 1898, even though American troops had taken possession of the town of Iloilo two months prior to this.

Although instances of cession usually occur in an agreement following the conclusion of hostilities,[68] it can be accomplished in other circumstances, such as the purchase of Alaska by the United States in 1867 from Russia or the sale by Denmark of territories in the West Indies in 1916 to the United States. It may also appear in exchanges of territories or pure gifts of territory.[69]

Conquest and the use of force

How far a title based on force can be regarded as a valid, legal right recognisable by other states and enforceable within the international system is a crucial question. Ethical considerations are relevant and the principle that an illegal act cannot give birth to a right in law is well established in municipal law and is an essential component of an orderly society.

However, international law has sometimes to modify its reactions to the consequences of successful violations of its rules to take into account the exigencies of reality. The international community has accepted the results of illegal aggression in many cases by virtue of recognition.

Conquest, the act of defeating an opponent and occupying all or part of its territory, does not of itself constitute a basis of title to the land.[70] It that a cession of the territorial sea or airspace would include the relevant land territory: see Oppenheim's International Law, p. 680. But see Brownlie, Principles, pp. 117–18.

66 See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 681. Note also that in 1859 Austria ceded Lombardy to France, which then ceded it to Sardinia without having taken possession: see O'Connell, International Law, p. 438. Cf. The Fama 5 C.Rob. 106, 115 (1804).

67 4 RIAA, p. 158 (1925); 3 AD, p. 336.

68 Note now that article 52 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969 provides that a treaty is void if its conclusion has been procured by the threat or use of force in violation of the principles of international law embodied in the Charter of the United Nations. However, prior treaties of cession are subject to the rule of intertemporal law: see below, p. 508.

69 See, for further examples, Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 681–2.

70 Ibid., p. 699. See also S. Korman, The Right of Conquest, Oxford, 1996.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

does give the victor certain rights under international law as regards the territory, the rights of belligerent occupation,[71] but the territory remains subject to the legal title of the ousted sovereign.[72] Sovereignty as such does not merely pass by conquest to the occupying forces, although complex situations may arise where the legal status of the territory occupied is, in fact, in dispute prior to the conquest.[73]

Conquest, of course, may result from a legal or an illegal use of force. By the Kellogg–Briand Pact of 1928, war was outlawed as an instrument of national policy, and by article 2(4) of the United Nations Charter all member states must refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state. However, force will be legitimate when exercised in self-defence.[74] Whatever the circumstances, it is not the successful use of violence that in international law constituted the valid method of acquiring territory. Under the classical rules, formal annexation of territory following upon an act of conquest would operate to pass title. It was a legal fiction employed to mask the conquest and transform it into a valid method of obtaining land under international law.[75] However, it is doubtful whether an annexation proclaimed while war is still in progress would have operated to pass a good title to territory. Only after a war is concluded could the juridical status of the disputed territory be finally determined. This follows from the rule that has developed to the effect that the control over the relevant territory by the state purporting to annex must be effective and that there must be no reasonable chance of the former sovereign regaining the land.

These points were emphasised by the Nuremberg War Crimes Tribunal after the Second World War, in discussing the various purported German annexations of 1939 and 1940. The Tribunal firmly declared that annexations taking place before the conclusion of a war were ineffective and invalid in international law.[76] Intention to annex was a crucial aspect [71] See e.g. M. S. McDougal and F. P. Feliciano, Law and Minimum World Public Order, New Haven, 1961, pp. 733–6 and 739–44, and J. Stone, Legal Controls of International Conflict, London, 1959, pp. 744–51. See also E. Benveniste, The International Law of Occupation, Princeton, 1993.

[72] See generally The Arab–Israeli Conflict (ed. J. N. Moore), Princeton, 4 vols., 1974–89.

[73] But cf. Y. Blum, 'The Missing Reversioner', in ibid., vol. II, p. 287.

[74] See article 51 of the UN Charter and below, chapter 20.

[75] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 699. See also O'Connell, International Law, pp. 431–6.

[76] O'Connell, International Law, p. 436. See also e.g. Re Goering 13 AD, p. 203 (1946).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of the equation so that, for example, the conquest of Germany by the Allies in 1945 did not give rise to an implied annexation by virtue of the legislative control actually exercised (as it could have done) because the Allies had specifically ruled out such a course in a joint declaration.[77] It is, however, clear today that the acquisition of territory by force alone is illegal under international law. This may be stated in view of article 2(4) of the UN Charter and other practice. Security Council resolution 242, for example, emphasised the 'inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war', while the 1970 Declaration of Principles of International Law adopted by the UN General Assembly provides that:

> the territory of a state shall not be the object of acquisition by another state resulting from the threat or use of force. No territorial acquisition resulting from the threat or use of force shall be recognised as legal.[78]

In Security Council resolution 662 (1990), adopted unanimously, the Council decided that the declared Iraqi annexation of Kuwait 'under any form and whatever pretext has no legal validity and is considered null and void'. All states and institutions were called upon not to recognise the annexation and to refrain from actions which might be interpreted as indirect recognition.[79]

Acquisition of territory following an armed conflict would require further action of an international nature in addition to domestic legislation to annex. Such further necessary action would be in the form either of a treaty of cession by the former sovereign or of international recognition.[80]

The exercise of effective control

It is customary in the literature to treat the modes of occupation and prescription as separate categories. However, there are several crucial factors [77] Cmd 6648 (1945). See also Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 699–700.

[78] See also article 5(3) of the Consensus Definition of Aggression adopted in 1974 by the UN General Assembly. Similarly, by article 52 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969, a treaty providing for the transfer of territory may be void for duress.

[79] See The Kuwait Crisis – Basic Documents (eds. E. Lauterpacht, C. Greenwood, M. Weller and D. Bethlehem), Cambridge, 1991, p. 90.

[80] See, for example, Security Council resolution 497 (1981), condemning Israel's decision to extend its laws, jurisdiction and administration to the occupied Golan Heights. The UN has also condemned Israel's policy of establishing settlements in the occupied territories: see e.g. Security Council resolution 465 (1980). See further below, chapter 20, with regard to self-determination and the use of force.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

that link the concepts, so that the acquisition of territory by virtue of these methods, based as they are upon the exercise of effective control, is best examined within the same broad framework. The traditional definition of these two modes will be noted first.

Occupation is a method of acquiring territory which belongs to no one (terra nullius) and which may be acquired by a state in certain situations. The occupation must be by a state and not by private individuals, it must be effective and it must be intended as a claim of sovereignty over the area. The high seas cannot be occupied in this manner for they are res communis, but vacant land may be subjected to the sovereignty of a claimant state. It relates primarily to uninhabited territories and islands, but may also apply to certain inhabited lands.

The issue was raised in the Western Sahara case before the International Court of Justice.[81] The question was asked as to whether the territory in question had been terra nullius at the time of colonisation. It was emphasised by the Court that the concept of terra nullius was a legal term of art used in connection with the mode of acquisition of territory known as 'occupation'.[82] The latter mode was defined legally as an original means of peaceably acquiring sovereignty over territory otherwise than by cession or succession.[83] In an important statement, the Court unambiguously asserted that the state practice of the relevant period (i.e. the period of colonisation) indicated that territories inhabited by tribes or peoples having a social and political organisation were not regarded as terrae nullius.[84] Further, international case-law has recognised that sovereign title may be suspended for a period of time in circumstances that do not lead to the status of terra nullius. Such indeterminacy could be resolved by the relevant parties at a relevant time.[85]

In fact the majority of territories brought under European control were regarded as acquired by means of cessions, especially in Asia and [81] ICJ Reports, 1975, p. 12; 59 ILR, p. 14. See also M. N. Shaw, 'The Western Sahara case', 49 BYIL, 1978, pp. 119, 127–34.

[82] ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 39; 59 ILR, pp. 14, 56. [83] Ibid.

[84] Ibid. This ran counter to some writers of the period: see e.g. M. F. Lindley, The Acquisition and Government of Backward Territory in International Law, London, 1926, pp. 11–20; J. Westlake, Chapters on the Principles of International Law, London, 1894, pp. 141–2; Jennings, Acquisition, p. 20, and Oppenheim's International Law, p. 687, footnote 4.

[85] See Eritrea/Yemen, 114 ILR, pp. 1, 51. See also N. S. M. Antunes, 'The Eritrea–Yemen Arbitration: First Stage – The Law of Title to Territory Re-averred', 48 ICLQ, 1999, p. 362, and A. Yannis, 'The Concept of Suspended Sovereignty in International Law and Its Implications in International Politics', 13 EJIL, 2002, p. 1037.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Africa.[86] However, there were instances of title by occupation, for example Australia, and many sparsely inhabited islands.

Occupation, both in the normal sense of the word and in its legal meaning, was often preceded by discovery, that is the realisation of the existence of a particular piece of land.[87] But mere realisation or sighting was never considered (except for periods in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries and this is not undisputed) as sufficient to constitute title to territory. Something more was required and this took the form of a symbolic act of taking possession, whether it be by the raising of flags or by solemn proclamations or by more sophisticated ritual expressions. As time passed, the conditions changed and the arbitrator in the Island of Palmas case pointed to the modern effect of discovery as merely giving an inchoate title which had to be completed within a reasonable time by the effective occupation of the relevant region. Discovery only put other states on notice that the claimant state had a prior interest in the territory which, to become legally meaningful, had to be supplemented by effective occupation within a certain period.[88]

Prescription[89] is a mode of establishing title to territory which is not terra nullius and which has been obtained either unlawfully or in circumstances wherein the legality of the acquisition cannot be demonstrated. It is the legitimisation of a doubtful title by the passage of time and the presumed acquiescence of the former sovereign, and it reflects the need for stability felt within the international system by recognising that territory in the possession of a state for a long period of time and uncontested cannot be taken away from that state without serious consequences for the international order. It is the legitimisation of a fact. If it were not for some such doctrine, the title of many states to their territory would be jeopardised.[90] The International Court in the Botswana/Namibia case, [86] See Shaw, Title to Territory, chapter 1, and C. H. Alexandrowicz, The European–African Confrontation, Leiden, 1973.

[87] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 689–90, and F. A. F. Von der Heydte, 'Discovery, Symbolic Annexation and Virtual Effectiveness in International Law', 29 AJIL, 1935, p. 448. See also A. S. Keller, O. J. Lissitzyn and F. J. Mann, Creation of Rights of Sovereignty Through Symbolic Acts, 1400–1800, New York, 1938.

[88] 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 846 (1928); 4 AD, pp. 103, 108.

[89] See generally e.g. D. H. Johnson, 'Acquisitive Prescription in International Law', 27 BYIL, 1950, p. 332, and H. Post, 'International Law Between Dominium and Imperium' in Reflections on Principles and Practice of International Law (eds. T. D. Gill and W. P. Heere), The Hague, 2000, p. 147.

[90] As noted in the Grisbadarna case, 'it is a settled principle of the law of nations that a state of things which actually exists and has existed for a long time should be changed as little as possible', J. B. Scott, Hague Court Reports, New York, 1916, vol. I, pp. 121, 130.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

while making no determination of its own, noted that the two parties were agreed that acquisitive prescription was recognised in international law and further agreed on the criteria to be satisfied for the establishment of such a title, viz. the possession must be à titre de souverain, peaceful and uninterrupted, public and endure for a certain length of time. The Court did not contradict this position.[91]

Prescription differs from occupation in that it relates to territory which has previously been under the sovereignty of a state. In spite of this, both concepts are similar in that they may require evidence of sovereign acts by a state over a period of time. And although distinct in theory, in practice these concepts are often indistinct since sovereignty over an area may lapse and give rise to doubts whether an abandonment has taken place,[92] rendering the territory terra nullius.

In fact, most cases do not fall into such clear theoretical categories as occupation or prescription. Particular modes of acquisition that can be unambiguously related to the classic definitions tend not to be specified. Most cases involve contesting claims by states, where both (or possibly all) the parties have performed some sovereign acts. As in the instance of occupation, so prescription too requires that the possession forming the basis of the title must be by virtue of the authority of the state or à titre de souverain, and not a manifestation of purely individual effort unrelated to the state's sovereign claims. And this possession must be public so that all interested states can be made aware of it.

This latter requirement also flows logically from the necessity for the possession to be peaceful and uninterrupted, and reflects the vital point that prescription rests upon the implied consent of the former sovereign to the new state of affairs. This means that protests by the dispossessed sovereign may completely block any prescriptive claim.[93]

In the Chamizal arbitration[94] between the United States and Mexico, the Rio Grande River forming the border between the parties changed course and the United States claimed the ground between the old and the new river beds partly on the basis of peaceful and uninterrupted possession. This claim was dismissed in view of the constant protests by Mexico and [91] ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 1045, 1101 ff.

[92] For abandonment of territory, the fact of the loss plus the intention to abandon is required. This is very rare: see e.g. the Delagoa Bay case, C. Parry, British Digest of International Law, Cambridge, 1965, vol. V, p. 535, and the Frontier Land case, ICJ Reports, 1959, p. 209; 27 ILR, p. 62. See also Brownlie, Principles, pp. 138–9.

[93] See Johnson, 'Acquisitive Prescription', pp. 343–8.

[94] 5 AJIL 1911, p. 782. See also the Minquiers and Ecrehos case, ICJ Reports, 1953, pp. 47, 106–8; 20 ILR, pp. 94, 142–4.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in the light of a Convention signed by both parties that there existed a dispute as to the boundary which had to be resolved. The fact that Mexico did not go to war over the issue was not of itself sufficient to make the possession of the tract of land by the United States peaceful.

Thus acquiescence in the case of prescription, whether express or implied from all the relevant circumstances, is essential, whereas in the case of occupation it is merely an evidential point reinforcing the existence of an effective occupation, but not constituting the essence of the legal claim.

Precisely what form the protest is to take is open to question but resort to force is not acceptable in modern international law, especially since the 1928 Kellogg–Briand Pact and article 2(4) of the United Nations Charter.[95] The bringing of a matter before the United Nations or the International Court of Justice will be conclusive as to the existence of the dispute and thus of the reality of the protests, but diplomatic protests will probably be sufficient. This, however, is not accepted by all academic writers, and it may well be that in serious disputes further steps should be taken such as severing diplomatic relations or proposing arbitration or judicial settlement.[96] What is clear is that anything less than sustained and credible protests may well risk the title of the dispossessed party.

The requirement of a 'reasonable period' of possession is similarly imprecise and it is not possible to point to any defined length of time.[97] It will depend, as so much else, upon all the circumstances of the case, including the nature of the territory and the absence or presence of any competing claims.

In the Minquiers and Ecrehos case,[98] concerning disputed sovereignty over a group of islets and rocks in the English Channel, claimed by both France and the United Kingdom, the International Court of Justice exhaustively examined the history of the region since 1066. However, its decision was based primarily on relatively recent acts relating to the exercise of jurisdiction and local administration as well as the nature of [95] See above, p. 500, and below, chapter 20.

[96] See e.g. Johnson, 'Acquisitive Prescription', pp. 353–4, and I. MacGibbon, 'Some Observations on the Part of Protest in International Law', 30 BYIL, 1953, p. 293. Cf. Brownlie, Principles, p. 149, who notes that 'if acquiescence is the crux of the matter (and it is believed that it is) one cannot dictate what its content is to be'.

[97] In the British Guiana and Venezuela Boundary case, the parties agreed to adopt a fifty-year adverse holding rule, 89 BFSP, 1896, p. 57.

[98] ICJ Reports, 1953, p. 47; 20 ILR, p. 94.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

legislative enactments referable to the territory in question. And upon these grounds, British sovereignty was upheld. The sovereign acts of the United Kingdom relating to the islets far outweighed any such activities by the French authorities and accordingly the claims of the latter were dismissed.

As in other cases, judgment was given not on the basis of clearly defined categories of occupation or prescription, but rather in the light of the balance of competing state activities.

De Visscher has attempted to render the theoretical classifications more consonant with the practical realities by the introduction of the concept of historical consolidation.[99] This idea is founded on proven long use, which reflects a complex of interests and relations resulting in the acquisition of territory (including parts of the sea). Such a grouping of interests and relations is considered by the courts in reaching a decision as of more importance than the mere passage of time, and historical consolidation may apply to terra nullius as well as to territories previously occupied. Thus it can be distinguished from prescription. It differs from occupation in that the concept has relevance to the acquisition of parts of the sea, as well as of land. And it may be brought into existence not only by acquiescence and consent, but also by the absence of protest over a reasonable period by relevant states.[100]

However, de Visscher's discussion, based on the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case,[101] does fail to note the important distinction between the acquisition of territory in accordance with the rules of international law, and the acquisition of territory as a permitted exception to the generally accepted legal principles. The passage in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case relied upon[102] is really concerned with general acquiescence with regard to a maritime area, while the criticism has been made[103] that de Visscher has over-emphasised the aspect of 'complex of interests and relations which in themselves have the effect of attaching a territory or an expanse of sea to a given state'.[104] Effectiveness, therefore, rather than consolidation would be the appropriate term. Both occupation and prescription rely primarily upon effective possession and control. The element of time is here also relevant as it affects the effectiveness of control.

[99] Theory and Reality in Public International Law, 1968, p. 209. See below, p. 520.
[100] Ibid. [101] ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 138; 18 ILR, pp. 86, 100. [102] Ibid.
[103] See Jennings, Acquisition, pp. 25–6. See also D. H. Johnson, 'Consolidation as a Root of Title in International Law', Cambridge Law Journal, 1955, pp. 215, 223.
[104] De Visscher, Theory and Reality, p. 209, emphasis added. See further below, p. 515.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Intertemporal law[105]

One question that arises is the problem of changing conditions related to particular principles of international law, in other words the relevant time period at which to ascertain the legal rights and obligations in question. This can cause considerable difficulties since a territorial title may be valid under, for example, sixteenth-century legal doctrines but ineffective under nineteenth-century developments. The general rule in such circumstances is that in a dispute the claim or situation in question (or relevant treaty, for example)[106] has to be examined according to the conditions and rules in existence at the time it was made and not at a later date. This meant, for example, that in the Island of Palmas case,[107] the Spanish claim to title by discovery, which the United States declared it had inherited, had to be tested in the light of international legal principles in the sixteenth century when the discovery was made. This aspect of the principle is predicated upon a presumption of, and need for, stability.[108]

But it was also noted in this case that while the creation of particular rights was dependent upon the international law of the time, the continued existence of such rights depended upon their according with the evolving conditions of a developing legal system, although this stringent test would not be utilised in the case of territories with an 'established order of things'.[109] This proviso has in practice been carefully and flexibly interpreted within the context of all the relevant rules relating to the acquisition of territory, including recognition and acquiescence.[110] However,

[105] See e.g. the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 38–9; 59 ILR, pp. 14, 55. See also Shaw, 'Western Sahara Case', pp. 152–3; Jennings, Acquisition, pp. 28–31; T. O. Elias, 'The Doctrine of Intertemporal Law', 74 AJIL, 1980, p. 285; Brownlie, Principles, pp. 124–5; Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 1281–2; G. Fitzmaurice, The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice, Cambridge, 1986, vol. I, p. 135, and H. Thirlway, 'The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice 1960–1989 (Part One)', 60 BYIL, 1989, pp. 4, 128. See also R. Higgins, 'Time and the Law: International Perspectives on an Old Problem', 46 ICLQ, 1997, p. 501, and Greig, Intertemporality.

[106] See e.g. the Right of Passage case, ICJ Reports, 1960, pp. 6, 37; 31 ILR, pp. 23, 50.

[107] 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 845 (1928); 4 AD, p. 103.

[108] See e.g. Eritrea/Yemen, 114 ILR, pp. 1, 46 and 115; Eritrea/Ethiopia case, 2002, 130 ILR, pp. 1, 34 and Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 404–5.

[109] 2 RIAA, pp. 839–45. See P. Jessup, 'The Palmas Island Arbitration', 22 AJIL, 1928, p. 735. See also M. Sørensen, 'Le Problème Dit du Droit Intertemporal dans l'Ordre International', Annuaire de l'Institut de Droit International, Basle, 1973, pp. 4 ff., and subsequent discussions, ibid., at pp. 50 ff., and the Resolution adopted by the Institut de Droit International, Annuaire de l'Institut de Droit International, 1975, pp. 536 ff.

[110] Note that the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law provides that the concept of non-acquisition of territory by force was not to be affected inter alia by any international agreement made prior to the Charter and valid under international law.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the Court in the Aegean Sea Continental Shelf case[111] declared that the phrase 'disputes relating to the territorial status of Greece' contained in a Greek reservation to the 1928 Kellogg–Briand Pact had to be interpreted 'in accordance with the rules of international law as they exist today, and not as they existed in 1931'. The evolution of international law concerning the continental shelf, therefore, had to be considered, so that the territorial status of Greece was taken to include its continental shelf, although that concept was completely unknown in the 1920s. How far this aspect of the principle of international law may be extended is highly controversial. The better view is to see it as one element in the bundle of factors relevant to the determination of effective control, but one that must be applied with care.[112]

Critical date

In certain situations there may exist a determining moment at which it might be inferred that the rights of the parties have crystallised so that acts after that date cannot alter the legal position.[113] Such a moment might be the date of a particular treaty where its provisions are at issue[114] or the date of occupation of territory.[115] It is not correct that there will or should always be such a critical date in territorial disputes, but where there is, acts undertaken after that date will not be taken into consideration, unless such acts are a normal continuation of prior acts and are not undertaken for the purpose of improving the legal position of the party relying on them.[116]

The concept of a critical date is of especial relevance with regard to the doctrine of uti possidetis, which posits that a new state has the boundaries of the predecessor entity, so that the moment of independence itself is [111] ICJ Reports, 1978, pp. 3, 33–4; 60 ILR, pp. 562, 592. See Elias, 'Intertemporal Law', pp. 296 ff. See also the Indian argument regarding the invalidity of Portugal's title to Goa, SCOR, S/PV-987, 11, 18 December 1961.

[112] See, as to time and the interpretation of treaties, above, p. 496.

[113] L. F. E. Goldie, 'The Critical Date', 12 ICLQ, 1963, p. 1251. See also G. Fitzmaurice, 'The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice, 1951–4: Points of Substance, Part II', 32 BYIL, 1955–6, p. 20; Y. Blum, Historic Titles in International Law, The Hague, 1965, pp. 208–22, and Brownlie, Principles, p. 125. See also M. N. Shaw, 'The Heritage of States: The Principle of Uti Possidetis Juris Today', 67 BYIL, 1996, pp. 75, 130, and Shaw, 'Title, Control and Closure? The Experience of the Eritrea–Ethiopia Boundary Commission', 56 ICLQ, 2007, pp. 755, 760 ff.

[114] See e.g. the Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, p. 845.

[115] See e.g. the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, p. 45.

[116] See the Indonesia/Malaysia case, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 625, 682. See also Argentina/Chile 38 ILR, pp. 10, 79–80 and Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 117. Note also the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, paras. 32–6.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

invariably the critical date.[117] This does not preclude the possibility that the relevant territorial situation or rights had crystallised at an earlier time, in the sense of having become established and not altered subsequently.[118] Where there is more than one state involved, then the date of later independence[119] or possibly the dates of the independence of the respective states,[120] may be taken depending on the circumstances.[121] Further, it is possible for there to be different critical dates for different circumstances (for example, land and maritime disputes within the same case).[122] However, the date of independence may simply mark the date of succession to boundaries which have been established with binding force by earlier instruments.[123]

The moment of independence may not be 'critical' for these purposes for several possible reasons. There may be a dispute between the parties as to whether the date of independence or the date of the last exercise of jurisdiction for administrative organisational purposes by the former sovereign is the more appropriate date[124] or the uti possidetis line may in some circumstances only be determined upon a consideration of materials appearing later than the date of independence,[125] or such a 'critical date' may have been moved to a later date than that of independence by a subsequent treaty[126] or by an adjudication award.[127] The importance of the critical date concept, thus, is relative and depends entirely upon the circumstances of the case.[128]

[117] The Burkina Faso/Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 568; 80 ILR, p. 440. This may be reinforced by the terms of the compromis itself. For example, in the Eritrea/Ethiopia case, the parties referred specifically to the principle of respect for borders existing at the moment of independence, 130 ILR, pp. 1, 43 and see further below, p. 525.

[118] Eritrea/Ethiopia case, 130 ILR, pp. 1, 102–3.

[119] Ibid., p. 43.

[120] See the Benin/Niger case, ICJ Reports, 2005, pp. 90, 120. See also the views of the Arbitration Commission of the Conference on Yugoslavia in Opinion No. 11 as to the varying dates of succession (and independence) of the successor states of the Former Yugoslavia: see 96 ILR, pp. 719, 722.

[121] See the Burkino Faso/Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 570; 80 ILR, p. 440, and the Dubai/Sharjah case, 91 ILR, pp. 590–4 for examples where the concept was held to be of little or no practical value.

[122] See e.g. Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 123.

[123] As in the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, p. 6; 100 ILR, p. 1.

[124] See the Burkina Faso/Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 570; 80 ILR, p. 440.

[125] See the El Salvador/Honduras case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 56 ff.; 97 ILR, p. 112.

[126] See the Beagle Channel case, 21 RIAA, pp. 55, 82–3; 52 ILR, p. 93.

[127] The El Salvador/Honduras case, ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 401; 97 ILR, p. 112. See also the Burkina Faso/Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 570; 80 ILR, p. 440, and the Separate Opinion of Judge Ajibola, the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, p. 91; 100 ILR, p. 1.

[128] See e.g. the Burkino Faso/Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 570; 80 ILR, p. 440, for an example where the concept was held to be of little or no practical value. A similar view

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Sovereign activities (effectivités)

The exercise of effective authority, therefore, is the crucial element. As Huber argued, 'the actual continuous and peaceful display of state functions is in case of dispute the sound and natural criterion of territorial sovereignty'.[129]

However, control, although needing to be effective, does not necessarily have to amount to possession and settlement of all of the territory claimed. Precisely what acts of sovereignty are necessary to found title will depend in each instance upon all the relevant circumstances of the case, including the nature of the territory involved, the amount of opposition (if any) that such acts on the part of the claimant state have aroused, and international reaction.

Indeed in international law many titles will be deemed to exist not as absolute but as relative concepts. The state succeeding in its claim for sovereignty over terra nullius over the claims of other states will in most cases have proved not an absolute title, but one relatively better than that maintained by competing states and one that may take into account issues such as geography and international responses.[130] The Court noted in the Eastern Greenland case that 'It is impossible to read the records of the decisions in cases as to territorial sovereignty without observing that in many cases the tribunal has been satisfied with very little in the way of the actual exercise of sovereign rights, provided that the other state could not make out a superior claim. This is particularly true in the case of claims to sovereignty over areas in thinly populated or unsettled countries.'[131] However, the arbitral tribunal in Eritrea/Yemen emphasised that the issue did not turn solely upon relativity since 'there must be some absolute minimum requirement' for the acquisition of territorial sovereignty.[132] was taken in the Dubai/Sharjah case, 91 ILR, pp. 590–4 and the Eritrea/Yemen Arbitration, 114 ILR, pp. 1, 32.

[129] 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 840 (1928). The Tribunal in Eritrea/Yemen noted that 'The modern international law of the acquisition (or attribution) of territory generally requires that there be: an intentional display of power and authority over the territory, by the exercise of jurisdiction and state functions, on a continuous and peaceful basis', 114 ILR, pp. 1, 69.

[130] See the Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 840 (1928); 4 AD, p. 103. See also the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, p. 46; 6 AD, p. 95; the Clipperton Island case, 26 AJIL, 1932, p. 390; 6 AD, p. 105, and the Minquiers and Ecrehos case, ICJ Reports, 1953, p. 47; 20 ILR, p. 94.

[131] PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, pp. 45–6. See also Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, para. 198, and Indonesia/ Malaysia, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 625, 682. Note also the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, paras. 62–7.

[132] 114 ILR, pp. 1, 118. Other obvious factors in such situations would include consideration of the geographical position, ibid., p. 119.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

In the Island of Palmas arbitration[133] the dispute concerned sovereignty over a particular island in the Pacific. The United States declared that, since by a treaty of 1898 Spain had ceded to it all Spanish rights possessed in that region and since that included the island discovered by Spain, the United States of America therefore had a good title. The Netherlands, on the other hand, claimed the territory on the basis of the exercise of various rights of sovereignty over it since the seventeenth century. The arbitrator, Max Huber, in a judgment which discussed the whole nature of territorial sovereignty, dismissed the American claims derived from the Spanish discovery as not effective to found title.[134] Huber declared that the Netherlands possessed sovereignty on the basis of 'the actual continuous and peaceful display of state functions' evidenced by various administrative acts performed over the centuries.[135] It was also emphasised that manifestations of territorial sovereignty may assume different forms, according to conditions of time and place. Indeed, 'the intermittence and discontinuity compatible with the maintenance of the right necessarily differ according as inhabited or uninhabited regions are involved'. Additionally, geographical factors were relevant.[136]

The Clipperton Island arbitration[137] concerned a dispute between France and Mexico over an uninhabited island. The arbitrator emphasised that the actual, and not the nominal, taking of possession was a necessary condition of occupation, but noted that such taking of possession may be undertaken in different ways depending upon the nature of the territory concerned. In this case, a proclamation of sovereignty by a French naval officer later published in Honolulu was deemed sufficient to create a valid title. Relevant to this decision was the weakness of the Mexican claims to the guano-rich island, as well as the uninhabited and inhospitable nature of the territory.

These two cases, together with the Eastern Greenland case,[138] reveal that the effectiveness of the occupation may indeed be relative and may in certain rare circumstances be little more than symbolic. In the Eastern Greenland case before the Permanent Court of International Justice, both Norway and Denmark claimed sovereignty over Eastern Greenland.

[133] 2 RIAA, p. 829 (1928). [134] Ibid., p. 846. [135] Ibid., pp. 867–71.

[136] Ibid., p. 840. See also, in this context, the American claim to the Howland, Baker and Jarvis Islands in the Pacific Ocean, where it was argued that the administration of the islands as part of the US Wildlife Refuge System constituted sufficient occupation, DUSPIL, 1975, pp. 92–4.

[137] 26 AJIL, 1932, p. 390; 6 AD, p. 105.

[138] PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, p. 46; 6 AD, p. 95.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Denmark had colonies in other parts of Greenland and had granted concessions in the uninhabited Eastern sector. In addition, it proclaimed that all treaties and legislation regarding Greenland covered the territory as a whole, as for example its establishment of the width of the territorial sea, and it sought to have its title to all of the territory recognised by other states. The Court felt that these acts were sufficient upon which to base a good title and were superior to various Norwegian actions such as the wintering of expeditions and the erection of a wireless station in Eastern Greenland, against which Denmark had protested. It is also to be noted that it was not until 1931 that Norway actually claimed the territory.

Such activity in establishing a claim to territory must be performed by the state in the exercise of sovereign powers (à titre de souverain)[139] or by individuals whose actions are subsequently ratified by their state,[140] or by corporations or companies permitted by the state to engage in such operations and thus performed on behalf of the sovereign.[141] Otherwise, any acts undertaken are of no legal consequence.[142] Another relevant factor, although one of uncertain strength, is the requirement of the intention by the state in performing various activities to assert claim in its sovereign capacity. In other words the facts are created pursuant to the will of the state to acquire sovereignty. This point was stressed in the Eastern Greenland case,[143] but appears not to have been considered as of first importance in the Island of Palmas case[144] or in the Minquiers and Ecrehos case,[145] where concern centred upon the nature and extent of the actual actions carried out by the contending states. Whatever the precise role of this subjective element, some connection between the actions undertaken and the assertion of sovereignty is necessary.

Account will also be taken of the nature of the exercise of the sovereignty in question, so that in the Rann of Kutch case, it was noted that:

[139] That is, those made as a 'public claim of right or assertion of sovereignty ... as well as legislative acts', Eritrea/Yemen, 114 ILR, pp. 1, 69. See also the Minquiers and Ecrehos case, ICJ Reports, 1953, pp. 47, 65 and 69; 20 ILR, p. 94. Such acts need to relate clearly to the territory in question,Indonesia/Malaysia, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 625, 682–3.

[140] The Court has emphasised that 'activities by private persons cannot be seen as effectivités if they do not take place on the basis of official regulations or under governmental authority', Indonesia/Malaysia, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 625, 683.

[141] Botswana/Namibia, ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 1045, 1105.

[142] See Judge McNair, the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 184; 18 ILR, pp. 86, 113, and McNair, International Law Opinions, Cambridge, 1956, vol. I, p. 21. See also O'Connell, International Law, pp. 417–19.

[143] PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, p. 46; 6 AD, p. 95.

[144] 2 RIAA, p. 829 (1928); 4 AD, p. 103.

[145] ICJ Reports, 1953, p. 47; 20 ILR, p. 94.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

> the rights and duties which by law and custom are inherent in and characteristic of sovereignty present considerable variations in different circumstances according to time and place, and in the context of various political systems.[146]

Similarly, the Court was willing to take into account the special characteristics of the Moroccan state at the relevant time in the Western Sahara case[147] in the context of the display of sovereign authority, but it was the exercise of sovereignty which constituted the crucial factor. While international law does appear to accept a notion of geographical or natural unity of particular areas, whereby sovereignty exercised over a certain area will raise the presumption of title with regard to an outlying portion of the territory comprised within the claimed unity,[148] it is important not to overstate this. It operates to raise a presumption and no more and that within the wider concept of display of effective sovereignty which need not apply equally to all parts of the territory.[149] Neither geographical unity nor contiguity are as such sources of title with regard to all areas contained within the area in question, nor is the proximity of islands to the mainland determinative as such of the question of legal title.[150] The Tribunal in the Eritrea/Yemen case felt able to consider separately the legal situation with regard to sub-groups existing within such natural unities,[151] as did the Boundary Commission in the Eritrea/Ethiopia case.[152] However, the significance in law of state activities or effectivités will depend upon the existence or not of a legal title to the territory. Where there is such a valid legal title, this will have pre-eminence and effectivités may play a confirmatory role. However, where the effectivités are in contradiction to the title, the latter will have pre-eminence. In the absence of any legal title, then effectivités must invariably be taken into consideration, while where the legal title is not capable of exactly defining the relevant territorial limits, effectivités then play an essential role in showing how the title is interpreted in practice.[153] Accordingly, examples

[146] Annex I, 7 ILM, 1968, pp. 633, 674; 50 ILR, p. 2.

[147] ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 43–4; 59 ILR, pp. 14, 60. See also the Dubai/Sharjah Border Arbitration, 91 ILR, pp. 543, 585–90.

[148] Eritrea/Yemen, 114 ILR, pp. 1, 120 ff., and see Fitzmaurice, Law and Procedure, vol. I, pp. 312 ff.

[149] See the Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, p. 840.

[150] See Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 161.

[151] 114 ILR, pp. 1, 120 ff. [152] Eritrea/Ethiopia 130 ILR, pp. 1, 84 ff.

[153] Burkina Faso/Mali, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 586–7; 80 ILR, p. 440, and the El Salvador/Honduras case where the Chamber also noted that these principles applied to both

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of state practice may confirm or complete but not contradict legal title established, for example, by boundary treaties.[154] In the absence of any clear legal title to any area, state practice comes into its own as a law-establishing mechanism. But its importance is always contextual in that it relates to the nature of the territory and the nature of competing state claims.[155]

The role of subsequent conduct: recognition, acquiescence and estoppel

Subsequent conduct may be relevant in a number of ways: first, as a method of determining the true interpretation of the relevant boundary instrument in the sense of the intention of the parties;[156] secondly, as a method of resolving an uncertain disposition or situation, for example, whether a particular area did or did not fall within the colonial territory in question for purposes of determining the uti possidetis line[157] or thirdly, as a method of modifying such an instrument or pre-existing arrangement. The Eritrea/Ethiopia Boundary Commission explained the general principle that 'the effect of subsequent conduct may be so clear in relation to matters that appear to be the subject of a given treaty that the application of an otherwise pertinent treaty provision may be varied, or may even cease to control the situation, regardless of its original meaning'.[158] The various manifestations of the subsequent conduct of relevant parties have a common foundation in that they all rest to a stronger or weaker extent upon the notion of consent.[159] They reflect expressly or impliedly the presumed will of a state, which in turn may in some situations prove of great importance in the acquisition of title to territory. However, there are significant theoretical differences between the three concepts (recognition, acquiescence and estoppel), even if in practice the dividing lines are often blurred. In any event, they flow to some extent from the fundamental principles of good faith and equity.

colonial and post-colonial effectivités, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 398; 97 ILR, p. 266. See also Benin/Niger, ICJ Reports, 2005, pp. 120, 127 and 149.

154 See also Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 353–5.

155 See also the general statement of principle in Eritrea/Ethiopia 130 ILR, pp. 1, 42. As to the role of equity in territorial disputes, see above, chapter 3, p. 108.

156 See Article 31(3)(b) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969. See also the Argentina/Chile case, 38 ILR, pp. 10, 89.

157 See the El Salvador/Honduras case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 401, 558 ff.

158 Eritrea/Ethiopia, 130 ILR, p. 35. See also Shaw, 'Title, Control and Closure?', pp. 776 ff.

159 Consent, of course, is the basis of cession: see above, p. 499.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Recognition is a positive act by a state accepting a particular situation and, even though it may be implied from all the relevant circumstances, it is nevertheless an affirmation of the existence of a specific factual state of affairs,[160] even if that accepted situation is inconsistent with the term in a treaty.[161] Acquiescence, on the other hand, occurs in circumstances where a protest is called for and does not happen[162] or does not happen in time in the circumstances.[163] In other words, a situation arises which would seem to require a response denoting disagreement and, since this does not transpire, the state making no objection is understood to have accepted the new situation.[164] The idea of estoppel in general is that a party which has made or consented to a particular statement upon which another party relies in subsequent activity to its detriment or the other's benefit cannot thereupon change its position.[165] This rests also upon the notion of preclusion.[166]

While, of course, the consent of a ceding state to the cession is essential, the attitude adopted by other states is purely peripheral and will not affect the legality of the transaction. Similarly, in cases of the acquisition of title over terra nullius, the acquiescence of other states is not strictly relevant although of useful evidential effect.[167] However, where two or more states have asserted competing claims, the role of consent by third parties is [160] See e.g. the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, pp. 46, 51–2; 6 AD, pp. 95, 100, and the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 49–57; 59 ILR, pp. 14, 66. See also G. Schwarzenberger, 'Title to Territory: Response to a Challenge', 51 AJIL, 1957, p. 308.

[161] See e.g. the Taba case, 80 ILR, pp. 224, 297–8 and 306.

[162] See Brownlie, Principles, p. 151, and I. MacGibbon, 'The Scope of Acquiescence in International Law', 31 BYIL, 1954, p. 143.

[163] See the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier (El Salvador/Honduras) case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 577; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 493, and Eritrea/Yemen, 114 ILR, pp. 1, 84.

[164] See e.g. the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 35; 100 ILR, pp. 1, 34, where the Court noted that 'If a serious dispute had indeed existed regarding frontiers, eleven years after the conclusion of the 1955 Treaty, one would expect it to have been reflected in the 1966 Treaty.' See also the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, paras. 231 ff.

[165] See the Temple case, ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 6, 29 ff.; 33 ILR, p. 48; the Cameroon v. Nigeria (Preliminary Objections) case, ICJ Reports, 1998, pp. 275, 303, and the Eritrea/Ethiopia case, 130 ILR, pp. 68 ff.

[166] See e.g. the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, p. 305; 71 ILR, p. 74. The Court in the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, para. 228, emphasised that a party relying on an estoppel must show among other things that, 'it has taken distinct acts in reliance on the other party's statement'.

[167] Note that the Tribunal in Eritrea/Yemen emphasised that 'Repute is also an important ingredient for the consolidation of title', 114 ILR, pp. 1, 136.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

much enhanced. In the Eastern Greenland case,[168] the Court noted that Denmark was entitled to rely upon treaties made with other states (apart from Norway) in so far as these were evidence of recognition of Danish sovereignty over all of Greenland.

Recognition and acquiescence are also important in cases of acquisition of control contrary to the will of the former sovereign. Where the possession of the territory is accompanied by emphatic protests on the part of the former sovereign, no title by prescription can arise, for such title is founded upon the acquiescence of the dispossessed state, and in such circumstances consent by third states is of little consequence. However, over a period of time recognition may ultimately validate a defective title, although much will depend upon the circumstances, including the attitude of the former sovereign. Where the territory involved is part of the high seas (i.e. res communis), acquiescence by the generality of states may affect the subjection of any part of it to another's sovereignty, particularly by raising an estoppel.[169]

Acquiescence and recognition[170] are also relevant where the prescriptive title is based on what is called immemorial possession, that is, the origin of the particular situation is shrouded in doubt and may have been lawful or unlawful but is deemed to be lawful in the light of general acquiescence by the international community or particular acquiescence by a relevant other state. Accordingly, acquiescence may constitute evidence reinforcing a title based upon effective possession and control, rendering it definitive.[171]

Estoppel is a legal technique whereby states deemed to have consented to a state of affairs cannot afterwards alter their position.[172] Although [168] PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, pp. 46, 51–2; 6 AD, pp. 95, 100.

[169] See the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 116; 18 ILR, p. 86.

[170] Note also the role of recognition in the context of new states and territory, above, p. 445.

[171] See the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier (El Salvador/Honduras) case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 579; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 495. The Court, for example, in the Indonesia/Malaysia case felt that it 'cannot disregard' the failure of Indonesia or its predecessor, the Netherlands, to protest at the construction of lighthouses and other administrative activities on territory claimed to be Indonesian and noted that 'such behaviour is unusual', ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 625, 685.

[172] See e.g. D. W. Bowett, 'Estoppel before International Tribunals and its Relation to Acquiescence', 33 BYIL, 1957, p. 176; Thirlway, 'Law and Procedure', p. 29; A. Martin, L'Estoppel en Droit International Public, Paris, 1979; C. Dominicé, 'A Propos du Principe de l'Estoppel en Droit des Gens' in Recueil d'Études de Droit International en Hommage à Paul Guggenheim, Geneva, 1968, p. 327, and I. Sinclair, 'Estoppel and Acquiescence' in Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice (eds. A. V. Lowe and M. Fitzmaurice), Cambridge, 1996, p. 104.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

it cannot found title by itself, it is of evidential and often of practical importance. Estoppel may arise either by means of a prior recognition or acquiescence, but the nature of the consenting state's interest is vital. Where, for example, two states put forward conflicting claims to territory, any acceptance by one of the other's position will serve as a bar to a renewal of contradictory assertions. This was illustrated in the Eastern Greenland case,[173] where the Court regarded the Norwegian acceptance of treaties with Denmark, which incorporated Danish claims to all of Greenland, as preventing Norway from contesting Danish sovereignty over the area.

The leading case on estoppel is the Temple of Preah Vihear[174] which concerned a border dispute between Cambodia and Thailand. The frontier was the subject of a treaty in 1904 between Thailand and France (as sovereign over French Indo-China which included Cambodia) which provided for a delimitation commission. The border was duly surveyed but was ambiguous as to the siting of the Preah Vihear temple area. Thailand called for a map from the French authorities and this placed the area within Cambodia. The Thai government accepted the map and asked for further copies.[175] A number of other incidents took place, including a visit by a Thai prince to the temple area for an official reception with the French flag clearly flying there, which convinced the International Court that Thailand had tacitly accepted French sovereignty over the disputed area.[176] In other words, Thailand was estopped by its conduct from claiming that it contested the frontier in the temple area. However, it is to be noted that estoppel in that case was one element in a complexity of relevant principles which included prescription and treaty interpretation. The case also seemed to show that in situations of uncertainty and ambiguity, the doctrines of acquiescence and estoppel come into their own,[177] but it would not appear correct to refer to estoppel as a rule of substantive law.[178] The extent to which silence as such may create an estoppel is unclear and much will depend upon the surrounding circumstances, in particular the notoriety of the situation, the length of silence maintained in the light of that notoriety and the type of conduct that would be seen as reasonable [173] PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, pp. 46, 68; 6 AD, pp. 95, 102.

[174] ICJ Reports, 1962, p. 6; 33 ILR, p. 48. See D. H. Johnson, 'The Case Concerning the Temple of Preah Vihear', 11 ICLQ, 1962, p. 1183, and J. P. Cot, 'Cour Internationale de Justice: Affaire du Temple de Préah Vihéar', AFDI, 1962, p. 217.

[175] ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 6, 23; 33 ILR, pp. 48, 62.

[176] ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 30–2; 33 ILR, p. 68.

[177] See also the Award of the King of Spain case, ICJ Reports, 1960, p. 192; 30 ILR, p. 457.

[178] See e.g. Jennings, Acquisition, pp. 47–51.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in the international community in order to safeguard a legal interest.[179] The existence of an estoppel should not, however, be lightly assumed.[180]

Subsequent conduct itself would in the material sense include the examples of the exercise of sovereign activity, various diplomatic and similar exchanges and records, and maps. So far as the status of maps is concerned, this will depend upon the facts of their production as an item of evidence. It was noted in the Burkina Faso/Mali case that 'maps are only extrinsic evidence of varying reliability or unreliability which may be used, along with other evidence of a circumstantial kind, to establish or reconstitute the real facts'.[181] In such circumstances, courts have often exhibited a degree of caution, taking into account, for example, that some maps may be politically self-serving and that topographic knowledge at the time the map is made may be unreliable.[182] However, maps annexed to treaties illustrating the boundary so delimited will be accepted as authoritative.[183] Where there is a conflict between the text of an instrument and an annexed map, all the relevant circumstances will need to be considered in order to arrive at a correct understanding of the intentions of the authors of the relevant delimitation instrument.[184] Beyond this, it is possible that cartographic material, prepared in order to help draft a delimitation instrument, may itself be used as assistance in seeking to determine the intentions of the parties where the text itself is ambiguous, while more generally the effect of a map will in other circumstances vary according to [179] See e.g. the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 139; 18 ILR, pp. 86, 101, the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 26; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 55, the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 308; 71 ILR, pp. 74, 135, and the ELSI case, ICJ Reports, 1989, pp. 15, 44; 84 ILR, pp. 311, 350. See also M. Koskenniemi, 'L'Affaire du Passage par le Great Belt', AFDI, 1992, p. 905.

[180] In Cameroon v. Nigeria (Preliminary Objections), the Court emphasised that, 'An estoppel would only arise if by its acts or declarations Cameroon had consistently made it fully clear that it had agreed to settle the boundary dispute submitted to the Court by bilateral avenues alone. It would further be necessary that, by relying on such an attitude, Nigeria had changed its position to its own detriment or had suffered some prejudice', ICJ Reports, 1998, pp. 275, 303.

[181] ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 582; 80 ILR, p. 440. Note that the Court in the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, paras. 267–72, noted that a map may give a good indication of the official position of the party concerned, particularly where it is an admission against interest.

[182] See the Eritrea/Ethiopia case, 130 ILR, pp. 38 ff. See also the Eritrea/Yemen case, 114 ILR, pp. 1, 94 ff.

[183] 114 ILR, pp. 1, 94 ff., and Eritrea/Ethiopia, 130 ILR, pp. 39 and 45 ff. Note that a treaty provision may provide for an avowedly incorrect geographical feature on an annexed map as part of the boundary line: see Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, p. 372.

[184] ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 383–4. See also p. 385.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

a number of factors ranging from its provenance and cartographic quality to its consistency with other maps and the use made of it by the parties.[185]

One argument has been that peaceful possession coupled with acts of administration may in the absence of protest found the basis of title by way of 'historical consolidation'.[186] However, the International Court has emphasised that this doctrine is 'highly controversial and cannot replace the established modes of acquisition of title under international law'. It was also noted that a period of such activity of some twenty years was 'far too short, even according to the theory relied on it'.[187]

Conclusions

It will be clear from the above that apart from the modes of acquisition that rely purely on the consent of the state and the consequences of sovereignty (cession or accretion), the method of acquiring additional territory is by the sovereign exercise of effective control. Both occupation and prescription are primarily based upon effective possession and, although the time element is a factor in prescription, this in fact is really concerned with the effectiveness of control.

The principle of effective control applies in different ways to different situations, but its essence is that 'the continuous and peaceful display of territorial sovereignty . . . is as good as title'.[188] Such control has to be deliberate sovereign action, but what will amount to effectiveness is relative and will depend upon, for example, the geographical nature of the region, the existence or not of competing claims and other relevant factors, such as international reaction.[189] It will not be necessary for such control to be equally effective throughout the region.[190] The doctrine of effectiveness has displaced earlier doctrines relating to discovery and symbolic annexation as in themselves sufficient to generate title.[191] Effectiveness has also a temporal as well as a spatial dimension as the doctrine of intertemporal [185] Ibid., pp. 366 ff. See also the Eritrea/Ethiopia case, 130 ILR, pp. 39 ff.

[186] See e.g. the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 138, and De Visscher, Theory and Reality, p. 209.

[187] Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, p. 352. See above, p. 507.

[188] Judge Huber, Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 839 (1928); 4 AD, p. 103.

[189] See further above, p. 511.

[190] See above, p. 512.

[191] See in this context article 35 of the General Act of the Congress of Berlin, 1885, in which the parties recognised the obligation to 'ensure the establishment of authority in the regions occupied by them on the coast of the African continent'.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

law has emphasised, while clearly the public or open nature of the control is essential. The acquiescence of a party directly involved is also a very important factor in providing evidence of the effectiveness of control. Where a dispossessed sovereign disputes the control exercised by a new sovereign, title can hardly pass. Effectiveness is related to the international system as a whole, so that mere possession by force is not the sole determinant of title. This factor also emphasises and justifies the role played by recognition.

Bilateral recognition is important as evidence of effective control and should be regarded as part of that principle. International recognition, however, involves not only a means of creating rules of international law in terms of practice and consent of states, but may validate situations of dubious origin. A series of recognitions may possibly validate an unlawful acquisition of territory and could similarly prevent effective control from ever hardening into title.[192] The significance of UN recognition is self-evident, so that the UN Security Council itself could adopt a binding resolution ending a territorial dispute by determining the boundary in question.[193]

Sovereign territory may not only be acquired, it may also be lost in ways that essentially mirror the modes of acquisition. Territory may be lost by express declaration or conduct such as a treaty of cession or acceptance of secession; by loss of territory by erosion or natural geographic activity or by acquiescence through prescription. Further, territory may be abandoned, but in order for this to operate both the physical act of abandonment and the intention to surrender title are required.[194]

[192] See e.g. Security Council resolution 216 (1965) concerning Rhodesia; General Assembly resolution 31/6A and Security Council Statements of 21 September 1979 and 15 December 1981 concerning the South African Bantustans; Security Council resolution 541 (1983) with regard to the 'Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus' and Security Council resolution 662 (1990) concerning the Iraqi annexation of Kuwait.

[193] See particularly Security Council resolution 687 (1991) in which the international boundary between Kuwait and Iraq was deemed to be that agreed by both parties in 'Minutes' agreed in 1963. This boundary was then formally guaranteed by the Council in Section A, paragraph 4 of this resolution. See e.g. M. H. Mendelson and S. C. Hulton, 'The Iraq–Kuwait Boundary', 64 BYIL, 1993, p. 135. See also Security Council resolution 833 (1993) and S/26006.

[194] See e.g. Brownlie, Principles, p. 138; Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 716–18, and G. Marston, 'The British Acquisition of the Nicobar Islands, 1869', 69 BYIL, 1998, p. 245. See also e.g. the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, p. 47; 6 AD, p. 95 and the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, paras. 117, 196, 223, 230 and 275.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Territorial integrity, self-determination and sundry claims

There are a number of other concepts which may be of some relevance in territorial situations ranging from self-determination to historical and geographical claims. These may not necessarily be legal principles as such but rather purely political or moral expressions. Although they may be extremely persuasive within the international political order, they would not necessarily be juridically effective. One of the core principles of the international system is the need for stability and finality in boundary questions and much flows from this.[195] Case-law has long maintained this principle.[196] Reflective of this concept is the principle of territorial integrity.

The principle of the territorial integrity of states is well established and is protected by a series of consequential rules prohibiting interference within the domestic jurisdiction of states as, for example, article 2(7) of the United Nations Charter, and forbidding the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity and political independence of states, particularly article 2(4) of the United Nations Charter. This principle has been particularly emphasised by Third World states and also by other regions.[197]

However, it does not apply where the territorial dispute centres upon uncertain frontier demarcations. In addition, the principle appears to conflict on the face of it with another principle of international law, that of the self-determination of peoples.[198]

This principle, noted in the United Nations Charter and emphasised in the 1960 Colonial Declaration, the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights and the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law, can be regarded as a rule of international law in the light of, inter alia, the number and character of United Nations declarations and resolutions and actual state practice in the process of decolonisation. However, it has been interpreted as referring only to the inhabitants of non-independent [195] See K. H. Kaikobad, 'Some Observations on the Doctrine of the Continuity and Finality of Boundaries', 54 BYIL, 1983, p. 119, and Shaw, 'Heritage of States', pp. 75, 81.

[196] See e.g. the Temple case, ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 6, 34; 33 ILR, p. 48; the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 37; 100 ILR, p. 1; the Beagle Channel case, 21 RIAA, pp. 55, 88; 52 ILR, p. 93, and the Dubai/Sharjah case, 91 ILR, pp. 543, 578.

[197] See generally, Shaw, Title to Territory, chapter 5. But see, as regards Europe, Principle III of the Helsinki Final Act, 14 ILM, 1975, p. 1292 and the Guidelines on Recognition of New States in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union adopted by the European Community and its member states on 16 December 1991, 92 ILR, p. 173.

[198] See Burkina Faso/Mali, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 565; 80 ILR, p. 469.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

territories.[199] Practice has not supported its application as a principle conferring the right to secede upon identifiable groups within already independent states.[200] The Canadian Supreme Court in the Reference Re Secession of Quebec case declared that 'international law expects that the right to self-determination will be exercised by peoples within the framework of existing sovereign states and consistently with the maintenance of the territorial integrity of those states',[201] and that the right to unilateral secession 'arises only in the most extreme of cases and, even then, under carefully defined circumstances'.[202] The only arguable exception to this rule that the right to external self-determination applies only to colonial situations (and arguably situations of occupation) might be where the group in question is subject to 'extreme and unremitting persecution' coupled with the 'lack of any reasonable prospect for reasonable challenge',[203] but even this is controversial not least in view of definitional difficulties.[204] The situation of secession is probably best dealt with in international law within the framework of a process of claim, effective control and international recognition.

Accordingly the principle of self-determination as generally accepted fits in with the concept of territorial integrity,[205] as it cannot apply once a colony or trust territory attains sovereignty and independence, except, arguably, in extreme circumstances. Probably the most prominent exponent of the relevance of self-determination to post-independence situations has 199 As to the application of the principle to Gibraltar, see UKMIL, 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 443.

200 See J. Crawford, 'State Practice and International Law in Relation to Secession', 69 BYIL, 1998, p. 85; Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 525, and Self-Determination in International Law: Quebec and Lessons Learned (ed. A. Bayefsky), The Hague, 2000. See also above, chapter 5, p. 256. Self-determination does have a continuing application in terms of human rights situations within the territorial framework of independent states (i.e. internal self-determination), ibid.

201 (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385, 436; 115 ILR, p. 536.

202 (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385, 438.

203 A. Cassese, Self-Determination of Peoples, Cambridge, 1995, p. 120. See also T. Musgrave, Self-Determination and National Minorities, Oxford, 1997, pp. 188 ff.; J. Castellino, International Law and Self-Determination, The Hague, 2000, and K. Knop, Diversity and Self-Determination in International Law, Cambridge, 2002, pp. 65 ff. See also Judge Wildhaber's Concurring Opinion (joined by Judge Ryssdal) in Loizidou v. Turkey, Judgment of 18 December 1996, 108 ILR, pp. 443, 470–3. See also Secession: International Law Perspectives (ed. M. G. Kohen), Cambridge, 2006.

204 The Court in the Quebec case, citing Cassese, Self-Determination, suggested that the right to external self-determination (i.e. secession) might apply to cases of foreign occupation and as a last resort where a people's right to internal self-determination (i.e. right to public participation, etc.) was blocked, ibid, pp. 438 ff.

205 This analysis is supported by Burkina Faso/Mali, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 554; 80 ILR, p. 459.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

been Somalia with its claims to those parts of Ethiopia and Kenya populated by Somali tribes, but that country received very little support for its demands.[206]

Self-determination cannot be used to further larger territorial claims in defiance of internationally accepted boundaries of sovereign states, but it may be of some use in resolving cases of disputed frontier lines on the basis of the wishes of the inhabitants. In addition, one may point to the need to take account of the interests of the local population where the determination of the boundary has resulted in a shift in the line, at least in the view of one of the parties.[207] Geographical claims have been raised throughout history.[208] France for long maintained that its natural frontier in the east was the west bank of the Rhine, and the European powers in establishing their presence upon African coastal areas often claimed extensive hinterland territories. Much utilised also was the doctrine of contiguity, whereby areas were claimed on the basis of the occupation of territories of which they formed a geographical continuation. However, such claims, although relevant in discussing the effectivity and limits of occupation, are not able in themselves to found title, and whether or not such claims will be taken into account at all will depend upon the nature of the territory and the strength of competing claims.[209] A rather special case is that of islands close to the coast of the mainland. The Tribunal in Eritrea/Yemen stated that: 'There is a strong presumption that islands within the twelve-mile coastal belt will belong to the coastal state', to be rebutted only by evidence of a superior title.[210]

[206] Shaw, Title to Territory, chapter 5. See also the Moroccan approach, ibid.

[207] See, with regard to the preservation of acquired rights, El Salvador/Honduras, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 400; 97 ILR, p. 112. See also Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 370 and 373–4. In particular, the Court stated in relation to the Bakassi peninsula and Lake Chad regions which contain Nigerian populations, that 'the implementation of the present judgment will afford the parties a beneficial opportunity to co-operate in the interests of the population concerned, in order notably to enable it to continue to have access to educational and health services comparable to those it currently enjoys', ibid., p. 452. The Court also referred to the commitment of the Cameroon Agent made during the Oral Pleadings to protect Nigerians living in the areas recognised as belonging to Cameroon, ibid., p. 452 and para. V(C) of the Dispositif.

[208] Shaw, Title to Territory, p. 195; Jennings, Acquisition, p. 74, and Hill, Claims to Territory, pp. 77–80.

[209] See the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, p. 46; 6 AD, p. 95, and the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 42–3; 59 ILR, pp. 14, 59. See generally, B. Feinstein, 'Boundaries and Security in International Law and Practice', 3 Finnish YIL, 1992, p. 135.

[210] 114 ILR, pp. 1, 124 and 125. But see Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 161, where the Court noted that 'proximity [of islands to the mainland] as such is not necessarily determinative of legal title'.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Of some similarity are claims based upon historical grounds.[211] This was one of the grounds upon which Iraq sought to justify its invasion and annexation of the neighbouring state of Kuwait in August 1990,[212] although the response of the United Nations demonstrated that such arguments were unacceptable to the world community as a whole.[213] Morocco too has made extensive claims to Mauritania, Western Sahara and parts of Algeria as territories historically belonging to the old Moroccan empire.[214] But such arguments are essentially political and are of but little legal relevance. The International Court of Justice in the Western Sahara case[215] of 1975 accepted the existence of historical legal ties between the tribes of that area and Morocco and Mauritania, but declared that they were not of such a nature as to override the right of the inhabitants of the colony to self-determination and independence.[216]

The doctrine of uti possidetis[217]

The influence of the principle of territorial integrity may be seen in the Latin American idea of uti possidetis, whereby the administrative divisions

[211] See e.g. Shaw, Title to Territory, pp. 193–4; Jennings, Acquisition, pp. 76–8, and Hill, Claims to Territory, pp. 81–91.

[212] See Keesing's Record of World Events, p. 37635, 1990. Note that Iraq made a similar claim to Kuwait in the early 1960s, although not then taking military action: see Jennings, Acquisition, p. 77, note 2.

[213] See e.g. Security Council resolution 662 (1990); Lauterpacht et al., The Kuwait Crisis: Basic Documents, p. 90.

[214] Shaw, Title to Territory, pp. 193–4. Note also the claims advanced by Indonesia to West Irian, ibid., p. 22.

[215] ICJ Reports, 1975, p. 12; 59 ILR, p. 14.

[216] See also Eritrea/Yemen, 114 ILR, pp. 1, 37 ff. The Tribunal also discounted the notion of reversion of title, ibid., pp. 40 and 115.

[217] See e.g. H. Ghebrewebet, Identifying Units of Statehood and Determining International Boundaries, Frankfurt am Main, 2006; A. O. Cukwurah, The Settlement of Boundary Disputes in International Law, Manchester, 1967, p. 114; P. De La Pradelle, La Frontière, Paris, 1928, pp. 86–7; D. Bardonnet, 'Les Frontières Terrestres et la Relativité de leur Tracé', 153 HR, 1976 V, p. 9; Shaw, 'Heritage of States', p. 75; M. Kohen, Possession Contestée et Souveraineté Territoriale, Geneva, 1997, chapter 6, and ibid., 'Uti Possidetis, Prescription et Pratique Subséquent à un Traité dans l'Affaire de l'Ile de Kasikili/Sedudu devant la Cour Internationale de Justice', 43 German YIL, 2000, p. 253; G. Nesi, L'Uti Possidetis Iuris nel Diritto Internazionale, Padua, 1996; S. Lalonde, Determining Boundaries in a Conflicted World, Ithaca, 2002; Luis Sánchez Rodríguez, 'L'Uti Possidetis et les Effectivités dans les Contentieux Territoriaux et Frontaliers', 263 HR, 1997, p. 149; J. M. Sorel and R. Mehdi, 'L'Uti Possidetis Entre la Consécration Juridique et la Pratique: Essai de Réactualisation', AFDI, 1994, p. 11; Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 669–70; T. Bartoš, 'Uti Possidetis. Quo Vadis?', 18 Australian YIL, 1997, p. 37; 'L'Applicabilité de l'Uti Possidetis Juris dans les Situations de Sécession ou de Dissolution d'États', Colloque, RBDI, 1998, p. 5, and Démembrements d'États et Délimitations Territoriales (ed. O. Corten), Brussels, 1999.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of the Spanish empire in South America were deemed to constitute the boundaries for the newly independent successor states, thus theoretically excluding any gaps in sovereignty which might precipitate hostilities and encourage foreign intervention.[218] It is more accurately reflected in the practice of African states, explicitly stated in a resolution of the Organisation of African Unity in 1964, which declared that colonial frontiers existing as at the date of independence constituted a tangible reality and that all member states pledged themselves to respect such borders.[219]

Practice in Africa has reinforced the approach of emphasising the territorial integrity of the colonially defined territory, witness the widespread disapproval of the attempted creation of secessionist states whether in the former Belgian Congo, Nigeria or Sudan. Efforts to prevent the partition of the South African controlled territory of Namibia into separate Bantustans as a possible prelude to a dissolution of the unity of the territory are a further manifestation of this.[220]

The question of uti possidetis was discussed by a Chamber of the International Court in Burkina Faso v. Republic of Mali,[221] where the compromis (or special agreement) by which the parties submitted the case to the Court specified that the settlement of the dispute should be based upon respect for the principle of the 'intangibility of frontiers inherited from colonisation'.[222] It was noted, however, that the principle had in fact developed into a general concept of contemporary customary international law and was unaffected by the emergence of the right of peoples to self-determination.[223] In the African context particularly, the obvious purpose of the principle was 'to prevent the independence

[218] See the Colombia–Venezuela arbitral award, 1 RIAA, pp. 223, 228 (1922); 1 AD, p. 84; the Beagle Channel case, HMSO, 1977; 52 ILR, p. 93, and Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras), ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 544; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 299–300.

[219] AHG/Res.16(1). See Security Council resolution 1234 (1999) which refers directly to OAU resolution 16(1) and see also article 4(i) of the Protocol Relating to the Establishment of the Peace and Security Council of the African Union, 2002, and the preamble to the Protocol on Politics, Defence and Security Cooperation adopted by the Southern African Development Community in 2001: see further below, chapter 18, p. 1026. See Shaw, Title to Territory, pp. 185–7. See also the Separate Opinion by Judge Ajibola in the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, pp. 6, 83 ff.; 100 ILR, pp. 1, 81 ff.

[220] Shaw, Title to Territory, chapter 5. The principle has also been noted in Asian practice: see e.g. the Temple of Preah Vihear case, ICJ Reports, 1962, p. 6; 33 ILR, p. 48, and the Rann of Kutch case, 7 ILM, 1968, p. 633; 50 ILR, p. 2.

[221] ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 554; 80 ILR, p. 459.

[222] ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 557; 80 ILR, p. 462.

[223] ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 565; 80 ILR, p. 469.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

and stability of new states being endangered by fratricidal struggles provoked by the challenging of frontiers following the withdrawal of the administering power'.[224] The application of the principle has the effect of freezing the territorial title existing at the moment of independence to produce what the Chamber described as the 'photograph of the territory' at the critical date.[225] The Chamber, however, went further than emphasising the application of the principle to Africa. It declared that the principle applied generally and was logically connected with the phenomenon of independence wherever it occurred in order to protect the independence and stability of new states.[226] Uti possidetis was defined as follows:

> The essence of the principle lies in its primary aim of securing respect for the territorial boundaries at the moment when independence is achieved. Such territorial boundaries might be no more than delimitations between different administrative divisions or colonies all subject to the same sovereign. In that case, the application of the principle of uti possidetis resulted in administrative boundaries being transformed into international frontiers in the full sense of the term.[227]

The application of this principle beyond the purely colonial context was underlined particularly with regard to the former USSR[228] and the former Yugoslavia. In the latter case, the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission established by the European Community and accepted by the states of the former Yugoslavia made several relevant comments. In Opinion No. 2, the Arbitration Commission declared that 'whatever the circumstances, the right to self-determination must not involve changes to existing [224] Ibid.

[225] ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 568; 80 ILR, p. 473. See, as to the notion of critical date, above, p. 509.

[226] ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 565; 80 ILR, p. 470.

[227] ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 566; 80 ILR, p. 459. This was reaffirmed by the Court in the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras) case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 386–7; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 299–300. The Court in the latter case went on to note that 'uti possidetis juris is essentially a retrospective principle, investing as international boundaries administrative limits intended originally for quite other purposes', ibid., p. 388; 79 ILR, p. 301. See M. N. Shaw, 'Case Concerning the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute', 42 ICLQ, 1993, p. 929. See also Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, paras. 151 ff.

[228] See e.g. R. Yakemtchouk, 'Les Conflits de Territoires and de Frontières dans les États de l'Ex-URSS', AFDI, 1993, p. 401. See also, with regard to the application of uti possidetis to the dissolution of the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic, J. Malenovsky, 'Problèmes Juridiques Liés à la Partition de la Tchécoslovaquie', ibid., p. 328.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

frontiers at the time of independence (uti possidetis juris) except where the states concerned agree otherwise'.[229] In Opinion No. 3, the Arbitration Commission emphasised that, except where otherwise agreed, the former boundaries[230] became frontiers protected by international law. This conclusion, it was stated, derived from the principle of respect for the territorial status quo and from the principle of uti possidetis.[231] It is thus arguable that, at the least, a presumption exists that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, internally defined units within a pre-existing sovereign state will come to independence within the spatial framework of that territorially defined unit.[232]

Beyond uti possidetis

The principle of uti possidetis is not able to resolve all territorial or boundary problems.[233] Where there is a relevant applicable treaty, then this will [229] 92 ILR, p. 168. See also A. Pellet, 'Note sur la Commission d'Arbitrage de la Conférence Européenne pour la Paix en Yugoslavie', AFDI, 1991, p. 329, and Pellet, 'Activité de la Commission d'Arbitrage de la Conférence Européenne pour la Paix en Yugoslavie', AFDI, 1992, p. 220.

[230] The Arbitration Commission was here dealing specifically with the internal boundaries between Serbia and Croatia and Serbia and Bosnia-Herzegovina.

[231] 92 ILR, p. 171. The Arbitration Commission specifically cited here the views of the International Court in the Burkina Faso/Mali case: see above, p. 526. Note also that the Under-Secretary of State of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office stated in January 1992 that 'the borders of Croatia will become the frontiers of independent Croatia, so there is no doubt about that particular issue. That has been agreed amongst the Twelve, that will be our attitude towards those borders. They will just be changed from being republican borders to international frontiers', UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 719.

[232] See e.g. M. N. Shaw, 'Peoples, Territorialism and Boundaries', 3 EJIL, 1997, pp. 477, 504, but cf. S. Ratner, 'Drawing a Better Line: Uti Possidetis and the Borders of New States', 90 AJIL, 1996, pp. 590, 613 ff. and M. Craven, 'The European Community Arbitration Commission on Yugoslavia', 65 BYIL, 1995, pp. 333, 385 ff.

[233] See generally K. H. Kaikobad, Interpretation and Revision of International Boundary Decisions, Cambridge, 2007; M. Kohen, 'La Relation Titres/Effectivités dans le Contentieux Territorial à la Lumière de la Jurisprudence Récente', 108 RGDIP, 2004, p. 561; M. Mendelson, 'The Cameroon–Nigeria Case in the International Court of Justice: Some Territorial Sovereignty and Boundary Delimitation Issues', 75 BYIL, 2004, p. 223; B. H. Oxman, 'The Territorial Temptation: A Siren Song at Sea', 100 AJIL, 2006, p. 830, and S. R. Ratner, 'Land Feuds and Their Solutions: Finding International Law Beyond the Tribunal Chamber', 100 AJIL, 2006, p. 808. Note that the International Court has emphasised that the principle of uti possidetis applies to territorial as well as boundary problems: see the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras) case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 387; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 300.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

dispose of the matter completely.[234] Indeed, once defined in a treaty, an international frontier achieves permanence so that even if the treaty itself were to cease to be in force, the continuance of the boundary would be unaffected and may only be changed with the consent of the states directly concerned.[235] On the other hand, where the line which is being transformed into an international boundary by virtue of the principle cannot be conclusively identified by recourse to authoritative material, then the principle of uti possidetis must allow for the application of other principles and rules. Essentially these other principles focus upon the notion of effectivités or effective control.

The issue was extensively analysed by the International Court in the Burkina Faso/Mali case[236] and later in the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras; Nicaragua Intervening) case.[237] The Court noted the possible relevance of colonial effectivités, immediate post-colonial effectivités and more recent effectivités. Each of these might be relevant in the context of seeking to determine the uti possidetis pre-independence line. In the case of colonial effectivités, i.e. the conduct of the colonial administrators as proof of the effective exercise of territorial jurisdiction in the area during the colonial period, the Court in the former case distinguished between certain situations. Where the act concerned corresponded to the title comprised in the uti possidetis juris, then the effectivités simply confirmed the exercise of the right derived from a legal title. Where the act did not correspond with the law as described, i.e. the territory subject to the dispute was effectively administered by a state other than the one possessing the legal title, preference would be given to the holder of the title. In other words, where there was a clear uti possidetis line, this would prevail over inconsistent practice. Where, however, there was no clear legal title, then the effectivités 'play an essential role in showing how the title is interpreted in practice'.[238] It would then [234] See the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 38–40; 100 ILR, pp. 1, 37–9. See also Oppenheim's International Law, p. 663. Note that by virtue of article 11 of the Convention on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties, 1978, a succession of states does not as such affect a boundary established by a treaty or obligations or rights established by a treaty and relating to the regime of a boundary. Article 62 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969 provides that the doctrine of rebus sic stantibus does not apply to boundary treaties: see below, chapter 16, p. 950.

[235] ICJ Reports, 1994, p. 37; 100 ILR, p. 36.

[236] ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 554; 80 ILR, p. 440.

[237] ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 351; 97 ILR, p. 266. See also Shaw, 'Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute'.

[238] ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 586–7; 80 ILR, pp. 440, 490–1.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

become a matter for evaluation by the Court with regard to each piece of practice adduced. This approach was reaffirmed in the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute case with regard to the grant of particular lands to individuals or to Indian communities or records of such grants.[239] Where the colonial effectivités were insufficient to establish the position of the relevant administrative line, the principle of uti possidetis could not operate.[240] The Court also noted in the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute case that it could have regard in certain instances to documentary evidence of post-independence effectivités when it considered that they afforded indications with respect to the uti possidetis line, provided that there was a relationship between the effectivités concerned and the determination of the boundary in question.[241] Such post-independence practice could be examined not only in relation to the identification of the uti possidetis line but also in the context of seeking to establish whether any acquiescence could be demonstrated both as to where the line was and as to whether any changes in that line could be proved to have taken place.[242] This post-independence practice could even be very recent practice and was not confined to immediate post-independence practice.

Where the uti possidetis line could be determined neither by authoritative decisions by the appropriate authorities at the relevant time nor by subsequent practice with regard to a particular area, recourse to equity[243] might be necessary. What this might involve would depend upon the circumstances. In the Burkina Faso/Mali case, it meant that a particular frontier pool would be equally divided between the parties;[244] in the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute case, it meant that resort could be had to an unratified delimitation of 1869.[245] It was also noted that the suitability of topographical features in providing an identifiable and convenient boundary was a material aspect.[246]

[239] ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 389; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 302.
[240] See e.g. Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 167.
[241] ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 399; 97 ILR, p. 266.
[242] See e.g. ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 408, 485, 514, 525, 563 and 565; 97 ILR, pp. 321, 401, 430, 441, 479 and 481. See also Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, paras. 168 ff. Such post-colonial effectivités could show whether either of the contending states had displayed sufficient evidence of sovereign authority in order to establish legal title, ibid.
[243] I.e. equity infra legem or within the context of existing legal principles.
[244] ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 633; 80 ILR, pp. 440, 535.
[245] ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 514–15; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 430–1.
[246] ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 396; 97 ILR, p. 309.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

International boundary rivers[247]

Special rules have evolved in international law with regard to boundary rivers. In general, where there is a navigable channel, the boundary will follow the middle line of that channel (the thalweg principle).[248] Where there is no such channel, the boundary line will, in general, be the middle line of the river itself or of its principal arm.[249] These respective boundary lines would continue as median lines (and so would shift also) if the river itself changed course as a result of gradual accretion on one bank or degradation of the other bank. Where, however, the river changed course suddenly and left its original bed for a new channel, the international boundary would continue to be the middle of the deserted river bed.[250] It is possible for the boundary to follow one of the banks of the river, thus putting it entirely within the territory of one of the states concerned where this has been expressly agreed, but this is unusual.[251]

[247] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 664–6; S. W. Boggs, International Boundaries, New York, 1940; L. J. Bouchez, 'International Boundary Rivers', 12 ICLQ, 1963, p. 789; A. Patry, 'Le Régime des Cours d'Eau Internationaux', 1 Canadian YIL, 1963, p. 172; R. Baxter, The Law of International Waterways, Harvard, 1964; Verzijl, International Law, vol. III, pp. 537 ff.; H. Dipla, 'Les Règles de Droit International en Matière de Délimitation Fluviale: Remise en Question?', 89 RGDIP, 1985, p. 589; H. Ruiz Fabri, 'Règles Coutumières Générales et Droit International Fluvial', AFDI, 1990, p. 818; F. Schroeter, 'Les Systèmes de Délimitation dans les Fleuves Internationaux', AFDI, 1992, p. 948, and L. Caflisch, 'Règles Générales du Droit des Cours d'Eaux Internationaux', 219 HR, 1989, p. 75.

[248] See e.g. the Botswana/Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1999, p. 1062 and the Benin/Niger case, ICJ Reports, 2005, p. 149. See also State of New Jersey v. State of Delaware 291 US 361 (1934) and the Laguna (Argentina/Chile) case, 113 ILR, pp. 1, 209. See, as to the use of the thalweg principle with regard to wadis (dried river beds), Mendelson and Hutton, 'Iraq–Kuwait Boundary', pp. 160 ff.

[249] See e.g. the Argentine–Chile Frontier case, 38 ILR, pp. 10, 93. See also article 2A(1) of Annex I(a) of the Israel–Jordan Treaty of Peace, 1994.

[250] See e.g. the Chamizal case, 11 RIAA, p. 320.

[251] See e.g. the Iran–Iraq agreements of 1937 and 1975. See E. Lauterpacht, 'River Boundaries: Legal Aspects of the Shatt-al-Arab Frontier', 9 ICLQ, 1960, p. 208; K. H. Kaikobad, The Shatt-al-Arab Boundary Question, Oxford, 1980, and Kaikobad, 'The Shatt-al-Arab River Boundary: A Legal Reappraisal', 56 BYIL, 1985, p. 49. See, as to the question of equitable sharing of international watercourses, McCaffrey, The Law of International Watercourses; Brownlie, Principles, p. 259; the Gabčíkovo–Nagymaros case, ICJ Reports, 1997, pp. 7, 54; 116 ILR, p. 1; the Convention on the Law of the Non-Navigational Uses of International Watercourses, 1997, and the Separate Opinion of Judge Kooijmans, Botswana/Namibia, ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 1045, 1148 ff. See also P. Wouters, 'The Legal Response to International Water Conflicts: The UN Watercourses Convention and Beyond', 42 German YIL, 1999, p. 293. Note that in March 2003, the establishment of a Water Cooperation Facility

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Falkland Islands[252]

The long dispute between the UK and Argentina over the Falkland Islands (or Las Malvinas) well illustrates the complex factors involved in resolving issues as to title to territory. The islands were apparently discovered by a British sea captain in 1592, but it is only in 1764 that competing acts of sovereignty commenced. In that year the French established a settlement on East Falklands and in 1765 the British established one on West Falklands. In 1767 the French sold their settlement to Spain. The British settlement was conquered by the Spaniards in 1770 but returned the following year. In 1774 the British settlement was abandoned for economic reasons, but a plaque asserting sovereignty was left behind. The Spaniards left in 1811. In 1816, the United Provinces of the River Plate (Argentina) declared their independence from Spain and four years later took formal possession of the islands. In 1829 the British protested and two years later an American warship evicted Argentinian settlers from the islands, following action by the Argentinian Governor of the territory against American rebels. In 1833 the British captured the islands and have remained there ever since. The question has arisen therefore as to the basis of British title. It was originally argued that this lay in a combination of discovery and occupation, but this would be questionable in the circumstances.[253] It would perhaps have been preferable to rely on conquest and subsequent annexation for, in the 1830s, this was perfectly legal as a method of acquiring territory,[254] but for political reasons this was not claimed. By the 1930s the UK approach had shifted to prescription as the basis of title,[255] but of course this was problematic in the light of Argentinian protests made intermittently throughout the period since 1833.

to mediate in disputes between countries sharing a single river basis was announced: see http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/sci/tech/2872427.stm.

[252] See e.g. J. Goebel, The Struggle for the Falklands, New Haven, 1927; F. L. Hoffmann and O. M. Hoffmann, Sovereignty in Dispute, Boulder, CO, 1984; The Falkland Islands Review, Cmnd 8787 (1983); Chatham House, The Falkland Islands Dispute – International Dimensions, London, 1982; W. M. Reisman, 'The Struggle for the Falklands', 93 Yale Law Journal, 1983, p. 287, and M. Hassan, 'The Sovereignty Dispute over the Falkland Islands', 23 Va. JIL, 1982, p. 53. See also House of Commons Foreign Affairs Committee, Session 1983/4, 5th Report, 2681, and Cmnd 9447 (1985), and Foreign and Commonwealth Office statement to the House of Commons Foreign Affairs Committee on 5 June 2006, UKMIL, 77 BYIL, 2006, pp. 760 ff.

[253] See A. D. McNair, International Law Opinions, Cambridge, 1956, vol. I, pp. 299–300.

[254] See e.g. Lindley, Acquisition, pp. 160–5 and above, p. 500.

[255] See e.g. P. Beck, Guardian, 26 July 1982, p. 7.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The principle of self-determination as applicable to a recognised British non-self-governing territory has recently been much relied upon by the UK government,[256] but something of a problem is posed by the very small size of the territory's population (some 1,800) although this may not be decisive.

It would appear that conquest formed the original basis of title, irrespective of the British employment of other principles. This, coupled with the widespread recognition by the international community, including the United Nations, of the status of the territory as a British Colony would appear to resolve the legal issues, although the matter is not uncontroversial.

'The common heritage of mankind'

The proclamation of certain areas as the common heritage of mankind has raised the question as to whether a new form of territorial regime has been, or is, in process of being created.[257] In 1970, the UN General Assembly adopted a Declaration of Principles Governing the Seabed and Ocean Floor in which it was noted that the area in question and its resources were the common heritage of mankind. This was reiterated in articles 136 and 137 of the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea, in which it was provided that no sovereign or other rights would be recognised with regard to the area (except in the case of minerals recovered in accordance with the Convention) and that exploitation could only take place in accordance with the rules and structures established by the Convention.[258] Article XI of the 1979 Moon Treaty emphasises that the moon and its natural resources are the common heritage of mankind, and thus incapable of national appropriation and subject to a particular regime of exploitation.[259] As is noted in the next section, attempts were being made to establish a common heritage regime over the Antarctic. There are certain common characteristics relating to the concept. Like res communis, [256] See e.g. the Prime Minister, HC Deb., col. 946, 13 May 1982.

[257] See e.g. K. Baslar, The Concept of the Common Heritage of Mankind in International Law, The Hague, 1998; Brownlie, Principles, chapter 12; A. Cassese, International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005, pp. 92 ff.; B. Larschan and B. C. Brennan, 'The Common Heritage of Mankind Principle in International Law', 21 Columbia Journal of International Law, 1983, p. 305; R. Wolfrum, 'The Principle of the Common Heritage of Mankind', 43 ZaöRV, 1983, p. 312; S. Gorove, 'The Concept of "Common Heritage of Mankind"', 9 San Diego Law Review, 1972, p. 390, and C. Joyner, 'Legal Implications of the Common Heritage of Mankind', 35 ICLQ, 1986, p. 190.

[258] See further below, chapter 11, p. 628.

[259] See further below, p. 548.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the areas in question are incapable of national appropriation. Sovereignty is not an applicable principle and the areas in question would not be 'owned', nor would any jurisdictional rights exist outside the framework of the appropriate common heritage regime institutional arrangements. However, while a res communis regime permits freedom of access, exploration and exploitation, a common heritage regime as envisaged in the examples noted above would strictly regulate exploration and exploitation, would establish management mechanisms and would employ the criterion of equity in distributing the benefits of such activity.

It is too early to predict the success or failure of this concept. The 1982 Law of the Sea Convention entered into force in 1994, while the Moon Treaty has the bare minimum number of ratifications and its exploitation provisions are not yet operative. As a legal concept within the framework of the specific treaties concerned, it provides an interesting contrast to traditional jus communis rules, although the extent of the management structures required to operate the regime may pose considerable problems.[260]

The polar regions[261]

The Arctic region is of some strategic importance, constituting as it does a vast expanse of inhospitable territory between North America and Russia.

[260] Questions have arisen as to whether the global climate could be regarded as part of the common heritage of mankind. However, international environmental treaties have not used such terminology, but have rather used the phrase 'common concern of mankind', which is weaker and more ambiguous: see e.g. the Convention on Biological Diversity, 1992. See A. Boyle, 'International Law and the Protection of the Global Atmosphere' in International Law and Global Climate Change (eds. D. Freestone and R. Churchill), London, 1991, chapter 1, and P. Birnie and A. Boyle, International Law and the Environment, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2002, p. 143. See also below, chapter 15.

[261] See e.g. D. R. Rothwell, The Polar Regions and the Development of International Law, Cambridge, 1996; O'Connell, International Law, pp. 448–50; T. W. Balch, 'The Arctic and Antarctic Regions and the Law of Nations', 4 AJIL, 1910, p. 265; G. Triggs, International Law and Australian Sovereignty in Antarctica, Sydney, 1986; R. D. Hayton, 'Polar Problems and International Law', 52 AJIL, 1958, p. 746, and M. Whiteman, Digest of International Law, Washington, 1962, vol. II, pp. 1051–61. See also W. Lakhtine, 'Rights over the Arctic', 24 AJIL, 1930, p. 703; Mouton, 'The International Regime of the Polar Regions', 101 HR, 1960, p. 169; F. Auburn, Antarctic Law and Politics, Bloomington, 1982; International Law for Antarctica (eds. F. Francioni and T. Scovazzi), 2nd edn, The Hague, 1997; A. D. Watts, International Law and the Antarctic Treaty System, Cambridge, 1992; E. J. Sahurie, The International Law of Antarctica, 1992; C. Joyner, Antarctica and the Law of the Sea, The Hague, 1992; The Antarctic Legal Regime (eds. C. Joyner and S. Chopra), Dordrecht, 1988; The Antarctic Environment and International Law (eds. P. Sands, J. Verhoeven and M. Bruce), London, 1992, and E. Franckx, Maritime Claims in the Arctic, The Hague, 1993.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

It consists to a large extent of ice packs beneath which submarines may operate.

Denmark possesses Greenland and its associated islands within the region,[262] while Norway has asserted sovereign rights over Spitzbergen and other islands. The Norwegian title is based on occupation and long exploitation of mineral resources and its sovereignty was recognised by nine nations in 1920, although the Soviet Union had protested.[263]

More controversial are the respective claims made by Canada[264] and the former USSR.[265] Use has been made of the concept of contiguity to assert claims over areas forming geographical units with those already occupied, in the form of the so-called sector principle. This is based on meridians of longitude as they converge at the North Pole and as they are placed on the coastlines of the particular nations, thus producing a series of triangular sectors with the coasts of the Arctic states as their baselines.

The other Arctic states of Norway, Finland, Denmark and the United States have abstained from such assertions. Accordingly, it is exceedingly doubtful whether the sector principle can be regarded as other than a political proposition.[266] Part of the problem is that such a large part of this region consists of moving packs of ice. The former USSR made some claims to relatively immovable ice formations as being subject to its national sovereignty,[267] but the overall opinion remains that these are to be treated as part of the high seas open to all.[268]

Occupation of the land areas of the Arctic region may be effected by states by relatively little activity in view of the decision in the Eastern Greenland case[269] and the nature of the territory involved.

Claims have been made by seven nations (Argentina, Australia, Chile, France, New Zealand, Norway and the United Kingdom) to the Antarctic [262] See G. H. Hackworth, Digest of International Law, Washington, DC, 1940, vol. I.

[263] Ibid., pp. 465 ff. See also O'Connell, International Law, p. 499.
[264] Hackworth, Digest, vol. I, p. 463. But note Canadian government statements denying that the sector principle applies to the ice: see e.g. 9 ILM, 1970, pp. 607, 613. See also I. Head, 'Canadian Claims to Territorial Sovereignty in the Arctic Regions', 9 McGill Law Journal, 1962–3, p. 200.
[265] Hackworth, Digest, vol. I, p. 461. Such claims have been maintained by Russia: see e.g. http://news.nationalgeographic.com/news/2007/09/070921-arctic-russia.html and see below, chapter 11, p. 588.
[266] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 693.
[267] See e.g. Lakhtine, 'Rights over the Arctic', p. 461.
[268] See e.g. Balch, 'Arctic and Antarctic Regions', pp. 265–6.
[269] PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, p. 46; 6 AD, p. 95.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

region, which is an ice-covered landmass in the form of an island.[270] Such claims have been based on a variety of grounds, ranging from mere discovery to the sector principle employed by the South American states, and most of these are of rather dubious quality. Significantly, the United States of America has refused to recognise any claims at all to Antarctica, and although the American Admiral Byrd discovered and claimed Marie Byrd Land for his country, the United States refrained from adopting the claim.[271] Several states have recognised the territorial aspirations of each other in the area, but one should note that the British, Chilean and Argentinian claims overlap.[272]

However, in 1959 the Antarctic Treaty was signed by all states concerned with territorial claims or scientific exploration in the region.[273] Its major effect, apart from the demilitarisation of Antarctica, is to suspend, although not to eliminate, territorial claims during the life of the treaty. Article IV(2) declares that:

> no acts or activities taking place while the present treaty is in force shall constitute a basis for asserting, supporting or denying a claim to territorial sovereignty in Antarctica or create any rights of sovereignty in Antarctica. No new claim or enlargement of an existing claim to territorial sovereignty in Antarctica shall be asserted while the present treaty is in force.

Since the treaty does not provide for termination, an ongoing regime has been created which, because of its inclusion of all interested parties, appears to have established an international regime binding on all.[274] Subsequent meetings of the parties have resulted in a number of recommendations, including proposals for the protection of [270] See e.g. O'Connell, International Law, pp. 450–3; Mouton, 'International Regime', and G. Triggs, 'Australian Sovereignty in Antarctica – Part I', 13 Melbourne University Law Review, 1981, p. 123, and Triggs, International Law and Australian Sovereignty in Antarctica. See also UKMIL, 54 BYIL, 1983, pp. 488 ff.

[271] See Hackworth, Digest, vol. I, p. 457. See also DUSPIL, 1975, pp. 107–11, and Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, pp. 250–4, 1254–6 and 1262.

[272] See e.g. Cmd 5900.

[273] See Handbook of the Antarctic Treaty System, US Department of State, 9th edn, 2002, also available at www.state.gov/g/oes/rls/rpts/ant/.

[274] Note that the Federal Fiscal Court of Germany stated in the Antarctica Legal Status case that Antarctica was not part of the sovereign territory of any state, 108 ILR, p. 654. See, as to the UK view that the British Antarctic Territory is the oldest territorial claim to a part of the continent, although most of it was counter-claimed by either Chile or Argentina, UKMIL, 71 BYIL, 2000, p. 603. Nevertheless, it was accepted that the effect of the Antarctic Treaty was to set aside disputes over territorial sovereignty, ibid.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

flora and fauna in the region, and other environmental preservation measures.[275]

Of the current forty-three parties to the treaty, twenty-eight have consultative status. Full participation in the work of the consultative meetings of the parties is reserved to the original parties to the treaty and those contracting parties which demonstrate substantial scientific research activity in the area. Antarctic treaty consultative meetings take place annually.[276]

The issue of a mineral resources regime has been under discussion since 1979 by the consultative parties and a series of special meetings on the subject held.[277] This resulted in the signing in June 1988 of the Convention on the Regulation of Antarctic Minerals Resource Activities.[278] The Convention provided for three stages of mineral activity, being defined as prospecting, exploration and development. Four institutions were to be established, once the treaty came into force (following sixteen ratifications or accessions, including the US, the former USSR and claimant states). The Commission was to consist of the consultative parties, any other party to the Convention engaged in substantive and relevant research in the area and any other party sponsoring mineral resource activity. A Scientific, Technical and Environmental Advisory Committee consisting of all parties to the Convention was to be established, as were Regulatory Committees, in order to regulate exploration and development activity in a specific area. Such committees would consist of ten members of the Commission, including the relevant claimant and additional claimants up to a maximum of four, the US, the former USSR and representation of developing countries. A system for Special Meetings of Parties, consisting of all parties to the Convention, was also provided for. Several countries signed the Convention.[279] However, opposition to the Convention began to grow. The signing of the 1988 Convention on mineral resource activities stimulated opposition and in resolution 43/83, adopted by the General Assembly that year, 'deep regret' was expressed that such a convention should have been signed despite earlier resolutions calling for a [275] See e.g. the 1980 Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources. See also M. Howard, 'The Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources: A Five Year Review', 38 ICLQ, 1989, p. 104.

[276] The most recent being in New Delhi in 2007 and Kiev in 2008: see e.g. www.scar.org/Treaty/ATCM%20meeting%20list.

[277] See e.g. Keesing's Contemporary Archives, p. 32834 and 21(9) UN Chronicle, 1984, p. 45.

[278] See e.g. C. Joyner, 'The Antarctic Minerals Negotiating Process', 81 AJIL, 1987, p. 888.

[279] See e.g. the Antarctic Minerals Act 1989, which provided for a UK licensing system for exploration and exploitation activities in Antarctica.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

moratorium on negotiations to create a minerals regime in the Antarctic. France and Australia proposed at the October 1989 meeting of the signatories of the Antarctic Treaty that all mining be banned in the area, which should be designated a global 'wilderness reserve'.[280]

At a meeting of the consultative parties to the Antarctic Treaty in April 1991 the Protocol on Environmental Protection to the Antarctic Treaty was adopted, article 7 of which prohibited any activity relating to mineral resources other than scientific research. This prohibition is to continue unless there is in force a binding legal regime on Antarctic mineral resource activities that includes an agreed means of determining whether and, if so, under which conditions any such activities would be acceptable. A review conference with regard to the operation of the Protocol may be held after it has been in force for fifty years if so requested.[281] In addition, a Committee for Environmental Protection was established.[282] This effectively marked the end of the limited mining approach, which had led to the signing of the Convention on the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities. The Protocol came into force in 1998 and may be seen as establishing a comprehensive integrated environmental regime for the area.[283]

Leases and servitudes[284]

Various legal rights exercisable by states over the territory of other states, which fall short of absolute sovereignty, may exist. Such rights are attached to the land and so may be enforced even though the ownership of the particular territory subject to the rights has passed to another sovereign. They are in legal terminology formulated as rights in rem.

[280] See Keesing's Record of World Events, p. 36989, 1989. [281] Article 25.

[282] Guardian, 30 April 1991, p. 20. See also C. Redgwell, 'Environmental Protection in Antarctica: The 1991 Protocol', 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 599.

[283] See e.g. D. R. Rothwell, 'Polar Environmental Protection and International Law: The 1991 Antarctic Protocol', 11 EJIL, 2000, p. 591. Four of the annexes (on environmental impact assessment, conservation of flora and fauna, waste disposal and marine pollution) to the Protocol came into force in 1998 and the fifth (on the Antarctic protected area system) in 2002. A Malaysian initiative at the UN to consider making Antarctica a 'common heritage of mankind' appears to have foundered: see e.g. Redgwell, 'Environmental Protection', and General Assembly resolutions 38/77 and 39/152, and A/39/583.

[284] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 670 ff.; H. Reid, International Servitudes, Chicago, 1932, and F. A. Vali, Servitudes in International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1958. See also Parry, Digest, vol. IIB, 1967, pp. 373 ff., and article 12, Vienna Convention on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties, 1978.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Leases of land rose into prominence in the nineteenth century as a way of obtaining control of usually strategic points without the necessity of actually annexing the territory. Leases were used extensively in the Far East, as for example Britain's rights over the New Territories amalgamated with Hong Kong,[285] and sovereignty was regarded as having passed to the lessee for the duration of the lease, upon which event it would revert to the original sovereign who made the grant.

An exception to this usual construction of a lease in international law as limited to a defined period occurred with regard to the Panama Canal, with the strip of land through which it was constructed being leased to the United States in 1903 'in perpetuity'. However, by the 1977 Panama Canal Treaty, sovereignty over the Canal Zone was transferred to Panama. The United States had certain operating and defensive rights until the treaty ended in 1999.[286]

A servitude exists where the territory of one state is under a particular restriction in the interests of the territory of another state. Such limitations are bound to the land as rights in rem and thus restrict the sovereignty of the state concerned, even if there is a change in control of the relevant territory, for instance upon merger with another state or upon decolonisation.[287]

Examples of servitudes would include the right to use ports or rivers in, or a right of way across, the territory so bound, or alternatively an obligation not to fortify particular towns or areas in the territory.[288]

Servitudes may exist for the benefit of the international community or a large number of states. To give an example, in the Aaland Islands case in 1920, a Commission of Jurists appointed by the Council of the League of Nations declared that Finland since its independence in 1918 had succeeded to Russia's obligations under the 1856 treaty not to fortify the islands. And since Sweden was an interested state in that the islands are situated near Stockholm, it could enforce the obligation although not a party to the 1856 treaty. This was because the treaty provisions had established a special international regime with obligations enforceable

[285] See 50 BFSP, 1860, p. 10 and 90 BFSP, 1898, p. 17. See now 23 ILM, 1984, pp. 1366 ff. for the UK–China agreement on Hong Kong. See also Cmnd 9543 (1985) and the 1985 Hong Kong Act, providing for the termination of British sovereignty and jurisdiction over the territory as from 1 July 1997.

[286] See e.g. 72 AJIL, 1978, p. 225. This superseded treaties of 1901, 1903, 1936 and 1955 governing the Canal. See also A. Rubin, 'The Panama Canal Treaties', YBWA, 1981, p. 181.

[287] See the Right of Passage case, ICJ Reports, 1960, p. 6; 31 ILR, p. 23.

[288] See e.g. J. B. Brierly, The Law of Nations, 6th edn, Oxford, 1963, p. 191.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

by interested states and binding upon any state in possession of the islands.[289] Further, the Tribunal in Eritrea/Yemen noted that the traditional open fishing regime in the southern Red Sea together with the common use of the islands in the area by the populations of both coasts was capable of creating historic rights accruing to the two states in dispute in the form of an international servitude.[290] The award in this case emphasised that the findings of sovereignty over various islands in the Red Sea entailed 'the perpetuation of the traditional fishing regime in the region'.[291]

The situation of the creation of an international status by treaty, which is to be binding upon all and not merely upon the parties to the treaty, is a complex one and it is not always clear when it is to be presumed. However, rights attached to territory for the benefit of the world community were created with respect to the Suez and Panama Canals. Article 1 of the Constantinople Convention of 1888[292] declared that 'the Suez Maritime Canal shall always be free and open in time of war as in time of peace, to every vessel of commerce or of war without distinction of flag' and this international status was in no way affected by the Egyptian nationalisation of the Canal Company in 1956. Egypt stressed in 1957 that it was willing to respect and implement the terms of the Convention, although in fact it consistently denied use of the canal to Israeli ships and vessels bound for its shores or carrying its goods.[293] The canal was reopened in 1975 following the disengagement agreement with Israel, after a gap of eight years.[294] Under article V of the 1979 Peace Treaty between Israel and Egypt, it was provided that ships of Israel and cargoes destined for or coming from Israel were to enjoy 'the right of free passage through the Suez Canal . . . on the basis of the Constantinople Convention of 1888, applying to all nations'.

In the Wimbledon case,[295] the Permanent Court of International Justice declared that the effect of article 380 of the Treaty of Versailles, 1919 maintaining that the Kiel Canal was to be open to all the ships of all countries at peace with Germany was to convert the canal from an internal to an international waterway 'intended to provide under treaty guarantee easier access to the Baltic for the benefit of all nations of the world'.

[289] LNOJ, Sp. Supp. no. 3, 1920, pp. 3, 16–19. [290] 114 ILR, pp. 1, 40–1.
[291] Ibid., p. 137. [292] See e.g. O'Connell, International Law, pp. 582–7.
[293] See Security Council Doc. S/3818, 51 AJIL, 1957, p. 673.
[294] See DUSPIL, 1974, pp. 352–4 and 760.
[295] PCIJ, Series A, No. 1, 1923, p. 24; 2 AD, p. 99. See generally Baxter, Law of International Waterways.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Some of the problems relating to the existence of servitudes have arisen by virtue of the North Atlantic Fisheries arbitration.[296] This followed a treaty signed in 1818 between the United Kingdom and the United States, awarding the inhabitants of the latter country 'forever . . . the liberty to take fish of every kind' from the southern coast of Newfoundland. The argument arose as to Britain's capacity under the treaty to issue fishing regulations binding American nationals. The arbitration tribunal decided that the relevant provision of the treaty did not create a servitude, partly because such a concept was unknown by American and British statesmen at the relevant time (i.e. 1818). However, the terms of the award do leave open the possibility of the existence of servitudes, especially since the tribunal did draw a distinction between economic rights (as in the case) and a grant of sovereign rights which could amount to a servitude in international law.[297]

The law of outer space[298]

There were a variety of theories prior to the First World War with regard to the status of the airspace above states and territorial waters[299] but the outbreak of that conflict, with its recognition of the security implications

[296] 11 RIAA, p. 167 (1910). [297] See, as to landlocked states, below, chapter 11, p. 607.

[298] See e.g. C. Q. Christol, The Modern International Law of Outer Space, New York, 1982, and Christol, Space Law, Deventer, 1991; Space Law (ed. P. S. Dempsey), Oxford, 2004; F. Lyall and P. B. Larsen, Space Law, Aldershot, 2007; J. E. S. Fawcett, Outer Space, Oxford, 1984; S. Gorove, 'International Space Law in Perspective', 181 HR, 1983, p. 349, and Gorove, Developments in Space Law, Dordrecht, 1991; M. Marcoff, Traité de Droit International Public de l'Espace, Fribourg, 1973, and Marcoff, 'Sources du Droit International de l'Espace', 168 HR, p. 9; N. Matte, Aerospace Law, Montreal, 1969; Le Droit de l'Espace (ed. J. Dutheil de la Rochère), Paris, 1988; P. M. Martin, Droit International des Activités Spatiales, Masson, 1992; B. Cheng, 'The 1967 Space Treaty', Journal de Droit International, 1968, p. 532, Cheng, 'The Moon Treaty', 33 Current Legal Problems, 1980, p. 213, Cheng, 'The Legal Status of Outer Space', Journal of Space Law, 1983, p. 89, Cheng, 'The UN and the Development of International Law Relating to Outer Space', 16 Thesaurus Acroasium, Thessaloniki, 1990, p. 49, and Cheng, Studies in International Space Law, Oxford, 1997. See also Oppenheim's International Law, chapter 7; Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 1254; R. G. Steinhardt, 'Outer Space' in United Nations Legal Order (eds. O. Schachter and C. C. Joyner), Cambridge, 1995, vol. II, p. 753; Manual on Space Law (eds. N. Jasentulajana and R. Lee), New York, 4 vols., 1979; Space Law – Basic Documents (eds. K. H. Böckstiegel and M. Berkö), Dordrecht, 1991; Outlook on Space Law (eds. S. G. Lafferanderie and D. Crowther), The Hague, 1997; G. H. Reynolds and R. P. Merges, Outer Space, 2nd edn, Boulder, CO, 1997.

[299] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 650–1, and N. Matte, Treatise on Air–Aeronautical Law, Montreal, 1981, chapters 4 and 5.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of use of the air, changed this and the approach that then prevailed, with little dissension, was based upon the extension of state sovereignty upwards into airspace. This was acceptable both from the defence point of view and in the light of evolving state practice regulating flights over national territory.[300] It was reflected in the 1919 Paris Convention for the Regulation of Aerial Navigation, which recognised the full sovereignty of states over the airspace above their land and territorial sea.[301] Accordingly, the international law rules protecting sovereignty of states apply to the airspace as they do to the land below. As the International Court noted in the Nicaragua case, 'The principle of respect for territorial sovereignty is also directly infringed by the unauthorised overflight of a state's territory by aircraft belonging to or under the control of the government of another state.'[302] The Court noted in the Benin/Niger case that 'a boundary represents the line of separation between areas of state sovereignty, not only on the earth's surface but also in the subsoil and in the superjacent column of air'.[303]

There is no right of innocent passage through the airspace of a state.[304] Aircraft may only traverse the airspace of states with the agreement of those states, and where that has not been obtained an illegal intrusion will be involved which will justify interception, though not (save in very exceptional cases) actual attack.[305] However, the principle of the complete sovereignty of the subjacent state is qualified not only by the various multilateral and bilateral conventions which permit airliners to cross and land in the territories of the contracting states under recognised conditions [300] Matte, Treatise, pp. 91–6.

[301] Article 1. Each party also undertook to accord in peacetime freedom of innocent passage to the private aircraft of other parties so long as they complied with the rules made by or under the authority of the Convention. Articles 5–10 provided that the nationality of aircraft would be based upon registration and that registration would take place in the state of which their owners were nationals. An International Commission for Air Navigation was established. See also the 1928 American Convention on Commercial Aviation.

[302] ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 128; 76 ILR, p. 1. [303] ICJ Reports, 2005, p. 142.

[304] See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 652. It should, however, be noted that articles 38 and 39 of the Convention on the Law of the Sea, 1982 provide for a right of transit passage through straits used for international navigation between one part of the high seas or an exclusive economic zone and another part of the high seas or an exclusive economic zone for aircraft as well as ships. Note also that under article 53 of this Convention, aircraft have a right of overflight with regard to designated air routes above archipelagic waters.

[305] See also Pan Am Airways v. The Queen (1981) 2 SCR 565; 90 ILR, p. 213, with regard to the exercise of sovereignty over the airspace above the high seas.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

and in the light of the accepted regulations, but also by the development of the law of outer space.

Ever since the USSR launched the first earth satellite in 1957, space exploration has developed at an ever-increasing rate.[306] Satellites now control communications and observation networks, while landings have been made on the moon and information-seeking space probes dispatched to survey planets like Venus and Saturn. The research material gathered upon such diverse matters as earth resources, ionospheric activities, solar radiation, cosmic rays and the general structure of space and planet formations has stimulated further efforts to understand the nature of space and the cosmos.[307] This immense increase in available information has also led to the development of the law of outer space, formulating generally accepted principles to regulate the interests of the various states involved as well as taking into account the concern of the international community as a whole.

The definition and delimitation of outer space

It soon became apparent that the usque ad coelum rule, providing for state sovereignty over territorial airspace to an unrestricted extent, was not viable where space exploration was concerned. To obtain the individual consents of countries to the passage of satellites and other vehicles orbiting more than 100 miles above their surface would prove cumbersome in the extreme and in practice states have acquiesced in such traversing. This means that the sovereignty of states over their airspace is limited in height at most to the point where the airspace meets space itself. Precisely where this boundary lies is difficult to say and will depend upon technological and other factors, but figures between 50 and 100 miles have been put forward.[308]

As conventional aircraft are developed to attain greater heights, so states will wish to see their sovereignty extend to those heights and, as well as genuine uncertainty, this fear of surrendering what may prove to be in [306] Note the role played by the UN Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space established in 1958 and consisting currently of sixty-nine states. The Committee has a Legal Sub-Committee and a Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee: see, in particular, Christol, Modern International Law, pp. 13–20, and www.unoosa.org/oosa/COPUOS/copuos.html.

[307] See e.g. Fawcett, Outer Space, chapter 7.

[308] The UK has noted, for example, that, 'for practical purposes the limit [between airspace and outer space] is considered to be as high as any aircraft can fly', 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 520.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the future valuable sovereign rights has prevented any agreement on the delimitation of this particular frontier.[309]

The regime of outer space

Beyond the point separating air from space, states have agreed to apply the international law principles of res communis, so that no portion of outer space may be appropriated to the sovereignty of individual states. This was made clear in a number of General Assembly resolutions following the advent of the satellite era in the late 1950s. For instance, UN General Assembly resolution 1962 (XVII), adopted in 1963 and entitled the Declaration of Legal Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, lays down a series of applicable legal principles which include the provisions that outer space and celestial bodies were free for exploration and use by all states on a basis of equality and in accordance with international law, and that outer space and celestial bodies were not subject to national appropriation by any means.[310] In addition, the Declaration on International Co-operation in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space adopted in resolution 51/126, 1996, called for further international co-operation, with particular attention being given to the benefit for and the interests of developing countries and countries with incipient space programmes stemming from such international co-operation conducted with countries with more advanced space capabilities.[311] Such resolutions constituted in many cases and in the circumstances expressions of state practice and opinio juris and were thus part of customary law.[312]

[309] See generally Christol, Modern International Law, chapter 10, and see also e.g. UKMIL, 64 BYIL, 1993, p. 689. A variety of suggestions have been put forward regarding the method of delimitation, ranging from the properties of the atmosphere to the lowest possible orbit of satellites. They appear to fall within either a spatial or a functional category: see ibid., and UN Doc. A/AC.105/C.2/7/Add.1, 21 January 1977. Some states have argued for a 110 km boundary: see e.g. USSR, 21(4) UN Chronicle, 1984, p. 37; others feel it is premature to establish such a fixed delimitation, e.g. USA and UK, ibid. See also 216 HL Deb., col. 975, 1958–9, and D. Goedhuis, 'The Problems of the Frontiers of Outer Space and Airspace', 174 HR, 1982, p. 367.

[310] See also General Assembly resolutions 1721 (XVI) and 1884 (XVIII).

[311] See also 'The Space Millennium: The Vienna Declaration on Space and Human Development' adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE III), Vienna, 1999: see www.oosa.unvienna.org/unisp-3/.

[312] See above, chapter 3, and B. Cheng, 'United Nations Resolutions on Outer Space: "Instant" International Customary Law?', 5 IJIL, 1965, p. 23.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The legal regime of outer space was clarified by the signature in 1967 of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies. This reiterates that outer space, including the moon and other celestial bodies, is not subject to national appropriation by any means and emphasises that the exploration and use of outer space must be carried out for the benefit of all countries. The Treaty does not establish as such a precise boundary between airspace and outer space but it provides the framework for the international law of outer space.[313] Article 4 provides that states parties to the Treaty agree:

> not to place in orbit around the earth any objects carrying nuclear weapons or any other kinds of weapons of mass destruction, install such weapons on celestial bodies, or station such weapons in outer space in any other manner.

There are, however, disagreements as to the meaning of this provision.[314] The article bans only nuclear weapons and weapons of mass destruction from outer space, the celestial bodies and from orbit around the earth, but article 1 does emphasise that the exploration and use of outer space 'shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all countries' and it has been argued that this can be interpreted to mean that any military activity in space contravenes the Treaty.[315]

Under article 4, only the moon and other celestial bodies must be used exclusively for peaceful purposes, although the use of military personnel for scientific and other peaceful purposes is not prohibited. There are minimalist and maximalist interpretations as to how these provisions are to be understood. The former, for example, would argue that only aggressive military activity is banned, while the latter would prohibit all military behaviour.[316] Article 6 provides for international responsibility [313] See e.g. Christol, Modern International Law, chapter 2. See also Oppenheim's International Law, p. 828.

[314] The issue became particularly controversial in the light of the US Strategic Defence Initiative ('Star Wars'), which aimed to develop a range of anti-satellite and anti-missile weapons based in space. The UN Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space considered the issue, although without the participation of the US, which objected to the matter being considered: see e.g. 21(6) UN Chronicle, 1984, p. 18.

[315] See e.g. Marcoff, Traité, pp. 361 ff.

[316] See e.g. Christol, Modern International Law, pp. 25–6. See also Goedhuis, 'Legal Issues Involved in the Potential Military Uses of Space Stations' in Liber Amicorum for Rt Hon. Richard Wilberforce (eds. M. Bos and I. Brownlie), Oxford, 1987, p. 23, and Gorove, Developments, part VI.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

for national activities in outer space, including the moon and other celestial bodies, whether such activities are carried on by governmental agencies or by non-governmental entities, and for assuring that national activities are carried out in conformity with the Treaty. The activities of non-governmental entities in outer space, including the moon and other celestial bodies, require authorisation and continuing supervision by the appropriate state party to the Treaty. When activities are carried on in outer space, including the moon and other celestial bodies, by an international organisation, responsibility for compliance with the Treaty is to be borne both by the international organisation and by the states parties to the Treaty participating in such organisation.[317]

Under article 8, states retain jurisdiction and control over personnel and vehicles launched by them into space and under article 7 they remain responsible for any damage caused to other parties to the Treaty by their space objects.[318]

This aspect of space law was further developed by the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects signed in 1972, article XII of which provides for the payment of compensation in accordance with international law and the principles of justice and equity for any damage caused by space objects. Article II provides for absolute liability to pay such compensation for damage caused by a space object on the surface of the earth or to aircraft in flight, whereas article III provides for fault liability for damage caused elsewhere or to persons or property on board a space object.[319] This Convention was invoked by Canada in 1979 following the damage allegedly caused by Soviet Cosmos 954.[320] As [317] See e.g. B. Cheng, 'Article VI of the 1967 Treaty Revisited', 1 Journal of Space Law, 1998, p. 7.

[318] See further Cheng, Studies in Space Law, chapters 17 and 18.

[319] See e.g. the Exchange of Notes between the UK and Chinese governments with regard to liability for damages arising during the launch phase of the Asiasat Satellite in 1990 in accordance with inter alia the 1967 and 1972 Conventions, UKMIL, 64 BYIL, 1993, p. 689.

[320] The claim was for $6,401,174.70. See 18 ILM, 1979, pp. 899 ff. See also Christol, Modern International Law, pp. 59 ff., and Christol, 'International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects', 74 AJIL, 1980, p. 346. B. Cheng has drawn attention to difficulties concerning the notion of damage here as including environmental damage: see International Law Association, Report of the Sixty-ninth Conference, London, 2000, p. 581. Note also that under article 3 of the 1967 Treaty, all states parties to the Treaty agree to carry on activities 'in accordance with international law', which clearly includes rules relating to state responsibility. See also Gorove, Developments, part V, and B. Hurwitz, State Liability for Outer Space Activities in Accordance with the 1972 Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects, Dordrecht, 1992.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

a reinforcement to this evolving system of state responsibility, the Convention on the Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space was opened for signature in 1975, coming into force in 1976. This laid down a series of stipulations for the registration of information regarding space objects, such as, for example, their purpose, location and parameters, with the United Nations Secretary-General.[321] In 1993, the UN General Assembly adopted Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space.[322] Under these Principles, the launching state is, prior to the launch, to ensure that a thorough and comprehensive safety assessment is conducted and made publicly available. Where a space object appears to malfunction with a risk of re-entry of radioactive materials to the earth, the launching state is to inform states concerned and the UN Secretary-General and respond promptly to requests for further information or consultations sought by other states. Principle 8 provides that states shall bear international responsibility for national activities involving the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, whether such activities are carried out by governmental agencies or by non-governmental agencies. Principle 9 provides that each state which launches or procures the launching of a space object and each state from whose territory or facility a space object is launched shall be internationally liable for damage caused by such space object or its component parts.

The Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space was signed in 1968 and sets out the legal framework for the provision of emergency assistance to astronauts. It provides for immediate notification of the launching authority or, if that is not immediately possible, a public announcement regarding space personnel in distress as well as the immediate provision of assistance. It also covers search and rescue operations as well as a guarantee of prompt return. The Convention also provides for recovery of space objects.[323]

[321] The International Law Association adopted in 1994 the 'Buenos Aires International Instrument on the Protection of the Environment from Damage Caused by Space Debris'. This provides that each state or international organisation party to the Instrument that launches or procures the launching of a space object is internationally liable for damage arising therefrom to another state, persons or objects, or international organisation party to the Instrument as a consequence of space debris produced by any such object: see Report of the Sixty-sixth Conference at Buenos Aires, London, 1994, p. 7.

[322] Resolution 47/68.

[323] The UK Outer Space Act 1986, for example, provides a framework for private sector space enterprises by creating a licensing system for outer space activities and by establishing a system for indemnification for damage suffered by third parties or elsewhere. The Act also

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

In 1979, the Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and other Celestial Bodies was adopted.[324] This provides for the demilitarisation of the moon and other celestial bodies, although military personnel may be used for peaceful purposes, and reiterates the principle established in the 1967 Outer Space Treaty. Under article IV, the exploration and the use of the moon shall be the province of all mankind and should be carried out for the benefit of all. Article XI emphasises that the moon and its natural resources are the common heritage of mankind and are not subject to national appropriation by any means. That important article emphasises that no private rights of ownership over the moon or any part of it or its natural resources in place may be created, although all states parties have the right to exploration and use of the moon. The states parties also agreed under article XI(5) and (7) to establish an international regime to govern the exploitation of the resources of the moon, when this becomes feasible.[325] The main purposes of the international regime to be established are to include:

a. the orderly and safe development of the natural resources of the moon;
b. the rational management of those resources;
c. the expansion of opportunities in the use of those resources; and
d. an equitable sharing by all states parties in the benefits derived from those resources, whereby the interests and needs of the developing countries, as well as the efforts of those countries which have establishes a statutory register of the launch of space objects. Note also that the US has signed a number of agreements with other states providing for assistance abroad in the event of an emergency landing of the space shuttle. These agreements also provide for US liability to compensate for damage and loss caused as a result of an emergency landing, in accordance with the 1972 Treaty: see Cumulative DUSPIL 1981–8, vol. II, p. 2269. In 1988 an Agreement on Space Stations was signed between the US, the governments of the member states of the European Space Agency, Japan and Canada. This provides inter alia for registration of flight elements as space objects under the Registration Convention of 1975, each state retaining jurisdiction over the elements it so registers and personnel in or on the space station who are its nationals. There is also an interesting provision (article 22) permitting the US to exercise criminal jurisdiction over misconduct committed by a non-US national in or on a non-US element of the manned base or attached to the manned base, which endangers the safety of the manned base or the crew members thereon. Before proceeding to trial with such a prosecution, the US shall consult with the partner state whose nationality the alleged perpetrator holds, and shall either have received the agreement of that partner to the prosecution or failed to have received an assurance that the partner state intends to prosecute.

[324] This came into force in July 1984: see C. Q. Christol, 'The Moon Treaty Enters into Force', 79 AJIL, 1985, p. 163.

[325] See e.g. Cheng, 'Moon Treaty', pp. 231–2, and Christol, Modern International Law, chapters 7 and 8.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

contributed either directly or indirectly to the exploration of the moon, shall be given special consideration.

Several points are worth noting. First, the proposed international regime is only to be established when exploitation becomes feasible. Secondly, it appears that until the regime is set up, there is a moratorium on exploitation, although not on 'exploration and use', as recognised by articles XI(4) and VI(2). This would permit the collection of samples and their removal from the moon for scientific purposes. Thirdly, it is to be noted that private ownership rights of minerals or natural resources not in place are permissible under the Treaty.[326]

Telecommunications[327]

Arguably the most useful application of space exploitation techniques has been the creation of telecommunications networks. This has revolutionised communications and has an enormous educational as well as entertainment potential.[328]

The legal framework for the use of space in the field of telecommunications is provided by the various INTELSAT (international telecommunications satellites) agreements which enable the member states of the International Telecommunications Union to help develop and establish the system, although much of the work is in fact carried out by American corporations, particularly COMSAT. In 1971 the communist countries established their own network of telecommunications satellites, called INTER-SPUTNIK. The international regime for the exploitation of the orbit/spectrum resource[329] has built upon the 1967 Treaty, the 1973 Telecommunications Convention and Protocol and various International Telecommunication Union Radio Regulations. Regulation of the radio spectrum is undertaken at the World Administrative Radio Conferences and by the principal organs of the ITU.

[326] See below, chapter 11, p. 628, regarding the 'common heritage' regime envisaged for the deep seabed under the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea.

[327] See e.g. A. Matteesco-Matté, Les Télécommunications par Satellites, Paris, 1982; M. L. Smith, International Regulation of Satellite Communications, Dordrecht, 1990, and J. M. Smits, Legal Aspects of Implementing International Telecommunications Links, Dordrecht, 1992.

[328] See e.g. the use by India of US satellites to beam educational television programmes to many thousands of isolated settlements that would otherwise not have been reached, DUSPIL, 1976, pp. 427–8.

[329] See Christol, Space Law, chapter 11.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

However, there are a number of problems associated with these ventures, ranging from the allocation of radio wave frequencies to the dangers inherent in direct broadcasting via satellites to willing and unwilling states alike. Questions about the control of material broadcast by such satellites and the protection of minority cultures from 'swamping' have yet to be answered, but are being discussed in various UN organs, for instance UNESCO and the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space.[330]

Two principles are relevant in this context: freedom of information, which is a right enshrined in many international instruments,[331] and state sovereignty. A number of attempts have been made to reconcile the two.

In 1972, UNESCO adopted a Declaration of Guiding Principles on the Use of Satellite Broadcasting, in which it was provided that all states had the right to decide on the content of educational programmes broadcast to their own peoples, while article IX declared that prior agreement was required for direct satellite broadcasting to the population of countries other than the country of origin of the transmission. Within the UN support for the consent principle was clear, but there were calls for a proper regulatory regime, in addition.[332]

In 1983, the General Assembly adopted resolution 37/92 entitled 'Principles Governing the Use by States of Artificial Earth Satellites for International Direct Television Broadcasting'. This provides that a state intending to establish or authorise the establishment of a direct television broadcasting satellite service must first notify the proposed receiving state or states and then consult with them. A service may only be established after this and on the basis of agreements and/or arrangements in conformity with the relevant instruments of the International Telecommunications Union. However, the value of these principles is significantly reduced in the light of the fact that nearly all the Western states voted against the resolution.[333]

ITU regulations call for technical co-ordination between the sending and receiving states as to frequency and orbital positioning before any [330] See Christol, Modern International Law, chapter 12, and N. Matte, 'Aerospace Law: Telecommunications Satellites', 166 HR, 1980, p. 119. See also the study requested by the 1982 Conference, A/AC.107/341, and the European Convention on Transfrontier Television, 1988 and EEC Directive 89/552 on the Pursuit of Television Broadcasting Activities. See also Gorove, Developments, part II, chapter 5.

[331] See e.g. article 19, International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 1966; article 10, Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 1948, and article 10, European Convention on Human Rights, 1950.

[332] See e.g. N. M. Matte, Space Activities and Emerging International Law, London, 1985, p. 438. See also A/8771 (1972).

[333] These included France, West Germany, the UK, USA and Japan.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

direct broadcasting by satellite can be carried out and thus do not affect regulation of the conduct of the broadcast activity as such, although the two elements are clearly connected.[334]

The question of remote sensing has also been under consideration for many years by several bodies, including the UN Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. Remote sensing refers to the detection and analysis of the earth's resources by sensors carried in aircraft and spacecraft and covers, for example, meteorological sensing, ocean observation, military surveillance and land observation. It clearly has tremendous potential, but the question of the uses of the information received is highly controversial.[335] In 1986, the General Assembly adopted fifteen principles relating to remote sensing.[336] These range from the statement that such activity is to be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all countries, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries, to the provision that sensing states should promote international co-operation and environmental protection on earth. There is, however, no requirement of prior consent from states that are being sensed,[337] although consultations in order to enhance participation are called for there. One key issue relates to control over the dissemination of information gathered by satellite. Some have called for the creation of an equitable regime for the sharing of information[338] and there is concern over the question of access to data about states by those, and other, states. The USSR and France, for example, jointly proposed the concept of the inalienable right of states to dispose of their natural resources and of information concerning those resources,[339] while the US in particular pointed to the practical problems this would cause and the possible infringement of freedom of information. The UN Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space

[334] See Matte, Space Activities and Emerging International Law, pp. 453 ff. See also J. Chapman and G. I. Warren, 'Direct Broadcasting Satellites: The ITU, UN and the Real World', 4 Annals of Air and Space Law, 1979, p. 413.

[335] See e.g. Christol, Modern International Law, chapter 13, and 21(4) UN Chronicle, 1984, p. 32. See also the Study on Remote Sensing, A/AC.105/339 and Add.1, 1985, and Gorove, Developments, part VII.

[336] General Assembly resolution 41/65.

[337] Note that the 1967 Outer Space Treaty provides for freedom of exploration and use, although arguments based inter alia on permanent sovereignty over natural resources and exclusive sovereignty over airspace have been put forward: see e.g. A/AC.105/171, Annex IV (1976) and A/AC.105/C.2/SR.220 (1984).

[338] See e.g. A. E. Gotlieb, 'The Impact of Technology on the Development of Contemporary International Law', 170 HR, p. 115.

[339] A/AC.105/C.2/L.99 (1974).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

has been considering the problem for many years and general agreement has proved elusive.[340] The Principles on Remote Sensing provide that the sensed state shall have access to the primary and processed data produced upon a non-discriminatory basis and on reasonable cost terms. States conducting such remote sensing are to bear international responsibility for their activities.

The increase in the use of satellites for all of the above purposes has put pressure upon the geostationary orbit. This is the orbit 22,300 miles directly above the equator, where satellites circle at the same speed as the earth rotates. It is the only orbit capable of providing continuous contact with ground stations via a single satellite. The orbit is thus a finite resource.[341] However, in 1976, Brazil, Colombia, the Congo, Ecuador, Indonesia, Kenya, Uganda and Zaire signed the Bogotá Declaration under which they stated that 'the segments of geostationary synchronous orbit are part of the territory over which equatorial states exercise their sovereignty'.[342]

Other states have vigorously protested against this and it therefore cannot be taken as other than an assertion and a bargaining counter.[343] Nevertheless, the increase in satellite launches and the limited nature of the geostationary orbit facility call for urgent action to produce an acceptable series of principles governing its use.[344]

Suggestions for further reading

A. Cassese, Self-Determination of Peoples, Cambridge, 1995

B. Cheng, Studies in International Space Law, Oxford, 1997

J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2006

J. Crawford, 'State Practice and International Law in Relation to Secession', 69 BYIL, 1998, p. 85

R. Y. Jennings, The Acquisition of Territory in International Law, Manchester, 1963

F. Lyall and P. B. Larsen, Space Law, Aldershot, 2007

M. N. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa, Oxford, 1986

[340] See e.g. A/AC.105/320, Annex IV (1983).

[341] See e.g. article 33 of the 1973 International Telecommunications Convention, and Christol, Modern International Law, pp. 451 ff. See also the Study on the Feasibility of Closer Spacing of Satellites in the Geostationary Orbit, A/AC.105/340 (1985) and A/AC105/404 (1988). See also Gorove, Developments, part II, chapters 3 and 4.

[342] Gorove, Developments, pp. 891–5. See also ITU Doc. WARC-155 (1977) 81-E.

[343] See e.g. DUSPIL, 1979, pp. 1187–8.

[344] Note also the Convention on International Interests in Mobile Equipment, 2001 and the draft protocol on matters specific to space property.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

11

The law of the sea

The seas have historically performed two important functions: first, as a medium of communication, and secondly as a vast reservoir of resources, both living and non-living. Both of these functions have stimulated the development of legal rules.[1] The fundamental principle governing the law of the sea is that 'the land dominates the sea' so that the land territorial situation constitutes the starting point for the determination of the maritime rights of a coastal state.[2]

The seas were at one time thought capable of subjection to national sovereignties. The Portuguese in particular in the seventeenth century proclaimed huge tracts of the high seas as part of their territorial domain, but these claims stimulated a response by Grotius who elaborated the doctrine of the open seas, whereby the oceans as res communis

[1] See e.g. UN Convention on the Law of the Sea 1982 (eds. M. Nordquist et al.), The Hague, 6 vols., 1985–2003; D. Anderson, Modern Law of the Sea: Selected Essays, The Hague, 2007; Law of the Sea, Environmental Law and Settlement of Disputes (eds. T. M. Ndiaye and R. Wolfrum), The Hague, 2007; Law of the Sea: Progress and Prospects (eds. D. Freestone, R. Barnes and D. Ong), Oxford, 2006; L. B. Sohn and J. E. Noyes, Cases and Materials on the Law of the Sea, Ardsley, 2004; E. D. Brown, The International Law of the Sea, Aldershot, 2 vols., 1994; Oppenheim's International Law (eds. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992, chapter 6; Nguyen Quoc Dinh, P. Daillier and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 7th edn, Paris, 2002, p. 1139; T. Treves, 'Codification du Droit International et Pratique des États dans le Droit de la Mer', 223 HR, 1990 IV, p. 9; R. R. Churchill and A. V. Lowe, The Law of the Sea, 3rd edn, Manchester, 1999; R. J. Dupuy and D. Vignes, Traité du Nouveau Droit de la Mer, Brussels, 1985; Le Nouveau Droit International de la Mer (eds. D. Bardonnet and M. Virally), Paris, 1983; D. P. O'Connell, The International Law of the Sea, Oxford, 2 vols., 1982–4; New Directions in the Law of the Sea, Dobbs Ferry, vols. I–VI (eds. R. Churchill, M. Nordquist and S. H. Lay), 1973–7; ibid., VII–XI (eds. M. Nordquist and K. Simmons), 1980–1, and S. Oda, The Law of the Sea in Our Time, Leiden, 2 vols., 1977. See also the series Limits in the Seas, published by the Geographer of the US State Department.

[2] See e.g. Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 97; North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 51 and Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, paras. 113 and 126.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

were to be accessible to all nations but incapable of appropriation.[3] This view prevailed, partly because it accorded with the interests of the North European states, which demanded freedom of the seas for the purposes of exploration and expanding commercial intercourse with the East.

The freedom of the high seas rapidly became a basic principle of international law, but not all the seas were so characterised. It was permissible for a coastal state to appropriate a maritime belt around its coastline as territorial waters, or territorial sea, and treat it as an indivisible part of its domain. Much of the history of the law of the sea has centred on the extent of the territorial sea or the precise location of the dividing line between it and the high seas and other recognised zones. The original stipulation linked the width of the territorial sea to the ability of the coastal state to dominate it by military means from the confines of its own shore. But the present century has witnessed continual pressure by states to enlarge the maritime belt and thus subject more of the oceans to their exclusive jurisdiction.

Beyond the territorial sea, other jurisdictional zones have been in process of development. Coastal states may now exercise particular jurisdictional functions in the contiguous zone, and the trend of international law today is moving rapidly in favour of even larger zones in which the coastal state may enjoy certain rights to the exclusion of other nations, such as fishery zones, continental shelves and, more recently, exclusive economic zones. However, in each case whether a state is entitled to a territorial sea, continental shelf or exclusive economic zone is a question to be decided by the law of the sea.[4]

This gradual shift in the law of the sea towards the enlargement of the territorial sea (the accepted maximum limit is now a width of 12 nautical miles in contrast to 3 nautical miles some forty years ago), coupled with the continual assertion of jurisdictional rights over portions of what were regarded as high seas, reflects a basic change in emphasis in the attitude of states to the sea.

The predominance of the concept of the freedom of the high seas has been modified by the realisation of resources present in the seas and seabed beyond the territorial seas. Parallel with the developing tendency to assert ever greater claims over the high seas, however, has been the move towards

[3] Mare Liberum, 1609. See also O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, pp. 9 ff. The closed seas approach was put by e.g. J. Selden, Mare Clausum, 1635.

[4] El Salvador/Honduras (Nicaragua Intervening), ICJ Reports, 1990, pp. 92, 126; 97 ILR, p. 214.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

proclaiming a 'common heritage of mankind' regime over the seabed of the high seas. The law relating to the seas, therefore, has been in a state of flux for several decades as the conflicting principles have manifested themselves.

A series of conferences have been held, which led to the four 1958 Conventions on the Law of the Sea and then to the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea.[5] The 1958 Convention on the High Seas was stated in its preamble to be 'generally declaratory of established principles of international law', while the other three 1958 instruments can be generally accepted as containing both reiterations of existing rules and new rules.

The pressures leading to the Law of the Sea Conference, which lasted between 1974 and 1982 and involved a very wide range of states and international organisations, included a variety of economic, political and strategic factors. Many Third World states wished to develop the exclusive economic zone idea, by which coastal states would have extensive rights over a 200-mile zone beyond the territorial sea, and were keen to establish international control over the deep seabed, so as to prevent the technologically advanced states from being able to extract minerals from this vital and vast source freely and without political constraint. Western states were desirous of protecting their navigation routes by opposing any weakening of the freedom of passage through international straits particularly, and wished to protect their economic interests through free exploitation of the resources of the high seas and the deep seabed. Other states and groups of states sought protection of their particular interests.[6] Examples here would include the landlocked and geographically disadvantaged states, archipelagic states and coastal states. The effect of this kaleidoscopic range of interests was very marked and led to the 'package deal' concept of the final draft. According to this approach, for example, the Third World accepted passage through straits and enhanced continental shelf rights beyond the 200-mile limit from the coasts in return for the internationalisation of deep sea mining.[7]

The 1982 Convention contains 320 articles and 9 Annexes. It was adopted by 130 votes to 4, with 17 abstentions. The Convention entered

[5] The 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone came into force in 1964; the 1958 Convention on the High Seas came into force in 1962; the 1958 Convention on Fishing and Conservation of Living Resources came into force in 1966 and the 1958 Convention on the Continental Shelf came into force in 1964.

[6] See Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 15 ff.

[7] See e.g. H. Caminos and M. R. Molitor, 'Progressive Development of International Law and the Package Deal', 79 AJIL, 1985, p. 871.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

into force on 16 November 1994, twelve months after the required 60 ratifications. In order primarily to meet Western concerns with regard to the International Seabed Area (Part XI of the Convention), an Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the 1982 Convention was adopted on 29 July 1994.[8]

Many of the provisions in the 1982 Convention repeat principles enshrined in the earlier instruments and others have since become customary rules, but many new rules were proposed. Accordingly, a complicated series of relationships between the various states exists in this field, based on customary rules and treaty rules.[9] All states are prima facie bound by the accepted customary rules, while only the parties to the five treaties involved will be bound by the new rules contained therein, and since one must envisage some states not adhering to the 1982 Conventions, the 1958 rules will continue to be of importance.[10] During the twelve-year period between the signing of the Convention and its coming into force, the influence of its provisions was clear in the process of law creation by state practice.[11]

The territorial sea

Internal waters[12]

Internal waters are deemed to be such parts of the seas as are not either the high seas or relevant zones or the territorial sea, and are accordingly classed as appertaining to the land territory of the coastal state. Internal waters, whether harbours, lakes or rivers, are such waters as are to be found on the landward side of the baselines from which the width of the territorial and other zones is measured,[13] and are assimilated with the territory of

[8] See further below, p. 632.

[9] See the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 39; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 68; the Fisheries Jurisdiction (UK v. Iceland) case, ICJ Reports, 1974, p. 1; 55 ILR, p. 238 and the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case, Cmnd 7438, 1978; 54 ILR, p. 6. See also above, chapter 3, p. 77.

[10] Note that by article 311(1) of the 1982 Convention, the provisions of this Convention will prevail as between the states parties over the 1958 Conventions.

[11] See e.g. J. R. Stevenson and B. H. Oxman, 'The Future of the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea', 88 AJIL, 1994, p. 488.

[12] See e.g. Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 5; O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 9; V. D. Degan, 'Internal Waters', Netherlands YIL, 1986, p. 1 and Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 3.

[13] Article 5(1) of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and article 8(1) of the 1982 Convention. Note the exception in the latter provision with regard to archipelagic states, below, p. 565. See also Regina v. Farnquist (1981) 54 CCC (2d) 417; 94 ILR, p. 238.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the state. They differ from the territorial sea primarily in that there does not exist any right of innocent passage from which the shipping of other states may benefit. There is an exception to this rule where the straight baselines enclose as internal waters what had been territorial waters.[14]

In general, a coastal state may exercise its jurisdiction over foreign ships within its internal waters to enforce its laws, although the judicial authorities of the flag state (i.e. the state whose flag the particular ship flies) may also act where crimes have occurred on board ship. This concurrent jurisdiction may be seen in two cases.

In R v. Anderson,[15] in 1868, the Court of Criminal Appeal in the UK declared that an American national who had committed manslaughter on board a British vessel in French internal waters was subject to the jurisdiction of the British courts, even though he was also within the sovereignty of French justice (and American justice by reason of his nationality), and thus could be correctly convicted under English law. The US Supreme Court held in Wildenhus' case[16] that the American courts had jurisdiction to try a crew member of a Belgian vessel for the murder of another Belgian national when the ship was docked in the port of Jersey City in New York.[17]

A merchant ship in a foreign port or in foreign internal waters is automatically subject to the local jurisdiction (unless there is an express agreement to the contrary), although where purely disciplinarian issues related to the ship's crew are involved, which do not concern the maintenance of peace within the territory of the coastal state, then such matters would by courtesy be left to the authorities of the flag state to regulate.[18] Although some writers have pointed to theoretical differences between the common law and French approaches, in practice the same fundamental proposition applies.[19]

[14] Article 5(2) of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and article 8(2) of the 1982 Convention. See below, p. 559.

[15] 1 Cox's Criminal Cases 198.

[16] 120 US 1 (1887). See also Armament Dieppe SA v. US 399 F.2d 794 (1968).

[17] See the Madrid incident, where US officials asserted the right to interview a potential defector from a Soviet ship in New Orleans, 80 AJIL, 1986, p. 622.

[18] See e.g. NNB v. Ocean Trade Company 87 ILR, p. 96, where the Court of Appeal of The Hague held that a coastal state had jurisdiction over a foreign vessel where the vessel was within the territory of the coastal state and a dispute arose affecting not only the internal order of the ship but also the legal order of the coastal state concerned. The dispute concerned a strike on board ship taken on the advice of the International Transport Workers' Federation.

[19] See e.g. Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 65 ff. See also J. L. Lenoir, 'Criminal Jurisdiction over Foreign Merchant Ships', 10 Tulane Law Review, 1935, p. 13. See, with regard to the right of access to ports and other internal waters, A. V. Lowe, 'The Right of

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

However, a completely different situation operates where the foreign vessel involved is a warship. In such cases, the authorisation of the captain or of the flag state is necessary before the coastal state may exercise its jurisdiction over the ship and its crew. This is due to the status of the warship as a direct arm of the sovereign of the flag state.[20]

Baselines[21]

The width of the territorial sea is defined from the low-water mark around the coasts of the state. This is the traditional principle under customary international law and was reiterated in article 3 of the Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone in 1958 and article 5 of the 1982 Convention, and the low-water line along the coast is defined 'as marked on large-scale charts officially recognised by the coastal state'.[22]

In the majority of cases, it will not be very difficult to locate the low-water line which is to act as the baseline for measuring the width of the territorial sea.[23] By virtue of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and the 1982 Law of the Sea Convention, the low-water line of a low-tide elevation[24] may now be used as a baseline for measuring the breadth of the territorial sea if it is situated wholly or partly within the the territorial sea

Entry into Maritime Ports in International Law', 14 San Diego Law Review, 1977, p. 597, and O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. II, chapter 22. See also the Dangerous Vessels Act 1985.

20 See The Schooner Exchange v. McFaddon 7 Cranch 116 (1812). See also 930 HC Deb., col. 450, Written Answers, 29 April 1977.

21 See e.g. W. M. Reisman and G. S. Westerman, Straight Baselines in International Maritime Boundary Delimitation, New York, 1992; J. A. Roach and R. W. Smith, United States Responses to Excessive Maritime Claims, 2nd edn, The Hague, 1996, and L. Sohn, 'Baseline Considerations' in International Maritime Boundaries (eds. J. I. Charney and L. M. Alexander), Dordrecht, 1993, vol. I, p. 153.

22 See Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 97 and Eritrea/Yemen (Phase Two: Maritime Delimitation), 119 ILR, pp. 417, 458. See also Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 2; O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 5; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 607, and M. Mendelson, 'The Curious Case of Qatar v. Bahrain in the International Court of Justice', 72 BYIL, 2001, p. 183.

23 See the Dubai/Sharjah Border Award 91 ILR, pp. 543, 660–3, where the Arbitral Tribunal took into account the outermost permanent harbour works of the two states as part of the coast for the purpose of drawing the baselines.

24 See article 11(1), Convention on the Territorial Sea, 1958 and article 13(1), Law of the Sea Convention, 1982. A low-tide elevation is a naturally formed area of land which is surrounded by and above water at low tide, but submerged at high tide. See e.g. G. Marston, 'Low-Tide Elevations and Straight Baselines', 46 BYIL, 1972–3, p. 405, and D. Bowett, 'Islands, Rocks, Reefs and Low-Tide Elevations in Maritime Boundary Delimitations' in Charney and Alexander, International Maritime Boundaries, vol. I, p. 131.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

measured from the mainland or an island. However, a low-tide elevation wholly situated beyond the territorial sea will generate no territorial sea of its own.[25] When a low-tide elevation is situated in the overlapping area of the territorial sea of two states, both are in principle entitled to use this as part of the relevant low-water line in measuring their respective territorial sea.[26] However, the International Court has taken the view that low-tide elevations may not be regarded as part of the territory of the state concerned and thus cannot be fully assimilated with islands.[27] A low-tide elevation with a lighthouse or similar installation built upon it may be used for the purpose of drawing a straight baseline.[28]

Sometimes, however, the geography of the state's coasts will be such as to cause certain problems: for instance, where the coastline is deeply indented or there are numerous islands running parallel to the coasts, or where there exist bays cutting into the coastlines. Special rules have evolved to deal with this issue, which is of importance to coastal states, particularly where foreign vessels regularly fish close to the limits of the territorial sea. A more rational method of drawing baselines might have the effect of enclosing larger areas of the sea within the state's internal waters, and thus extend the boundaries of the territorial sea further than the traditional method might envisage.

This point was raised in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case,[29] before the International Court of Justice. The case concerned a Norwegian decree delimiting its territorial sea along some 1,000 miles of its coastline. However, instead of measuring the territorial sea from the low-water line, the Norwegians constructed a series of straight baselines linking the outermost parts of the land running along the skjaergaard (or fringe of islands and rocks) which parallels the Norwegian coastline. This had the effect of enclosing within its territorial limits parts of what would normally have been the high seas if the traditional method had been utilised. As a result, certain disputes involving British fishing boats arose, and the United [25] Article 13(2) of the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982. Further, low-tide elevations situated within 12 miles of another such elevation but beyond the territorial sea of the state may not themselves be used for the determination of the breadth of the territorial sea, the so-called 'leap-frogging method', Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 102. See also Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 141, but see Eritrea/Yemen, 114 ILR, pp. 1, 138.

[26] Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 101.

[27] Ibid., pp. 40, 102 and Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 141.

[28] See article 7(4) of the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982. See also article 47(4) with regard to archipelagic baselines.

[29] ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 116; 18 ILR, p. 86.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Kingdom challenged the legality of the Norwegian method of baselines under international law. The Court held that it was the outer line of the skjaergaard that was relevant in establishing the baselines, and not the low-water line of the mainland. This was dictated by geographic realities. The Court noted that the normal method of drawing baselines that are parallel to the coast (the tracé parallèle) was not applicable in this case because it would necessitate complex geometrical constructions in view of the extreme indentations of the coastline and the existence of the series of islands fringing the coasts.[30]

Since the usual methods did not apply, and taking into account the principle that the territorial sea must follow the general direction of the coasts, the concept of straight baselines drawn from the outer rocks could be considered.[31] The Court also made the point that the Norwegian system had been applied consistently over many years and had met no objections from other states, and that the UK had not protested until many years after it had first been introduced.[32] In other words, the method of straight baselines operated by Norway:

> had been consolidated by a constant and sufficiently long practice, in the face of which the attitude of governments bears witness to the fact that they did not consider it to be contrary to international law.[33]

Thus, although noting that Norwegian rights had been established through actual practice coupled with acquiescence, the Court regarded the straight baseline system itself as a valid principle of international law in view of the special geographic conditions of the area. The Court provided criteria for determining the acceptability of any such delimitations. The drawing of the baselines had not to depart from the general direction of the coast, in view of the close dependence of the territorial sea upon the land domain; the baselines had to be drawn so that the sea area lying within them had to be sufficiently closely linked to the land domain to be subject to the regime of internal waters, and it was permissible to consider [30] ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 128; 18 ILR, p. 91. Note also the Court's mention of the courbe tangente method of drawing arcs of circles from points along the low-water line, ibid.

[31] ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 129; 18 ILR, p. 92. Other states had already used such a system: see e.g. H. Waldock, 'The Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries Case', 28 BYIL, 1951, pp. 114, 148. See also I. Brownlie, Principles of Public International Law, 6th edn, Oxford, 2003, pp. 176 ff.

[32] ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 138; 18 ILR, p. 101. Cf. Judge McNair, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 171–80; 18 ILR, p. 123.

[33] ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 139; 18 ILR, p. 102.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

in the process 'certain economic interests peculiar to a region, the reality and importance of which are evidenced by long usage'.[34]

These principles emerging from the Fisheries case were accepted by states as part of international law within a comparatively short period.

Article 4 of the Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea, 1958 declared that the straight baseline system could be used in cases of indented coastlines or where there existed a skjaergaard, provided that the general direction of the coast was followed and that there were sufficiently close links between the sea areas within the lines and the land domain to be subject to the regime of internal waters. In addition, particular regional economic interests of long standing may be considered where necessary.[35]

A number of states now use the system, including, it should be mentioned, the United Kingdom as regards areas on the west coast of Scotland.[36] However, there is evidence that, perhaps in view of the broad criteria laid down, many states have used this system in circumstances that are not strictly justifiable in law.[37] However, the Court made it clear in Qatar v. Bahrain that > the method of straight baselines, which is an exception to the normal rules for the determination of baselines, may only be applied if a number of conditions are met. This method must be applied restrictively. Such conditions are primarily that either the coastline is deeply indented and cut into, or that there is a fringe of islands along the coast in its immediate vicinity.[38]

Further, the Court emphasised that the fact that a state considers itself a multiple-island state or a de facto archipelago does not allow it to

[34] ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 133; 18 ILR, p. 95.

[35] See also article 7 of the 1982 Convention. Note that straight baselines may not be drawn to and from low-tide elevations, unless lighthouses or similar installations which are permanently above sea level have been built on them: see article 4(3), 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and article 7(4), 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea. See also Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 100–1 and 102.

[36] Territorial Waters Order in Council, 1964, article 3, s. 1, 1965, Part III, s. 2, p. 6452A. See also the Territorial Sea (Limits) Order 1989 regarding the Straits of Dover. See generally, as regards state practice, Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 38–41, who note that some fifty-five to sixty-five states have used straight baselines, and M. Whiteman, Digest of International Law, Washington, vol. IV, pp. 21–35.

[37] See Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, p. 39. See also the objection of the European Union to the use by Iran and Thailand of straight baselines along practically their entire coastlines, UKMIL, 69 BYIL, 1998, pp. 540–2, and US objections to the use of straight baselines by Thailand, DUSPIL, 2000, p. 703.

[38] ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 103.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

deviate from the normal rules for the determination of baselines unless the relevant conditions are met.[39]

Where the result of the straight baseline method is to enclose as internal waters areas previously regarded as part of the territorial sea or high seas, a right of innocent passage shall be deemed to exist in such waters by virtue of article 5(2) of the 1958 Convention.[40]

Bays[41]

Problems also arise as to the approach to be adopted with regard to bays, in particular whether the waters of wide-mouthed bays ought to be treated as other areas of the sea adjacent to the coast, so that the baseline of the territorial sea would be measured from the low-water mark of the coast of the bay, or whether the device of the straight baseline could be used to 'close off' the mouth of the bay of any width and the territorial limit measured from that line.

It was long accepted that a straight closing line could be used across the mouths of bays, but there was considerable disagreement as to the permitted width of the bay beyond which this would not operate.[42] The point was settled in article 7 of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea. This declared that:

> if the distance between the low-water marks of the natural entrance points of a bay does not exceed twenty-four miles, a closing line may be drawn between these two low-water marks, and the waters enclosed thereby shall be considered as internal waters, otherwise a straight baseline of 24 miles may be drawn.[43]

This provision, however, does not apply to historic bays. These are bays the waters of which are treated by the coastal state as internal in view of historic rights supported by general acquiescence rather than any specific [39] Ibid. The Court rejected Bahrain's claim that certain maritime features east of its main islands constituted a fringe of islands: ibid.

[40] See also article 8(2) of the 1982 Convention.

[41] See e.g. Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, p. 28; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 41 ff., and O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, p. 209. See also G. Westerman, The Juridical Bay, Oxford, 1987.

[42] See e.g. the North Atlantic Coast Fisheries case, 11 RIAA, p. 167 (1910) and the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 116; 18 ILR, p. 86, to the effect that no general rules of international law had been uniformly accepted.

[43] See also article 10 of the 1982 Convention.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

principle of international law.[44] A number of states have claimed historic bays: for example, Canada with respect to Hudson Bay (although the US has opposed this)[45] and certain American states as regards the Gulf of Fonseca.[46] The question of this Gulf came before the International Court in the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras; Nicaragua intervening).[47] The Court noted that the states concerned and commentators were agreed that the Gulf was a historic bay, but this was defined in terms of the particular historical situation of that Gulf, especially as it constituted a pluri-state bay, for which there were no agreed and codified general rules of the kind well established for single-state bays.[48] In the light of the particular historical circumstances and taking particular note of the 1917 decision, the Court found that the Gulf, beyond a long-accepted 3-mile maritime belt for the coastal states, constituted historic waters subject to the co-ownership or a condominium of the three coastal states.[49] The Court continued by noting that the vessels of other states would enjoy a right of innocent passage in the waters beyond the coastal belt in order to ensure access to any one of the three coastal states.[50] Having decided that the three states enjoyed a condominium within the Gulf, the Court concluded that there was a tripartite presence at the closing line of the Gulf.[51]

The United States Supreme Court has taken the view that where waters are outside the statutory limits for inland waters, the exercise of sovereignty required to establish title to a historic bay amounted to the exclusion of all foreign vessels and navigation from the area claimed. The continuous authority exercised in this fashion had to be coupled with the acquiescence of states. This was the approach in the US v. State

[44] See the Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 74; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 67.

[45] See Whiteman, Digest, vol. IV, pp. 250–7.

[46] See El Salvador v. Nicaragua 11 AJIL, 1917, p. 674.

[47] ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 351; 97 ILR, p. 266.

[48] ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 589; 97 ILR, p. 505. But cf. the Dissenting Opinion of Judge Oda, ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 745; 97 ILR, p. 661.

[49] ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 601; 97 ILR, p. 517. See also generally C. Symmons, Historic Waters in the Law of the Sea: A Modern Re-appraisal, The Hague, 2007.

[50] ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 605; 97 ILR, p. 521.

[51] ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 608–9; 97 ILR, pp. 524–5. See also M. N. Shaw, 'Case Concerning the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras: Nicaragua Intervening), Judgment of 11 September 1992', 42 ICLQ, 1993, p. 929, and A. Gioia, 'The Law of Multinational Bays and the Case of the Gulf of Fonseca', Netherlands YIL, 1993, p. 81.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of Alaska case[52] concerning the waters of Cook Inlet. The Supreme Court held that Alaska had not satisfied the terms and that the Inlet had not been regarded as a historic bay under Soviet, American or Alaskan sovereignty. Accordingly, it was the federal state and not Alaska which was entitled to the subsurface of Cook Inlet.[53]

In response to the Libyan claim to the Gulf of Sirte (Sidra) as a historic bay and the consequent drawing of a closing line of nearly 300 miles in length in 1973, several states immediately protested, including the US and the states of the European Community.[54] The US in a note to Libya in 1974 referred to 'the international law standards of past open, notorious and effective exercise of authority, and the acquiescence of foreign nations'[55] and has on several occasions sent naval and air forces into the Gulf in order to maintain its opposition to the Libyan claim and to assert that the waters of the Gulf constitute high seas.[56] Little evidence appears, in fact, to support the Libyan contention.

Islands[57]

As far as islands are concerned, the general provisions noted above regarding the measurement of the territorial sea apply. Islands are defined in the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea as consisting of 'a naturally-formed area of land, surrounded by water, which is above water at high tide',[58] and they can generate a territorial sea, contiguous zone, exclusive [52] 422 US 184 (1975). See also L. J. Bouchez, The Regime of Bays in International Law, Leiden, 1963, and the Tunisia–Libya Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 74; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 67.

[53] See also United States v. California 381 US 139 (1965); United States v. Louisiana (Louisiana Boundary Case) 394 US 11 (1969); United States v. Maine (Rhode Island and New York Boundary Case) 471 US 375 (1985) and Alabama and Mississippi Boundary Case, United States v. Louisiana 470 US 93 (1985).

[54] See Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, p. 45, and UKMIL, 57 BYIL, 1986, pp. 579–80. See also F. Francioni, 'The Gulf of Sidra Incident (United States v. Libya) and International Law', 5 Italian Yearbook of International Law, 1980–1, p. 85.

[55] See 68 AJIL, 1974, p. 510. See also Cumulative DUSPIL 1981–8, Washington, 1994, vol. II, p. 1810.

[56] See e.g. UKMIL, 57 BYIL, 1986, pp. 581–2.

[57] See e.g. H. W. Jayewardene, The Regime of Islands in International Law, Dordrecht, 1990; D. W. Bowett, The Legal Regime of Islands in International Law, New York, 1979; C. Symmons, The Maritime Zone of Islands in International Law, The Hague, 1979; J. Simonides, 'The Legal Status of Islands in the New Law of the Sea', 65 Revue de Droit International, 1987, p. 161, and R. O'Keefe, 'Palm-Fringed Benefits: Island Dependencies in the New Law of the Sea', 45 ICLQ, 1996, p. 408.

[58] Article 10(1). See also article 121(1) of the 1982 Convention.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

economic zone and continental shelf where relevant.[59] Where there exists a chain of islands which are less than 24 miles apart, a continuous band of territorial sea may be generated.[60] However, article 121(3) of the 1982 Convention provides that 'rocks which cannot sustain human habitation or economic life of their own shall have no exclusive economic zone or continental shelf'.[61] Article 121(3) begs a series of questions, such as the precise dividing line between rocks and islands and as to the actual meaning of an 'economic life of their own', and a number of states have made controversial claims.[62] Whether this provision over and above its appearance in the Law of the Sea Convention is a rule of customary law is unclear.[63]

Archipelagic states[64]

Problems have arisen as a result of efforts by states comprising a number of islands to draw straight baselines around the outer limits of their islands, [59] Article 121(2) of the 1982 Convention. See also the Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway) case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 37, 64–5; 99 ILR, pp. 395, 432–3. Article 10(2) of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea referred only to the territorial sea of islands.

[60] See Eritrea/Yemen (Phase Two: Maritime Delimitation), 119 ILR, pp. 417, 463.

[61] See the Jan Mayen report, 20 ILM, 1981, pp. 797, 803; 62 ILR, pp. 108, 114, and the Declaration by Judge Evensen in the Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway) case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 37, 84–5; 99 ILR, pp. 395, 452–3. Note, as regards Rockall and the conflicting UK, Irish, Danish and Icelandic views, Symmons, Maritime Zone, pp. 117–18, 126; E. D. Brown, 'Rockall and the Limits of National Jurisdiction of the United Kingdom', 2 Marine Policy, 1978, pp. 181–211 and 275–303, and O'Keefe, 'Palm-Fringed Benefits'. See also 878 HC Deb., col. 82, Written Answers, and The Times, 8 May 1985, p. 6 (Danish claims) and the Guardian, 1 May 1985, p. 30 (Icelandic claims). UK sovereignty over the uninhabited island of Rockall was proclaimed in 1955 and confirmed by the Island of Rockall Act 1972, UKMIL, 68 BYIL, 1997, p. 589. The UK Minister of State declared that the 12-mile territorial sea around Rockall was consistent with the terms of the 1982 Convention and that there was no reason to believe that this was not accepted by the international community, apart from the Republic of Ireland, UKMIL, 60 BYIL, 1989, p. 666. The UK claim to a 200-mile fishing zone around Rockall made in the Fishery Limits Act 1976 was withdrawn in 1997 consequent upon accession to the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982 and the 12-mile territorial sea confirmed: see UKMIL, 68 BYIL, 1997, pp. 599–600 and UKMIL, 71 BYIL, 2000, p. 601.

[62] See e.g. Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 163–4, and J. I. Charney, 'Rocks that Cannot Sustain Human Habitation', 93 AJIL, 1999, p. 873.

[63] Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, p. 164.

[64] See e.g. Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 8; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 6; O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 6; Bowett, Legal Regime, chapter 4; C. F. Amerasinghe, 'The Problem of Archipelagos in the International Law of the Sea', 23 ICLQ, 1974, p. 539, and D. P. O'Connell, 'Mid-Ocean Archipelagos in International Law', 45 BYIL, 1971, p. 1.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

thus 'boxing in' the whole territory. Indonesia in particular has resorted to this method, against the protests of a number of states since it tends to reduce previously considered areas of the high seas extensively used as shipping lanes to the sovereignty of the archipelago state concerned.[65]

There has been a great deal of controversy as to which international law principles apply in the case of archipelagos and the subject was not expressly dealt with in the 1958 Geneva Convention.[66] Article 46(a) defines an archipelagic state as 'a state constituted wholly by one or more archipelagos and may include other islands', while article 46(b) defines archipelagos as 'a group of islands, including parts of islands, interconnecting waters and other natural features which are so closely interrelated that such islands, waters and other natural features form an intrinsic geographical, economic and political entity, or which historically have been regarded as such'. This raises questions as to whether states that objectively fall within the definition are therefore automatically to be regarded as archipelagic states. The list of states that have not declared that they constitute archipelagic states, although they would appear to conform with the definition, would include the UK and Japan.[67] Bahrain contended in Qatar v. Bahrain that it constituted a 'de facto archipelago or multiple island state' and that it could declare itself an archipelagic state under the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982, enabling it to take advantage of the straight baselines rule contained in article 47. The Court, however, noted that such a claim did not fall within Bahrain's formal submissions and thus it did not need to take a position on the issue.[68] Article 47 provides that an archipelagic state may draw straight archipelagic baselines joining the outermost points of the outermost islands and drying reefs of the archipelago, which would then serve as the relevant baselines for other purposes. There are a number of conditions before this may be done, however, and article 47 provides as follows:

[65] O'Connell, 'Mid-Ocean Archipelagos', pp. 23–4, 45–7 and 51, and Whiteman, Digest, vol. IV, p. 284. See also the Indonesian Act No. 4 of 18 February 1960 Concerning Indonesian Waters, extracted in Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. II, p. 98; the Philippines Act to Define the Baselines of the Territorial Sea of the Philippines, Act No. 3046 of 17 June 1961, and the Philippines Declaration with respect to the 1982 Convention, ibid., pp. 100–1 (with objections from the USSR and Australia, ibid., pp. 101–2). See, as to the US objection to the Philippines Declaration, Cumulative DUSPIL 1981–8, vol. II, p. 1066, and to claims relating to the Faroes, Galapagos, Portugal and Sudan, Roach and Smith, United States Responses, pp. 112 ff.

[66] But see, as regards 'coastal archipelagos', article 4 of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea.

[67] See e.g. Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, p. 121.

[68] ICJ Reports, 2001, paras. 181–3.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

1. An archipelagic state may draw straight archipelagic baselines joining the outermost points of the outermost islands and drying reefs of the archipelago provided that within such baselines are included the main islands and in areas in which the ratio of the area of the water to the area of the land, including atolls, is between 1 to 1 and 9 to 1.
2. The length of such baselines shall not exceed 100 nautical miles, except that up to 3 per cent of the total number of baselines enclosing any archipelago may exceed that length, up to a maximum length of 125 nautical miles.
3. The drawing of such baselines shall not depart to any appreciable extent from the general configuration of the archipelago.
4. Such baselines shall not be drawn from low-tide elevations, unless lighthouses or similar installations which are permanently above sea level have been built on them or where a low-tide elevation is situated wholly or partly at a distance not exceeding the breadth of the territorial sea from the nearest island.
5. The system of such baselines shall not be applied by an archipelagic state in such a manner as to cut off from the high seas or the exclusive economic zone the territorial sea of another state.
6. If a part of the archipelagic waters of an archipelagic state lies between two parts of an immediately adjacent neighbouring state, existing rights and all other legitimate interests which the latter state has traditionally exercised in such waters and all rights stipulated by agreement between those states shall continue and be respected.
7. For the purpose of computing the ratio of water to land under paragraph 1, land areas may include waters lying within the fringing reefs of islands and atolls, including that part of a steep-sided oceanic plateau which is enclosed or nearly enclosed by a chain of limestone islands and drying reefs lying on the perimeter of the plateau.
8. The baselines drawn in accordance with this article shall be shown on charts of a scale or scales adequate for ascertaining their position. Alternatively, lists of geographic co-ordinates of points, specifying the geodetic datum, may be substituted.
9. The archipelagic states shall give due publicity to such charts or lists of geographical co-ordinates and shall deposit a copy of each such chart or list with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

All the waters within such baselines are archipelagic waters[69] over which the state has sovereignty,[70] but existing agreements, traditional fishing [69] Article 50 provides that within its archipelagic waters, the archipelagic state may draw closing lines for the delimitation of internal waters.

[70] Article 49.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

rights and existing submarine cables must be respected.[71] In addition, ships of all states shall enjoy the rights of innocent passage through archipelagic waters[72] and all the ships and aircraft are to enjoy a right of archipelagic sea lanes passage through such lanes and air routes designated by the archipelagic state for 'continuous and expeditious passage'.[73]

In response to a reported closure in 1988 of the Straits of Sunda and Lombok by Indonesia, the US stressed that the archipelagic provisions of the 1982 Convention reflected customary international law and that those straits were subject to the regime of archipelagic sea lanes passage. Accordingly, it was pointed out that any interference with such passage would violate international law.[74]

The width of the territorial sea[75]

There has historically been considerable disagreement as to how far the territorial sea may extend from the baselines. Originally, the 'cannon-shot' rule defined the width required in terms of the range of shore-based artillery, but at the turn of the nineteenth century, this was transmuted into the 3-mile rule. This was especially supported by the United States and the United Kingdom, and any detraction had to be justified by virtue of historic rights and general acquiescence as, for example, the Scandinavian claim to 4 miles.[76]

However, the issue was much confused by the claims of many coastal states to exercise certain jurisdictional rights for particular purposes: for example, fisheries, customs and immigration controls. It was not until after the First World War that a clear distinction was made between claims to enlarge the width of the territorial sea and claims over particular zones.

Recently the 3-mile rule has been discarded as a rule of general application to be superseded by contending assertions. The 1958 Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea did not include an article on the subject because of disagreements among the states, while the 1960 Geneva Conference failed to accept a United States–Canadian proposal for a

[71] Article 51. [72] Article 52.

[73] Article 53. For recent state practice, see Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 125 ff.

[74] 83 AJIL, 1989, pp. 559–61. See also Cumulative DUSPIL 1981–8, vol. II, p. 2060.

[75] See e.g. Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, p. 43; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 71 ff., and O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 4. See also Oppenheim's International Law, p. 611.

[76] See e.g. H. S. K. Kent, 'Historical Origins of the Three-mile Limit', 48 AJIL, 1954, p. 537, and The Anna (1805) 165 ER 809. See also US v. Kessler 1 Baldwin's C C Rep. 15 (1829).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

6-mile territorial sea coupled with an exclusive fisheries zone for a further 6 miles by only one vote.[77]

Article 3 of the 1982 Convention, however, notes that all states have the right to establish the breadth of the territorial sea up to a limit not exceeding 12 nautical miles from the baselines. This clearly accords with the evolving practice of states.[78] The UK adopted a 12-mile limit in the Territorial Sea Act 1987, for instance, as did the US by virtue of Proclamation No. 5928 in December 1988.[79]

The juridical nature of the territorial sea[80]

The territorial sea appertains to the territorial sovereignty of the coastal state and thus belongs to it automatically. For example, all newly independent states (with a coast) come to independence with an entitlement to a territorial sea.[81] There have been a number of theories as to the precise legal character of the territorial sea of the coastal state, ranging from treating the territorial sea as part of the res communis, but subject to certain rights exercisable by the coastal state, to regarding the territorial sea as part of the coastal state's territorial domain subject to a right of innocent passage by foreign vessels.[82] Nevertheless, it cannot be disputed that the coastal state enjoys sovereign rights over its maritime belt and extensive jurisdictional control, having regard to the relevant rules of international law. The fundamental restriction upon the sovereignty of the coastal state is the right of other nations to innocent passage through the territorial sea, and this distinguishes the territorial sea from the internal waters of the state, which are fully within the unrestricted jurisdiction of the coastal nation.

[77] See O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, pp. 163–4.

[78] The notice issued by the Hydrographic Department of the Royal Navy on 1 January 2008 shows that 156 states or territories claim a 12-mile territorial sea, with 16 states or territories claiming less than this and only 7 states claiming more than 12 miles: see www.ukho.gov.uk/content/amdAttachments/2008/annual_nms/12.pdf. A table of National Maritime Claims issued by the UN shows that, as of 24 October 2007, 141 states claimed a territorial sea of 12 miles or under, with 8 states claiming a larger territorial sea: see A/56/58 and www.un.org/Depts/los/LEGISLATIONANDTREATIES/PDFFILES/.

[79] As to delimitation of the territorial sea, see below, p. 591.

[80] See Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 6; O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 3. See also Brownlie, Principles, pp. 186 ff., and Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 4.

[81] Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 234.

[82] O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, pp. 60–7.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention on the Territorial Sea, 1958[83] provide that the coastal state's sovereignty extends over its territorial sea and to the airspace and seabed and subsoil thereof, subject to the provisions of the Convention and of international law. The territorial sea forms an undeniable part of the land territory to which it is bound, so that a cession of land will automatically include any band of territorial waters.[84]

The coastal state may, if it so desires, exclude foreign nationals and vessels from fishing within its territorial sea and (subject to agreements to the contrary) from coastal trading (known as cabotage), and reserve these activities for its own citizens.

Similarly the coastal state has extensive powers of control relating to, amongst others, security and customs matters. It should be noted, however, that how far a state chooses to exercise the jurisdiction and sovereignty to which it may lay claim under the principles of international law will depend upon the terms of its own municipal legislation, and some states will not wish to take advantage of the full extent of the powers permitted them within the international legal system.[85]

The right of innocent passage

The right of foreign merchant ships (as distinct from warships) to pass unhindered through the territorial sea of a coast has long been an accepted principle in customary international law, the sovereignty of the coast state notwithstanding. However, the precise extent of the doctrine is blurred and open to contrary interpretation, particularly with respect to the requirement that the passage must be 'innocent'.[86] Article 17 of the 1982 Convention lays down the following principle: 'ships of all states, whether coastal or land-locked, enjoy the right of innocent passage through the territorial sea'.

The doctrine was elaborated in article 14 of the Convention on the Territorial Sea, 1958, which emphasised that the coastal state must not [83] See also article 2 of the 1982 Convention.

[84] See the Grisbadarna case, 11 RIAA, p. 147 (1909) and the Beagle Channel case, HMSO, 1977; 52 ILR, p. 93. See also Judge McNair, Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 160; 18 ILR, pp. 86, 113.

[85] See also R v. Keyn (1876) 2 Ex.D. 63 and the consequential Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act 1878.

[86] See Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, pp. 53 ff.; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 82 ff., and O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 7. See also Oppenheim's International Law, p. 615.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

hamper innocent passage and must publicise any dangers to navigation in the territorial sea of which it is aware. Passage is defined as navigation through the territorial sea for the purpose of crossing that sea without entering internal waters or of proceeding to or from that sea without entering internal waters or of proceeding to or from internal waters. It may include temporary stoppages, but only if they are incidental to ordinary navigation or necessitated by distress or force majeure.[87]

The coastal state may not impose charges for such passage unless they are in payment for specific services,[88] and ships engaged in passage are required to comply with the coastal state's regulations covering, for example, navigation in so far as they are consistent with international law.[89]

Passage ceases to be innocent under article 14(4) of the 1958 Convention where it is 'prejudicial to the peace, good order or security of the coastal state' and in the case of foreign fishing vessels when they do not observe such laws and regulations as the coastal state may make and publish to prevent these ships from fishing in the territorial sea. In addition, submarines must navigate on the surface and show their flag.

Where passage is not innocent, the coastal state may take steps to prevent it in its territorial sea and, where ships are proceeding to internal waters, it may act to forestall any breach of the conditions to which admission of such ships to internal waters is subject. Coastal states have the power temporarily to suspend innocent passage of foreign vessels where it is essential for security reasons, provided such suspension has been published and provided it does not cover international straits.

Article 19(2) of the 1982 Convention has developed the notion of innocent passage contained in article 14(4) of the 1958 Convention by the provision of examples of prejudicial passage such as the threat or use of force; weapons practice; spying; propaganda; breach of customs, fiscal, immigration or sanitary regulations; wilful and serious pollution; fishing; research or survey activities and interference with coastal communications or other facilities. In addition, a wide-ranging clause includes 'any activity not having a direct bearing on passage'. This would appear to have altered the burden of proof from the coastal state to the other party with regard to innocent passage, as well as being somewhat difficult to define. By virtue of article 24 of the 1982 Convention, coastal states must not hamper the [87] See article 18 of the 1982 Convention. Passage includes crossing the territorial sea in order to call at roadsteads or port facilities outside internal waters: article 18(1) and see the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 12, 111; 76 ILR, p. 1.

[88] Article 26 of the 1982 Convention.

[89] See article 21(4) of the 1982 Convention.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

innocent passage of foreign ships, either by imposing requirements upon them which would have the practical effect of denying or impairing the right or by discrimination. Article 17 of the Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea, 1958 provided that foreign ships exercising the right of innocent passage were to comply with the laws and regulations enacted by the coastal state, in particular those relating to transport and navigation. This was developed in article 21(1) of the 1982 Convention, which expressly provided that the coastal state could adopt laws and regulations concerning innocent passage with regard to:

(a) the safety of navigation and the regulation of maritime traffic;
(b) the protection of navigational aids and facilities and other facilities or installations;
(c) the protection of cables and pipelines;
(d) the conservation of the living resources of the sea;
(e) the prevention of infringement of the fisheries laws and regulations of the coastal state;
(f) the preservation of the environment of the coastal state and the prevention, reduction and control of pollution thereof;
(g) marine scientific research and hydrographic surveys;
(h) the prevention of infringement of the customs, fiscal, immigration or sanitary laws and regulations of the coastal state.

Breach of such laws and regulations will render the offender liable to prosecution, but will not make the passage non-innocent as such, unless article 19 has been infringed.[90]

One major controversy of considerable importance revolves around the issue of whether the passage of warships in peacetime is or is not innocent.[91] The question was further complicated by the omission of an article on the problem in the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea, and the discussion of innocent passage in a series of articles headed 'Rules applicable to all ships'. This has led some writers to assert that this includes warships by inference, but other authorities maintain that such an important issue could not be resolved purely by omission and inference, especially in view of the reservations by many states to the Convention rejecting the principle of innocent passage for warships and in the light [90] Under article 22 of the 1982 Convention, the coastal state may establish designated sea lanes and traffic separation schemes in its territorial sea. See UKMIL, 64 BYIL, 1993, p. 688 for details of traffic separation schemes around the UK.

[91] See e.g. O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, pp. 274–97. See also Oppenheim's International Law, p. 618.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

of comments in the various preparatory materials to the 1958 Geneva Convention.[92]

It was primarily the Western states, with their preponderant naval power, that historically maintained the existence of a right of innocent passage for warships, to the opposition of the then communist and Third World nations. However, having regard to the rapid growth in their naval capacity and the ending of the Cold War, Soviet attitudes underwent a change.[93]

In September 1989, the US and the USSR issued a joint 'Uniform Interpretation of the Rules of International Law Governing Innocent Passage'.[94] This reaffirmed that the relevant rules of international law were stated in the 1982 Convention. It then provided that:

> [a]ll ships, including warships, regardless of cargo, armament or means of propulsion, enjoy the right of innocent passage through the territorial sea in accordance with international law, for which neither prior notification nor authorisation is required.

The statement noted that where a ship in passage through the territorial sea was not engaged in any of the activities laid down in article 19(2), it was 'in innocent passage' since that provision was exhaustive. Ships in passage were under an obligation to comply with the laws and regulations of the coastal state adopted in conformity with articles 21, 22, 23 and 25 of the 1982 Convention, provided such laws and regulations did not have the effect of denying or impairing the exercise of the right of innocent passage.

This important statement underlines the view that the list of activities laid down in article 19(2) is exhaustive so that a ship passing through the territorial sea not engaging in any of these activities is in innocent passage. It also lends considerable weight to the view that warships have indeed [92] O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, pp. 290–2. See also Brownlie, Principles, pp. 188–9.

[93] See also Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 54–6. The issue was left open at the Third UN Conference on the Law of the Sea and does not therefore appear in the 1982 Convention. Note, however, that Western and communist states both proposed including a reference to warships in early sessions of the Conference: see UNCLOS III, Official Records, vol. III, pp. 183, 203, 192 and 196. See also article 29(2) of the 1975 Informal Single Negotiating Text. The right of warships to innocent passage was maintained by the US following an incident during which four US warships sailed through Soviet territorial waters off the Crimean coast: see The Times, 19 March 1986, p. 5.

[94] See 84 AJIL, 1990, p. 239.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

a right of innocent passage through the territorial sea and one that does not necessitate prior notification or authorisation.[95]

Jurisdiction over foreign ships[96]

Where foreign ships are in passage through the territorial sea, the coastal state may only exercise its criminal jurisdiction as regards the arrest of any person or the investigation of any matter connected with a crime committed on board ship in defined situations. These are enumerated in article 27(1) of the 1982 Convention, reaffirming article 19(1) of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea, as follows:

> (a) if the consequences of the crime extend to the coastal state; or (b) if the crime is of a kind likely to disturb the peace of the country or the good order of the territorial sea; or (c) if the assistance of the local authorities has been requested by the master of the ship or by a diplomatic agent or consular officer of the country of the flag state; or (d) if such measures are necessary for the suppression of illicit traffic in narcotic drugs or pyschotropic substances.[97]

However, if the ship is passing through the territorial sea having left the internal waters of the coastal state, then the coastal state may act in any manner prescribed by its laws as regards arrest or investigation on board ship and is not restricted by the terms of article 27(1). But the authorities of the coastal state cannot act where the crime was committed before the ship entered the territorial sea, providing the ship is not entering or has not entered internal waters.

Under article 28 of the 1982 Convention, the coastal state should not stop or divert a foreign ship passing through its territorial sea for the purpose of exercising civil jurisdiction in relation to a person on board ship, nor levy execution against or arrest the ship, unless obligations are involved which were assumed by the ship itself in the course of, or for the [95] See also Cumulative DUSPIL 1981–8, vol. II, pp. 1844 ff., and UKMIL, 65 BYIL, 1994, pp. 642–7. See also Cumulative DUSPIL 1981–8, vol. II, p. 1854 with regard to the claim by some states that the passage of nuclear-powered ships or ships carrying nuclear substances through territorial waters requires prior authorisation or prior consent. See also UKMIL, 62 BYIL, 1991, pp. 632–3 with regard to UK views on claims concerning prior authorisation or consent with regard to the passage of ships carrying hazardous wastes.

[96] See e.g. O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapters 23 and 24. See also Oppenheim's International Law, p. 620, and Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, p. 62. Note that these rules are applicable to foreign ships and government commercial ships.

[97] The latter phrase was added by article 27(1) of the 1982 Convention.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

purpose of, its voyage through waters of the coastal state, or unless the ship is passing through the territorial sea on its way from internal waters. The above rules do not, however, prejudice the right of a state to levy execution against or to arrest, for the purpose of any civil proceedings, a foreign ship lying in the territorial sea or passing through the territorial sea after leaving internal waters.[98]

Warships and other government ships operated for non-commercial purposes are immune from the jurisdiction of the coastal state, although they may be required to leave the territorial sea immediately for breach of rules governing passage and the flag state will bear international responsibility in cases of loss or damage suffered as a result.[99]

International straits[100]

Article 16(4) of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea declares that:

> there shall be no suspension of the innocent passage of foreign ships through straits which are used for international navigation between one part of the high seas and another part of the high seas or the territorial sea of a foreign state.

This provision should be read in conjunction with the decision in the Corfu Channel case.[101] In this case, British warships passing through the straits were fired upon by Albanian guns. Several months later, an augmented force of cruisers and destroyers sailed through the North Corfu Channel and two of them were badly damaged after striking mines. This impelled the British authorities to sweep the Channel three weeks later, [98] See also article 20 of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone.

[99] Articles 29–32 of the 1982 Convention. See also articles 21–3 of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone.

[100] See e.g. Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 7; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 5; O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 8; R. Lapidoth, Les Détroits en Droit International, Paris, 1972; T. L. Koh, Straits in International Navigation, London, 1982; J. N. Moore, 'The Regime of Straits and the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea', 74 AJIL, 1980, p. 77; W. M. Reisman, 'The Regime of Straits and National Security', ibid., p. 48; H. Caminos, 'Le Régime des Détroits dans la Convention des Nations Unies de 1982 sur le Droit de la Mer', 205 HR, 1987 V, p. 9; S. N. Nandan and D. H. Anderson, 'Straits Used for International Navigation: A Commentary on Part III of the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea 1982', 60 BYIL, 1989, p. 159; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 633; Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 1168, and B. B. Jia, The Regime of Straits in International Law, Oxford, 1998.

[101] ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 4; 16 AD, p. 155.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

and to clear it of some twenty mines of German manufacture. The Court, in a much-quoted passage, emphasised that:

> states in time of peace have a right to send their warships through straits used for international navigation between two parts of the high seas without the previous authorisation of a coastal state, provided that the passage is innocent.[102]

It was also noted that the minesweeping operation was in no way 'innocent' and was indeed a violation of Albania's sovereignty, although the earlier passages by British naval vessels were legal.[103]

The 1982 Convention established a new regime for straits used for international navigation. The principle is reaffirmed that the legal status of the waters of the straits in question is unaffected by the provisions dealing with passage.[104]

A new right of transit passage is posited with respect to straits used for international navigation between one part of the high seas or an exclusive economic zone and another part of the high seas or an exclusive economic zone.[105] It involves the exercise of the freedom of navigation and overflight solely for the purpose of continuous and expeditious transit of the strait and does not preclude passage through the strait to enter or leave a state bordering that strait.[106] States bordering the straits in question are not to hamper or suspend transit passage.[107]

There are three exceptions to the right: under article 36 where a route exists through the strait through the high seas or economic zone of similar navigational convenience; under article 38(1) in the case of a strait formed by an island of a state bordering the strait and its mainland, where there exists seaward of the island a route through the high seas or economic zone of similar navigational convenience; and under article 45 where straits connect an area of the high seas or economic zone with the territorial [102] Ibid., p. 28; 16 AD, p. 161. The Court emphasised that the decisive criterion regarding the definition of 'strait' was the geographical situation of the strait as connecting two parts of the high seas, coupled with the fact that it was actually used for international navigation, ibid. Note that article 16(4) added to the customary rights the right of innocent passage from the high seas to the territorial sea of a state. This was of particular importance to the question of access through the straits of Tiran to the Israeli port of Eilat: see further below, note 115.

[103] Ibid., pp. 30–1, 33; 16 AD, pp. 163, 166. Note the final settlement of the case, UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 781.

[104] Articles 34 and 35.

[105] Article 37. See also R. P. Anand, 'Transit Passage and Overflight in International Straits', 26 IJIL, 1986, p. 72, and Oppenheim's International Law, p. 636.

[106] Article 38. [107] Article 44.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

sea of a third state. Ships and aircraft in transit must observe the relevant international regulations and refrain from all activities other than those incidental to their normal modes of continuous and expeditious transit, unless rendered necessary by force majeure or by distress.[108] Thus, although there is no formal requirement for 'innocent' transit passage, the effect of articles 38 and 39 would appear to be to render transit passage subject to the same constraints. Under article 45, the regime of innocent passage will apply with regard to straits used for international navigation excluded from the transit passage provisions by article 38(1) and to international straits between a part of the high seas or economic zone and the territorial sea of a foreign state. In such cases, there shall be no suspension of the right to innocent passage.[109] The regime of transit passage specifically allows for the passage of aircraft and probably for underwater submarines, while there are fewer constraints on conduct during passage and less power for the coastal state to control passage than in the case of innocent passage.[110] Transit passage cannot be suspended for security or indeed any other reasons.[111]

It is unclear whether the right of transit passage has passed into customary law. Practice is as yet ambiguous.[112] Some states have provided explicitly for rights of passage through international straits. When the UK extended its territorial sea in 1987 to 12 miles, one of the consequences was that the high sea corridor through the Straits of Dover disappeared. The following year an agreement was signed with France which related to the delimitation of the territorial sea in the Straits of Dover and a joint declaration was issued in which both governments recognised:

> rights of unimpeded transit passage for merchant vessels, state vessels and, in particular, warships following their normal mode of navigation, as well as the right of overflight for aircraft, in the Straits of Dover. It is understood that, in accordance with the principles governing this regime under the rules of international law, such passage will be exercised in a continuous and expeditious manner.[113]

[108] Article 39. Under articles 41 and 42, the coastal state may designate sea lanes and traffic separation schemes through international straits.

[109] Article 45(2).

[110] See articles 38–42. See also, as to the differences between the regimes of innocent passage through the territorial sea, transit passage and archipelagic sea lanes passage, Nandan and Anderson, 'Straits', p. 169.

[111] Article 44.

[112] See Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, p. 113, but cf. O. Schachter, 'International Law in Theory and Practice', 178 HR, 1982, pp. 9, 281.

[113] Cmnd 557. See also 38 ICLQ, 1989, pp. 416–17 and AFDI, 1988, p. 727.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

A number of straits are subject to special regimes, which are unaffected by the above provisions.[114] One important example is the Montreux Convention of 1936 governing the Bosphorus and Dardanelles Straits. This provides for complete freedom of transit or navigation for merchant vessels during peacetime and for freedom of transit during daylight hours for some warships giving prior notification to Turkey.[115]

The contiguous zone[116]

Historically some states have claimed to exercise certain rights over particular zones of the high seas. This has involved some diminution of the principle of the freedom of the high seas as the jurisdiction of the coastal state has been extended into areas of the high seas contiguous to the territorial sea, albeit for defined purposes only. Such restricted jurisdiction zones have been established or asserted for a number of reasons: for instance, to prevent infringement of customs, immigration or sanitary laws of the coastal state, or to conserve fishing stocks in a particular area, or to enable the coastal state to have exclusive or principal rights to the resources of the proclaimed zone.

In each case they enable the coastal state to protect what it regards as its vital or important interests without having to extend the boundaries of its territorial sea further into the high seas. It is thus a compromise between the interests of the coastal state and the interests of other maritime nations [114] Article 35(c).

[115] See e.g. Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 114 ff. See also UKMIL, 57 BYIL, 1986, p. 581, and F. A. Vali, The Turkish Straits and NATO, Stanford, 1972. Note that the dispute as to the status of the Strait of Tiran and the Gulf of Aqaba between Israel and its Arab neighbours was specifically dealt with in the treaties of peace. Article 5(2) of the Israel–Egypt Treaty of Peace, 1979 and article 14(3) of the Israel–Jordan Treaty of Peace, 1994 both affirm that the Strait and Gulf are international waterways open to all nations for unimpeded and non-suspendable freedom of navigation and overflight. As to the US–USSR Agreement on the Bering Straits Region, see 28 ILM, 1989, p. 1429. See also, as to the Great Belt dispute between Finland and Denmark, M. Koskenniemi, 'L'Affaire du Passage par le Grand-Belt', AFDI, 1992, p. 905. See, as to other particular straits, e.g. S. C. Truver, Gibraltar and the Mediterranean, Alphen, 1982; M. A. Morris, The Strait of Magellan, Dordrecht, 1989; G. Alexander, The Baltic Straits, Alphen, 1982, and M. Leiffer, Malacca, Singapore and Indonesia, Alphen, 1978.

[116] See A. V. Lowe, 'The Development of the Concept of the Contiguous Zone', 52 BYIL, 1981, p. 109; Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 9; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 7, and O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. II, chapter 27. See also S. Oda, 'The Concept of the Contiguous Zone', ICLQ, 1962, p. 131; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 625, and Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 1174.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

seeking to maintain the status of the high seas, and it marks a balance of competing claims. The extension of rights beyond the territorial sea has, however, been seen not only in the context of preventing the infringement of particular domestic laws, but also increasingly as a method of maintaining and developing the economic interests of the coastal state regarding maritime resources. The idea of a contiguous zone (i.e. a zone bordering upon the territorial sea) was virtually formulated as an authoritative and consistent doctrine in the 1930s by the French writer Gidel,[117] and it appeared in the Convention on the Territorial Sea. Article 24 declared that:

> In a zone of the high seas contiguous to its territorial sea, the coastal state may exercise the control necessary to:
>
> (a) Prevent infringement of its customs, fiscal, immigration or sanitary regulations within its territory or territorial sea;
> (b) Punish infringement of the above regulations committed within its territory or territorial sea.

Thus, such contiguous zones were clearly differentiated from claims to full sovereignty as parts of the territorial sea, by being referred to as part of the high seas over which the coastal state may exercise particular rights. Unlike the territorial sea, which is automatically attached to the land territory of the state, contiguous zones have to be specifically claimed.

While sanitary and immigration laws are relatively recent additions to the rights enforceable over zones of the high seas and may be regarded as stemming by analogy from customs regulations, in practice they are really only justifiable since the 1958 Convention. On the other hand, customs zones have a long history and are recognised in customary international law as well. Many states, including the UK and the USA, have enacted legislation to enforce customs regulations over many years, outside their territorial waters and within certain areas, in order to suppress smuggling which appeared to thrive when faced only with territorial limits of 3 or 4 miles.[118]

Contiguous zones, however, were limited to a maximum of 12 miles from the baselines from which the territorial sea is measured. So if the [117] A. Gidel, 'La Mer Territoriale et la Zone Contigue', 48 HR, 1934, pp. 137, 241.

[118] E.g. the British Hovering Acts of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. See O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. II, pp. 1034–8, and the similar US legislation, ibid., pp. 1038 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

coastal state already claimed a territorial sea of 12 miles, the question of contiguous zones would not arise.

This limitation, plus the restriction of jurisdiction to customs, sanitary and immigration matters, is the reason for the decline in the relevance of contiguous zones in international affairs in recent years. Under article 33 of the 1982 Convention, however, a coastal state may claim a contiguous zone (for the same purpose as the 1958 provisions) up to 24 nautical miles from the baselines. In view of the accepted 12 miles territorial sea limit, such an extension was required in order to preserve the concept. One crucial difference is that while under the 1958 system the contiguous zone was part of the high seas, under the 1982 Convention it would form part of the exclusive economic zone complex.[119] This will clearly have an impact upon the nature of the zone.

The exclusive economic zone[120]

This zone has developed out of earlier, more tentative claims, particularly relating to fishing zones,[121] and as a result of developments in the negotiating processes leading to the 1982 Convention.[122] It marks a compromise between those states seeking a 200-mile territorial sea and those wishing a more restricted system of coastal state power.

One of the major reasons for the call for a 200-mile exclusive economic zone has been the controversy over fishing zones. The 1958 Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea did not reach agreement on the creation of fishing zones and article 24 of the Convention does not give exclusive [119] See article 55, which states that the exclusive economic zone is 'an area beyond and adjacent to the territorial seas'. The notice issued by the Hydrographic Department of the Royal Navy on 1 January 2008 shows that eighty-one states or territories claim a contiguous zone: see www.ukho.gov.uk/content/amdAttachments/2008/annual_nms/12.pdf.

[120] See e.g. The Exclusive Economic Zone and the United Nations Law of the Sea Convention, 1982–2000 (eds. E. Franckx and P. Gautier), Brussels, 2003; Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapters 10 and 11; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 9; D. J. Attard, The Exclusive Economic Zone in International Law, Oxford, 1986; O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 15; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 782, and Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 1175. See also F. Orrego Vicuña, 'La Zone Économique Exclusive', 199 HR, 1986 IV, p. 9; Orrego Vicuña, The Exclusive Economic Zone, Regime and Legal Nature under International Law, Cambridge, 1989; B. Kwiatowska, The 200 Mile Exclusive Economic Zone in the New Law of the Sea, Dordrecht, 1989; R. W. Smith, Exclusive Economic Zone Claims. An Analysis and Primary Documents, Dordrecht, 1986, and F. Rigaldies, 'La Zone Économique Exclusive dans la Pratique des États', Canadian YIL, 1997, p. 3.

[121] O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 14.

[122] Ibid., pp. 559 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

fishing rights in the contiguous zone. However, increasing numbers of states have claimed fishing zones of widely varying widths. The European Fisheries Convention, 1964, which was implemented in the UK by the Fishing Limits Act 1964, provided that the coastal state has the exclusive right to fish and exclusive jurisdiction in matters of fisheries in a 6-mile belt from the baseline of the territorial sea; while within the belt between 6 and 12 miles from the baseline, other parties to the Convention have the right to fish, provided they had habitually fished in that belt between January 1953 and December 1962. This was an attempt to reconcile the interests of the coastal state with those of other states who could prove customary fishing operations in the relevant area. In view of the practice of many states in accepting at one time or another a 12-mile exclusive fishing zone, either for themselves or for some other states, it seems clear that there has already emerged an international rule to that effect. Indeed, the International Court in the Fisheries Jurisdiction cases[123] stated that the concept of the fishing zone, the area in which a state may claim exclusive jurisdiction independently of its territorial sea for this purpose, had crystallised as customary law in recent years and especially since the 1960 Geneva Conference, and that 'the extension of that fishing zone up to a twelve mile limit from the baselines appears now to be generally accepted'. That much is clear, but the question was whether international law recognised such a zone in excess of 12 miles.

In 1972, concerned at the proposals regarding the long-term effects of the depletion of fishing stocks around her coasts, Iceland proclaimed unilaterally a 50-mile exclusive fishing zone. The UK and the Federal Republic of Germany referred the issue to the ICJ and specifically requested the Court to decide whether or not Iceland's claim was contrary to international law.

The Court did not answer that question, but rather held that Iceland's fishing regulations extending the zone were not binding upon the UK and West Germany, since they had in no way acquiesced in them. However, by implication the ICJ based its judgment on the fact that there did not exist any rule of international law permitting the establishment of a 50-mile fishing zone. Similarly, it appeared that there was no rule prohibiting claims beyond 12 miles and that the validity of such claims would depend upon all relevant facts of the case and the degree of recognition by other states.

[123] ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 8, 175; 55 ILR, p. 238.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The Court emphasised instead the notion of preferential rights, which it regarded as a principle of customary international law. Such rights arose where the coastal state was 'in a situation of special dependence on coastal fisheries'.[124] However, this concept was overtaken by developments at the UN Conference and the 1982 Convention. Article 55 of the 1982 Convention provides that the exclusive economic zone is an area beyond and adjacent to the territorial sea, subject to the specific legal regime established under the Convention.

Under article 56, the coastal state in the economic zone has inter alia:

> (a) sovereign rights for the purpose of exploring and exploiting, conserving and managing the natural resources, whether living[125] or non-living, of the waters superjacent to the seabed and of the seabed and its subsoil and with regard to other activities for the economic exploitation and exploration of the zone, such as the production of energy from the water, currents and winds;
> (b) jurisdiction with regard to (i) the architecture and use of artificial islands, installations and structures;[126] (ii) marine scientific research;[127] (iii) the protection and preservation of the marine environment.[128]

Article 55 provides that the zone starts from the outer limit of the territorial sea, but by article 57 shall not extend beyond 200 nautical miles from the baselines from which the breadth of the territorial sea is measured. Accordingly, in reality, the zone itself would be no more than 188 nautical miles where the territorial sea was 12 nautical miles, but rather more where the territorial sea of the coastal state was less than 12 miles. Where the relevant waters between neighouring states are less than 400 miles, delimitation becomes necessary.[129] Islands generate economic zones, unless they consist of no more than rocks which cannot sustain human habitation.[130]

Article 58 lays down the rights and duties of other states in the exclusive economic zone. These are basically the high seas freedom of navigation, overflight and laying of submarine cables and pipelines. It is also provided that in exercising their rights and performing their duties, states should have due regard to the rights, duties and laws of the coastal state.

[124] ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 23–9; 55 ILR, p. 258.
[125] See also articles 61–9. [126] See also article 60.
[127] See further Part XIII of the Convention and see Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 15.
[128] See further Part XII of the Convention and see Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 14.
[129] See further below, p. 590.
[130] Article 121(3). See also Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 97 and above, p. 565.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

In cases of conflict over the attribution of rights and jurisdiction in the zone, the resolution is to be on the basis of equity and in the light of all the relevant circumstances.[131] Article 60(2) provides that in the exclusive economic zone, the coastal state has jurisdiction to apply customs laws and regulations in respect of artificial islands, installations and structures. The International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea took the view in M/V Saiga (No. 2) (Admissibility and Merits) that a coastal state was not competent to apply its customs laws in respect of other parts of the economic zone.[132] Accordingly, by applying its customs laws to a customs radius which included parts of the economic zone, Guinea had acted contrary to the Law of the Sea Convention.[133]

A wide variety of states have in the last two decades claimed exclusive economic zones of 200 miles.[134] A number of states that have not made such a claim have proclaimed fishing zones.[135] It would appear that such is the number and distribution of states claiming economic zones, that the existence of the exclusive economic zone as a rule of customary law is firmly established. This is underlined by the comment of the International Court of Justice in the Libya/Malta Continental Shelf case[136] that 'the institution of the exclusive economic zone . . . is shown by the practice of states to have become a part of customary law'.[137]

In addition to such zones, some other zones have been announced by states over areas of the seas. Canada has, for example, claimed a 100-mile-wide zone along her Arctic coastline as a special, pollution-free zone.[138]

[131] Article 59. [132] 120 ILR, pp. 143, 190. [133] Ibid., p. 192.

[134] The Hydrographic Department of the Royal Navy noted that as of 1 January 2008, 126 states and territories had proclaimed 200-mile economic zones: see www.ukho.gov.uk/content/amdAttachments/2008/annual_nms/12.pdf. No state has appeared to claim an economic zone of a different width. See also the US Declaration of an exclusive economic zone in March 1983, which did not, however, assert a right of jurisdiction over marine scientific research over the zone, 22 ILM, 1983, pp. 461 ff. On 22 September 1992, eight North Sea littoral states and the European Commission adopted a Ministerial Declaration on the Coordinated Extension of Jurisdiction in the North Sea in which it was agreed that these states would establish exclusive economic zones if they had not already done so, UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 755.

[135] The Hydrographic Department of the Royal Navy noted that as of 1 January 2008, forty-five states and territories had proclaimed fishery zones of varying breadths up to 200 miles: see www.ukho.gov.uk/content/amdAttachments/2008/annual_nms/12.pdf.

[136] ICJ Reports, 1985, p. 13; 81 ILR, p. 238.

[137] ICJ Reports, 1985, p. 33; 81 ILR, p. 265. See also the Tunisia/Libya case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 74; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 67.

[138] See O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. II, pp. 1022–5. See also the Canadian Arctic Water Pollution Prevention Act 1970. The US has objected to this jurisdiction: see e.g. Keesing's Contemporary Archives, pp. 23961 and 24129. The Canadian claim was reiterated in September 1985, ibid., p. 33984.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Certain states have also asserted rights over what have been termed security or neutrality zones,[139] but these have never been particularly well received and are rare.

In an unusual arrangement, pursuant to a US–USSR Maritime Boundary Agreement of 1 June 1990, it was provided that each party would exercise sovereign rights and jurisdiction derived from the exclusive economic zone jurisdiction of the other party in a 'special area' on the other party's side of the maritime boundary in order to ensure that all areas within 200 miles of either party's coast would fall within the resource jurisdiction of one party or the other. It would appear that jurisdiction over three special areas within the USSR's 200-mile economic zone and one special area within the US's 200-mile economic zone were so transferred.[140]

The continental shelf[141]

The continental shelf is a geological expression referring to the ledges that project from the continental landmass into the seas and which are covered with only a relatively shallow layer of water (some 150–200 metres) and which eventually fall away into the ocean depths (some thousands of metres deep). These ledges or shelves take up some 7 to 8 per cent of the total area of ocean and their extent varies considerably from place to place. Off the western coast of the United States, for instance, it is less than 5 miles wide, while, on the other hand, the whole of the underwater area of the North Sea and Persian Gulf consists of shelf.

The vital fact about the continental shelves is that they are rich in oil and gas resources and quite often are host to extensive fishing grounds.

[139] O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, p. 578, note 95 regarding North Korea's proclamation of a 50-mile security zone in 1977. See also Cumulative DUSPIL 1981–8, vol. II, pp. 1750 ff. detailing US practice objecting to peacetime security or military zones. Note also the establishment of the 'exclusion zone' around the Falkland Islands in 1982: see 22 HC Deb., cols. 296–7, 28 April 1982. See e.g. R. P. Barston and P. W. Birnie, 'The Falkland Islands/Islas Malvinas Conflict. A Question of Zones', 7 Marine Policy, 1983, p. 14.

[140] 84 AJIL, 1990, pp. 885–7.

[141] See e.g. Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapters 10 and 11; O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 13; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 8; Z. J. Slouka, International Custom and the Continental Shelf, The Hague, 1968; C. Vallée, Le Plateau Continental dans le Droit International Positif, Paris, 1971; V. Marotta Rangel, 'Le Plateau Continental dans la Convention de 1982 sur le Droit de la Mer', 194 HR, 1985 V, p. 269, and H. Lauterpacht, 'Sovereignty over Submarine Areas', 27 BYIL, 1950, p. 376. See also Oppenheim's International Law, p. 764, and Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 1183.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

This stimulated a round of appropriations by coastal states in the years following the Second World War, which gradually altered the legal status of the continental shelf from being part of the high seas and available for exploitation by all states until its current recognition as exclusive to the coastal state.

The first move in this direction, and the one that led to a series of similar and more extensive claims, was the Truman Proclamation of 1945.[142] This pointed to the technological capacity to exploit the riches of the shelf and the need to establish a recognised jurisdiction over such resources, and declared that the coastal state was entitled to such jurisdiction for a number of reasons: first, because utilisation or conservation of the resources of the subsoil and seabed of the continental shelf depended upon co-operation from the shore; secondly, because the shelf itself could be regarded as an extension of the land mass of the coastal state, and its resources were often merely an extension into the sea of deposits lying within the territory; and finally, because the coastal state, for reasons of security, was profoundly interested in activities off its shores which would be necessary to utilise the resources of the shelf.

Accordingly, the US government proclaimed that it regarded the 'natural resources of the subsoil and seabed of the continental shelf beneath the high seas but contiguous to the coasts of the United States as appertaining to the United States, subject to its jurisdiction and control'. However, this would in no way affect the status of the waters above the continental shelf as high seas.

This proclamation precipitated a whole series of claims by states to their continental shelves, some in similar terms to the US assertions, and others in substantially wider terms. Argentina and El Salvador, for example, claimed not only the shelf but also the waters above and the airspace. Chile and Peru, having no continental shelf to speak of, claimed sovereignty over the seabed, subsoil and waters around their coasts to a limit of 200 miles, although this occasioned vigorous protests by many states.[143] The problems were discussed over many years, leading to the 1958 Geneva Convention on the Continental Shelf.[144]

[142] Whiteman, Digest, vol. IV, p. 756.

[143] Ibid., pp. 794–9 and see also Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 768–9.

[144] Note that in the Abu Dhabi case, the arbitrator declared that the doctrine of the continental shelf in 1951 was not yet a rule of international law, 18 ILR, p. 144. See also to the same effect (with regard to 1949), Reference Re: The Seabed and Subsoil of the Continental Shelf Offshore Newfoundland, 5 DLR (46), p. 385; 86 ILR, p. 593 per Supreme Court of Canada (1984).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

In the North Sea Continental Shelf cases,[145] the Court noted that:

> the rights of the coastal state in respect of the area of continental shelf that constitutes a natural prolongation of its land territory into and under the sea exist ipso facto and ab initio, by virtue of its sovereignty over the land, and as an extension of it in an exercise of sovereign rights for the purpose of exploring the seabed and exploiting its natural resources. In short there is here an inherent right.

The development of the concept of the exclusive economic zone has to some extent confused the issue, since under article 56 of the 1982 Convention the coastal state has sovereign rights over all the natural resources of its exclusive economic zone, including the seabed resources.[146] Accordingly, states possess two sources of rights with regard to the seabed,[147] although claims with regard to the economic zone, in contrast to the continental shelf, need to be specifically made. It is also possible, as will be seen, that the geographical extent of the shelf may be different from that of the 200-mile economic zone.

Definition

Article 1 of the 1958 Convention on the Continental Shelf defined the shelf in terms of its exploitability rather than relying upon the accepted geological definition, noting that the expression referred to the seabed and subsoil of the submarine areas adjacent to the coast but outside the territorial sea to a depth of 200 metres or 'beyond that limit to where the depth of the superjacent waters admits of the exploitation of the natural resources of the said areas'.

This provision caused problems, since developing technology rapidly reached a position to extract resources to a much greater depth than 200 metres, and this meant that the outer limits of the shelf, subject to the jurisdiction of the coastal state, were consequently very unclear. Article 1 was, however, regarded as reflecting customary law by the Court in the North Sea Continental Shelf case.[148] It is also important to note that the basis of title to continental shelf is now accepted as the geographical [145] ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 22; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 51. [146] See above, p. 582.

[147] Note that the International Court in the Libya/Malta Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 13, 33; 81 ILR, pp. 238, 265, stated that the two concepts were 'linked together in modern law'.

[148] ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 39; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 68.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

criterion, and not reliance upon, for example, occupation or effective control. The Court emphasised this and declared that:

> The submarine areas concerned may be deemed to be actually part of the territory over which the coastal state already has dominion in the sense that although covered with water, they are a prolongation or continuation of that territory, an extension of it under the sea.[149]

This approach has, however, been somewhat modified. Article 76(1) of the 1982 Convention provides as to the outer limit of the continental shelf that:

> [t]he continental shelf of a coastal state comprises the seabed and subsoil of the submarine areas that extend beyond its territorial sea throughout the natural prolongation of its land territory to the outer edge of the continental margin, or to a distance of 200 nautical miles from the baselines from which the breadth of the territorial sea is measured where the outer edge of continental margin does not extend up to that distance.[150]

Thus, an arbitrary, legal and non-geographical definition is provided. Where the continental margin actually extends beyond 200 miles, geographical factors are to be taken into account in establishing the limit, which in any event shall not exceed either 350 miles from the baselines or 100 miles from the 2,500-metre isobath.[151] Where the shelf does not extend as far as 200 miles from the coast, natural prolongation is complemented as a guiding principle by that of distance.[152] Not surprisingly, this complex formulation has caused difficulty[153] and, in an attempt to provide a mechanism to resolve problems, the Convention established a Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, consisting of [150] See article 76(3) for a definition of the continental margin. See also D. N. Hutchinson, 'The Seaward Limit to Continental Shelf', 56 BYIL, 1985, p. 133, and Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, p. 140.

[149] ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 31; 41 ILR, p. 60.

[151] Article 76(4), (5), (6), (7), (8) and (9). See also Annex II to the Final Act concerning the special situation for a state where the average distance at which the 200-metre isobath occurs is not more than 20 nautical miles and the greater proportion of the sedimentary rock of the continental margin lies beneath the rise.

[152] See the Libya/Malta Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 13, 33–4; 81 ILR, pp. 238, 265–6. See also the Tunisia/Libya case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 61; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 54 and the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 277; 71 ILR, pp. 57, 104.

[153] See e.g. Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, p. 149, and Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, p. 1187. There are particular problems, for instance, with regard to the meaning of the terms 'oceanic ridges', 'submarine ridges' and 'submarine elevations' appearing in article 76(3) and (6).

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

twenty-one experts elected by the states parties. Article 4 of Annex II to the Convention provides that a coastal state intending to establish the outer limits to its continental shelf beyond 200 nautical miles is obliged to submit particulars of such limits to the Commission along with supporting scientific and technical data as soon as possible but in any case within ten years of the entry into force of the Convention for that state. The limits of the shelf established by a coastal state on the basis of these recommendations are final and binding.[154] The first submission to the Commission was made by the Russian Federation on 21 December 2001.[155] In support of this claim, Russian explorers planted the national flag on the seabed below the North Pole on 2 August 2007, arguing that parts of underwater mountains underneath the Pole were extensions of the Eurasian continent.[156] A joint submission in respect of the area of the Celtic Sea and the Bay of Biscay was made by France, Ireland, Spain and the UK on 19 May 2006,[157] while on 21 April 2008, the Commission confirmed Australia's continental shelf claim made in 2004.[158]

Islands generate continental shelves, unless they consist of no more than rocks which cannot sustain human habitation.[159]

The rights and duties of the coastal state[160]

The coastal state may exercise 'sovereign rights' over the continental shelf for the purposes of exploring it and exploiting its natural resources under article 77 of the 1982 Convention. Such rights are exclusive in that no other state may undertake such activities without the express consent of the coastal state. These sovereign rights (and thus not territorial title as such since the Convention does not talk in terms of 'sovereignty') do not depend upon occupation or express proclamation.[161] The Truman concept of resources, which referred only to mineral resources, has been extended [154] Article 76(8). See also www.un.org/Depts/los/clcs_new/clcs_home.htm.

[155] See UN Press Release, SEA/1729, 21 December 2001.
[156] See ASIL Insight, vol. 11, issue 27, 8 November 2007.
[157] See e.g. UKMIL, 77 BYIL, 2006, pp. 767–8, and H. Llewellyn, 'The Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf: Joint Submission by France, Ireland, Spain, and the United Kingdom', 56 ICLQ, 2007, p. 677.
[158] See UN Press Release, SEA/1899, 21 April 2008.
[159] Article 121(3). See also Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 97, and above, p. 565.
[160] See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 773 and Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, p. 151.
[161] See also article 2 of the Continental Shelf Convention, 1958.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

to include organisms belonging to the sedentary species.[162] However, this vague description did lead to disputes between France and Brazil over lobster, and between the USA and Japan over the Alaskan King Crab in the early 1960s.[163] The sovereign rights recognised as part of the continental shelf regime specifically relate to natural resources, so that, for example, wrecks lying on the shelf are not included.[164] The Convention expressly states that the rights of the coastal state do not affect the status of the superjacent waters as high seas, or that of the airspace above the waters.[165] This is stressed in succeeding articles which note that, subject to its right to take reasonable measures for exploration and exploitation of the continental shelf, the coastal state may not impede the laying or maintenance of cables or pipelines on the shelf. In addition, such exploration and exploitation must not result in any unjustifiable interference with navigation, fishing or the conservation of the living resources of the sea.[166]

The coastal state may, under article 80 of the 1982 Convention,[167] construct and maintain installations and other devices necessary for exploration on the continental shelf and is entitled to establish safety zones around such installations to a limit of 500 metres, which must be respected by ships of all nationalities. Within such zones, the state may take such measures as are necessary for their protection. But although under the jurisdiction of the coastal state, these installations are not to be considered as islands. This means that they have no territorial sea of their own and their presence in no way affects the delimitation of the territorial waters of the coastal state. Such provisions are, of course, extremely [162] See article 77(4) of the 1982 Convention and article 2(4) of the 1958 Continental Shelf Convention.

[163] See e.g. O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, pp. 501–2.

[164] See e.g. Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, p. 152; E. Boesten, Archaeological and/or Historical Valuable Shipwrecks in International Waters, The Hague, 2002, and C. Forrest, 'An International Perspective on Sunken State Vessels as Underwater Cultural Heritage', 34 Ocean Development and International Law, 2003, p. 41. See also articles 149 (protection of cultural objects found in the International Seabed Area) and 303 (wrecks and the rights of coastal states in the contiguous zone).

[165] Article 78 of the 1982 Convention and article 3 of the 1958 Continental Shelf Convention. Note that the reference to 'high seas' in the latter is omitted in the former for reasons related to the new concept of the exclusive economic zone.

[166] Articles 78 and 79 of the 1982 Convention and articles 4 and 5 of the 1958 Continental Shelf Convention.

[167] Applying mutatis mutandis article 60, which deals with the construction of artificial islands, installations and structures in the exclusive economic zone. See also article 5 of the 1958 Continental Shelf Convention.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

important when considering the status of oil rigs situated, for example, in the North Sea. To treat them as islands for legal purposes would cause difficulties.[168]

Where the continental shelf of a state extends beyond 200 miles, article 82 of the 1982 Convention provides that the coastal state must make payments or contributions in kind in respect of the exploitation of the non-living resources of the continental shelf beyond the 200-mile limit. The payments are to be made annually after the first five years of production at the site in question on a sliding scale up to the twelfth year, after which they are to remain at 7 per cent. These payments and contributions are to be made to the International Seabed Authority, which shall distribute them amongst state parties on the basis of 'equitable sharing criteria, taking into account the interests and needs of developing states particularly the least developed and the landlocked among them'.[169]

Maritime delimitation[170]

While delimitation is in principle an aspect of territorial sovereignty, where other states are involved, agreement is required. However valid in domestic law, unilateral delimitations will not be binding upon third [168] See also N. Papadakis, The International Legal Regime of Artificial Islands, Leiden, 1977.

[169] Note also that by article 82(3) a developing state which is a net importer of the mineral resource in question is exempt from such payments and contributions.

[170] See e.g. UN Handbook on the Delimitation of Maritime Boundaries, New York, 2000; N. Antunes, Towards the Conceptualisation of Maritime Delimitation, The Hague, 2003; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 10; E. D. Brown, Sea-Bed Energy and Mineral Resources and the Law of the Sea, London, 1984–6, vols. I and III; M. D. Evans, Relevant Circumstances and Maritime Delimitation, Oxford, 1989, and P. Weil, The Law of Maritime Delimitation – Reflections, Cambridge, 1989. See also International Maritime Boundaries (eds. J. I. Charney and L. M. Alexander), Washington, vols. I–III, 1993–8, and ibid. (eds. J. I. Charney and R. W. Smith), vol. IV, 2002 and ibid. (eds. D. A. Colson and R. W. Smith), vol. V, 2005, The Hague; M. Kamga, Délimitation Maritime sur la Côte Atlantique Africaine, Brussels, 2006; Maritime Delimitation (eds. R. Lagoni and D. Vignes), Leiden, 2006; Y. Tanaka, Predictability and Flexibility in the Law of Maritime Delimitation, Oxford, 2006; D. A. Colson, 'The Delimitation of the Outer Continental Shelf between Neighbouring States', 97 AJIL, 2003, p. 91; V. D. Degan, 'Consolidation of Legal Principles on Maritime Delimitation', 6 Chinese YIL, 2007, p. 601; L. D. M. Nelson, 'The Roles of Equity in the Delimitation of Maritime Boundaries', 84 AJIL, 1990, p. 837; J. I. Charney, 'Progress in International Maritime Boundary Delimitation Law', 88 AJIL, 1994, p. 227, and Charney, 'Central East Asian Maritime Boundaries and the Law of the Sea', 89 AJIL, 1995, p. 724; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 776, and Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, pp. 1178 and 1187 ff.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

states.[171] The International Court noted in Nicaragua v. Honduras that the establishment of a permanent maritime boundary was 'a matter of grave importance and agreement is not easily to be presumed'.[172] It was also pointed out that the principle of uti possidetis applied in principle to maritime spaces.[173]

In so far as the delimitation of the territorial sea between states with opposite or adjacent coasts is concerned,[174] article 15 of the 1982 Convention, following basically article 12 of the Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea, 1958, provides that where no agreement has been reached, neither state may extend its territorial sea beyond the median line every point of which is equidistant from the nearest point on the baselines from which the territorial sea is measured.[175] However, particular geographical circumstances may make it difficult to establish clear baselines and this may make it therefore impossible to draw an equidistance line.[176] In such an exceptional case, the Court would consider alternative lines drawn by the states, for example bisector lines.[177]

The provision as to the median line, however, does not apply where it is necessary by reason of historic title or other special circumstances to delimit the territorial sea of the two states in a different way. The Court in Qatar v. Bahrain noted that article 15 was to be regarded as having a customary law character[178] and may be referred to as the 'equidistance/special circumstances' principle. The Court went on to declare that, 'The most logical and widely practised approach is first to draw provisionally an

[171] See the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 132. The International Court noted in the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 299; 77 ILR, pp. 57, 126, that 'no maritime delimitation between states with opposite or adjacent coasts may be effected unilaterally by one of those states. Such delimitation must be sought and effected by means of an agreement, following negotiations conducted in good faith and with the genuine intention of achieving a positive result. Where, however, such agreement cannot be achieved, delimitation should be effected by recourse to a third party possessing the necessary competence.'

[172] ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 253.

[173] Ibid., para. 156 and see above, p. 525.

[174] See Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 182 ff.

[175] See also Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 94. The International Court in Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 269, noted that 'the methods governing territorial sea delimitations have needed to be, and are, more clearly articulated in international law than those used for the other, more functional maritime areas'.

[176] See Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, paras. 277 ff. The Court in Qatar v. Bahrain noted that an equidistance line could only be drawn where the baselines were known, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 94.

[177] Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 287.

[178] See also e.g. the Dubai/Sharjah case, 91 ILR, pp. 543, 663.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

equidistance line and then to consider whether that line must be adjusted in the light of the existence of special circumstances.'[179]

This was underlined in the arbitration award in Guyana v. Suriname, which emphasised that article 15 placed 'primacy on the median line as the delimitation line between the territorial seas of opposite or adjacent states'.[180] The tribunal noted that international courts were not constrained by a finite list of special circumstances, but needed to assess on a case-by-case basis with reference to international case-law and state practice.[181] Navigational interests, for example, could constitute such special circumstances.[182] The tribunal also held that a 3-mile territorial sea delimitation line did not automatically extend outwards in situations where the territorial sea was extended to 12 miles, but rather that a principled method had to be found that took into account any special circumstances, including historical arrangements made.[183]

Separate from the question of the delimitation of the territorial sea, but increasingly convergent with it, is the question of the delimitation of the continental shelf and of the exclusive economic zone between opposite or adjacent states. The starting point of any delimitation of these areas is the entitlement of the state to a given maritime area. Such entitlement in the case of the continental shelf was originally founded upon the concept of natural prolongation of the land territory into the sea,[184] but with the emergence of the exclusive economic zone a new approach was introduced based upon distance from the coast.[185] The two concepts in fact became close.

Article 6 of the Continental Shelf Convention, 1958 declared that in the absence of agreement and unless another boundary line was justified by special circumstances, the continental shelf boundary should be determined 'by application of the principle of equidistance from the nearest points of the baselines from which the breadth of the territorial sea of each state is measured', that is to say by the introduction of the equidistance or median line which would operate in relation to the sinuosities of the particular coastlines.

[179] ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 94. See also Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 268.
[180] Award of 17 September 2007, para. 296. See also UKMIL, 77 BYIL, 2006, p. 764.
[181] Award of 17 September 2007, paras. 302–3. See also the Jan Mayen case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 38, 61–4.
[182] Award of 17 September 2007, para. 306.
[183] Ibid., paras. 311 ff.
[184] The North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 22.
[185] See Barbados v. Trinidad and Tobago, Award of 11 April 2006, para. 224.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

This provision was considered in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases[186] between the Federal Republic of Germany on the one side and Holland and Denmark on the other. The problem was that the application of the equidistance principle of article 6 would give Germany only a small share of the North Sea continental shelf, in view of its concave northern shoreline between Holland and Denmark. The question arose as to whether the article was binding upon the Federal Republic of Germany at all, since it had not ratified the 1958 Continental Shelf Convention.

The Court held that the principles enumerated in article 6 did not constitute rules of international customary law and therefore Germany was not bound by them.[187] The Court declared that the relevant rule was that:

> delimitation is to be effected by agreement in accordance with equitable principles, and taking account of all the relevant circumstances, in such a way as to leave as much as possible to each party all those parts of the continental shelf that constitute a natural prolongation of its land territory into and under the sea, without encroachment on the natural prolongation of the land territory of the others.[188]

The Court, therefore, took the view that delimitation was based upon a consideration and weighing of relevant factors in order to produce an equitable result. Included amongst the range of factors was the element of a reasonable degree of proportionality between the lengths of the coastline and the extent of the continental shelf.[189] In the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case,[190] both states were parties to the 1958 Convention, so that article 6 applied.[191] It was held that article 6 contained one overall rule, 'a combined equidistance–special circumstances rule', which in effect:

> gives particular expression to a general norm that, failing agreement, the boundary between states abutting on the same continental shelf is to be determined on equitable principles.[192]

[186] ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 3; 41 ILR, p. 29. [187] See above, chapter 3, p. 85.
[188] ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 53; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 83.
[189] ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 52; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 82.
[190] Cmnd 7438 (1978); 54 ILR, p. 6. See also D. W. Bowett, 'The Arbitration between the United Kingdom and France Concerning the Continental Shelf Boundary in the English Channel of South-Western Approaches', 49 BYIL, 1978, p. 1.
[191] Although subject to a French reservation regarding the Bay of Granville to which the UK had objected, Cmnd 7438, p. 50; 54 ILR, p. 57.
[192] Cmnd 7438, p. 48; 54 ILR, p. 55.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The choice of method of delimitation, whether equidistance or any other method, depended upon the pertinent circumstances of the case. The fundamental norm under both customary law and the 1958 Convention was that the delimitation had to be in accordance with equitable principles.[193] The Court took into account 'special circumstances' in relation to the situation of the Channel Islands which justified a delimitation other than the median line proposed by the UK.[194] In addition, the situation of the Scilly Isles was considered and they were given only 'half-effect' in the delimitation in the Atlantic area since > what equity calls for is an appropriate abatement of the disproportionate effects of a considerable projection on the Atlantic continental shelf of a somewhat attenuated projection of the coast of the United Kingdom.[195]

In the Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case,[196] the Court, deciding on the basis of custom as neither state was a party to the 1958 Convention, emphasised that 'the satisfaction of equitable principles is, in the delimitation process, of cardinal importance'. The concept of natural prolongation was of some importance depending upon the circumstances, but not on the same plane as the satisfaction of equitable principles.[197] The Court also employed the 'half-effect' principle for the Kerkennah Islands,[198] and emphasised that each continental shelf dispute had to be considered on its own merits having regard to its peculiar circumstances, while no attempt should be made to 'overconceptualise the application of the principles and rules relating to the continental shelf'.[199] The view of the Court that 'the principles are subordinate to the goal' and that '[t]he principles to be indicated . . . have to be selected according to their appropriateness for reaching an equitable result'[200] led to criticism that the carefully drawn restriction on equity in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases[201] had been [193] Cmnd 7438, pp. 59–60; 54 ILR, p. 66.

[194] Cmnd 7438, p. 94; 54 ILR, p. 101. This arose because of the presence of the British islands close to the French coast, which if given full effect would substantially reduce the French continental shelf. This was prima facie a circumstance creative of inequity, ibid.
[195] Cmnd 7438, pp. 116–17; 54 ILR, p. 123.
[196] ICJ Reports, 1982, p. 18; 67 ILR, p. 4. See also L. L. Herman, 'The Court Giveth and the Court Taketh Away', 33 ICLQ, 1984, p. 825.
[197] ICJ Reports, 1982, p. 47; 67 ILR, p. 40. See also ICJ Reports, 1982, p. 60; 67 ILR, p. 53.
[198] ICJ Reports, 1982, p. 89; 67 ILR, p. 82. This was specified in far less constrained terms than in the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case, Cmnd 7438, pp. 116–17; 54 ILR, p. 123. See e.g. Judge Gros' Dissenting Opinion, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 150; 67 ILR, p. 143.
[199] ICJ Reports, 1982, p. 92; 67 ILR, p. 85. [200] ICJ Reports, 1982, p. 59; 67 ILR, p. 52.
[201] ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 49–50; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 79.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

overturned and the element of predictability minimised. The dangers of an equitable solution based upon subjective assessments of the facts, regardless of the law of delimitation, were pointed out by Judge Gros in his Dissenting Opinion.[202]

The Court in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases[203] in general discussed the relevance of the use of equitable principles in the context of the difficulty of applying the equidistance rule in specific geographical situations where inequity might result. In such a case, recourse may be had to equitable principles, provided a reasonable result was reached.

In the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case,[204] it was emphasised that:

> the appropriateness of the equidistance method or any other method for the purpose of effecting an equitable delimitation is a function or reflection of the geographical and other relevant circumstances of each particular case.

The methodological aspect here is particularly important, based as it is upon the requisite geographical framework.

Article 83 of the 1982 Convention provides simply that delimitation 'shall be effected by agreement on the basis of international law . . . in order to achieve an equitable solution'. This was emphasised by the Court in Tunisia/Libya, where it was stated that the 'principles and rules applicable to the delimitation of the continental shelf areas are those which are appropriate to bring about an equitable result'.[205] In the Gulf of Maine case,[206] which dealt with the delimitation of both the continental shelf and fisheries zones of Canada and the United States,[207] the Chamber of the ICJ produced two principles reflecting what general international law prescribes in every maritime delimitation. First, there could be no unilateral delimitations. Delimitations had to be sought and effected by agreement between the parties or, if necessary, with the aid of third parties. Secondly, it held that 'delimitation is to be effected by the application of equitable criteria and by the use of practical methods capable of ensuring, with regard to the geographic configuration of the area and other relevant

[202] ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 153; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 146.
[203] ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 35–6; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 64.
[204] Cmnd 7438, p. 59; 54 ILR, p. 66.
[205] ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 49.
[206] ICJ Reports, 1984, p. 246; 71 ILR, p. 74. See also J. Schneider, 'The Gulf of Maine Case: The Nature of an Equitable Result', 79 AJIL, 1985, p. 539.
[207] A 'single maritime boundary' was requested by the parties, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 253; 71 ILR, p. 80.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

circumstances, an equitable result'.[208] The Court took as its starting point the criterion of the equal division of the areas of convergence and overlapping of the maritime projections of the coastlines of the states concerned, a criterion regarded as intrinsically equitable. This, however, had to be combined with the appropriate auxiliary criteria in the light of the relevant circumstances of the area itself. As regards the practical methods necessary to give effect to the above criteria, like the criteria themselves these had to be based upon geography and the suitability for the delimitation of both the seabed and the superjacent waters. Thus, it was concluded, geometrical methods would serve.[209] It will be noted that the basic rule for delimitation of the continental shelf is the same as that for the exclusive economic zone,[210] but the same boundary need not necessarily result.[211] The Chamber in the Gulf of Maine case indeed strongly emphasised 'the unprecedented aspect of the case which lends it its special character', in that a single line delimiting both the shelf and fisheries zone was called for by the parties.

Criteria found equitable with regard to a continental shelf delimitation need not necessarily possess the same properties with regard to a dual delimitation.[212] The above principles were reflected in the arbitral award in the Guinea/Guinea-Bissau Maritime Delimitation case in 1985.[213] The Tribunal emphasised that the aim of any delimitation process was to achieve an equitable solution having regard to the relevant circumstances.[214] In the instant case, the concepts of natural prolongation and economic factors were in the circumstances of little assistance.[215] In the Libya/Malta Continental Shelf case,[216] the International Court, in deciding the case according to customary law since Libya was not a party to the 1958

[208] ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 299–300; 71 ILR, pp. 126–7. This was regarded as the fundamental norm of customary international law governing maritime delimitation, ICJ Reports, 1984, p. 300.

[209] ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 328–9; 71 ILR, p. 155. Note that the Chamber gave 'half-effect' to Seal Island for reasons of equity, ICJ Reports, 1984, p. 337; 71 ILR, p. 164.

[210] Article 74 of the 1982 Convention.

[211] See e.g. the Australia–Papua New Guinea Maritime Boundaries Treaty of 1978, cited in Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, p. 160.

[212] ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 326; 71 ILR, p. 153.

[213] See 25 ILM, 1986, p. 251; 77 ILR, p. 636. The tribunal consisted of Judge Lachs, President, and Judges Mbaye and Bedjaoui.

[214] 25 ILM, 1986, p. 289; 77 ILR, pp. 675–6.

[215] 25 ILM, 1986, pp. 300–2; 77 ILR, p. 686. It should be noted that the delimitation concerned a single line delimiting the territorial waters, continental shelves and economic zones of the respective countries.

[216] ICJ Reports, 1985, p. 13; 81 ILR, p. 239.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

Convention on the Continental Shelf, emphasised the distance criterion. This arose because of the relevance of the economic zone concept, which was now held to be part of customary law, and the fact that an economic zone could not exist without rights over the seabed and subsoil similar to those enjoyed over a continental shelf. Thus the 200-mile limit of the zone had to be taken into account with regard to the delimitation of the continental shelf.[217] The fact that the law now permitted a state to claim a shelf of up to 200 miles from its coast, irrespective of geological characteristics, also meant that there was no reason to ascribe any role to geological or geographical factors within that distance.[218]

Since the basis of title to the shelf up to the 200-mile limit is recognised as the distance criterion, the Court felt that the drawing of a median line between opposite states was the most judicious manner of proceeding with a view to the eventual achievement of an equitable result. This provisional step had to be tested in the light of equitable principles in the context of the relevant circumstances.[219] The Court also followed the example of the Tunisia/Libya case[220] in examining the role of proportionality and in treating it as a test of the equitableness of any line.

However, the Court did consider the comparability of coastal lengths in the case as part of the process of reaching an equitable boundary, and used the disparity of coastal lengths of the parties as a reason for adjusting the median line so as to attribute a larger shelf area to Libya.[221] The general geographical context in which the islands of Malta exist as a relatively small feature in a semi-enclosed sea was also taken into account in this context.[222]

The Court in its analysis also referred to a variety of well-known examples of equitable principles, including abstention from refashioning nature, non-encroachment by one party on areas appertaining to the other, respect due to all relevant circumstances and the notions that equity did not necessarily mean equality and that there could be no question of distributive justice.[223] The Court, however, rejected Libya's argument that a state with a greater landmass would have a greater claim to the shelf

[217] The Court emphasised that this did not mean that the concept of the continental shelf had been absorbed by that of the economic zone, but that greater importance had to be attributed to elements, such as distance from the coast, which are common to both, ICJ Reports, 1985, p. 33; 81 ILR, p. 265.

[218] Ibid. [219] ICJ Reports, 1985, p. 47; 81 ILR, p. 279.

[220] See above, p. 595. [221] ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 48–50; 81 ILR, p. 280.

[222] ICJ Reports, 1985, p. 52; 81 ILR, p. 284.

[223] ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 39–40; 81 ILR, p. 271.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

and dismissed Malta's view that the relative economic position of the two states was of relevance.[224]

In conclusion, the Court reiterated in the operative provisions of its judgment, the following circumstances and factors that needed to be taken into account in the case:

> (1) the general configuration of the coasts to the parties, their oppositeness, and their relationship to each other within the general context;
> (2) the disparity in the lengths of the relevant coasts of the parties and the distance between them;
> (3) the need to avoid in the delimitation any excessive disproportion between the extent of the continental shelf areas appertaining to the coastal state and the length of the relevant part of its coast, measured in the general direction of the coastlines.[225]

In the St Pierre and Miquelon case,[226] the Court of Arbitration emphasised that the delimitation process commenced with the identification of the geographical context of the dispute in question and indeed pointed out that geographical features were at the heart of delimitation.[227] The identification of the relevant coastlines in each particular case, however, generates specific problems. Accordingly, the way in which the geographical situation is described may suggest particular solutions, so that the seemingly objective process of geographical identification may indeed constitute a crucial element in the adoption of any particular juridical answer. In the St Pierre and Miquelon case, the Court divided the area into two zones, the southern and western zones. In the latter case, any seaward extension of the islands beyond their territorial sea would cause some degree of encroachment and cut-off to the seaward projection towards the south from points located on the southern shore of Newfoundland. The Court felt here that any enclaving of the islands within their territorial sea would be inequitable and the solution proposed was to grant the islands an additional 12 miles from the limits of the territorial sea as an exclusive economic zone.[228] In the case of the southern zone, where the islands had a coastal opening seawards unobstructed by any opposite or [224] ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 40–1; 81 ILR, p. 272. The Court also noted that an equitable boundary between the parties had in the light of the general geographical situation to be south of a notional median line between Libya and Sicily, ICJ Reports, 1985, p. 51; 81 ILR, p. 283.

[225] ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 56–8; 81 ILR, p. 288.

[226] 31 ILM, 1992, p. 1145; 95 ILR, p. 645.

[227] 31 ILM, 1992, pp. 1160–1; 95 ILR, pp. 660–3.

[228] 31 ILM, 1992, pp. 1169–70; 95 ILR, p. 671.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

laterally aligned Canadian coast, the Court held that France was entitled to an outer limit of 200 nautical miles, provided that such a projection was not allowed to encroach upon or cut off a parallel frontal projection of the adjacent segments of the Newfoundland southern coast. In order to achieve this, the Court emphasised the importance of the breadth of the coastal opening of the islands towards the south, thus resulting in a 200-mile, but narrow, corridor southwards from the islands as their economic zone.[229] Having decided upon the basis of geographical considerations, the Court felt it necessary to assure itself that the delimitation proposed was not 'radically inequitable'.[230] This it was able to do on the basis of facts submitted by the parties. The Court also considered the criterion of proportionality and satisfied itself that there was no disproportion in the areas appertaining to each of the parties.[231]

In the Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway) case,[232] the question of the delimitation of the continental shelf between the islands of Greenland and Jan Mayen was governed in the circumstances by article 6 of the 1958 Convention, accepted as substantially identical to customary law in requiring an equitable delimitation.[233] The International Court noted that since a delimitation between opposite coasts was in question, one needed to begin by taking provisionally the median line and then enquiring whether 'special circumstances'[234] required another boundary line.[235] In particular, one needed to take into account the disparity between the respective coastal lengths of the relevant area and, since in this case that of Greenland was more than nine times that of Jan Mayen, an unqualified use of equidistance would produce a manifestly disproportionate result.[236] In addition,

[229] 31 ILM, 1992, pp. 1170–1; 95 ILR, pp. 671–3.

[230] 31 ILM, 1992, p. 1173; 95 ILR, p. 675. The phrase comes from the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 342; 71 ILR, pp. 74, 169, where it was defined as 'likely to entail catastrophic repercussions for the livelihood and economic well-being of the population of the parties concerned'.

[231] 31 ILM, 1992, p. 1176; 95 ILR, p. 678.

[232] ICJ Reports, 1993, p. 37; 99 ILR, p. 395.

[233] ICJ Reports, 1993, p. 58; 99 ILR, p. 426. But see the Separate Opinion of Judge Oda, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 102–14; 99 ILR, pp. 470–82.

[234] The Court noted that the category of 'special circumstances' incorporated in article 6 was essentially the same as the category of 'relevant circumstances' developed in customary international law since both were designed to achieve an equitable solution, ICJ Reports, 1993, p. 62; 99 ILR, p. 430. Special circumstances were deemed to be those that 'might modify the result produced by an unqualified application of the equidistance principle', while relevant circumstances could be described as 'a fact necessary to be taken into account in the delimitation process', ibid.

[235] ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 59–61; 99 ILR, pp. 427–9.

[236] ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 65–9; 99 ILR, pp. 433–7.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

the question of equitable access to fish stocks for vulnerable fishing communities needed to be considered. Since the principal resource in the area was capelin, which was centred on the southern part of the area of overlapping claims, the adoption of a median line would mean that Denmark could not be assured of equitable access to the capelin. This was a further reason for adjusting the median line towards the Norwegian island of Jan Mayen.[237] However, there was no need to consider the presence of ice as this did not materially affect access to fishery resources,[238] nor the limited population of Jan Mayen, socio-economic factors or security matters in the circumstances.[239]

In discussing the variety of applicable principles, a distinction has traditionally been drawn between opposite and adjacent states for the purposes of delimitation. In the former case, the Court has noted that there is less difficulty in applying the equidistance method than in the latter, since the distorting effect of an individual geographical feature in the case of adjacent states is more likely to result in an inequitable delimitation. Accordingly, greater weight is to be placed upon equidistance in a delimitation of the shelf between opposite states in the context of equitable considerations,[240] than in the case of adjacent states where the range of applicable equitable principles may be more extensive and the relative importance of each particular principle less clear. Article 83 of the 1982 Convention, however, makes no distinction between delimitations on the basis of whether the states are in an opposite or adjacent relationship. The same need to achieve an equitable solution on the basis of international law is all that is apparent and recent moves to a presumption in favour of equidistance in the case of opposite coasts may well apply also to adjacent states.

[237] ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 70–2; 99 ILR, pp. 438–40. But see the Separate Opinion of Judge Schwebel, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 118–20; 99 ILR, pp. 486–8.

[238] ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 72–3; 99 ILR, pp. 440–1.

[239] ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 73–5; 99 ILR, pp. 441–3. But see the Separate Opinion of Judge Oda, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 114–17; 99 ILR, pp. 482–5. Note also the discussion of equity in such situations in the Separate Opinion of Judge Weeramantry, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 211 ff.; 99 ILR, pp. 579 ff.

[240] See North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 36–7; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 65; the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case, Cmnd 7438, pp. 58–9; 54 ILR, p. 65; the Tunisia–Libya Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 88; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 81; the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 325; 71 ILR, p. 74, and the Jan Mayen case, ICJ Reports, 1993, p. 37; 99 ILR, p. 395. See also article 6 of the Continental Shelf Convention, 1958.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The weight to be given to the criterion of proportionality between the length of the coastline and the area of continental shelf has also been the subject of some consideration and opinions have varied. It is a factor that must be cautiously applied.[241]

Article 74 of the 1982 Convention provides that delimitation of the exclusive economic zone between states with opposite or adjacent coasts is to be effected by agreement on the basis of international law,[242] 'in order to achieve an equitable solution'. Since this phrase is identical to the provision on delimitation of the continental shelf,[243] it is not surprising that cases have arisen in which states have sought a single maritime boundary, applying both to the continental shelf and the economic zone.

In the Gulf of Maine case,[244] the Chamber of the International Court took the view that the criteria for a single maritime boundary[245] were those that would apply to both the continental shelf and economic zones (in this case a fisheries zone) and not criteria that relate to only one of these areas.[246] Nevertheless, the overall requirement for the establishment of [241] The Court in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, in discussing this issue, called for a reasonable degree of proportionality, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 52; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 82, while in the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case the Tribunal emphasised that it was disproportion rather than proportionality that was relevant in the context of the equities, Cmnd 7438, pp. 60–1; 54 ILR, pp. 6, 67. But cf. the Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 75; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 75. See also the Libya/Malta Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 48–50; 81 ILR, p. 280.

[242] As referred to in article 38 of the Statute of the ICJ.

[243] Article 83. Note that the International Court declared that 'the identity of the language which is employed, even though limited of course to the determination of the relevant principles and rules of international law, is particularly significant', the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 295; 71 ILR, pp. 74, 122. The Court declared in the Jan Mayen Maritime Delimitation (Denmark v. Norway) case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 37, 59; 99 ILR, pp. 395, 427, that the statement in article 74(1) and the corresponding provision in article 83(1) with regard to the aim of any delimitation process being an equitable solution, 'reflects the requirements of customary law as regards the delimitation both of continental shelf and of exclusive economic zones'. The Tribunal in Eritrea/Yemen (Phase Two: Maritime Delimitation) stated in relation to articles 74 and 83 that these provisions resulted from a last-minute endeavour at the conference to get agreement on a very controversial matter and so 'were consciously designed to decide as little as possible', 119 ILR, pp. 417, 454.

[244] ICJ Reports, 1984, p. 246; 71 ILR, p. 74.

[245] The Court has emphasised that the notion of a single maritime line stems from state practice and not from treaty law, thus underlining its position in customary law: see Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 93; Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 440–1; Barbados v. Trinidad and Tobago, Award of 11 April 2006, para. 235 and Guyana v. Suriname, Award of 17 September 2007, para. 334.

[246] Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, p. 326; 71 ILR, p. 153.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

such a boundary is the need to achieve an equitable solution and this brings into consideration a range of factors that may or may not be deemed relevant or decisive by the Court. It is in the elucidation of such factors that difficulties have been encountered and it would be over-optimistic to assert that the situation is clear, although very recent cases have moved towards a degree of predictability. In the Gulf of Maine case, the Court emphasised that the relevant criteria had to be essentially determined 'in relation to what may be properly called the geographical features of the area', but what these are is subject to some controversy and did not appear to cover scientific and other facts relating to fish stocks, oil exploration, scientific research or common defence arrangements.[247] In the Guinea/Guinea-Bissau Maritime Delimitation case,[248] the Tribunal was called upon to draw a single line dividing the territorial sea, economic zone and continental shelf of the two states concerned. In the case of the latter two zones, the Tribunal noted that the use of the equidistance method was unsatisfactory since it exaggerated the importance of insignificant coastal features. Rather one had to consider the whole coastline of West Africa.[249] The Tribunal also considered that the evidence with regard to the geological and geomorphological features of the continental shelf was unsatisfactory,[250] while general economic factors were rejected as being unjust and inequitable, since they were based upon an evaluation of data that was constantly changing.[251] The question of a single maritime boundary arose again in the St Pierre and Miquelon (Canada/France) case,[252] where the Tribunal was asked to establish a single delimitation as between the parties governing all rights and jurisdiction that the parties may exercise under international law in these maritime areas. In such cases, the Tribunal, following the Gulf of Maine decision, took the view that in a single or all-purpose delimitation, article 6 of the Geneva Convention on the Continental Shelf, 1958, which governed the delimitation of the continental shelf, did not have mandatory force as regards the establishment of that single maritime line.[253]

[247] ICJ Reports, 1984, p. 278; 71 ILR, p. 105. [248] 77 ILR, p. 635.
[249] Ibid., pp. 679–81. [250] Ibid., pp. 685–7. [251] Ibid., pp. 688–9.
[252] 31 ILM, 1992, p. 1145; 95 ILR, p. 645. See also M. D. Evans, 'Less Than an Ocean Apart: The St Pierre and Miquelon and Jan Mayen Islands and the Delimitation of Maritime Zones', 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 678; K. Highet, 'Delimitation of the Maritime Areas Between Canada and France', 87 AJIL, 1993, p. 452, and H. Ruiz Fabri, 'Sur la Délimitation des Espaces Maritimes entre le Canada et la France', 97 RGDIP, 1993, p. 67.
[253] 31 ILM, 1992, p. 1163; 95 ILR, p. 663.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

However, where there did not exist a special agreement between the parties asking the Court to determine a single maritime boundary applicable both to the continental shelf and the economic zone, the Court declared in the Jan Mayen Maritime Delimitation (Denmark v. Norway) case[254] that the two strands of the applicable law had to be examined separately. These strands related to the effect of article 6 of the Geneva Convention on the Continental Shelf, 1958 upon the continental shelf and the rules of customary international law with regard to the fishery zone.[255]

Recent cases have seen further moves towards clarity and simplicity. In Eritrea/Yemen (Phase Two: Maritime Delimitation), the Tribunal noted that it was a generally accepted view that between coasts that are opposite to each other, the median or equidistance line normally provided an equitable boundary in accordance with the requirements of the 1982 Convention.[256] It also reaffirmed earlier case-law to the effect that proportionality was not an independent mode or principle of delimitation, but a test of the equitableness of a delimitation arrived at by other means.[257] The Tribunal also considered the role of mid-sea islands in a delimitation between opposite states and noted that to give them full effect would produce a disproportionate effect.[258] Indeed, no effect was given to some of the islands in question.[259]

In Qatar v. Bahrain, the Court emphasised the close relationship between continental shelf and economic zone delimitations[260] and held that the appropriate methodology was first to provisionally draw an equidistance line and then to consider whether circumstances existed which must lead to an adjustment of that line.[261] Further, it was noted that 'the equidistance/special circumstances' rule, applicable to territorial sea

[254] ICJ Reports, 1993, p. 37; 99 ILR, p. 395. See also M. D. Evans, 'Case Concerning Maritime Delimitation in the Area Between Greenland and Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway)', 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 697.

[255] But see the Separate Opinion of Judge Oda, who took the view that the regime of the continental shelf was independent of the concept of the exclusive economic zone and that the request to draw a single maritime boundary was misconceived, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 96–7; 99 ILR, pp. 464–5.

[256] 119 ILR, pp. 417, 457.

[257] Ibid., p. 465. See also the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 52; 41 ILR, p. 29 and the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case, Cmnd 7438; 54 ILR, p. 6.

[258] 119 ILR, p. 454.

[259] Ibid., p. 461. Note that the Tribunal rejected the enclaving of some islands as had occurred in the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case, ibid., p. 463.

[260] ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 110.

[261] Ibid., p. 111.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

delimitation, and the 'equidistance/relevant circumstances' rule as developed since 1958 in case-law and practice regarding the delimitation of the continental shelf and the exclusive economic zone were 'closely related'.[262] The Court did not consider the existence of pearling banks to be a circumstance justifying a shift in the equidistance line[263] nor was the disparity in length of the coastal fronts of the states.[264] It was also considered that for reasons of equity in order to avoid disproportion, no effect could be given to Fasht al Jarim, a remote projection of Bahrain's coastline in the Gulf area, which constituted a maritime feature located well out to sea and most of which was below water at high tide.[265]

This approach was reaffirmed by the Court in Cameroon v. Nigeria, where it was noted that 'the applicable criteria, principles and rules of delimitation' concerning a line 'covering several zones of coincident jurisdiction' could be expressed in 'the so-called equitable principles/relevant circumstances method'. This method, 'which is very similar to the equidistance/special circumstances method' concerning territorial sea delimitation, 'involves first drawing an equidistance line, then considering whether there are factors calling for the adjustment or shifting of that line in order to achieve an "equitable result"'.[266] Such a line had to be constructed on the basis of the relevant coastlines of the states in question and excluded taking into account the coastlines of third states and the coastlines of the parties not facing each other.[267] Further, the Court emphasised that 'equity is not a method of delimitation, but solely an aim that should be borne in mind in effecting the delimitation',[268] thus putting an end to a certain trend in previous decades to put the whole emphasis in delimitation upon an equitable solution, leaving substantially open the question of what factors to take into account and how to rank them. The geographical configuration of the maritime area in question was an important element in this case and the Court stressed that while certain geographical peculiarities of maritime areas could be taken into account, this would be solely as relevant circumstances for the purpose, if necessary, of shifting the provisional delimitation line. In the present case, the Court did not consider the configuration of the coastline a relevant circumstance justifying altering the equidistance line.[269] Similarly the Court did not feel it necessary to take [262] Ibid., p. 111. [263] Ibid., p. 112.

[264] Ibid., p. 114. This was in view of the recognition that Bahrain had sovereignty over the Hawar Islands, a factor which mitigated any serious disparity.
[265] Ibid., p. 115. [266] ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 441. [267] Ibid., p. 442.
[268] Ibid., p. 443. [269] Ibid., pp. 443–5.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

into account the existence of Bioko, an island off the coast of Cameroon but belonging to a third state, Equatorial Guinea, nor was it concluded that there existed 'a substantial difference in the lengths of the parties' respective coastlines' so as to make it a factor to be considered in order to adjust the provisional delimitation line.[270]

In the Barbados v. Trinidad and Tobago arbitration award of 11 April 2006, it was noted that equitable considerations per se constituted an imprecise concept in the light of the need for stability and certainty in the outcome of the legal process and it was emphasised that the search for predictable, objectively determined criteria for delimitation underlined that the role of equity lies within and not beyond the law.[271] The process of achieving an equitable result was constrained by legal principle, as both equity and stability were integral parts of the delimitation process.[272] The tribunal concluded that the determination of the line of delimitation followed a two-step approach. First, a provisional line of equidistance is constructed and this constitutes the practical starting point. Secondly, this line is examined in the light of relevant circumstances, which are case specific, so as to determine whether it is necessary to adjust the provisional equidistance line in order to achieve an equitable result. This approach was termed the 'equidistance/relevant circumstances' principle so that certainty would thus be combined with the need for an equitable result.[273]

Conclusion

Accordingly, there is now a substantial convergence of applicable principles concerning maritime delimitation, whether derived from customary law or treaty. In all cases, whether the delimitation is of the territorial sea, continental shelf or economic zone (or of the latter two together), the appropriate methodology to be applied is to draw a provisional equidistance line as the starting position and then see whether any relevant or special circumstances exist which may warrant a change in that line in order to [270] Ibid., p. 446. See also, as to the relevance of oil practice by the parties, ibid., pp. 447–8, and Eritrea/Yemen (Phase Two: Maritime Delimitation), 119 ILR, pp. 417, 443 ff.

[271] Award of 11 April 2006, para. 230. See also B. Kwiatkowska, 'The 2006 Barbados/Trinidad and Tobago Maritime Delimitation (Jurisdiction and Merits) Award', in Ndiaye and Wolfrum, Law of the Sea, Environmental Law and Settlement of Disputes, p. 917.

[272] Award of 11 April 2006, paras. 243 and 244.

[273] Ibid., para. 242. See also para. 317. This approach was approved in Guyana v. Suriname , Award of 17 September 2007, paras. 340–1.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

achieve an equitable result. The presumption in favour of that line is to be welcomed as a principle of value and clarity.

As to the meaning of special or relevant circumstances, or the criteria that need to be taken into account, case-law provides a range of clear indications. Equity is not a method of delimitation and nature cannot be totally refashioned, but some modification of the provisional equidistance line may be justified for the purpose of, for example, 'abating the effects of an incidental special feature from which an unjustifiable difference of treatment could result'.[274] The following principles may be noted. First, the delimitation should avoid the encroachment by one party on the natural prolongation of the other or its equivalent in respect of the economic zone and should avoid to the extent possible the interruption of the maritime projection of the relevant coastlines.[275] Secondly, the configuration of the coast may be relevant where the drawing of an equidistance line may unduly prejudice a state whose coast is particularly concave or convex within the relevant area of the delimitation when compared with that of its neighbours. But the threshold for this is relatively high.[276] Thirdly, a 'substantial difference in the lengths of the parties' respective coastlines may be a factor to be taken into consideration' in mitigation of an equidistance line so as to avoid a disproportionate and inequitable result.[277] Fourthly, the presence of islands or other similar maritime features may be relevant to the equities of the situation and may justify a modification of the provisional equidistance line.[278] Fifthly, security considerations may be taken into account, but the precise effects of this are unclear. Sixthly, resource-related criteria, such as the distribution of fish stocks, have been treated cautiously and have not generally been accepted as a relevant circumstance.[279] Finally, the prior conduct of the parties may be relevant, for example, where there is sufficient practice to show that a provisional boundary has been agreed. In the Tunisia/Libya case, the Court held that a line close to the coast which neither party had crossed when granting offshore oil and gas concessions and which thus constituted a modus

[274] The North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 50.
[275] Barbados v. Trinidad and Tobago, Award of 11 April 2006, para. 232.
[276] Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 445–6.
[277] See e.g. Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 446–7 and Barbados v. Trinidad and Tobago, Award of 11 April 2006, para. 240.
[278] See e.g. the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case, 54 ILR, p. 6 and Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 114 ff.
[279] Gulf of Maine, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 342 and Barbados v. Trinidad and Tobago, Award of 11 April 2006, paras. 228 and 241.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

vivendi was highly relevant,[280] although in Cameroon v. Nigeria, the Court emphasised that only if such concessions were based on express or tacit agreement between the parties could they be taken into account for the purposes of a delimitation.[281]

Landlocked states[282]

Article 3 of the Geneva Convention on the High Seas, 1958 provided that 'in order to enjoy freedom of the seas on equal terms with coastal states, states having no sea coast should have free access to the sea'.[283] Article 125 of the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea is formulated as follows:

> 1. Land-locked states shall have the right of access to and from the sea for the purpose of exercising the rights provided for in this Convention including those relating to the freedom of the high seas and the common heritage of mankind. To this end, land-locked states shall enjoy freedom of transit through the territory of transit states by all means of transport.
>
> 2. The terms and modalities for exercising freedom of transit shall be agreed between the land-locked states and the transit state concerned through bilateral, subregional or regional agreements.
>
> 3. Transit states, in the exercise of their full sovereignty over their territory, shall have the right to take all measures necessary to ensure that the rights and facilities provided for in this Part for land-locked states shall in no way infringe their legitimate interests.

It will thus be seen that there is no absolute right of transit, but rather that transit depends upon arrangements to be made between the land-locked and transit states. Nevertheless, the affirmation of a right of access to the sea coast is an important step in assisting landlocked states. Articles 127 to 130 of the 1982 Convention set out a variety of terms for the [280] ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 71, 84 and 80–6.

[281] ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 447–8. See also Guyana v. Suriname, Award of 17 September 2007, paras. 378 ff.

[282] See e.g. S. C. Vasciannie, Land-Locked and Geographically Disadvantaged States in the International Law of the Sea, Oxford, 1990; J. Symonides, 'Geographically Disadvantaged States in the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea', 208 HR, 1988, p. 283; M. I. Glassner, Bibliography on Land-Locked States, 4th edn, The Hague, 1995; L. Caflisch, 'Land-locked States and their Access to and from the Sea', 49 BYIL, 1978, p. 71, and I. Delupis, 'Land-locked States and the Law of the Sea', 19 Scandinavian Studies in Law, 1975, p. 101. See also Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 18.

[283] See also the Convention on Transit Trade of Land-Locked States, 1965.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

operation of transit arrangements, while article 131 provides that ships flying the flag of landlocked states shall enjoy treatment equal to that accorded to other foreign ships in maritime ports. Ships of all states, whether coastal states or landlocked states, have the right of innocent passage in the territorial sea and freedom of navigation in the waters beyond the territorial sea.[284]

It is also to be noted that landlocked states have the right to participate upon an equitable basis in the exploitation of an appropriate part of the surplus of the living resources of the economic zones of coastal states of the same subregion or region, taking into account relevant economic and geographical factors.[285] Geographically disadvantaged states have the same right.[286] The terms and modalities of such participation are to be established by the states concerned through bilateral, subregional or regional agreements, taking into account a range of factors, including the need to avoid effects detrimental to fishing communities or fishing industries of the coastal state and the nutritional needs of the respective states.[287]

With regard to provisions concerning the international seabed regime, article 148 of the 1982 Convention provides that the effective participation of developing states in the International Seabed Area shall be promoted, having due regard to their special interests and needs, and in particular to the special need of the landlocked and geographically disadvantaged among them to overcome obstacles arising from their disadvantaged location, including remoteness from the Area and difficulty of access to and from it.[288]

[284] See e.g. article 14(1) of the Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea, 1958; articles 2(1) and 4 of the Geneva Convention on the High Seas, 1958 and articles 17, 38(1), 52(1), 53(2), 58(1), 87 and 90 of the 1982 Convention.

[285] Article 69(1) of the 1982 Convention.

[286] Article 70(1). Geographically disadvantaged states are defined in article 70(2) as 'coastal states, including states bordering enclosed or semi-enclosed seas, whose geographical situation makes them dependent upon the exploitation of the living resources of the exclusive economic zones of other states in the subregion or region for adequate supplies of fish for the nutritional purposes of their populations or parts thereof, and coastal states which can claim no exclusive economic zone of their own'.

[287] See articles 69(2) and 70(2). Note also articles 69(4) and 70(5) restricting such rights of participation of developed landlocked states to developed coastal states of the same subregion or region. By article 71, the provisions of articles 69 and 70 do not apply in the case of a coastal state whose economy is overwhelmingly dependent on the exploitation of the living resources of its exclusive economic zone.

[288] See also articles 152, 160 and 161.

www.urdukutabkhanapk.blogspot.com

The high seas[289]

The closed seas concept proclaimed by Spain and Portugal in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, and supported by the Papal Bulls of 1493 and 1506 dividing the seas of the world between the two powers, was replaced by the notion of the open seas and the concomitant freedom of the high seas during the eighteenth century.

The essence of the freedom of the high seas is that no state may acquire sovereignty over parts of them.[290] This is the general rule, but it is subject to the operation of the doctrines of recognition, acquiescence and prescription, where, by long usage accepted by other nations, certain areas of the high seas bounding on the territorial waters of coastal states may be rendered subject to that state's sovereignty. This was emphasised in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case.[291]

The high seas were defined in Article 1 of the Geneva Convention on the High Seas, 1958 as all parts of the sea that were not included in the territorial sea or in the internal waters of a state. This reflected customary international law, although as a result of developments the definition in article 86 of the 1982 Convention includes: all parts of the sea that are not included in the exclusive economic zone, in the territorial sea or in the internal waters of a state, or in the archipelagic waters of an archipelagic state.

